THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS
LIBRARY

780.5
MuD
v.7

MuD

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

History of the N. Y. Symphony
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 1. (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Frieda Hempel, soprano, has just commenced her first tour in the British Isles. Her bookings for 1925-1926 in the United States will be made by George Engles.

Bulletins of News

Amsterdam, Oct. 17.—Willem Mengelberg, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, who has been ill here for several weeks, has quite recovered. He will commence rehearsals of the Concertgebouw Orchestra on Monday, Oct. 21, and appear in his first public concert two days later.

Two more orchestras will commence their New York seasons this week. The first of the ten concerts of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Carnegie Hall will take place this evening, with a Brahms-Stravinsky program, which will include the First Symphony of the former and the Fireworks, Firebird excerpts, and Volga Boatmen's Song of the Russian composer. The first State Symphony program will consist of Bruckner's Third Symphony, and Wagner's Dreams and Rienzi, Faust, and Tannhauser overtures. This concert will take place tomorrow evening in Carnegie Hall. Messrs. Stokowski and Stransky will conduct their respective orchestras.

Paul Kefer, formerly first cellist of the New York Symphony Orchestra, a member of different chamber music organizations, and a soloist, has accepted the invitation tendered to become first cellist of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, cellist of the Kilbourn String Quartet, and to teach the cello in the Eastman School of Music.

Mr. Kefer succeeds the late Joseph Press, whose sudden death recently caused sorrow and regret. The resources and experience of Mr. Kefer make him most worthy of his new posts, which he will take up in Rochester today.

The week-end program of concerts in New York included appearances of Vladimir de Pachmann, Harold Samuel, Pavlowa, Florence Stern, Andrew Haigh, Sigmund Schwartzenstein, Isa Kremer, Carlos Sedano, Jean Nolan, Godfrey Ludlow, Feodor Chaliapin, New York Chamber Symphony, Vladimir Rosing, Edwin Ideler, Ernesto de Curtis, Sara Grossman, Giuseppe Danise, and other artists. Digests of the reviews of these concerts will appear in this issue of the Musical Digest, or will be published next week.

Concerts Mark Opening Of Chickering Music Hall

THREE concerts are being given to mark formally the opening of the Music Salon of the New Chickering Hall, 27 West 57th St., New York, this week. The concerts w ll take place on three consecutive evenings beginning tonight. The programs will include compositions by Schonberg, Schumann, Sowerby, and American Jazz composers. The assisting artists will be Joseph Lhevinne, Dorothy Moulton, and the Lenox Quartet; Leo Sowerby, Hans Kindler, and Ruth Rodgers; and Alfred Mirovitch, Helen Davis, Victor Young, and Vincent Lopez with his orchestra.

Chaliapin and Pavlowa Return

What has been announced as the last tour of Anna Pavlowa and her company in the United States commenced last Friday evening in the Manhattan Opera House, New York. Among the other week-end concerts which marked the reappearance of artists known in New York, was the recital of Feodor Chaliapin last Sunday evening in the Manhattan Opera House.

Mme. Pavlowa began her three weeks' New York season with a novelty, Don Quixote. Alexandre Volinine and Laurent Novikoff are accompanying her in her appearances here, and the orchestra is under the direction of Theodore Stier. Deems Taylor in the World considered the music of Mr. Minkus, who supplied the score of Don Quixote, "rather pleasant," with "good rhythm" and "an ingratiating tunefulness."

The reviewer of the Times was typical of all the commentators in his judgment. He said, "Mme. Pavlowa demonstrated triumphantly her gifts as not only one of the greatest executants of the period, but an artist who by physical means reveals poetic beauty."

Whatever anxiety there may have been regarding the condition of Chaliapin's voice, was dispelled when he appeared last Sunday evening, and sang as American audiences have been accustomed to hear him in the past. The reviewer of the Times said of the Russian basso, "His expressive use of a voice of wide tonal and dynamic range showed no marked effect of a slight nasal operation, reported from Europe before he sailed."

Lawrence Gilman in the Tribune commented on the basso's personality, writing that "Chaliapin is a lyric dramatizer of unparalleled genius," but questioning his perfection of taste, for, wrote Mr. Gilman, "He is too exuberant and tornadic a genius to be wholly an inerrant artist."

Produce Novelty In First Concert Of Philharmonic

Respighi's Sinfonia Drammatica Shares Program With Mozart Symphony.

83RD PHILHARMONIC YEAR

The New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Willem van Hoogstraten conducting, gave the first concert of its 83rd season, and the 1377th of its career, last Thursday evening in Carnegie Hall. Two symphonies were on the program, Mozart's Jupiter, and Ottorino Respighi"s Sinfonia Drammatica. This was the first New York performance of the latter composition, although it was composed in 1914 and was played last season in Philadelphia. Weber's Euryanthe overture and Wagner's Meistersinger prelude completed the program.

The reviewers agreed that Respighi's piece was unmistakably eclectic in construction, practically all of them naming Tschaikowsky, Wagner, and Strauss as origins, and several of them referring also to Rimsky Korsakoff and Brahms.

Mr. Henderson in the Sun gathered from the work an impression of "concentrated thought and little inspiration." He found some beauty in the codas of the three movements, but believed they were too long drawn out. Ernest Newman thought that the work of Respighi was "the distillation of the thoughts of bigger men," and could see little behind the "rhetoric."

Deems Taylor in the World was perhaps most favorable, referring to the "masterful scoring" of the piece. He said also, "Wherever Respighi is handling violent or grotesque moods he is at his best." This reviewer found the lyric passages "somewhat immature."

Olin Downes in the Times thought the Sinfonia Drammatica melodramatic unto opera, and saw the influence even of Puccini, from whom the younger Italian composers pretend to have turned.

In the Tribune Lawrence Gilman found little in the work which was "memorable or new," but admitted that it often was "impressive by reason of its intensity and its power." Pitts Sanborn, reviewer of the Telegram-Mail, wrote that the novelty was "appalling" in its "bombast, emptiness, and unquenchable garrulity."

All the reviewers considered the performance excellent. They were of the opinion that Mr. Van Hoogstraten's tempi in the Mozart and Wagner tended to be slow, and Mr. Newman considered the modulation from tempo to tempo not sufficiently smooth, although each section in its particular stride seemed "well carpentered" enough.

828813

Chicago Symphony Plays First Pair

Stock Begins Thirty-fourth Season With Program of Recent Music.

Chicago, Oct. 12.—With the first of its regular subscription pairs of concerts, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Frederick A. Stock conducting, opened its thirty-fourth season yesterday afternoon and this evening in Orchestra Hall. The program was as follows: Wagner's Rienzi overture, the Cesar Frank D minor symphony, Strauss' Death and Transfiguration, Borodin's A Sketch of the Steppes of Central Asia, and March and Hymn to Democracy by Frederick Stock.

Eugene Stinson, of the Journal, said of the conductor, "Mr. Stock's performance was an ideal example of his power as a conductor. There is very seldom, indeed, anything superfluous in his presentation . . . he has a genius for the analysis of tonal tension." Maurice Rosenfeld considered the selections for the afternoon's program as well calculated to show the orchestra to best advantage. "There was besides the perfection of performance," he wrote in the News, "something new in the musical rendition. A spark which, emanating from Stock's own personality, communicated itself to every member of the orchestra . . . to every nuance of shading and variation of tempo. Even the old Rienzi overture had infused into its somewhat trite themes a breath of twentieth century resilience."

The Strauss composition was played as memorial to Charles L. Hutchinson, who died Tuesday. Mr. Hutchinson was one of the original members of the Orchestral Association, and at the time of his death was a trustee and member of the executive committee.

Mr. Stock's March was called by Maurice Rosenfeld "a stupendous work, but was less approved by Eugene Stinson.

One of the early recitals of the Chicago season was the joint concert of Renee Thornton, lyric soprano, and Ulysses Lappas, Greek tenor. Maurice Rosenfeld wrote that Miss Thornton's voice "has grown somewhat in volume," and that she has "gained in authority." Edward Moore in the Tribune enthused over Miss Thornton's beautiful appearance, and praised her voice in equal terms. Eugene Stinson wrote of her "light but resonant voice," and Glen Dillard Gunn in the Herald and Examiner called Miss Thornton "one of the most interesting of concert singers."

Of Mr. Lappas Mr. Gunn spoke of his "splendid voice" which should please Chicago in opera, but regretted an absence of "pure vocal art." Mr. Stinson said that the tenor was "luxuriant of voice and feeling, and unrestrained of both," "the sort of tenor who shows up Puccini at his worst."

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
25 East 35th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 5609

Stokowski Begins Symphonic Season

Audience Votes on Modern Music; Roland Hayes Gives Philadelphia Recital.

Philadelphia, Oct. 11.—The twenty-fifth season of the Philadelphia Orchestra got under way yesterday afternoon with a concert conducted by Leopold Stokowski at the Academy of Music. In the same auditorium last evening, one of the first recitalists of the season, Roland Hayes, Negro tenor, sang before the members of the Philadelphia Forum.

Dr. Stokowski surprised his audience in the midst of his first concert by turning to them just before he was to play Alfredo Casella's Elegia Eroica, a new composition, and asking for an informal vote on the problem of modern music. The applause in favor of playing new compositions outweighed the hisses against, so that Dr. Stokowski felt that his policy of previous seasons in introducing a number of modern works in his programs was justified by the desires of his audience. Immediately after the vote he continued with the Casella work.

The rest of the program was made up, as the Inquirer reviewer put it, of "long-tried familiars, such as the Weber overture, Euryanthe, played with fine sweep and gusto; the colorful and atmospheric excerpts from Bizet's L'Arlesienne and Wagner's overture to Rienzi, while the symphony was that most popular of all the Beethoven nine, the Fifth. . . ." It was after the Beethoven number that Dr. Stokowski turned to his audience and asked them for their vote.

The reviewer in the Public Ledger wrote of Casella's Elegia: "It is extremely modern in harmony and equally vague melodically, the total effect being that it is entirely incomprehensible." The Inquirer review said, "Though, in the true modern manner, the work throws nearly all conventions to the winds, this music is, nevertheless, a deeply moving, individual expression of grief . . . there is no melodic tone and pomp to this work." The Record commentator considered the composition "extremely interesting" and with many "novel and arresting tonal effects." The judgment in the North American was that the work "lacks imagination, is dissonant without distinction, and leaves little impression."

Roland Hayes in his concert last evening, sang a program of German songs, modern English compositions and Negro spirituals. He was at his best, according to the reviews, in the English songs, among which were Griffes' In Myrtles' Shade, Whelpley's I Know a Hill and A Caravan From China Comes. "The sweetness and sympathetic quality of his voice," wrote the reviewer in the Record, "with the degree of technical proficiency he has attained, enable him to give a program in artistic style." This reviewer called Mr. Hayes' Negro songs "enjoyable" but felt that "he has, probably due to too much training, lost something of the elemental quality necessary to effective portrayal of this sort of music." The Public Ledger reviewer agreed that it was doubtful if the Negro songs were the best medium for "this fine artist."

Special comment was made of William Lawrence's accompaniments, in particular, that for A Caravan From China Comes.

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

ANNA BURMEISTER
Soprano, Who Gave Her New York Recital Last Week.

Announce Concert Series

A concert series is to be given during the coming season at the Greenwich Village Theatre, New York, by Emile W. Herbert, who announces eight consecutive Sunday evenings of chamber music, beginning October 26, with a policy of experimenting with unfamiliar music rather than adhering to tried classic programs. The concerts are to be played by the Philharmonic Quartet.

Alma Gluck Again On Concert Stage

Soprano Returns After Three Years' Absence With New York Recital.

After an absence of three years, Mme. Alma Gluck returned to the concert stage in a recital on Oct. 12 at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, where she sang to a large and demonstrative audience. Mme. Gluck was assisted by Yascha Bunchuk, cellist, and Samuel Chotzinoff, accompanist.

Mme. Gluck first sang familiar classics by Haydn, Handel, Beethoven and Mozart. Her program continued through Russian songs and German lieder to a group of modern songs in English. Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram and Mail felt that, although "in the opening group her naturally beautiful voice had not its former facility . . . as the afternoon progressed her voice warmed, and the medium and low portions of her scale, now issuing freely, were of a rich and haunting beauty." The Post reviewer agreed that when she was heard in the middle of her voice "the color and beauty were most charming." Mr. W. J. Henderson of the Sun felt that Mme. Gluck's program made too much of a demand upon her voice because of its overabundance of "music of too high pitch." In Mozart's Warnung, Mr. Henderson commented on "her charming humor, archness and gayety of manner." Mr. Olin Downes in the Times spoke of the "color and limpid beauty" of the middle of her voice.

Deems Taylor in the World regretted that Mme. Gluck chose so large a hall, which, in his opinion, she strained herself to fill. He praised the "exceptional clarity" of her diction. F. D. Perkins wrote in the Tribune that Mme. Gluck's high notes showed "a sense of effort," but also he said, "The full fluent notes, smoothness and volume of tone were there as of yore."

This reviewer spoke of Mr. Bunchuk's "smooth rich tone and technical competence," with which praise the other writers agreed.

FRANCES PERALTA
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
MANAGEMENT: NATIONAL CONCERTS, INC., 1451 Broadway, New York

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones Aeolian Hall, New York
Aeolian-Vocalion Records

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
Victor Records
Steinway Piano
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York

780.5
MUD
v. 7

Civic Opera Starts in Los Angeles

Merola and Company Arrive From San Francisco; Philharmonic Season On.

Los Angeles, Oct. 12.—After their series of performances in San Francisco Gaetano Merola and his company of singers came into Los Angeles for the short season of the local Civic Grand Opera Association. Andrea Chenier, the first of the five performances scheduled, was given last Monday night. The other big feature of the music season here, which commenced in the same week, was the Philharmonic Orchestra, Walter Henry Rothwell conducting, which began operations last Friday afternoon.

According to the review of Bruno David Ussher in the Express, "Gigli, as Andrea Chenier, won from the outset." This was the tenor's first Los Angeles appearance, and the writers of the Times and Record agreed also that it was a "triumph." Mr. Ussher wrote further, "His is an extraordinarily beautiful voice. It wells up nobly, evenly, tenderly lyric, yet it has emphatic strength and roundness even in high positions."

This reviewer believed that de Luca, who played Gerard, showed himself "one of the great baritones," and continued, "Muzio matched Gigli and de Luca, although one feels doubtful if the role of Maddalena is a role that suits her vocally. Her voice was not of the usual warmth and lusciousness, yet it sounded admirably."

The local chorus of sixty-four voices was praised by all the reviewers, and the remainder of the cast, which included Paolo Ananian, Francesco Seri, Louis d'Angelo, Lodovico Oliviero, Myrtle Davis, Leslie Bingham, and Ruth Shaffner also did well, according to the newspaper reports.

The Manon of the next evening made just as good an impression on music lovers and critics. Mr. Ussher, whose opinions were largely characteristic of all the reports, said of Thalia Sabanieva, who played the title role, "Her voice is fresh, volatile, often sweet, but suffers frequently from that extreme purity which is colorless."

Tito Schipa's lyric tenor took the audience by storm. The reviewers referred to him variously as "this demigod of canto," this "breaker of hearts," and enthused over his "ease of production" and "deftness of voice."

Millo Picco and Louis d'Angelo were approved in their parts, although at times they seemed "almost too robust in comedy." Paolo Ananian and Andre Fernier took parts on less than an hour's notice.

Romeo and Juliet was the third performance. The purity of Mme. Sabanieva's tone, according to William Prohme in the Examiner, was in its element here in the portrayal of Juliet's simplicity. This writer found it "difficult to be dispassionate about Gigli," who seemed to him "splendid, both as singer and actor."

The double bill of Gianni Schicchi and Amico Fritz, and La Traviata will end the opera season. Tito Schipa is scheduled for the latter tomorrow evening.

The novelty of Mr. Rothwell's first pair of concerts of the sixth season of the Los Angeles Philharmonic was Maurice Ravel's La Valse. The rest of the program consisted of Brahms' First Symphony and Strauss' Death and Transfiguration.

Mr. Ussher in the Express wrote that the orchestra has "never played more beautifully." Of Ravel's piece Jose Rodriguez in the Record wrote, "In spite of its diabolical cleverness, its assumption of seriousness, and its fashionable chromatic dress, I see no reason for its existence at all." This writer agreed that barring a few minor roughnesses the orchestral work was excellent.

Edwin Schallert, writing in the Times, spoke favorably of the "tingle of newness" in La Valse, "a dazzling adventure in musical writing." This commentator praised the orchestra and conductor for the excellence of their work in Ravell's work.

The first popular concert of the Philharmonic is scheduled for next Sunday evening.

Increase Children's Concert

The New York Symphony Concerts for Children, at Carnegie Hall, have been increased from four to five this season with a view to accomodate the extra demand for tickets. Following the regular symphony concert at Toledo on October 22, Mr. Damrosch will conduct a children's concert there on the 25th. The series of symphony concerts for young people in Montclair, N. J., will begin October 28.

Bernardo Olshansky Sings

Bernardo Olshansky, baritone, formerly of the Boston Opera, assisted by Helen Jeffrey, violin, and Max Rabinowitsch at the piano, sang at Carnegie Hall, New York, on the evening of October 11. Italian and Russian songs made up most of his program, and Miss Jeffrey added violin pieces ranging from Wieniawski to Kreisler.

France Honors McCormack

The French Government has honored John McCormack by bestowing on him the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion d'Honneur. He was one of the first singers in this country to help the French cause during the war.

WILLIAM BACHAUS
Pianist, Recently Appeared in Recital in London.

Parish Williams

Parish Williams, baritone, gave a recital last Thursday evening in Aeolian Hall, New York. The reviewers agreed that he did best in the German lieder, showing a voice, according to the writer of the Tribune, "of considerable volume and tone, at its best." Miss Smith in the World thought that he sang the French numbers "with sure delicacy which recaptured their fugitive charm." Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram and Mail considered Mr. Williams' voice "good," although sometimes not "free" in emission. The reviewer in the Evening Post believed that Mr. Williams had best not emphasize Italian songs in his programs, and the Sun commentator found in the voice a "good deal of expression."

Majestic Brings Many Artists

On its arrival in New York last Tuesday the White Star liner Majestic brought Anna Pavlowa, Albert Spalding, Mr. and Mrs. John McCormack, Florence Easton, Giorgio Polacco, and Roberto Moranzoni.

Hear Mischa Elman In First Recital

Violinist Introduces New Belgian Composition; Liza Elman Assists at Piano.

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave his first recital of the season at Carnegie Hall, New York, on October 12. Mr. Elman introduced Dupuis' Fantaisie Rhapsodique, which has never before been played in America. Other numbers on his program were the Bach-Nachez Partita in E minor; Beethoven's Sonata in G major, Op. 30, in which Mr. Elman was assisted at the piano by his sister, Miss Liza Elman; and shorter compositions by Ernest Bloch, Rode-Elman, Rubenstein-Elman, and Wieniawski.

The Sun spoke of Mr. Elman's performance as "brilliant," marked by "tonal beauty" and "much elegant nuance." The reviewer in the Times considered that he played with "his usual virtuosity . . . and that warm, carrying tone which has been one of his greatest assets." The Dupuis composition, according to the Telegram and Mail, was "melodious though modern" with three "gracefully phrased" movements. The Tribune reviewer also felt that Mr. Elman's choice of this work was a happy one. "In it," he wrote, "Mr. Elman produced a rich warm tone; a fuller one than usual, it seemed."

Miss Elman's playing in the Beethoven Sonata was well spoken of. The work gave her an excellent opportunity to "display her proficiency and aptitude as a pianist" wrote the reviewer in the Telegram and Mail. Josef Bonime was accompanist for the other numbers.

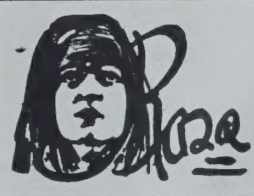
Music of the Movies

With the repetition of last week's feature at the Capitol Theatre, New York, the orchestra will play Offenbach's Orpheus Overture, and the other feature of the musical program will be the appearance of Messrs. Ohman and Arden, pianists. Tchaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, second and fourth movements, will have the main place on the Rialto program.

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6148
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO



Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

EDITH MASON
SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK CITY

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 1

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

239 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor.

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.; Canada, $6.00; Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary.

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

The Pleasant Thought and Word

The sun shines rather generally for those who hold kindly thoughts, and who find it natural to speak well of others.

By far the larger part of individual happiness is derived from self, as those fortunate in possessing happiness will declare.

People who are pleasant and gracious up to ten o'clock every morning rarely find the rest of the day going far amiss. It isn't easy always to do, but by keeping at it—if the will sincerely be there—will accomplish wonders.

Life offers enough rubbings and hard knocks without adding to them by thoughts and words and deeds which add to the burdens.

Music, which ought to sooth and stir the better side of musicians and the markedly musically-inclined, appears all too frequently to operate the opposite way. Or is it that those who turn seriously towards music are so constituted that they find it hard to practice the golden rule?

Whatever the cause or causes, it is a fact that in and about the music profession there is much too much unkind criticism of others. Now, just and restrained comment on the abilities of some individual or organization which is appearing or has appeared in public is right and proper. But cynical and hard-voiced remarks are so freely expressed (openly, and in concert and opera auditoriums) and so commonly accompanied by visual signs of marked disapproval as to demand a little thought.

In any New York concert-room where professional musicians appear one may hear and see what has been referred to above. In the lobbies, and in the street, and in other places (after a performance) there goes on a mass of adverse comment varying from gentle or supercilious toasting to downright roasting. It happens in music studios, in restaurants, in street and subway cars, in taxis. Men and women alike are offenders. "Roast and the music world roasts with you, praise and you praise alone" seems to be the slogan of the many.

Tolerance is a marvelous asset; and those who practise it least are often those who are hurt the deepest when they suffer through failure to find it in others.

A new music season is starting. If it were to happen that more of the milk of human kindness were distributed by those who seem to have sealed up their supply perhaps it may help the season all around.

"Isn't his voice horrible?" whispers the disappointed singer to his feminine companion, who replies sibilantly, "worse than that."

And directly in front of them the successful artist is enjoying the voice and the interpretations.

The able music teacher isn't afraid to admit that a colleague has ability.

Then along comes a whole-hearted person, with a bit of praise for a sincere musician, and puts a rosy tint into the day.

But the wisest ones are those who seek out constructive suggestions and profit by them.

Music and Literature

(Ernest Newman in the New York Evening Post)

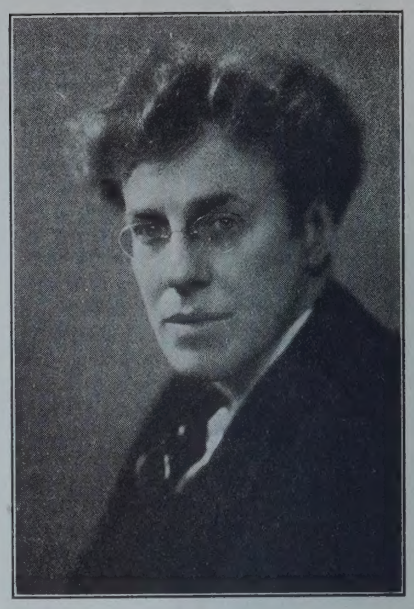
THE DEATH OF Anatole France reminds us not only that a couple of his stories were turned into operas by Massenet but that music generally lags a long way behind contemporary literature.

There are exceptions, of course. Strauss's music to Elektra is contemporaneous, in every sense of the word, with Hugo von Hofmansthal's poem; and his music to Salome even makes Oscar Wilde's drama look old-fashioned. Debussy, again, wrote for Pelleas and Melisande music that is of exactly the same period as Maeterlinck. One or two other cases might be cited; but as a rule it will be found that it takes music a generation or two to catch up with the most characteristic thought of a particular age.

For example, with all our admiration for Figaro we cannot say that it inhabits the same world of ideas as Beaumarchais' play. The Frenchman's Figaro is all agility, wit, cynicism. Mozart's Figaro is more lovable, but nothing like so clever. His mind does not move at half the speed of the real Figaro's; he has humor, but hardly any wit; and of cynicism he has not a trace. Music in Mozart's day was unequal to the task of translating a Beaumarchais or a Voltaire into music.

No musician of Goethe's day was capable of setting Faust to music worthy of it. One would have said, a priori, that this was just the subject for Beethoven, whose whole life, whose whole thinking, was a Faust-like struggle of the spirit against incomprehensible powers within him and without. But Beethoven's settings of some of Goethe's Wilhelm Meister lyrics show how far from ready the musical idiom of that day was to mate itself on equal terms with the sublest poetic thought of the day. Schubert wrote beautiful immortal music for some of Goethe's poems, but even his idiom and technique were not equal to the task of setting others of them adequately; for a genuine musical equivalent of Prometheus, for instance, the world had to wait till Hugo Wolf came, nearly a century later.

The problem, however, is not so difficult for the song writer. Wolf set the contemporary Moerike as perfectly as he did Goethe; and other composers, from Schubert down to the present day, have shown themselves the intellectual equals of the lyricists of their epoch. But as a rule the musicians either fail when they touch the bigger or subtler poetic and dramatic thought of the time, or they discreetly leave it alone. Massenet's failure with Thais is typical. He never gets past the rind of Anatole France's story; of the irony that lies at the core of it he does not seem to have the slightest inkling. And in any case Thais and The Juggler of Notre Dame are the simplest France. I should like to see Monsieur Bergeret and the Abbe Voignard reproduced in music as Goethe's Faust has been reproduced by Liszt and Schumann. But for this, I am afraid, I must wait another seventy-five years or so.



ARTHUR SHATTUCK

Someone has predicted that the annual exodus of American music students to Europe will shortly number 15,000 persons. The music courses Fontainebleau and other foreign schools seem to indicate that European training for the artist and musician is considered as important as ever before the war. Arthur Shattuck, American pianist, has lived long abroad, and has interesting information and advice on the subject.

"The value of the new point of view cannot be overestimated by the student," said Mr. Shattuck recently. "Europe supplies this.

"America is coming to know that Europe's attitude toward the arts is different from ours. The old traditions, so influential on national temperament abroad, are crystallized chiefly in art and music. Respect for beauty abounds everywhere. Paris gamins never think of marking the statues within easy reach in the Tuileries and the Luxembourg. Can we honestly say that this popular respect is equalled in New York and Chicago?

"In Europe the student of the arts feels much at home. The artist there is considered important. Then again the artistic feeling flourishes in the presence of the many art galleries and the beautifully kept public parks. In Paris particularly the maze of crossing streets set at all angles relieves inartistic monotony, and each corner turned reveals some strange sight, a quaint roof, an ancient church, a lovely statue. Most European cities are like that. Art, as the most permanent thing, the sole link between us and past civilizations, thrives best in old surroundings.

"So, abroad the American student begins to live the natural, unaffected life of art. He is enriched subconsciously because the strange surroundings continually whet his curiosity; the sense of romance gives him interest, gives him courage. Art no longer seems a thing imported, but something indigenous and in keeping with the spirit of the people."

Violin Makers Convene.

The first convention of the American Violin Makers was held at the Hotel Astor on October 18. At Aeolian Hall, on October 19, a violin contest recital was given with an American violin vs. a Stradivarius violin. The organization aims to create a high grade American violin.

The Symphony Society of New York

Chapter II: The Career of Walter Damrosch in the Musical Life of the United States

by C. E. LE MASSENA

THE first nine years of Walter Damrosch's life were full years. His father stimulated in him a love for the classics, his favorite reading being along the lines of Greek mythology, fairy tales and Biblical parables. Even at so early an age, his mind was searching out the dramatic. The artistic environment in which he lived threw him into the presence of celebrities — Wagner, Liszt, Rubinstein, von Bulow, Sarasate, Joachim, Clara Schumann and many others.

Walter and his brother Frank attended public school in New York, the former continuing his piano lessons while struggling to master a strange tongue. Walter possessed a talent for painting which he put into practice by constructing a doll's theatre in which miniature productions of opera were given. The founding of the Oratorio and Symphony Societies, together with his duties as conductor of the Arion, teacher and violin soloist, gave Dr. Damrosch plenty of work in the discharge of which Walter gradually began to assist.

Training and experience were rigidly insisted upon, so we find the son playing at the last stand of the second violins at the symphonic performances and serving as accompanist for the rehearsals of the oratories. Having played accompaniments for his father at home, Walter was assigned a similar task for the violinist Wilhelm, in 1879, and two years later he presided at the organ for the huge music festival, assisting also in the preparations by training a section of the chorus and making a piano arrangement of the Berlioz "Requiem."

Then followed his appointment, at the age of eighteen, as director of the Newark Harmonic Society, the concerts of which were attended and analyzed by Dr. Damrosch. In 1882 Walter was sent to Europe to advance his music culture through contact with prominent musicians.

During the opera season directed by his father Walter was on hand for every rehearsal and every performance. That close confidence between father and son was destined to bear fruit. When the severance came it left the son striving to catch the vision and to carry on the work of his father. Though but three and twenty he took a firm grip on the task—one which he has never relinquished.

Transitional Period

Then came a transitional period in which the young director ran a gauntlet of professional activity such as few experience. While deeply engrossed in a multiplicity of duties, Walter became assistant to Director Stanton of the Metropolitan Opera Company and in the summer of 1885 again set sail for the land of artists, where he secured such prizes as Lehmann, Brandt, Alvary, Fischer and Seidl as conductors. Again, in 1887, another journey across enabled him during an entire summer to have the privilege of analyzing the Beethoven symphonies with von Bulow. On the outward voyage, he met Andrew Carnegie who invited him for a visit to Scotland. There he met James G. Blaine and his daughters, one of whom (Margaret) subsequently became Mrs. Damrosch. The steel magnate was later ushered into the presidency of the two Damrosch societies which incidentally included the role of chief supporter.

Walter's life became a crowded one, and four active years slipped by. The year 1891 was fruitful. At the invitation of Damrosch the eminent Russian composer Tschaikowsky came to America and as in remembrance of that visit the first American performance of the Symphonie Pathetique was given the following year under Walter's direction. Paderewski also was first heard here with orchestra under his direction. With the formation of the Damrosch Opera Company, in 1895, other distinguished singers were introduced to American audiences—Sucher, Brema, Ternina, Nordica, Klafsky, Bispham, in German opera as well as some of the later Wagner music-dramas. He again conducted German opera at the Metropolitan in 1900 under Grau. Still in the most of his duties Damrosch found time to compose an opera, The Scarlet Letter, produced in 1896, the Manila Te Deum in 1898, Cyrano de Bergerac in 1913, and the incidental music to the Greek plays produced by Margaret Anglin in 1913.

WALTER DAMROSCH TODAY

First Beethoven Cycle

A first Handel Festival in 1892 and a first Beethoven Cycle in 1909 (repeated in 1924 in New York and Paris) also were identified with the name of Damrosch.

Saint-Saens played an American engagement under Damrosch, in 1908, and there were first performances of many works including Parsifal in concert form, also a first Samson et Delila in 1912. Walter then gave over the baton of the Oratorio Society to his brother, Frank, who presided over the forces from 1898 to 1912, resigning to become director of the Institute of Musical Art. Walter again resumed control, in 1919, for three seasons, in turn handing it to Albert Stoessel, its present conductor.

Novelty and experiment were part of Walter Damrosch's scheme of progress. He inaugurated the Sunday Symphony Concerts, developed the

FORTY YEARS AGO

Young People's Symphony Concerts, started by his brother Frank, and made possible the morning Symphony Concerts for Children with explanatory talks.

The coming season will be the fortieth of Dr. Damrosch with the Symphony Society of New York.

Great Changes.

The changes affecting conditions during the forty-seven years' existence of the New York Symphony Orchestra have been numerous and varied. In the beginning players assembled but rarely with only three rehearsals for each of the six concerts, which were preceded by a public rehearsal. They therefore had to add to their income by other means. Today the activities have so increased as to embrace over 100 concerts a season (with daily rehearsals), a summer engagement, with special concerts outside the schedule—including those of the Oratorio Society.

Few realize in this era of well-balanced zeal what it meant in those days to be a pioneer in the orchestral field or what up-hill work it meant to keep organizations alive and lay foundations for future substantiality. In its embryonic period the Damrosch Orchestra was employed at the Metropolitan Opera, but it was difficult to secure enough work to hold it together as a symphonic body. The little subsidy contributed by the directors of the society was sufficient only for the regular concerts, so the young leader was continually casting about for other engagements that would keep the men in town.

For four years Walter Damrosch maintained the opera company at home and on tour, but at the end of the Metropolitan engagement he decided to withdraw from the field and to confine his efforts to the development of symphonic music in America. He gave his services for years without remuneration.

With the advent of Mr. Carnegie as president and chief supporter and with the opening of Carnegie Hall in 1891 the affairs of the society took on an aspect which led in 1907 to a complete reorganization. By means of a substantial guarantee fund both orchestra and conductor were engaged on a salary basis covering the major part of the year—a plan that has been continued ever since. The New York public was faithful in its support and stood by the director recognizing both his ability and his sincerity of purpose.

Under the new policy the revenues increased to a point where, with an annual guarantee fund of $50,000, it was possible to maintain an orchestra of ninety-five players as against sixty-five in certain other cities having a greater guarantee, the necessary difference being made up from extended tours embracing many places which, in this manner, received their first and only symphonic entertainment.

As early as 1903 Harry Harkness Flagler had evinced a deep interest in and appreciation of the Damrosch idea and ideal. He supported them liberally and vigorously, steadily increasing his contributions and taking over the collections and subscriptions. As expenses increased with succeeding years the duties likewise became more exacting and more difficult.

Finally, however, even his infinite patience wore down under the continuous strain, resulting in his magnanimous offer, in 1914, to assume the entire financial responsibility himself and to donate the funds necessary for the proper maintenance of the orchestra. This act of generosity in behalf of musical art has resulted in an extension of activities at that time undreamed of.

Personal Management.

When war broke out there were thirteen nationalities represented in the ranks, including all the hostile nations, but Damrosch diplomatically succeeded in relieving all tension, in keeping down strained relations and inducing harmonious fellowship. The present policy on tour is to allow each member, in addition to his salary, a certain amount for meals and beds, in contrast to the former method of including hotel bills as part of the daily expense. During a long New York season and a subsequent tour, only most efficient management could solve the many attendant difficulties, but with a devoted staff of executives, guided by George Engles, general manager, Rudolf Rissland, orchestra manager, and Hans Goettich, librarian, accomplishment resolves itself into a balanced machine functioning without friction and without mishap.

Other members of the staff associated with Mr. Engles are Gino Baldini, assistant manager, and C. E. LeMassena, publicity director. Associated with Mr. Flagler, president of the society, are Paul D. Cravath and Henry Seligman, vice president; Edwin T. Rice, treasurer; Richard Welling, recording secretary, and Grace Bristed, executive secretary The directors are Walter Damrosch, William S. Hawk, Henry W. Taft and Felix M. Warburg, in addition to the officers. There are some 125 associated directors, persons prominent in social and musical circles.

In 1902, when Walter Damrosch took the conductorship of the Philharmonic Society for a season, Mr. Flagler was secretary of the permanent orchestra fund and, as such, was in hearty sym-

(Continued on page 7)

On The Music Highway

MARIA CARRERAS, Italian pianist, has been engaged for the first concert of the Maria Carreras Club in St. Louis on November 21. The club was organized after her appearance in that city last season. Mme. Carreras will also have a master class in the Yeargain Piano School, St. Louis, from November 10 to 28.

Three Italian composers will be represented on the program of Alberto Sciarretti at his piano recital in Aeolian Hall tomorrow evening.

Mischa-Leon, tenor of the Paris Opera, is now in New York and will make his American debut as a concert singer at Aeolian Hall on October 31. With Walter Golde at the piano, Mr. Mischa-Leon will sing French, Spanish, English, German, Danish and Norwegian songs.

Marguerite Sylva, who arrived from France last week, will remain in New York for a brief rest. While in Paris, Mme. Sylva bought one of the comedy successes of the stage there and, after it has been adapted in English, she will present it in New York with herself in the star role.

Following his song recital at Carnegie Hall two weeks ago, Rhys Morgan, Welsh tenor, was engaged for a second appearance with the Spartanburg Music Festival. Mr. Morgan had previously been engaged to sing the tenor solo in The Messiah on Oratorio Night, and his second appearance will be on Opera Night.

Marguerite D'Alvarez, mezzo-contralto, has changed the date of her first New York recital in order to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mme. D'Alvarez will be heard on November 14 instead of November 18 as announced. She will sing a joint recital with John Charles Thomas, baritone, on November 11 in Bayonne, N. J., immediately after her return from Europe.

There will be but two changes in the personnel of The Symphony Players this season. Walter Thalen, formerly of the Minneapolis Symphony, will replace G. Langenus as clarinetist, and John Leoncavallo, late first oboe of the St. Louis Orchestra, takes the place of Rene Corne.

Edwin Hughes' appearance of October 9 in Buffalo was one of the features of the National American Music Festival. Mr. Hughes presented a program of novelties. He has been engaged for the Tenth Annual Festival next year.

Returning after a month's rest in the north of England, Florence Easton, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, arrived last week in New York on the Majestic. Miss Easton will open her season with two appearances as soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra in Brooklyn and New York on November 1 and 2 respectively.

John Barclay returned to America last Thursday and will begin his season on this evening at Williamsport, Pa.

Appearing with two San Carlo Grand Opera companies, Elda Vettori has begun her season's work. Miss Vettori made her season's bow at Bridgeport, Conn., a week ago tonight as Leonora in Il Trovatore, and appeared the next evening in Stamford for the first time anywhere in the title role of Madame Butterfly. Her only appearance in New York was as Santuzza in Cavalleria Rusticana.

Ruth Rodgers has been engaged to sing in New York on October 22, and in Elmira on October 23.

Paul Kochanski has been engaged to play the Szymanowski violin concerto with the Philadelphia Orchestra on February 13 and 14 in Philadelphia and with the same organization in New York on February 17. The work was first performed at the Prague Music Festival May 31 last by Kochanski. This will be the first American performance.

Florence Stern, American violinist, gave a violin recital at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, October 18.

The Kibalchich Russian Symphonic Choir, which made its debut in two New York recitals last April, will start its current season with another New York recital at Town Hall on October 28.

Rafaelo Diaz will leave towards the end of the month for his first tour of the season which will take him all the way to Texas. He will return to New York in December for his appearance with the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Under the auspices of the Bialystoker Center and Bikur Cholim Organization, Rosa Raisa, soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, and Giacomo Rimini, baritone, made their only New York appearance this season a week ago Saturday. Magdeleine Brard, French pianist, also appeared on the program.

Douglas Stanbury, late of the Capitol Theatre, New York, and now of the Chicago Civic Opera Company, has been engaged as soloist on Opera Night with the Spartanburg Music Festival, scheduled for May 7. Mr. Stanbury will sing several of the baritone roles in the current repertory of the Chicago company.

Elena Gerhardt will give a Schubert program at her first recital of the season in Aeolian Hall on November 2.

Gerald Maas, 'cellist, will start the season by giving a joint recital with Claire Brockhurst, contralto, at Scranton, Pa., on October 26.

Following her New York debut at Aeolian Hall on Thursday, Ruth Breton, young American violinist, will give a Boston recital. Miss Breton's Boston appearance is scheduled for November 6.

Mme. Leschetizky, widow of the famous Viennese teacher, arrived in New York today. Her first concert will not be open to the public, but will be a private affair for the piano students of the City Music League of New York. The American debut of the pianist will be as soloist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra on November 7 and 8.

The program for the opening concert of the season at Carnegie Hall, Friday evening, October 31, by the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch conductor, will comprise the fifth symphony of Beethoven, Fantasia on theme by Thomas Tallis, for double string orchestra, by Vaughan Williams, L'Isle Joyeuse by Debussy, orchestrated by R. Molinari (first time in New York), and the Istar Variations of D'Indy.

Renee Chemet has added another college to her itinerary this season. Contracts have just been signed for her appearance at Grinnell next January.

Maria Kurenko, Russian coloratura soprano, will make her American debut at Carnegie Hall on Monday evening, October 27. She will then make a concert tour and several appearances in opera.

Another arrival on the Majestic last week was John McCormack, who returned to America to open his season at Boston with two concerts in Symphony Hall on October 19 and 21. His first New York appearance will be in Carnegie Hall on October 26.

Contracts have recently been signed between Frederic Baer and Haensel and Jones for a term of several years. Mr. Baer is a young baritone who has sung with the New York and Cleveland Symphonies, and at the Oberlin, Worcester and other festivals. He made his New York debut a year ago last January and at present is baritone soloist at the First Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, where R. Hunting Woodman is organist.

Arvida Valdane, soprano of the Ocean Parkway Methodist Church, will be heard in Brooklyn in the Community Concert on November 9.

Anna Burmeister, soprano, will sing in a joint recital with Ossip Gabrilowitsch in Chicago this evening. From there she will go to Toledo where she has a concert scheduled. On December 28 Miss Burmeister will appear in the Messiah with the Chicago Apollo Club.

Josef Stransky will play three symphonic poems by Frederick Smetana at the first Sunday afternoon concert of the State Symphony Orchestra at the Metropolitan Opera House to mark the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the composer.

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Elena GERHARDT
Management: DANIEL MAYER—Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.

ANNE ROSELLE
PRIMA DONNA SOPRANO
Exclusive Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall New York City

ERNA RUBINSTEIN
Management—Daniel Mayer, Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

FREEMANTEL

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Raul Paniagua

Another New York debut last week was that of Raul Paniagua, Central American pianist, who was heard in a recital in Aeolian Hall on October 15. Mr. Paniagua played, with "a fluent, well-developed technique" according to the Tribune reviewer, Bach's D minor Toccata and Fugue; Brahms' Variations and Fugue on a theme by Handel; Liszt's F minor Concert Etude; a set of variations in B flat by Chopin; Louis Campbell-Tipton's Sonata Heroica; the Chopin A flat Polonaise and his own Valse de Concert.

This imposing program was played with "technical finish" and the performance was smooth, polished and vigorous," the Tribune reviewer wrote. In the World, Deems Taylor reported that Mr. Paniagua's playing was rather "immature" but that his finger dexterity was "prodigious," his tone "good," and his interpretations individual.

Anna Burmeister

At Town Hall, New York, on October 12, Anna Burmeister, soprano, gave a song recital with the assistance of Frederick Schauwecker, accompanist. Her program ranged from Bach through German, French and American songs. Her singing of the difficult Bleed and Break air from the St. Matthew Passion was especially commented on by the newspapers. The Sun reviewer felt that Miss Burmeister had a "clear, pleasing voice" which, in the song mentioned, was "well-used with a sympathetic interpretation of the text." The Tribune complimented her for "a voice of pleasant freshness; smoothness of tone . . . and an expressive manner." The Times reviewer also thought that the soprano sang the Bach air "with much charm and sincerity."

Harold Berkley

The seldom played Conus Concerto in E minor was included in the program offered by Harold Berkley in his concert on October 15 in Aeolian Hall. Bach, Szymanowski, Hubay, Albert Spalding and Sarasate were also on Mr. Berkley's program.

The Conus Concerto was called "dull" and "only mildly tuneful" by the Tribune reviewer, who felt that "the performance was better than the piece." This same reviewer said that Mr. Berkley showed a "broad, smooth tone, not roughened or thinned by complicated passages." Alison Smith of the World felt that the Bach suite in E minor illustrated his "obvious technical ability." The Times review spoke of the violinist's style as "facile and forceful."

Hugo Kortschak

Hugo Kortschak, violinist, opened his recital at Aeolian Hall, New York, on October 10, with a violin and piano sonata in A minor, Op. 51, by David Stanley Smith, dean of the Yale University School of Music. The composition, which is dedicated to Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge, was heard for the first time. Francis Moore was the assisting pianist. Mr. Kortschak also played the Bach G minor sonata and, assisted by Vera Giles at the piano, Noren's Suite in E minor.

The newspaper reviewers divided the laurels for the evening between Mr. Smith's sonata and Mr. Kortschak's playing. The Times reviewer thought the music "showed a strong modern tendency and moments of individualism" and was "well-played" by Mr. Kortschak and Mr. Moore. The writer in the Tribune found the music "well-written, not swamping the violin or slighting the piano, and combined melodiousness with a twentieth century flavor" and considered Mr. Kortschak "a skilled and sympathetic exponent" of the work. Alison Smith of the World admitted that the composition made up in dignity and "scholarly structure" what it lacked in "divine fire." Miss Smith enthused over the violinist's rendition of this "vastly contrasted program."

Beatrice Mack

Beatrice Mack, soprano, was heard in her New York debut on the concert stage at Aeolian Hall on October 14. Miss Mack was "especially happy," Alison Smith wrote in the World, in "recapturing the fugitive moods of old Spanish and Italian songs." This writer said of Miss Mack that she had a "wistful" charm and a "very definite promise." In the Telegram and Mail she was called "a singer of intelligence and refinement . . . who sings musically." Her 'taste" and "facility" were admired by the Sun reviewer; the Times praised her "fresh and beautiful" voice; and the Tribune found that she could reach and sustain high notes "with considerable strength and smoothness."

Boy Violinist Gives Concert

Milton Schwartz, violinist, a lad in knickerbockers, appeared in joint recital with Dorothy Paca, soprano, in Aeolian Hall, New York, on October 11. His playing, according to the reviewer of the Times, "showed vigorous tone and musical individuality beyond the mere prodigy order."

Dorothy Miller Duckwitz

Dorothy Miller Duckwitz, pianist, made her first appearance in New York in a recital at Aeolian Hall on October 13. Mme. Duckwitz's program, which ranged from Bach and Chopin to Debussy, Ravel, and Cyril Scott, was well received by her audience. The Times called her program "an unusually inviting one" and Deems Taylor, in the World, thanked Mme. Duckwitz "for offering a program that, although familiar in content, possessed some individuality in arrangement."

Pitts Sanborn, in the Telegram and Mail, found Mme. Duckwitz's playing earnest, "determined" and possessed of a "sustained vigor." Mr. W. J. Henderson spoke of her rendition of Bach's familiar D minor toccata and fugue as arranged by Tausig as "clear and suave," and as having "intelligence and repose."

New York Chamber Symphony

The New York Chamber Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert of the season, Max Jacobs conducting, at the Earl Carroll Theatre on October 12. Included on the program were selections from Mozart, E. H. Mehul, Rachmaninoff, Sibelius, Lalo and Debussy. A feature of the entertainment was the tone poem, In the Bayou, by C. Linn Seller. The small orchestra acquitted itself most creditably. Ernest Newman in the Post called their playing "workmanlike," and Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram and Mail said that they were "deserving of hearty commendation." This writer considered that David Robinson "distinguished himself" by his delivery of the violin solo of a Vocalise by Rachmaninoff. The Herald-Tribune said that Miss Alma Simpson, soprano, who was the soloist of the evening, gave "an effective performance." She was assisted by Grace Cassady, pianist, and Eugenio Cibelli, guitarist.

Official History of The Symphony Society

(Continued from page 5)

pathy with the Damrosch reorganization proposition for eliminating the player-management regime which had been in vogue since the beginning, though unacceptable to the old Philharmonic orchestra. This led to the withdrawal of the conductor and incidentally to the reorganization of the Symphony Society on the subsidy plan.

Mr. Flagler was a constant attendant at the concerts of the society before becoming an active member of the organization, but with the institution of the new plan he came forward as a subscriber to the fund. During these reconstructive days the relations of Mr. Flagler with Mr. Damrosch and the orchestra became more and more intimate. His devotion and interest increased and manifested itself in larger contributions and in personal service, and shortly he took over the arduous task of raising and collecting the necessary maintenance funds.

In the spring of 1914 Mr. Flagler proposed personally to assume the entire financial responsibility. His letter to Damrosch making the offer is characteristic of his modesty and generosity. With such a guarantee the society entered upon a career of progress and development that has been consummated in an aggregation of virtuosi without superior as a symphonic body.

As president of the society Mr. Flagler is active in the discharge of the duties of that exacting office. He is a faithful attendant at the concerts and a keen analyst of them. From early youth he has had a passion for music. As a young man he attended concerts, going to the Wagner opera and developing a love for and a knowledge of the great music-dramas. Mr. Flagler is a pianist of skill, a musician in thought and culture, an ardent lover of the true and beautiful and a delightful personality.

(Installment III will appear next week.)

Francis Rogers
Concert Baritone and Teacher of Singing
Member American Academy of Teachers of Singing
144 East 62d St., New York City

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway New York City
Telephone Endicott 6074

RICHARD HAGEMAN
Conductor Metropolitan Opera Co. for Thirteen Seasons
STUDIOS
257 West 86th Street, New York

Entire Vocal and Dramatic Preparation for Concert, Opera, Oratorio
Instruction in Orchestral Conducting
A Limited Number of Pupils Accepted in the Art of Accompanying
CLASS LESSONS
Opera Coaching—Repertoire—Interpretation Accompanying
FOR INFORMATION ADDRESS MISS M. MYERS, SEC'Y.
TELEPHONE 5627 SCHUYLER

Margaret MATZENAUER
PRIMA DONNA CONTRALTO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, Inc., Fisk Building, 250 West 57th Street New York City
STEINWAY PIANO VICTOR RECORDS

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

OUT IN ST. LOUIS Rudolph Ganz is going over the music top. He is about to start his fourth year as conductor of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, and the future holds a definite brightness. Ganz has had a difficult task, which makes his progress the more noteworthy. He had, at the outset, to lift to an adequate level the entire symphony situation in the Mississippi town; then to convince that he was a conductor as well as a pianist; and finally to get St. Louis citizens to support their orchestra in the degree imperative to making it a civic asset so generally recognized that there would gradually ensue an all-sided support.

People who know St. Louis are aware of its conservatism. The community has an abundance of wealth, very many bright minds, and enough pep for whatever its townsfolk decide is worthy their peppy activities. But until St. Louis is completely "sold" on something it is inclined to hang back; to practice, in brief, a policy of watchful waiting.

Before Ganz took hold of the St. Louis Symphony it had wandered on in an aimless fashion. There wasn't much discipline amongst the men, and there wasn't a first rate playing quality. It may have thought it was a symphony band, and perhaps some St. Louisans may have thought it was. The fact is it was nothing of the sort—which is now apparent to those who remember what the organization once was and what it is today.

A DRIVE to raise a guaranty fund to provide for deficits took place in St. Louis nearly a year ago. The drive lasted a week and netted a considerable sum, though not all that was required. Still, it was a significant outcome to what was regarded in some quarters as a ticklish undertaking.

Ganz will soon be back in the city where he is to preside for three years more over the destinies of what may be made to become a fine institution. It he has aid of the kind all other representative symphony orchestra conductors in this country receive, St. Louis will be in a fortunate position in 1927. It will have the satisfaction of standing shoulder to shoulder with other progressive communities which do things in music, and that in this day and age is a sign of culture and progressiveness.

There are other things in life apart from amassing money, or getting into the social register, or chatting over some pleasant topic in one's club. St. Louis has the means and the ability to make a music place for itself if it has the mind to. If it disregards its present opportunity it will eventually be sorry. And most of us know that making "a recovery" is generally attended with more and greater obstacles than pushing on at the outset straight to a goal.

CHARLIE HACKETT got back from Australia a few days ago. Newspaper accounts which preceded the American tenor record a series of public successes which enlisted also the approval of the newspaper music reviewers, and in that Antipodes there are a number of writers who discriminate.

When an artist makes good in Australia he is asked, and insistently, to appear oftener than the original plans called for. In Hackett's case he had to put in extra appearances; and since the programmatic standards are high in the Australian cities it meant additional preparation. So a part of the tenor's time which should have been given over to singing was put in in getting ready appropriate songs, which was fatiguing to both body and nerves.

And yet some people hold to the idea that the career of a successful singer or instrumentalist is pleasant and easy. Well, at times and in certain circumstances it is, but . . . having to make hay in the sunshine keeps a musician's metaphorical nose rather close to the grindstone, and now and again a bit of skin gets rubbed off.

FROM ALL ACCOUNTS Serge Koussevitsky put vim enough into his first Boston Symphony concert to set cool Hub residents by the ears. He appears to have gone in chiefly for warmth and color and spontaneity, being content to let the sandpapered fineness of the Boston band players take care of itself.

It follows as a rule that what Boston approves New York turns from, and vice versa. If the exception does not occur in this instance Koussevitsky may find himself propelled suddenly into popularity among Gothamites. Otherwise he will be looked at, his readings listened to, and thereafter be cut into small pieces by the supporters of other conductors who have loyal followers in this city.

Whatever happens, it should cause an interesting situation. So, with a new opera conductor in the person of Tullio Serafin (at the Metropolitan) and a newcomer symphony leader whose methods seem vigorous and intense New York may experience a few of those thrills which most music patrons are prone to welcome.

IT TOOK COURAGE to return to the New York concert platform after a several years' absence, and with the consciousness that her every effort would be given microscopic scrutiny—yet Alma Gluck did not flinch. She was nervous, at the outset, and it was disclosed in her singing. But she did not attempt to dodge the issue by selecting songs with few or no high notes. She picked out songs she has presented when in her vocal prime, and went through with matters to the end.

Elsewhere in this issue of The Musical Digest appears a digest of the opinions of the foremost daily newspaper New York reviewers. Their opinions will be eagerly sought throughout the country.

THE WORCESTER FESTIVAL attracted me, week before last, and sitting through the performances brought recollections of days when the greatest artists were glad to appear there (to quote Joe Priaux, of the Ditson firm) "for little more than their board and lodging."

The $5,000 deficit this year will be met by Theodore T. Ellis, publisher of the Worcester Telegram and the Worcester Gazette. It was a fine piece of civic spirit, and should set an example to Mr. Ellis's fellow townsmen who have abundant means.

There really should be an endowment fund large enough to yield an income to cover any possible future deficit, and it is possible that President Hamilton B. Wood may start such a ball rolling.

One thing is certain: If something fundamentally sound is not soon started up Worcester way, and the people of Worcester county do not rally back of this fine old enterprise, it may lapse, which would be a pity.

A CERTAIN New York manager whose firm represents a number of fine artists said to me the other day: "Why don't you write something for the Digest about the need of our getting for local managers the program which the attraction plans to sing or play—thirty days ahead of scheduled appearances?"

The suggestion would seem to be one which every far-sighted artist or organization might wish to consider. Such a course would benefit the attraction through making it possible to inform people about what was to be presented well in advance of the proposed concert. Music club officers could comment on the compositions and the composers to their fellow members; school supervisors might explain some points to their advanced pupils; and general publicity in the newspapers could scarcely fail to be of help to both the attraction and the concert.

Incidentally, sending on a program a month in advance would make it possible to make any pertinent changes . . . which sometimes are in order. For if an artist purposes singing or playing some work that may have been given in that community once or twice (or three times, as occasionally is the case) within a recent season or so the substitution of another composition would seem a wise thing to do.

As the early bird catches the worm, so must the attraction which practices forehandedness in the matter of being prompt with a program further its own cause.

THE HUBBARD OPERALOGUES
"Entire operas ideally presented"
HAVRAH HUBBARD
HOMER SIMMONS
Management:
Beckhard & Macfarlane, Inc.
Fisk Building, New York

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer
Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO
Victor Records

MAY PETERSON
VOCALION RECORDS
SOPRANO
Formerly Opera Comique and Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: HAENSEL & JONES, AEOLIAN HALL
NEW YORK CITY

MITJA NIKISCH
"WORTHY OF THE GREAT NAME HE BEARS"
Management: DANIEL MAYER—Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

JESSIE CHRISTIAN
SOPRANO
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger
1322 Kimball Building
Chicago, Ill.

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO
VOCALION RECORDS

ARMAND TOKATYAN
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York City
Season 1924-1925 Now Being Booked

THE Concert-Giving Industry

Article VII.

CIVIC SUPPORT

CONSIDERATION of the artist-attraction, the wholesale music bureau, the local management, and the public as set forth in the preceding articles in the Concert-Giving Industry series now appearing in The Musical Digest discloses excellences and shortcomings in each group. Although these articles have touched only upon the general fundamentals it is apparent that the most successful attractions are not unfailingly the best; that the strong wholesale bureau is alert and industrious; that the prosperous local managament (whether individual or organization) is commonly intelligent and active; and that the public of this country, while often discriminating, is not as completely up to the appreciative mark as some people assert.

Perhaps in no other legitimate form of human endeavor is there to be found a greater degree of laxity of procedure. The striving by mediocre artist-attractions for the impossible; the unreasoning attitude of some established attractions; the happy-go-lucky methods of certain wholesale bureaus; and the utter inability of many local managements to look after their own interests are facts which cannot be escaped. Their scrutiny by men and women engaged in commercial or other professional fields might result, at first, in the refusal to believe that such things exist.

Concert Industry Unique

Now there can be no disputing that in the Concert-Giving Industry certain conditions prevail which are not met with elsewhere. For it is an unique business (if indeed one may term it a business) and, as some persons insist, it probably calls for unique ways of operation. Still, it does seem that if it were more than fifty per cent. right, we would hear far less complaining than is heard... from those who are a part of each of the four groups who figure directly in participating in, selling, presenting, and listening to and seeing what takes place in concert and opera auditoriums.

For it is only the small percentage of artist-attractions, wholesale music bureaus, and local managements who express satisfaction with their welfare—an amazingly small percentage. In such circumstances it is natural, and doubtless correct, to assume that the greater percentage of those occupied in one of the three aforementioned branches of the Industry are by no means completely satisfied with the way their affairs are progressing.

Allowing that an overcrowded market is one cause (i. e. competition so severe that it is a menace to the welfare of the majority—artist-attractions and local managements most specifically), are there other causes? If so, what are those causes?

In the preceding articles in this series some vital facts have been clearly set forth. There is therefore no occasion to dwell upon them again at any length. But it has been shown that perhaps one of the great needs is the more complete development of many of our local managements—of their understanding of attractions and their artistic and public value; of laying out a course and engaging for it attractions at right prices; of securing from wholesale music bureaus proper cooperation; and then of utilizing every available resource to present advantageously that course to the public.

Here and there in different parts of the United States are local managements (individuals, music clubs, other organizations, music departments in universities and colleges that conduct concert-courses) which hold generally to a commendable artistic level, satisfy their patrons, and make money.

Intelligent Management

These local managements have not succeeded by accident or through luck. They may have been favored now and again by fortunate circumstances, but most of them have been alert to inform themselves on matters essential to them in their business, and—they have worked hard.

In nine cases out of ten the successful local management has made sure before deciding to start a series of concerts and allied attractions that there was either a demand for such a series or that it could be developed. Such a management has charted the situation and discovered from it that he had the public, and that he could secure a suitable auditorium (one properly located, sufficiently large in seating capacity, and having other essential requirements). He has been either musical himself or else has had available in an advisory capacity some friend or friends with whom he could confer concerning the kind of attractions to consider and... the specific attractions eligible in the various classes desired.

Far Sighted Procedure

That local management has thereafter learned from trustworthy sources the lowest fee possible to secure each of the desired attractions for; and before signing a contract he has made sure he could secure the auditorium on the desired date. He has estimated his costs carefully—attraction, rent of auditorium, newspaper advertising, and all other local expenses—and then (if he has been wise) he has based his returns from that proposed performance at about sixty per cent. of the auditorium's seating-capacity—unless the attraction chanced to be an almost sure - fire - box - office attraction, bought either outright or secured on a percentage basis fair to him.

That local management has then turned to the stirring of civic pride and interest for much of the desired support for his project—for therein lies a strong card for the local management wise and vigorous enough to see and take advantage of it.

We know that in the very largest cities the appeal to civic cooperation must be made on lines different than can be practised in communities of a quarter of a million or less. In these latter cities and towns there is often a keener activity in this respect than prevails in the New Yorks, Bostons, Chicagos, and Philadelphias. And in these less densely populated places one finds men and women joining hands wholeheartedly in promoting whatever will improve the individual and collective happiness and welfare of the people.

But this support can be secured only through personal effort, and much of it, on the part of local management. It will not come at a single call. Sitting before a desk and wishing for it will not help in the least. Influential citizens must be seen and appealed to . . . one by one. First the most prominent man, then the next; following on with the women, whose assistance always can be obtained and utilized to striking advantage.

Developing civic interest in a music project is dependent largely upon the resourcefulness, the enthusiasm, and energy of the person back of it. Such interest may grow by itself, to an extent; but never does it become a vital force—a force moving the people to becoming interested in and supporters of such a project—until it is harnessed completely by a group of individuals who are spurred on to such ends by one person.

Since each community differs from other communities in certain respects it is imperative that the local manager who is desirous of arousing and stimulating civic interest in music shall study the problem which exists in the place where he lives. He may discover after an analysis of the situation that it is seemingly advisable to begin in a way which might not fit into the conditions which obtain in another community; and that successive steps in furthering his aims differ from those taken elsewhere.

Fundamentals Are General

But there are fundamentals which apply to all communities, and one of them is personal effort. No achievement worth talking or writing upon was brought about through half-hearted methods.

For the most part, however, cooperation of the character above referred to is readily possible. The local manager who goes personally before every organization (each music club—if there be more than one—the Chamber of Commerce, Rotary club, Kiwanis club, etc.) and explains his undertaking usually will find a response. And out of that response there can be gradually built up a force which will prove a conspicuous factor in making any series of concerts a success.

Local managements with whom The Musical Digest has conferred have explained their methods of operation in this respect; and without exception they place the utmost value on the cultivation of this element in their respective cities.

[Publicity and Promotion is the title of Article VIII in The Musical Digest series on the Concert-Giving Industry. It will appear in the next issue.]

San Francisco Opera Ends

Association Realizes a Profit on Eight Performances Under Gaetano Merola.

San Francisco, Oct. 6.—The second week of the local opera season began with a performance of Massenet's Manon, in which Tito Schipa had the leading role. The critics were unanimous in their praise of him, and the audience compelled Director Merola to allow him to repeat La Reve. Thalia Sabanieva was the Manon, and she too was received with favor.

Performances of Tosca, L'Amico Fritz, Gianni Schicchi, and La Traviata completed the opera season, which included besides a gala evening in honor of Director Gaetano Merola on Oct. 3.

The reviewer of the Chronicle wrote of Manon, "Schipa's triumph was not one of power or of volume of tone, but one of exquisitely refined vocalism and impeccable artistry. Sabanieva has an agreeable quality of voice, and she blended well with Schipa." The writer of the Examiner thought that "last night's performance of Manon enriched us with the beautiful art of Tito Schipa" and called Mme. Sabanieva "a lovely Manon."

The commentator in the Herald felt that "last night was Schipa night. His command of tonal nuance was superb. Sabanieva's sparkling tones were as lovely as ever."

On Tuesday night Tosca was given to the biggest house of the season, with Claudia Muzio in the leading role. The critics all agreed that it was the best performance of the season, and that Muzio was a glorious Tosca. Ray Brown in the Chronicle said, "Muzio had her hour of triumph last night in the title role of Puccini's Tosca. Her voice had a potent magic that had been only partially disclosed in Andrea Chenier. Hers is the most glorious Tosca I have seen or expect to see."

Charles Woodman in the Call believed, "The singing of Gigli in Tosca was the best he has ever given us. Muzio is a great artist although I still admire her acting more than her singing. De Luca had the part of Scarpia, in which he distinguished himself as without a peer."

In the Examiner Mr. Mason went on to say, "Muzio shows great artistry in Tosca. The art with which she uses her voice is as perfect as the voice itself. Gigli revealed subtle beauty of voice that we had not previously heard. De Luca was superb."

Helen Bennet in the Herald thought that "Tosca of last night was without a peer among the score of famous casts which have given the opera in this city. Muzio was glorious in voice and acting, Gigli sang as he has never sung in San Francisco before and de Luca was a Scarpia equal to Scotti—greater praise I can not give him."

On Thursday evening Mascagni's L'Amico Fritz was given, followed by Puccini's Gianni Schicchi.

The critics felt that the first opera dragged a bit and that Gianni Schicchi was somewhat of a relief, sparkling and dancing with humor and excitement. The writer in the Chronicle felt that "Schipa was as entrancingly lyric as ever, and his tones had a warm glow that deepened to ardency in the last act. Thalia Sabanieva not quite fitting physically the part, made a vocally creditable Suzel." Of Gianni Schicchi the same writer thought that "De Luca was the inimitable protagonist, dominating the scene as only a master can."

The Herald writer went on to say that "romance and comedy vied with each other last night with L'Amico Fritz and Gianni Schicchi. Schipa's voice again made its remarkable appeal and Sabanieva was equally delightful."

Friday evening, Oct. 3, Director Gaetano Merola was honored by the visiting artists and the people of San Francisco with a program in which all the artists appeared. The first act of Butterfly, the second act of Manon, the second act of Tosca and the whole of Gianni Schicchi were given. The director received hearty greeting every time he came to the stand, shared curtain calls with the artists after every act and had his well-earned ovation after the third curtain, accompanied by a laurel wreath, floral baskets and an orchestral "tush."

The San Francisco Civic Opera closed its second week with Muzio and Schipa in La Traviata, the critics being all most favorable.

According to Bradford Mills, executive manager, the close of business after the first week showed that attendance had been twenty-five per cent. ahead of last season at the same time. The opera played to more than 47,000 people in the eight performances, with average box office receipts of better than $15,000 a performance. Not only has the Association realized a profit, but it has besides about $20,000 worth of scenery and properties all of which were paid for from the season's receipts.

Other San Francisco musical activities are scheduled to begin shortly.

YVONNE D'ARLE

Is at Present in Paris, and Will Start Her Season in the United States Late This Year Because of Her Engagements in Central America.

The Alice Seckels' Matinee Musicals will open their fifth season on Oct. 20 with Ina Bourskaya. The concerts of this series will take place in the newly arranged ballroom of the Fairmount. Besides Miss Bourskaya Claire Dux, Mieczyslaw Munz, Alberto Salvi, the de Reszke Singers, and Royal Dadmun will be soloists in these concerts.

Louis Graveure, baritone, is scheduled to sing Oct. 12 in the Curran Theatre under the direction of Selby Oppenheimer, and the same artist will sing in that theatre the second time on Oct. 26. On Oct. 19 Claire Dux will appear in recital in the same hall and under the same auspices.

The San Francisco Chamber Music Society has announced that it will open its season on Oct. 28 in the Scottish Rite Auditorium. M. J. C.

San Carlo Closes New York Season

With a program consisting mainly of presentations already seen in the earlier weeks, the San Carlo Opera Company ended the fourth and last week of its engagement last Saturday night in the Jolson Theatre. The two new presentations were those of Andre Chenier on Monday evening and Lohengrin Saturday matinee.

Other performances of the last week were Madame Butterfly (special Columbus Day matinee), Barber of Seville, Trovatore, Cavalleria and Pagliacci, Carmen, and, to close, Aida. The Pavley-Oukrainsky Ballet took part in every performance.

Immediately after the closing New York performance the company left for Memphis, Tenn., where it is appearing in a number of presentations in dedication of a new civic auditorium. From there it will move on to Boston, and then to Philadelphia for a fortnight season in each city. The Gallo organization will then go on tour.

A new Tosca, Gladys Axman, sang in the repetition of the Puccini opera on October 10. Pitts Sanborn, in the Telegram and Mail, said: "As is her custom, Miss Axman sang with intelligence, musicianship, and fine taste." He felt that the lower part of her scale is not so well developed as the upper, but that this singer's "vocal utterance has gained in freedom and fulness." The reviewer thought well of Miss Axman's acting. The Times writer spoke of her "well considered interpretation," and the Tribune of the improvement in the quality of her voice over her last appearances.

GALLI-CURCI
Homer-Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer—Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Mason & Hamlin Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK

FLORA
GREENFIELD
SOPRANO
Management ERNEST HENKEL, 1451 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Bryant 3352
KNABE PIANO

Buzzi-Peccia
VOICE—DICTION
PERSONALITY
INDIVIDUAL TRAINING
THE TRADITIONAL FOUNDATION OF THE ITALIAN METHOD FOR BEGINNERS
All Students Under Maestro Buzzi-Peccia's Personal Direction
STUDIOS, 33 WEST 67TH STREET, NEW YORK CITY
TELEPHONE 4225 COLUMBUS

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

Recitalists Fill Berlin Halls

Julia Culp Returns After Five Year Absence; Several Debutants Score Success.

Berlin.

Julia Culp appeared once more in concert the other day in Berlin after an absence of five years. Everyone who is anyone in Berlin was present when she sang. Gerhart Hauptmann, German poet, sat in the first box to the left; Fritz Kreisler had the corresponding stall on the right; Fritzy Massary, the queen of Berlin musical comedy, was there; Lucy Kieselhausen, the best of all German dancers, sat not far away; Prof. Grunfeld, 'cellist; Carl Flesch, violinist; Walter Straram, conductor; Eleanor Painter-Graveur, Ganna Walska, Mafalda Salavatini, were also on hand. The tenor Jadlowker, Elisabeth van Endert, Max von Schillings, Oskar Kaufmann, the leading theatrical architect of Germany, and an immense number of concert and opera singers, composers, young artists, and diplomats could be seen in the starry sky of the stalls.

Once Napoleon caused the actor Talma to appear before an audience of kings. The kings of art who listened to Julia Culp can stand comparison with Talma's public.

Those present had a few misgivings at first. Few artists can give up their work for an extended period without causing their art to suffer. But as soon as the first song was finished, all were reassured. The expressiveness, the delivery, the effectiveness of this rare artist seemed up to her highest standard.

The critic of the Nationalzeitung was quite right when he wrote: "We do not care to be one of those whose first thought was for the volume and sensual sound of her voice. We were delighted enough to enjoy the art of a highly gifted woman without drawing cheap parallels between days long past and the present."

Mind Over Matter

The Morgenpost, too, extolled the victory of mind over matter accomplished by Mme. Culp, whose voice this reviewer freely admitted was not as faultless technically as it used to be. "What does a little loss in the higher notes matter?" this writer said. "It is indeed a unique pleasure to receive from this intelligent mouth the sure structure and lyric spirit of whatever she chooses to sing."

The impression made by Selma Kurz, formerly one of the most brilliant coloraturas of the Vienna State Opera, was not so overwhelming. The sweetness, brilliancy, and surety of this voice have obviously passed their prime, and now it is on the decline. Mr. Pisling expressed his disappointment very discreetly: "Every time Selma Kurz comes to Berlin the critic renders silent thanks for the unforgettable hours of pleasure in Vienna. Those were glorious days." Prof. Weismann was more favorable in his review. He wrote, "The best in Kurz is still alive."

But the advancing season is doing more than revive the past. New discoveries are being made. There was for example Leo Sibiriakoff, a basso of the Petrograd Opera, who made his first appearance here recently. The enthusiasm which this singer aroused is exemplified by the remarks of Mr. Stolzenberg in the Welt am Montag: "I announce a new star of the first magnitude. Here is an artist of mature age: Leo Sibiriakoff, a bass with voice that seems God-given. The tone is at once gigantic and beautiful; the voice is thoroughly trained. I had a feeling throughout the whole evening as though I were confronted by indestructible great Holy Russia herself."

Other Reviewers Agree

The other writers agreed. "He is a fine chap of Asiatic origin, a powerful bass stretching up into the baritone range. His ease in all registers is delightfully assuring," said the Boersen Courier.

Alexander Kipnis, before returning to the Chicago Opera, also gave a recital which was well attended by celebrity. The audience was particularly friendly, but the critics had reservations attached to their praises. It is true that Dr. Leopold Schmidt acknowledged that "this Russian singer possesses one of the best bass voices we know of"—but he added besides, "He brought it back uninjured from America, but his artistry has not improved. There is a lack of decision in his singing which keeps it from great heights. Spoiled by early successes he is in danger of resting midway." The Boersen Courier also mixed praise with censure: "The great strong bass of Kipnis holds its ground alongside the voices of other great Russian singers, but his treatment of the natural organ is not the same."

Another traveller to America said good-bye to the Berlin concert public in his star parts. This was Rudolf Laubenthal, heroic tenor of the New York Metropolitan. Prof. Taubmann provided this traveller with an excellent passport, writing, "His voice is beautiful and brilliant in all ranges; a genuine heroic tenor." Prof. Weismann was more critical and a little readier to attack: "It appears that one can get along in America too with mere prettiness. . . . Nevertheless it must be said that the voice is as brilliant as it was before."

An American Pianist

America not only takes, but also gives. Leonora Cortez, a young pianist of the school of Mr. Alberto Jonas, came across the big pond, played, and conquered.

The Berliner Tageblatt confirmed the "rare pleasure" of the meeting between Miss Cortez and Berlin. "Although a debutante," this writer remarked, "her talents are unmistakable. Not only the technical maturity of her playing is remarkable, but also the feeling of quietness and surety with which she masters all problems. And what a program for a beginner! She played the Chaconne of Bach as arranged by Busoni, Beethoven's Opus 110, pieces by Chopin, Jonas, Arensky, and Debussy, Liszt's Mephisto Waltz, and the Variations on a Theme of Paganini by Brahms. It appears that piano literature has few mysteries for her, and her memory no boundaries."

The Vossische Zeitung greeted the young American in similar wise: "She is one of the most genuine piano talents we have experienced in a long time, although for the present her work is still lacking in great depth."

Gabrilowitsch Plays

We comprehended anew what depth, noble maturity, and distinguished virtuosity in a pianist mean when Ossip Gabrilowitsch in the course of his second concert relinquished his baton to Leonid Kreutzer, and he himself sat down at the piano. The press was not niggardly in its praise. One reviewer said, "The same harmonious gesture with which Gabrilowitsch let the Unfinished grow up flowing and strong was to be seen in the manner in which his fingers conjured Mozart from the keys. The second Gabrilowitsch concert brought further information about the personality of this highly valuable musician. He is a true artist."

The mastery of Weingartner blossomed forth to the full in his first concert of the year. He is in the midst of his artistic regeneration. Max Marschalk was quite right when he pointed out that every artist has his moments of weariness.

This writer said, "We were put in mind of Arthur Nikisch, who was beginning to be considered old lumber when he surprised everyone with his wonderful regeneration. Weingartner, too, had to submit to this natural law from which he could not escape. His last concert proved, however, that he, too, has gathered fresh energies which will produce music as fine as any that he gave us in his best years."

The soloist of this wonderful evening was the glorious Emil Sauer, a grand master of the piano, an elegant, amiable, finished supporter of the highest and most refined traditions. The true spirit of Franz Liszt could be

ARTHUR KURSCHNER.

Modern Works for Paris

Paris, Oct. 8.—The Societe des Concerts is scheduled to commence its season on Oct. 19 at the Salle Gaubert. The repertory includes works of Stravinsky, Ravel, Schmitt, Roger-Ducasse, d'Indy, Caplet, Hue, and others. Among the soloists already engaged are MM. Szigeti, Darrieux, Benedetti, and Prokofieff.

CHARLES MARSHALL
TENOR CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
First appearance with N. Y. Symphony Orchestra Nov. 30, 1924
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals, After January, 1925
Brunswick Records Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

The Center for Modern Music
J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

FORREST LAMONT
TENOR, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson 4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill. Aeolian Hall, New York

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Revive Old Works in Vienna

Forgotten Compositions of Beethoven and Gluck Share Festival Programs With Modern Music.

Vienna.

The great Viennese art festival continues, and already, although it is but half finished at this writing, it may be said that the authorities in charge of it are showing to their greatest advantage the artistic craftsmanship and spirit of the musicians of the city.

In respect to the theatre part of the festival, operatic works have so far predominated. The State Opera put on a cycle of the works of Mozart beginning with Die Entfuhrung, and after that carried their presentations through the operas in the repertory which have been the work of contemporary Viennese composers. Only Bittner, Kienzl, Schmidt, and Korngold figure among this latter group, and, unhappily, as many persons think, Schreker is not one of them.

Revive Old Works

The State Opera did another interesting thing when it revived as part of the festival several forgotten works of Gluck and Beethoven. On one evening Gluck's tragic pantomime, Don Juan, and Beethoven's Ruins of Athens were performed in a single program.

The ballet of Gluck was composed in 1761, and was performed a great deal in its time, both in London and in Paris. In our time it has been quite forgotten, and only recently it was brought to the public attention once more in a historical collection called Memories of Music in Austria.

Gluck and his ballet-master, Angiolini, were of the opinion that a ballet could be used as much in tragic situations as in others, and to prove their point they chose the Don Juan story in a version borrowed from Moliere. The duel of Don Juan, the feast in his palace, the visit of the stone guest, and his journey to Hell are in Gluck's ballet combined into three short scenes, accompanied by music of the greatest loveliness and full of dramatic power. This music must be heard only once for the hearer to know that it belongs to the great line in the history of the art.

Richard Strauss himself conducted the piece, for which the ballets were prepared by Kroller. The splendor and taste of the performance excited universal remark.

The Ruins of Athens followed, or rather a selection of the best music available in this piece, which Beethoven composed in 1811. The text was revised by Hofmannsthal, who made the performance ever so much more interesting and practicable. Hofmannsthal introduced on the scene a poet of the year 1811, very suggestive of Goethe, who strives ardently after the loveliness of the old classical world. He is carried up to Olympus, and at this point in the story the music of Beethoven's youthful composition, Prometheus, is introduced. When the poet finds himself again in the ruins of Athens the march of rejoicing from the later composition is used, and the symbol intended is that of the union of German poetry and the Greek world of the gods, just as Goethe portrays in the second part of Faust.

Strauss Conducts

This work also was directed by Richard Strauss, and the ballet was trained again by Kroller. Alfred Roller prepared for the presentation some very fascinating scenery of the Acropolis. It was one of the most beautiful evenings that the Opera has offered in some time.

In concert some very important works have already been presented. Particularly interesting was the performance of the latest composition of Arnold Schonberg, a Quintet for wind instruments. Another new composition heard for the first time was the Orchestra Suite of the radical Viennese composer and musical theorist, Josef Matthias Hauer. Bruckner's F minor Mass and a number of new piano compositions of E. W. Korngold were performed in a choral concert and in a piano recital. It was interesting to note the difference in the results obtained by Hauer and Schonberg, each of whom in his own way has exhausted and broken away from any definite chromatic progression in tones. The piano concert of Korngold was an extremely brilliant affair.

The climax of the festival is scheduled to come with the performance of Schonberg's Gluckliche Hand, a drama with music, and of the posthumous Tenth Symphony of Mahler. The State Opera and the newly flourishing Volksoper, now under the direction of Fritz Stiedry, are preparing these performances.

Mahler's Tenth Arouses Interest

The Mahler work is arousing particular interest. Details regarding it are being kept secret. It is said that he conceived this work while in the United States, and that he probably began writing it before he left New York.

In the finale the composer has used a muffled drum as an introduction, and this device is said to have been first thought of in New York where he heard a drum so played at a funeral. Partly because the death of Mahler followed within a year upon the composition of the Tenth and partly because the spirit of the piece is solemn throughout, although that is characteristic of much of his work, critics have already begun to read programs of death and fate into the posthumous composition.

PAUL STEFAN.

Paris to See New Ballets

Paris, Oct. 5.—A new ballet by Alfredo Casella, La Vengeance de la Lune, and another novelty by Roland-Manuel, Golf Links, will be presented by the Swedish Ballet in Paris this season.

Berlin Will Hear Renard

Berlin, Oct. 4. — Igor Stravinsky's Renard has been announced for production shortly at the State Opera in Berlin.

Galli-Curci Gives Concert in London

Mme. Galli-Curci made her first appearance in England on October 12 in Albert Hall, London. The immense auditorium, which seats 10,000 persons, was sold out many weeks in advance, according to reports. The concert was repeated Sunday, October 19.

A special cable to the New York Times gave excerpts of the reviews of the writers of the London papers. H. C. Colles wrote in the London Times, "Galli-Curci began with old Italian arias, a brave thing to do since Bononcini and Pergolese are not the sort of thing to take by storm such an audience as hers. A little inequality in certain notes of the former and curiously long breaks between phrases of the latter's Se tu m'ami were possible evidence of her anxiety.

"Generally what one admires about Galli-Curci is that she can do so much with a voice confined to one color and that a pale one. She is herself the pretty mocking-bird of which she sings with such agility. One must not expect to be emotionally swayed by her or hope for new light on masterpieces of song."

The Daily Mail's music reviewer wrote, "She sang with a lyric soprano voice which was never of less than engagingly musical quality, and was, at its best, perfect and lovely. Ease, freedom, purity, spontaneity in song—how delightful these are, and how rare! They induce us to forgive a lot in a singer, and parts of Mme. Galli-Curci's concert were badly in need of forgiveness.

"The childish section of the public likes a display of agility high up among the ledger lines. Mme. Galli-Curci indulged them. She can do that sort of thing, but, frankly, she does not do it surpassingly well. Where she surpasses is in singing the suave and aristocratic old music of Italy in her normal soprano range."

The Westminster Gazette said, "It may be said without any hesitation that she abundantly fulfilled all expectations. Her voice, without being very big, is of exquisite quality, and she employs it with surpassing ease and skill."

In the Daily News the music reporter wrote, "I should hesitate to proclaim her voice as one of the voices of the century, but Mme. Galli-Curci has some qualities which give her a place of her own among the singers of the generation. Her sustained singing is as perfect as her brilliant passage work. She has a great command of a variety of color such as coloratura singers seldom have, and she has temperament."

GUY MAIER and LEE PATTISON
Management: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANOS

MME. ETHEL PARKS
Lyric-Coloratura Soprano
MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

CLAUDIA MUZIO
SOPRANO, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: HARRISON & HARSHBARGER,
1322 Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: O. SCOTTO, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

London Concerts Gain in Numbers

John McCormack Makes Post-War Debut; Two Pianists Among Early Season Recitals.

London.

The arrangements of London's purveyors of music are such as to shatter for two consecutive weeks the accustomed Sunday calm of the metropolis. Yesterday (October 5) John McCormack returned to the English concert stage for the first time in a dozen years. Next Sunday Amelita Galli-Curci makes her debut appearance here in a recital which has been sold out ever since it was announced last June or earlier.

Mr. McCormack's house — the Queen's Hall—had been sold out long in advance. And "Not often at public recitals are there to be witnessed such demonstrations of enthusiasm as those which greeted" him on this occasion, as the Telegraph writer put it, continuing: "The return of Mr. McCormack marked a red-letter day in the history of London concerts. Only the welcome accorded Fritz Kreisler when he first played here after the war is at all comparable to the scene yesterday."

As to his artistry, the same writer says: "Had the singer proceeded no further than his first group, the audience would have known him for a master of phrasing and diction, even if only a few knew that he was performing feats of breath-control that were proof of the highest technique. But as in sincere art the technique is only the means toward a desired end, so in the airy of the classical period and in the lieder which followed one thought less of how they were sung than of the songs themselves, of their beauty and of their essential mood. This seems to be McCormack's almost incomparable gift. Truly it was a memorable recital, and the program itself was a masterpiece of selection."

Irish Tenor Praised

The tenor, according to the Morning Post, gave "object lessons in the refinements of vocalization," "models of legato phrasing," "enunciation of every syllable clear to a degree." And his Irish folk-songs were, of course, "perfect in their genre." The Times commended Mr. McCormack's program as "very substantial" and different from the hackneyed bill which "many famous singers considered good enough for a Sunday audience"; "one often has to praise the intelligence of artists whose technique is defective," the reviewer continues, "but Mr. McCormack has used his complete vocal control to serve interpretative ends."

Another singer known to American audiences (an American, in fact) made a reappearance during the week of September 29-October 5: John Barclay, the baritone who created quite a favorable impression here last spring at his debut. He "showed" the Times writer "a baritone of good compass and ringing quality. If tone and enunciation were both a little calculated," the writer continues, "that is a defect which experience will cause to disappear, and meanwhile we listen to an art with some body in it, as well as freshness and hope." The Post critic thinks "the balance is on the interpretative side," although he calls the voice "powerful." The Telegraph makes reservations over its "congratulations" of the singer's first appearance, but on the score of interpretation; his voice still displayed at this second recital "many admirable qualities—of resonance, diction, and so forth." "Monotony' of interpretation is the Sunday Times' complaint as well.

The body of Enrico Caruso will be transferred to his own chapel in the Cimitero del Pianto (left) in Naples as soon as the last decorations are finished. The altar (right) inside the chapel has in the center the famous bas-relief of the Madonna by the Master of the Marble Madonnas. This work of the XVth century was always in Mr. Caruso's studio, and his heirs have thought it fitting that it be placed in his tomb. The chapel has been erected by his widow.

Pianists Appear

The youthful but lusty season had two pianists to offer during its second week: Wilhelm Bachaus, who played on October 1, and Mark Hambourg, who played on the 4th. Mr. Bachaus won his usual plaudits, the Sunday Times writer declaring, for example: "One could not but marvel anew at the extent of his finger control. He can command an exceptional range of tone with the fingers only, without calling for power to any appreciable extent, on the wrist or arm muscles." Only in a Schumann sonata did he, in this reviewer's opinion, permit himself "a mere high-colored display of an admittedly astonishing technique."

Mr. Hambourg, it was generally felt, gave too much rein to brilliance. Nevertheless, the Telegraph says: "Whatever he did, he did with that air of authority that never forsakes him. He did things that do not appear in the cold black and white of the printed page of music, but he did them marvelously well."

The same evening the Pavlowa season at Covent Garden came to an end. The Royal Opera was full, and a long queue waited many hours for admission down the length of Floral street, winding around the shops of the fruit wholesalers to whom the neighborhood has been made over. The farewell ovation may be imagined; in addition, Theodore Stier, the conductor, was presented with a gift by the members of the orchestra as a token of esteem.

P. L.

Leginska Conducts Abroad

Munich, Oct. 9.—Ethel Leginska made her first appearance as conductor of a symphony orchestra when she appeared this week in Munich directing the augmented Konzertvereins Orchestra at the Tonhalle. Her program included Weber's Oberon Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and two of her own poems after Tagore. It was the first time a woman conductor has been heard in Munich.

Soviet to Revise Operas

According to the Russian newspaper Pravda, the Administration of the Soviet State Theatres has instructed the chief of the theatrical section of the Commissariat for Education to revise and rewrite the librettos of Tosca, Les Huguenots, Rienzi, and of Stravinsky's ballet, Chant du Rossignol, using as the basis for revision a revolutionary theme for the story.

GIGLI

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

CYRENA VAN GORDON
Prima Donna Mezzo Contralto Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management:
For the East: R. E. Johnston, 1451 Broadway, New York City
For the West: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

BORIS LEVENSON, composer and teacher, has resumed his classes in theory, harmony, sight-reading, sight-singing, ear-training and solfeggio at his studio at 47 West Ninety-second street, New York City. Mr. Levenson, who was a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakoff and was graduated from the Petrograd Conservatory of Music, is also offering special classes in counterpoint, composition and orchestration.

Grace Huebner, teacher of piano, has been engaged for another year in the High School and Junior College of Ontario, California, with an increased number of pupils. Besides this engagement, Mrs. Huebner will continue to take private pupils.

The Brooklyn Academy of Musical Art, at 240 Quincy street, Brooklyn, announces the following free scholarships for 1924-25: piano, advanced, with Dorsey Whittington; junior, with Frances Kohlovna, accompanying, with Charles King; vocal, men, with Carl Schlegel, baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company; women, with Mme. Emma Howe-Fabri.

Pietro Yon, organist and teacher, will return to the United States next Saturday. Mr. Yon spent his summer in Italy with a party of American musicians, among whom were Mrs. Yon, Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Kernochan, E. Braender, Annabelle Boyer, Lulu Kissling, Josephine Russell, R. Porter Campbell, W. Chenoweth, Mae Braender, and his brother Constantin.

The party left New York on the Conte Verde on May 31. En route they took part in a benefit concert in which more than $1,000 was raised for the seamen's fund. On arriving in Italy the group visited Turin, Pisa, Rome, Venice, Florence, Milan, and Como, and played at St. Peter's Basilica, the Vatican, at the Pontifical Superior School of Sacred Music, at the Academy of St. Cecilia, and in other places.

The trip included also a number of visits to high points in the Alps, and several recitals, including one each in the Vicenza Cathedral, in Milan, and at the Liceo Musicale in Turin.

The Heartt-Dreyfus Studios of voice and languages reopened for the season in the MacDowell Club Building, Los Angeles, California.

Richard Czerwonky, violinist, has made an innovation in his classes at the Bush Conservatory by establishing a class in sight-reading for all players of violin and other orchestral instruments for the study of music used in movie-houses, hotel and restaurant orchestras, theatres, etc. This class is designed to fill a want in the preparation of students for so-called "business" playing, wherein many fail for want of practical experience who are otherwise skilled soloists.

The Sixth Biennial National Contest for young professional musicians has been announced by the National Federation of Music Clubs, of which Mrs. John F. Lyons, of Fort Worth, Texas, is president. In this preliminary announcement, the purposes, organization, judges and prizes are mentioned. There will be national prizes as well as those for states and districts. National prize winners will receive cash awards of $500 each, or, if preferred, the contestant may secure one year's scholarship, including living expenses, under a teacher of the highest standing in a music school of national reputation. Also, two concert appearances, in some cases with orchestra, are guaranteed the scholarship winners following their year's study.

The entire United States has been divided into fifteen districts from which the contestants for the National contest will be chosen. State try-outs are to be held in each state between February 15 and March 30, and the district contests shall be held from April 15 to May 5. The finals will be in Portland, Oregon, in June, 1925.

DAVID MANNES
Director of the School of Music in New York Which Bears His Name.

Kendall K. Mussey, director of the Brooklyn Music School, who not long ago returned from a European trip, said that Lady Astor has become interested in the music school settlement plan and is preparing to put it in practice in England.

New members of the faculty of the David Mannes Music School which is well started on its ninth season, are Melville Smith, who takes the place of David McK. Williams as teacher of organ, William L. Calhoun, Helen Shimanovsky, Edwin Ideler, Walter Charmbury and Parker Russell.

The recently published work, The Art of Violin Playing, by Carl Flesch, is now obtainable in this country in an English translation published by Carl Fischer. The book is the result of many years' experience and observation and, technically, is an important contribution to musical literature. Fritz Kreisler said of it: "In my opinion it is the most important work which has been written on this subject."

The need for better music and better song leaders in the church schools is responsible for the innovation in the training of church school leaders which is being introduced by Reginald L. McCall, who will conduct a training school in church school music at the Training School for Christian Workers, 7 Gramercy Park, New York.

This school offers an opportunity to church school song leaders to become more than haphazard leaders of their audiences. The school opened for registration on October 14, and sessions will begin this evening, continuing throughout the season. The enrollment is limited to sixty.

"The untrained but willing Sunday school teacher is practically a person of history. The teacher of today must be trained in modern methods of teaching the Bible if he is to maintain a class," said Mr. McCall recently. To meet the need for trained teachers the religious education department of the Greater New York Federation of Churches has established in various parts of the city community teacher training schools. This year one will be conducted at Union Theological Seminary, 3041 Broadway, with the co-operation of Columbia University Extension.

The school opened on the evening of October 13 and will continue for twenty-four Monday evenings, omitting the Christmas holiday season.

Other training schools will be conducted in the Bronx and in southern Manhattan. There is one also for church school workers of the colored churches, which meets in Abyssinian Baptist Church, having begun October 13 and continuing throughout the season.

Friends of Calmon Luboviski recognized him as the second of the Three Generations of Fiddlers pictured on this page last week, even though his name appeared as Luvitsky. Theodore Spiering, his teacher, and Louis Putlitz, his pupil, represented the other two generations.

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

SAMOILOFF
BEL CANTO STUDIOS
309 W. 85th St. Tel.: Schuyler 6952 New York

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1924
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

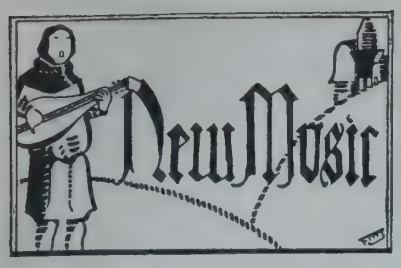
Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director
120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Address Dept. V
Catalogue on application

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing



ANOTHER volume has been added to the eighty-eight already included in the Musicians Library of the Oliver Ditson Company. This is volume II of Early Italian Songs and Airs. Volume I includes compositions Caccini to Bononcini. In the second of the pair of books are represented Provenzale, Stradella, Torrelli, Steffani, Fedeli, Alessandro Scarlatti, Vivaldi, Bononcini, Perti, Gasparini, Lotti, Caldara, Mancini, Astorga, Durante, Marcello, Leo, Bencini, Pergolesi, Traetta, Paisiello, Giordani, and other composers of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

A preface to the volume includes short biographical sketches of the composers and notes on the particular compositions included in the volume. The texts of the songs are published in English as well as in the original Italian. The works included are of varied moods and sentiments, and they are admirably chosen from a great mass of songs among which choice is difficult.

Vocal students, mature artists and teachers will find here a veritable gold mine of what is likely to be pleasing in their study and work. The second volume of Early Italian Songs and Airs, clearly published and appropriately arranged by Pietro Floridia, is a fit companion to the other numbers in the Ditson Library.

Henry Litolff, one of the principal music publishers of Central Europe, who issues editions of minature scores, sheet music, and orchestral parts, has just established an exclusive American agency in New York. The International Music Company, at 5 Columbus Circle, have become sole agents in the United States of the Litolff Edition.

Two Left Hand Studies for the piano by Eric Mareo are published in London by Elkin & Co. (Ricordi, New York). The first is called Lament, and is a piece in a semi-jazz style, which gives the left hand plenty of problems in lithe movement and differentiation of tone quality. The piece is not too difficult, and the intervals are rarely so wide that the pedal and broken chords must be brought into use. The Scherzo is much swifter, and is more difficult of performance.

The same house has just published Brian Hope's Chansonette for piano, a singing melody for the middle range of the piano set off by a simple choral off-beat accompaniment; Nicolas D'Averil's Little Sea Pictures, which are twelve five finger pieces for children who have been studying the piano for some months; and Eric Mareo's Children's Suite, consisting of a Pastorale, Doll's Dance, Minuet, See Saw, and Russian Dance for the piano pupil of early grades.

A recent Chester publication consists of two songs by John Dowland from his Pilgrim's Solace. In this edition they have been transcribed for voice and piano with violin obbligato. Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson have done the editorial work. From Silent Night is a piece of solemn, almost Hebraic, sentiment, and Go, Nightly Cares, is similarly pensive. The violin part is unusually free in its movement from the trends both of the voice and the piano, so that the polyphonic character of the piece is distinctive and interesting.

The series of Secular Choruses, Schirmer Edition, has been augmented by many new numbers. Among them are The Big Brown Bear, by Mana-Zucca, which is in for four part men's chorus; Dawn, by Carl Deis, arranged for several choral combinations, four part chorus of men, four part mixed chorus, and three part chorus of women; Summer Winds, by Wilson Bishop, for two part chorus of women; Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal, by Mark Andrews, four part chorus of men; Moon Madness, by Gustave Ferrari, four part chorus of women; Brunette, by H. Alexander Matthews, four part chorus of men; A Bowl of Roses, by Mark Andrews, for the same combination; and Sidney Homer's Requiem.

The Question Box

1. Is Leopold Stokowski Russian or Polish?
2. What is the lowest tone sounded by a musical instrument?
3. When did Theodore Thomas die?
4. Has Mendelssohn's Midsummer Night's Dream ever been presented at the Metropolitan?

Last Week's Answers

1. Igor Stravinsky became 42 years of age last June 5.
2. The Prix de Rome is a stipend granting four years' study in Rome awarded by the French Government each year to the pupil of the Paris Conservatory winning first place in its annual competition. Every other year a similar prize is awarded by the Brussels Conservatory.
3. Although Mischa Levitzki was born in Russia of Russian parents he is a native American citizen, since he was born during a visit of his parents to Russia after they had become naturalized American citizens.
4. Dr. Thaddeus Rich is concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

MARIA THERESA
One of the Six Original Duncan Dancers, Appearing in Recital in New York This Week.

MY LIFE, an autobiography of Emma Calve, which appeared not long ago in one of the most popular American magazines, is published in book form by D. Appleton and Company. The translation from the French of Mme. Calve was done by Rosamond Gilder.

To a large extent it is accurately descriptive of Mme. Calve's book simply to report that it did appear serially in a periodical of tremendous circulation. One would hardly expect such an autobiography to dig deep into the surface of the personality and the experience of the subject. My Life is not profound. It is rapid, light, and readable, and leaves much untold.

Mme. Calve has been without a doubt one of the most colorful characters who ever appeared on the concert stage or in opera, and to be most colorful in these colorful worlds is to be vivid indeed. Yet the Calve temperament, known to whoever has been even distantly acquainted with that great artist, is barely hinted at in this autobiography. Often one feels in reading it that were the name of some other successful singer inserted wherever in the chronicle that of Mme. Calve appears, the reader would feel rarely that there was any discrepancy.

In other words, the individuality of Mme. Calve is not clearly drawn. To a large extent her book is a polite chronicle, a succession of surface descriptions, a report of audiences stirred and applauding. That does not make the life of Calve any more than an account of the concert tours of Paderewski without reference to his ambitions and deeds in Poland would be the story of his life.

It may be said that allowance must be made in view of the fact that the book was originally written for popular magazine circulation. Yet here it has been put into book form, and in this more pretentious and more expensive edition it is due to the reader of the book that it consist of solid material.

Too often persons who catch the public eye and the public ear allow their names to help sell books which they have written or dictated very hurriedly, or which have been written for them. If this autobiography of Emma Calve does not fall into this class, it is safe to say that it comes very near to it. Much of the time it is interesting; practically never is it important.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Special free scholarships will be awarded under the following eminent artists

PROFESSOR LEOPOLD AUER
Violinist—Guest Teacher

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Voice Culture—Guest Teacher

LEO ORNSTEIN
Pianist

LEO SCHULZ
Cellist

For further particulars address
Charlton L. Murphy, Managing Director

ZECKWER-HAHN
PHILADELPHIA MUSICAL ACADEMY
FREDERICK HAHN, President

1617 Spruce Street Philadelphia, Pa.

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1924-1925
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN - HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

The Rialto String Quartet, which takes part in the musical program of the Rialto Theatre, New York, from time to time, poses with four valuable instruments of the sixteenth century, loaned by the Wurlitzer Company, which the quartet played last week in connection with the First Convention of the American Violin Makers in New York. Left to right are Willy Stahl, Herman Saleeski, Gaston Dubois, and William Eastes.

Harold Samuel Plays Bach in N. Y. Debut

In an all-Bach program, Harold Samuel, English pianist, made his New York debut at Aeolian Hall October 14. Mr. Samuel came through the ordeal of a one-composer program with brilliant success, according to the newspaper reviewers. In the World was the comment: "It is a heroic test both of audience and performer, but in this case the pianist was so thoroughly a part of his music that you forgot the magnitude of the undertaking with the first sure notes of the D major Fugue."

W. J. Henderson in the Sun felt that Mr. Samuel "played Bach excellently" and complimented him for his "incisiveness of rhythm" and his "clarity of enunciation." This writer continued in his praise of the pianist: "He proved himself to be an artist of solid merit, a pianist of breadth and insight and an interpreter of Bach entirely free from the trammels of convention." F. D. Perkins, writing in the Tribune, characterized his playing as "fluent, delicate, each note receiving a due and calculated value, but at the same time spirited and vigorous."

Mr. Samuel's playing of the sarabande of the English F major suite was particularly well spoken of. The Times reviewer, Olin Downes, felt that it was presented with "technical clarity" and "musicianly gusto"; Pitts Sanborn, in the Telegram and Mail, wrote: "At this juncture Mr. Samuel and Bach both came into their own"; Mr. Henderson considered that the pianist gave "a fine and eloquent rendition of this composition.

The program consisted of the Adagio in G major, the Fantasia and Fugue in D major, the English suite in F major, four preludes and fugues from the Well-Tempered Clavichord, and the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue.

Cincinnati Hears Pianist

Cincinnati, Oct. 17.—The concert season here was started with a recital by Vladimir de Pachmann on October 10 and a concert of Sousa's band in the Emery Auditorium. De Pachmann received unanimous praise from the local press. Sousa's band played to large and enthusiastic audiences.

A record crowd attended the fifth annual community song and music festival in Eden Park on October 12. Will R. Reeves directed the chorus of music lovers who filled the huge amphitheatre. Seventy-five musicians from the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of William Kopp, provided the instrumental music. Dan Beddoe, tenor, was soloist.

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
Beginning Sunday
MARY PICKFORD
in "DOROTHY VERNON OF HADDON HALL"
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
"CAPTAIN BLOOD"
With
J. WARREN KERRIGAN and JEAN PAIGE
A Vitagraph Picture
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA

RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
"THE BORDER LEGION"
With HELENE CHADWICK and ANTONIO MORENO
A Paramount Picture
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

Lines o' News AND Chatter

It was back-again and gone-again last week for Giorgio Polacco, of the Chicago Opera forces, and Edith Mason (Mrs. Polacco). They arrived in New York on the SS Majestic and not many hours later found them hurrying further westward. On the same steamer was the newly appointed Chicago Opera conductor Roberto Moranzoni, who departed for the Windy City on Sunday. He will make his debut in that city leading Tosca on November 6.

* * *

Among the many who heard the opening New York Philharmonic Orchestra concert last Thursday evening was Alexander Smallens, conductor of Philadelphia's Civic Opera Company.

* * *

Charles Henry Meltzer was also present; taking time off from his English libretto writing for that occasion.

* * *

Festival singing appears to agree with William Gustafson, the Metropolitan Opera basso. He is home again, after having filled several recent engagements . . . with several pounds added to his weight.

* * *

The symphony orchestras appear getting off to excellent starts this season. Reports state that they are revealing more improved qualities—which means that in the aggregate they are the foremost in the world.

* * *

Lines-o'-Newser knows Vincente Ballester is in New York. He met the Metropolitan baritone four times recently in two days.

* * *

Some splendid activities for the American Orchestra Association (fostered by Mrs. E. H. Harriman) are reported for the coming season by Chairman Franklin D. Robinson. And Conductor Chalmers Clifton will be a rather busy person, too.

* * *

The Chicago Opera administration is pleased over news received from Comm. Scandiani, general manager of Milan's La Scala. Both Puccini and Toscanini have selected three members of the Chicago Opera Company for the world premiere of Turandot: Mmes. Edith Mason and Rosa Raisa and Giacomo Rimini.

Louis Eckstein, the genial chief of the Ravinia Opera Company, arrived in New York last week. He will remain with us until the opening of the Metropolitan.

* * *

Over in Philadelphia the duties of music reviewer for the Public Ledger will be filled by Samuel L. Laciar, formerly serving in that capacity for the Evening Public Ledger. Fullerton Waldo is relinquishing his former post to devote himself entirely to work in the editorial department of the morning Public Ledger.

* * *

The music reviewers are on the job again, and their pens, pencils, and typewriters will be worked hard for some months to come.

* * *

Tullio Serafin, the Metropolitan's new conductor, is on the job rehearsing the orchestra. All the members like him . . . "yes sir." Giuseppe Danise, a baritone mainstay of Don Giulio Gatti's organization, is showing Serafin the New York sights, in Danise's motor-car.

* * *

Herbert Johnson, assistant to President Insull of the Chicago Opera, was a New York visitor last week. Don't be surprised if Mr. Johnson announces soon the engagement of a tenor well known. Incidentally Gioconda will open the Chicago season. Tosca, Prophete, The Pearl Fishers, Aida, Lucia, Tanhauser,. and Samson will follow soon.

* * *

Arnold Bennett has finished the libretto of a one-act opera which is to be set to music by Eugene Goossens. Is not this Mr. Goossen's first venture into opera? At any rate, it is hoped in England that the British National Opera Company will get it in time for production next season.

* * *

Mario Marchesi, the veteran prompter of the Met, looked a little bewildered—and very much pleased—the other day when Mr. Gatti presented him with a gold watch, on the back of which was inscribed in the director's own handwriting, "To Mario Marchesi, from Giulio Gatti-Casazza,—Scala, 1899-Metropolitan, 1924."—twenty-five years of faithful service.

THEODORE SPIERING
ANNOUNCES HIS PERSONAL ADDRESS
250 WEST 82ND STREET
NEW YORK
Telephones: TRAFALGAR 7671
ENDICOTT 5630

The Cleveland Institute of Music
A MODERN LABORATORY SCHOOL
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
The Institute carries pupils from the initial steps in musical training through the most advanced grades.
Rhythm, Ear-Training, Solfege, play an important part in the foundation lessons.
Orchestral Training, Composition, Pedagogy, Accompanying, under master instruction, are offered advanced students.
Write for catalogue on regular instrumental and vocal courses
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

MUD

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

History of the N. Y. Symphony
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 2 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc. 15 CENTS A COPY

Carlos Sedano, young Spanish violinist, made his American debut in a recital at Carnegie Hall, New York, on October 19.

Bulletins of News

Mme. Anna Pavlowa, at an informal reception last Thursday, confirmed the announcement that this would be her farewell tour of the United States. An occasional New York appearance is not impossible, however. At the completion of her United States tour Mme. Pavlowa will go to Mexico City, thence to Berlin. She will not tour Australia as originally announced.

Giovanni Martinelli, Miguel Fleta, Olga Forrai, Paul Bender, Graziella Pareto, Flora Perini, Pietro Yon and George Liebling were among those arriving from Europe and South America during the last few days.

The Chicago Civic Opera Company announces the first week's repertory of operas and the artists scheduled to appear in the leading roles. The opening opera on November 5 will be a revival of La Gioconda, with Rosa Raisa, and with Giorgio Polacco conducting; Thursday evening, Tosca, with Claudia Muzio and Mariano Stabile, and with Roberto Moranzoni conducting; Friday evening, a revival of Le Prophete, with Louise Homer and Charles Marshall, Mr. Moranzoni conducting; Saturday matinee, The Pearl Fishers, with Graziella Pareto, Charles Hackett, Giacomo Rimini and Edouard Cotreuil, Mr. Polacco conducting; Saturday evening, Aida, with Rosa Raisa, Augusta Lenska, Forrest Lamont, and Cesare Formichi; Monday evening, Lucia, with Toti dal Monte; Tuesday evening, Tannhauser, with Olga Forrai, Cyrena Van Gordon and Joseph Schwarz, Henry G. Weber conducting.

Among the New York week-end concerts, full report of which will be given in the next issue of the Musical Digest, were appearances of Maria Theresa, Tomford Harris, Anne Hull and Mary Howe, Ota Gygi and Marion Vadie, Anna Pavlowa, Roland Hayes, Hipolito Lazaro, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Nina Tarasova, Friends of Music, Louise Homer and Louise Homer Stires, John McCormack, Letz Quartet, Rose Raymond, Dora Rose, the Beethoven Association, Clara Clemens, Bertha Farner, Edmund Burke, and Mme. Leschetiszky.

"Leningrad" on Concert Program Angers Boston

BOSTON, Oct. 19.—The newspapers this morning are carrying first page stories concerning the anger aroused among certain patrons of the Boston Symphony concerts by the use of the name "Leningrad" as a designation for the capital of Russia in the programs of the orchestra. The use of Leningrad in place of Petrograd, which has become customary in many of the leading American newspapers since the Russian Government changed the name of its leading city in honor of the dead Lenin, was attributed by some to Serge Koussevitsky, new Russian conductor of the orchestra. Mr. Koussevitsky has denied responsibility. In his statement he said that he had noted the name on the programs of his concerts with displeasure, but that he had avoided mention of his feelings for fear of giving offense to Boston music lovers.

The excitement was aroused largely by an editorial in a weekly newspaper, the Commercial Bulletin. This paper is owned by Courtenay Guild, a patron of music here, who wrote the editorial.

Income Tax Figures Cause Disturbance

For several days past the daily newspapers have been publishing long lists of names of prominent persons and firms and the amounts they have paid the United States Government for their 1923 income taxes.

While it had been announced officially that after October 23 access might be had to the income tax lists to determine what had been paid by an individual or firm or corporation, there arose at the last moment confusion as to the legality of giving publicity to such matters in the public prints.

The Musical Digest believes there is another element involved than strict legality concerning the publishing of income taxes paid by persons and organizations active in music or closely identified with it. That element is good taste.

There can be no doubt that a certain interest obtains amongst people generally in knowing what some have paid to the government in federal taxes.

The Musical Digest could, if it were so minded, print in this issue a list of musicians, music organizations, and individuals who have paid federal taxes for 1923 and the amounts paid.

Anyone who has sufficient reason to wish to obtain that information concerning some person or firm or corporation can obtain it through the channels provided by law, viz: by going to the office of the proper Internal Revenue district.—[The Editor.]

Stokowski Opens In Carnegie Hall

New York Hears Philadelphia Orchestra in First of Series of Ten Concerts.

PLAY STRAVINSKY PIECES

Leopold Stokowski opened the New York season of the Philadelphia Orchestra at Carnegie Hall on October 21 with a program which was cordially received by the large audience. Mr. Stokowski started the concert with the Brahms symphony in C minor, and then played three Stravinsky numbers: Fireworks; extracts from L'Oiseau de Feu; and an arrangement of the Song of the Volga Boatmen which was heard for the first time in New York.

Ernest Newman, visiting music critic of the Post, regretted that, in England, "we have no orchestra at present that can compare in quality of material and in discipline with the Philadelphia Orchestra." He praised Mr. Stokowski for "a highly personal and extremely interesting" reading of the Brahms symphony, in which he had the "steadiest control imaginable of his own fire." Except for the "slight aggressiveness" of the oboe tone, the playing throughout the evening was "a pure delight."

Other reviewers were equally enthusiastic over the performance, and, unlike the Philadelphia reviewers, found more merit and interest in Brahms than in Stravinsky. Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram and Mail said that the presentation of the symphony was "vivid, vital and engrossing" and the entire concert was played by the orchestra with the "cleanness, the rhythmic spirit, the resilience for which it has become famed." Deems Taylor of the World thought that the orchestra "played beautifully throughout the evening" and that Mr. Stokowski's reading of Brahms was an eloquent and at times, a thrilling achievement." W. J. Henderson, writing in the Sun, agreed that the conductor's reading had never before "attained quite such repose and dignity." Mr. Stokowski and his men excelled, according to Olin Downes of the Times, and the conductor "had not only his wonted command of the orchestra, but an even greater command of himself."

Lawrence Gilman, the Herald Tribune reviewer, thought the new Stravinsky number, his arrangement of the Volga Boat Song, "vaguely ungratifying." Pitts Sanborn was not much impressed by the work, either, and wrote that it was a pleasure to turn to the "melodious, iridescent Fire Bird suite." Deems Taylor "could find little" in the Boat Song except a sort of "steely brilliance."

Boston Conductor Plays Beethoven

Serge Koussevitzky Wins Praise for Interpretation of Fifth; Recitals Frequent.

Boston, Oct. 20.—Serge Koussevitzky's second Boston Symphony audience was no more hesitant in registering enthusiasm than that which witnessed his debut last week, and now that original impressions have been confirmed Boston is symphonically happy.

Philip Hale, writing in the Post, found "nothing but praise" to offer for Mr. Koussevitzky's interpretation and the orchestral performance of the program, which consisted of four movements of Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, Florent Schmitt's Reves, De Falla's Love of the Sorcerer and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Mr. Hale thought the new conductor's reading of the Beethoven Symphony "conspicuously sane and noble." The reviewer of the Monitor was not in sympathy with the tempi and believed that Beethoven was not music that "brought out Mr. Koussevitzky's best powers as a conductor." It is recorded, however, that Mr. Koussevitzky was recalled again and again after the last movement, and Warren Storey Smith, of the Post, thought this the "most exciting music of the afternoon."

The Schmitt work was given its first Boston hearing and the De Falla composition was an American premiere. Although Mr. Koussevitzky conducted both with "care and eloquence" the novelties failed to impress the reviewers. In comparison "the lustre of Handel's simple music remained undimmed."

On the 15th Harold Samuel was heard at Jordan Hall in a piano recital of Bach compositions.

The reviewers were in agreement that Mr. Samuel acquitted himself with credit in the "heroic task" of holding the attention of an audience through an entire program of one composer, especially Bach. According to the Christian Science Monitor, Mr. Samuel played with "delicacy and grace" but "at times forcing the tone of the piano." The Herald's reviewer thought Mr. Samuel "did not feel the poetry of Bach" at all times but in the E flat and F minor Fugues "rose nobly to the splendor of the music and played exquisitely." H. T. Parker, in the Transcript, summed up his impressions with: "The pedagogues and purists would tie Bach under the pent-house of tradition. Mr. Samuel gives him wing."

A warm welcome was given Alma Gluck when she sang at Symphony Hall on the 18th after an absence of four years. Press comments emphasized the pleasure of hearing Mme. Gluck's "admissibly clear enunciation," and according to the Globe report "except for the top register Mme. Gluck's voice still has its warmth and peculiar timbre that distinguished it of old." Despite an "obvious nervousness" Mme. Gluck delighted her large audience which tarried to demand its quota of encores. The "sympathetic and discreet accompaniments of Samuel Chotzinoff" impressed the Globe reviewer.

John McCormack's recital on the 19th "went the usual way of McCormack concerts—the hall filled to the last inch of space, enthusiasm mounting high, encores clamored for and graciously bestowed. Mr. McCormack, in splendid voice, singing with technic which few can equal today and none can surpass, and with even more than his curious power of lending lustre to a pebble till for the moment it gleams like a pearl." This comment in the Herald was representative.

Metropolitan Opera Bill

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3

Aida—with Mmes. Rethberg, Matzenauer, and Wells; and Messrs. Martinelli, Danise, Mardones, d'Angelo, and Paltrinieri, with Tullio Serafin making his debut as conductor.

TUESDAY

Boheme—with Mmes. Bori and Hunter and Messrs. Fleta, de Luca, Rothier, Ananian, Paltrinieri, d'Angelo, and Picco; Mr. Bamboschek conducting.

WEDNESDAY

Tannhauser—with Mmes. Jeritza, Gordon, Delaunois, Bonetti (debut), Hunter, Egener, and Ryan; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Whitehill, Bender, Meader, Bloch, Schlegel, and Gustafson; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

THURSDAY

Boris Godunoff—with Mmes. Dalossy, Gordon, Delaunois, Howard, and Wakefield; and Messrs. Chaliapin, Chamlee, Rothier, Ananian, Bada, Altglass (debut), Paltrinieri, Picco, Reschilian, d'Angelo, and Tibbett; Mr. Papi conducting.

FRIDAY

Tosca—with Mmes. Jeritza and Wakefield; and Messrs. Fleta, Scotti, Ananian, Malatesta, Reschilian, Bada, and Picco; Mr. Serafin conducting.

SATURDAY

Gioconda (matinee)—with Mmes. Easton, Matzenauer, and Alcock; and Messrs. Gigli, Danise, Mardones, Malatesta, d'Angelo, Reschilian, and Paltrinieri; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Romeo and Juliette (evening)—with Mmes. Bori, Anthony, and Egener; and Messrs. Errolle (debut), de Luca, Rothier, Didur, Ananian, Gustafson, Bada, Picco, and Paltrinieri; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

Clara Clemens Begins Cycle

The first of the cycle of seven concerts by Clara Clemens, entitled The Development of Song, took place in Town Hall, New York, last night. This concert was devoted to national folk songs. Other programs will take up the Classical Song, the Romantic Song, and four recitals will consist of songs of the most important modern European countries.

RUTH RODGERS
Sang at the Second Concert of the Series Which Formally Opened the Music Salon of Chickering Hall, New York

Orchestra Concerts in Sacramento

Sacramento, Oct. 10.—The Sacramento Symphony Orchestra, directed by Franz Dicks, will give four concerts this season, one each in October, December, February, and May.

Pianist Gets Polish Degree

The University of Posen last week adopted a resolution conferring an honorary degree upon Ignace Padewski.

Swedish Singers Coming

Official patronage of the crown has been extended to the Stockholm Student Singers' tour of the United States, which is to take place next year. The party will consist of fifty selected singers, including prominent soloists, and will leave Stockholm late in April.

Breton Gives Recital

Ruth Breton, violinist, made her New York debut last Thursday evening in Aeolian Hall. On her program were Lalo's Spanish Symphony, a Vitali Chaconne, and other numbers. A complete digest of the reviews of the recital will appear in the next issue of the Musical Digest.

Stransky Plays Bruckner Music

State Symphony Begins Second Season With Memorial for German Composer.

The second season of the State Symphony Orchestra of New York opened on October 22 with a concert, Josef Stransky conducting, at Carnegie Hall. Featured on the program was Anton Bruckner's third symphony in D minor, performed by Mr. Stransky in commemoration of the centennial of Bruckner's birth.

The reviewers devoted a great amount of space to Bruckner and his compositions, but Mr. Stransky and his orchestra came in for due comment. Lawrence Gilman in the Herald Tribune said that the conductor was in his best form, "buoyant and vivid, and filled with contagious enthusiasm for the task that he had taken in hand." Ernest Newman wrote that he "worked devotedly at the symphony" and W. J. Henderson of the Sun agreed that Mr. Stransky "worked hard to revivify the composition." Deems Taylor, who found the Bruckner symphony dull and lacking in inspiration, admitted that "Mr. Stransky's men weathered the fifty-five minutes of Bruckner with admirable endurance and generally commendable skill."

Beside the Bruckner work, the program consisted entirely of Wagner.

Of the Bruckner symphony, W. J. Henderson wrote: "It has fleeting moments of melodic suggestion and rhythmic promise; but they are overbalanced by bad quarter hours of placidity, aridity and vapidity." Olin Downes, in the Times, found the "strongest" movement of the symphony in the scherzo.

Lawrence Gilman felt more kindly toward the work and found now and then "the irrepressible genius of Bruckner" welling up into the music. Pitts Sanborn also found parts of the composition which appealed to him. "The glory of this symphony," he said, "is the exceeding jollity of the scherzo."

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
25 East 35th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 5609

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

CLAUDIA MUZIO
SOPRANO, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: HARRISON & HARSHBARGER,
1322 Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: O. SCOTTO, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

MANA-ZUCCA
Composer of "The Cry of the Woman"—"In Loveland"—"Those Days Gone By."
Published by Cassel Music Co., 25 West 42d Street, Room 420, New York City

FORREST LAMONT
TENOR, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson
4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Aeolian Hall, New York

QUEENA MARIO
Soprano, Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: Metropolitan Musical Bureau, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Stock Plays Honegger Piece

Chicago Season in Full Swing; Whiteman Orchestra Plays; Many Recitals.

Chicago, Oct. 20.—The music season got well under way here last week with the second pair of concerts by the Chicago Symphony; the first of the orchestra's series of popular concerts; the appearance of Paul Whiteman and his band; and several artist recitals.

Pacific 231, the novelty by Arthur Honegger, which Frederick Stock, conductor of the orchestra, offered as the feature on last week's program, evoked much comment in the press. Some of the reviewers liked it, others were merely interested in it as a novelty. They all agreed that Mr. Stock's presentation of it was excellent. Maurice Rosenfeld in the News said that "the orchestra gave it a remarkably vivid and spirited rendition under Mr. Stock's direction." Even more enthusiastic were the reviewers over the playing of Rachmaninoff's Second Symphony. Its interpretation was one of Mr. Stock's "greatest achievements," wrote the Herald and Examiner critic, and the "artists of the orchestra sang it for him with a variety and perfection of detail." Karleton Hackett felt that it was "superbly" played and that Mr. Stock's reading of it was "masterly."

Of the Honegger composition Eugene Stinson of the Journal wrote: "Honegger has a sure and dexterous hand, a bold and dominating courage." Herman Devries, writing in the American, considered it a "clever" score, "daring, graphic, intensely interesting." Karleton Hackett called it a "free-hand sketch in black and white."

Other numbers on the program were Chabrier's Bouree Fantastique; a scherzo from Reger's Romantic Suite; and Borodin's dances from Prince Igor.

The first of the popular concert series was well-received by a large and cordial audience. Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner feared that he would grow tiresome with his "continuous praise of the orchestra," but he felt that the performance was "flawless." Mr. Stock selected for his offerings the Unfinished Symphony of Schubert; Wagner's Rhine Journey; Nicolai's overture to the Merry Wives; Massenet's Neapolitan Scenes; the Spanish Caprice of Rimsky-Korsakoff and Johann Strauss' waltz, The Bat.

The concert given by Paul Whiteman's band was hailed by Maurice Rosenfeld as "the genuine American music." Karleton Hackett seemed surprised to find that jazz as played by Whiteman was founded on melody and he called the individuals in the orchestra "master-craftsmen." Glenn Dillard Gunn discovered that jazz has risen from ugliness to beauty in the last few years and that Paul Whiteman had an orchestra as "expert" as any symphony. The Tribune commentator, Eduard Moore, felt that it was light music at its best, and that Mr. Whiteman's men were "deft musicians and expert showmen." He found almost incredible the "swift, effortless dexterity of their effects."

Among other artists appearing here recently were Geraldine Farrar, with her own company in a "modernized version" of Carmen; and in recital: Tito Schipa, Isador Berger, violinist; Oliver Smith, tenor; Allan McQuhae, tenor, and others.

Los Angeles Opera Will Be Repeated Next Year

Los Angeles, Oct. 14.—As a result of the success of the five performances of the Los Angeles Opera Association under Gaetano Merola, each of which drew a record house, the executive board of the organization has announced that another series of performances will be given under the same direction and auspices next year. In the announcement, which was made by Judge Bledsoe, president of the Association, were included thanks to the community which supported the five performances of this year, and to the San Francisco Opera Association, which aided by the loan of many facilities.

Toronto Orchestra Plays

Toronto, Oct. 16.—The third year of the Toronto New Symphony Orchestra has just commenced. The orchestra is again under the leadership of Mr. von Kunits, who presented in the first program a reading of Schubert's C Major Symphony, which was much praised for its lucidity and its delicacy of feeling. This was the first Toronto performance of the Schubert Symphony in more than a decade.

The orchestra, which is made up for the most part of amateurs, has at present seventy-nine members. Last season they gave twenty late afternoon programs, the presentation of which took place between five o'clock and six-thirty.

Gigli Sings in Denver

Following his opera engagements on the Pacific Coast Beniamino Gigli came to Denver for a short stop, during which he appeared in recital as the first attraction in the Oberfelder series of concerts in Denver.

Isa Kremer made her first New York appearance not long ago in a characteristic song recital in Carnegie Hall.

Minneapolis to Hear Ellerman

Amy Ellerman, contralto, has been engaged for the performance of Handel's Messiah, which will be given in St. Paul and Minneapolis by Henri Verbrugghen and the Minneapolis Orchestra with the combined oratorio societies of both cities on December 25 and 26.

Next Bayreuth Festival 1926

The next season of Wagner opera at Bayreuth will take place in 1926, it has been announced. Besides the Ring, Parsifal and Tannhauser will be presented.

Swiss Violinist Arrives

Stefi Geyer, Swiss violinist, arrived last Tuesday on the liner Volendam. With her was her accompanist, Walter Schulthess. After a short rest in New York Miss Geyer will go West for her first American engagement, with the Minneapolis Orchestra early in November.

Will Give All-Schubert Recital

In her New York recital at Aeolian Hall on November 2 Elena Gerhardt will give a program made up entirely of Schubert songs. Mme. Gerhardt will be accompanied by Walter Golde.

Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
First appearance with N. Y. Symphony Orchestra Nov. 30, 1924
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6140
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
Victor Records
Steinway Piano
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 2

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

239 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Ambitious Orchestras

In a very considerable number of cities in this country are orchestras conducted on an ambitious scale. Nearly all of them attach to their titles the word "symphony"; and if they do not operate fully in ways followed by the twelve permanent first-rank symphony orchestras of the United States, and fall short also of the quality of these more fortunate organizations, the more modest of these smaller orchestras are performing a splendid service.

Syracuse, N. Y., has such an orchestra. It numbers eighty-five players. Last year the post of conductor was offered to Vladimir Shavitch, a conductor of routine and experience. That move represented a considerable forward step, and it has brought results of a gratifying character in a short space of time.

The interest thus stimulated, together with the opportunity of having as trainer and conductor a specialist who is thoroughly a professional, is proving the wisdom of the action taken by the officers of the Syracuse orchestra.

Other cities with orchestras quite as excellent in personnel as that of Syracuse will no doubt follow suit. Another few years should create opportunities for other conductors who are justified in seeking chances to gain a foothold at conducting. When that stage has been reached we may anticipate a further development in a field which is engaging increased attention and interest, and promises much for the future of good orchestra music throughout the land.

The Helping Hand

If statistics were available to disclose the amount of money expended annually by good-hearted persons to assist in furthering the music education and opportunities of young men and women the figures might astonish.

While a part of this sum is judiciously bestowed, by far the greater portion does not do its full share. In other words, the contributors either supply backing for instrumentalists and singers who are not justified in seeking careers or else it is made available under conditions which are not as favorable as they should be.

One of the problems of the many identified with the music art of the nation is the selection of those deserving of assistance, and how they may be helped without taking from the beneficiaries their independence and initiative.

Perhaps one day there may be formed an organization designed to smooth out some part of this problem and so administered that the deserving may profit and the undeserving be directed into other channels of usefulness for which they are manifestly better fitted.

Anatole France and Opera

(Pitts Sanborn in the N. Y. Telegram-Mail.)

A good deal has been written in the last few days about Anatole France and opera, but our local sages seem content to stop with two Massenet operas, Thais and Le Jongleur de Notre Dame. They pass by La Rotisserie de la Reine Pedauque and Les Noces Corinthiennes (The Corinthian Wedding.)

Thais, of course, is a clear case. The opera not only bears the name and follows the action of France's ironical romance of ancient Alexandria and the Christian Thebaid, but whole phrases have been taken over from the book to the opera text. Of course, one change has occasioned some amusement. The Athanael of the opera (that "monk who becomes a man") moves through the novel under the less poetic appellation of Paphnuce. For lyric consumption the canny librettist changed his hero's style as he might Dinah into Daphne!

But regarding Le Jongleur de Notre Dame there is widespread misapprehension. It is true that in that extraordinary volume, L'Etui de Nacre, Anatole France includes a little story entitled Le Jongleur de Notre Dame. In it a poor juggler named Barbane falls in one day with a prior and at his behest exchanges the weary round of performing at country fairs for the holy life of a monastery. But there he feels ashamed of his incapacity while the monks are painting, carving, and writing and illuminating on vellum until one day he decides to try his own humble juggling before the statue of Our Lady.

Two monks who find him so employed cry out a sacrilege, when down steps the Madonna and with a corner of her mantle wipes the sweat from her juggler's brow. The prior, who has likewise come into the chapel, piously repeats "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for they shall see God," and the two spying brothers respond "Amen!"

The juggler Jean of Massenet's opera enjoys a much more grandiose fate than poor, perspiring Barnabe, for when Our Lady intervenes he dies and with much of pomp and circumstance is assumed into heaven. Moreover, Boniface, the monastery cook, full of the milk of human kindness, and furnished with a captivating song about a sheltering sage bush, has as important a part in the Massenet opera as the juggler himself, but is not mentioned in L'Etui de Nacre.

The fact is, that Massenet's Jongleur de Notre Dame is not founded on Anatole France's story at all. Both proceed from the same mediaeval legend, which was brought to general attention by the learned Gaston Paris, to whom Anatole France dedicates his retelling. But the two versions differ materially. Massenet owed his libretto to Maurice Lena, the occupant of a professorial chair at Lyons. It is significant that in Massenet's memoirs he does not so much as mention Anatole France when he tells of the composition of Le Jongleur de Notre Dame, though he makes due reference to the distinguished writer in speaking of Thais.

La Rotisserie de la Reine Pedauque, I mean France's fantastic romance, seems hardly the subject for a lyric comedy, and yet Charles Levade's opera as I saw it at the Paris Opera Cominque in 1919, the year of its initial production, was an amusing entertainment. One of our Metropolitan French conductors seemed eager that it should be done in New York. But the Metropolitan has wisely abstained, for the Levade opera is the sort of thing that could not hope for success outside of the Paris Opera Comique or a theatre like it. The score is decent "Kapellmeistermusik," but of no intrinsic value, and the effect of the opera depends on capable acting in a small house. Even at the Opera Comique it has languished in the course of five years.

Les Noces Corinthiennes was composed by Henri Busser, one of the conductors of the Paris Opera, and, like Levade, a dispenser of "Kapellmeistermusik." It was produced at the Paris Opera Comique in 1922 without holding a convincing promise of longevity. Kindly criticisms by M. Busser's colleagues praised his admirable "science" and his conscientious following of the accents of Anatole France's verse, but nobody hailed the opera as a revelation of musical genius. The text is France's own, being that of the play of the same name which was previously done at the Comedie Francaise while the World War was on, and Paris was subject to air raids.

Even so brief and sketchy an account of Aanatole France and opera as this would have more significance if France himself had cared anything about opera. But he did not. This brother of the muses knew not Euterpe. Exacting as was his ear for cadences of prose or verse, when it came to music of any other kind, he was as a man born deaf.

When You See This Insignia

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

in an advertisement carrying any part of a reprinted criticism, it means that the editor of The Musical Digest has examined the criticism, and certifies that the published portions have been rightly used.

The Symphony Society of New York

Chapter III: The Personnel, Organization, and Activities of the Orchestra of Walter Damrosch

by C. E. LE MASSENA

In a symphony orchestra consisting of 100 human beings there are represented different personalities, minds, temperaments, and different nationalities. In order that these 100 individuals may be utilized to the best advantage, two things are essential: love of the work and morale. Friction therefore has been abolished as something not to be tolerated. These 100 men of the New York Symphony Orchestra have resolved themselves into a mental and physical unit to serve the best interests of the society and of the public. Yet the extent of their labors may be gathered from the fact that within the space of two years, recently, they have traveled thousands of miles in America, Canada and Europe, have rehearsed several hundred times and participated in over 200 concerts.

Another factor that plays an important part in splendid morale is the almost unchanging personnel. Most of these musicians have played together year after year and have thus become musically amalgamated. And they always give their best, whether playing under their own conductor or under the baton of a guest. The secret of it all, of course, is the esprit de corps that knows only success and Mr. Damrosch having gone to great lengths to secure the best available players and the highest type of principals as leaders of the various sections.

The individual instruments employed in the orchestra are in keeping with the grade of the players. There are several valuable violins of famous make and the whole are insured at $100,000. The percent of American born is forty, seventy-two are full citizens, twenty-eight have first papers. Rehearsals are conducted in English and all employ that tongue in daily life. Some of the men came originally from European countries, but they have become blended into a composite under the head of American.

The Personnel

The principals of the sections are as follows: first violins, Mischa Mischakoff; (concert master); second violins, Ernest La Prade; violas, Rene Pollain (assistant conductor); 'cellos, Lucien Kirsch; basses, Morris Tivin; flutes, George Barrere; oboes, Pierre Mathieu; clarinets, A. Duques; bassoons, Louis Letellier; horns, A. Yegudkin, Paul Hoogstoel (alternating); trumpets, Vladimir Drucker; trombones, Max Wockenfuss; tympani, Karl Glassman; harps, Josef Pizzo.

THE NEW YORK SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, WALTER DAMROSCH CONDUCTOR

A symphony orchestra is generally complete in itself and disassociated from other music activities. With the New York Symphony Orchestra, however, it has been deemed expedient to broaden somewhat certain established precedents. Since the days of Dr. Damrosch, the Symphony Society and the Oratorio Society have been, in a way, music twins, the former invariably co-operating with the latter at its concerts. The orchestra and chorus have worked together so long that it is felt any change might prove detrimental to the quality of a performance. Moreover, this additional musical experience afforded the players has enlarged their vision and given them a firmer grip on that special work.

In former times the symphony orchestra further participated in opera, first at the Metropolitan, then with the Damrosch Opera Company. The players thus gained an experience and an insight into various forms of orchestral work that was highly valuable. This ability to render a threefold service has made the versatility of this orchestra quite unique—as was demonstrated in the performances of the orchestra during the Greek play revivals by Margaret Anglin.

Tours and Travel

During pioneer days Walter Damrosch had to undertake tours as a means of obtaining revenue and of keeping the orchestra together. The first tour was that of 1885, following the death of Dr. Damrosch, when the Metropolitan Opera Company using the Damrosch Orchestra under Walter's direction, for the out-of-town performances. Frank Damrosch came on from Denver to be on hand for the Chicago opening. On this tour, troubles issued forth from the Damrosch box quite as effectively as in the time of Pandora. Everything went awry, from a blizzard to lost trunks, but it was a good experience for the young conductor, who showed his ability to "come through" with colors flying.

Later Walter took the Damrosch Opera Company on more extended travels reaching to the South and West, in addition to a profitable New York season. Then came the Damrosch-Ellis Company, which toured further. During this period of life-and-death struggle the long spring tours of the orchestra, which then numbered only fifty men, afforded an opportunity to carry a helpful message to many communities which had never before heard a symphony orchestra. Today, stretching across the continent, there are 450 cities that have orchestras, large and small.

Symphonic Pioneering

When Damrosch decided to devote his entire time to the symphonic field and abandon opera, the travel element which formerly had prevailed became a difficulty minimized. The general plan was to have the advance agent organize a three day festival with a local chorus, the company carrying a solo quartet for the choral works. There would be two festivals a week with ten concerts and rehearsals. It was pioneering of a most difficult kind, yet the results justified the effort. For years this orchestra was the only one traveling through the country, and it was fortunate also in securing engagements for important summer festivals, such as those held in Spartanburg, Louisville, Willow Grove, Ravinia Park, Chautauqua, and Worcester.

In 1904 the tours began to expand, reaching to the Pacific and into Canada. On these long jumps programs were changed almost daily to avoid monotony and to serve the special requirements of the individual communities. Since certain of the large cities now have their own symphony orchestras the New York Symphony Society has cut down appreciably its annual itinerary, utilizing the time for more concerts at home. The only cities now covered are Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Brooklyn, where series of subscription concerts are given annually. These visits are supplemented with a short tour and a summer season of six weeks at Chautauqua under the direction of Albert Stoessel. The 1924-25 tour will embrace a visit to Havana, on invitation of the Cuban Government, and the New York Symphony Society will be the first American orchestra to play in Cuba.

The European Trip

The most significant tour, of course, was that to Europe in 1920, which served as a fitting climax to the unparalleled record on this side. Through the generosity of President Flagler, the entire orchestra, on invitation of the French Minister of Fine Arts, journeyed abroad to win further honors and establish a record of being the first American orchestra to play in Europe. Twenty-eight concerts were given in nineteen cities of France, Italy, Belgium and Holland with a final display in London, all in less than seven weeks.

If one were to make a list of the famous artists who had appeared with the New York Symphony Orchestra it would be one of huge proportions.

In the operatic ranks, in the old days, were Seidl-Kraus, Schroeder, Haufstangel, Materna, Brandt, Schott, Staudigl, Robinson. Following in his father's footsteps, Walter brought over Lehmann, Alvary, Fischer, Seidl, Sucher, Gadski, Brown, Ternina, Klafsky, Schumann Heink, and introduced the American baritone, Bispham. All these famous names have since disappeared from the music roster except Schumann Heink. In the concert field the artists assisting at symphony concerts are legion. In the early days we had Wilhelmj, Rubinstein, Joseffy, Kubelik, D'Albert, Von Bulow, Carreno, Paderewski, Sarasate, Ysaye, and virtually all the great singers. In modern times, the list is equally full and notable, covering the whole realm of vocalists, pianists, violinists, and players of solo instruments outside the generally specified classes.

Composers and conductors have figured prominently on the symphony programs: Rubinstein, Paderewski, Tschaikowsky, Saint-Saens, Rachmaninoff, D'Indy, and among those of a later period, Albert Coates of London, Bruno Walter of Munich, and Vladimir Golschmann of Paris.

(The last Chapter of this History will appear in next week's issue.)

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Maron & Hamlin Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE.
NEW YORK

On The Music Highway

CONTRACTS have been signed between William Morris and S. Hurok for a world tour of Vincent Lopez and his Jazz Harmonic Orchestra. Mr. Lopez and his orchestra have been signed up for an engagement at the London Hippodrome during the spring of 1925. His first New York concert is announced for November 23 at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Edwin Swain, baritone, has been booked as soloist with the Chaminade in Brooklyn for January 30.

Virgil Holmes, basso-cantante, will make his formal New York debut as a recitalist on November 6 at the Town Hall. He is already known as a professional singer in New York. Mr. Holmes is an American, born in Maryville, Mo., and has received his entire training from American teachers.

Under the local management of Wendell H. Luce, Beatrice Martin, soprano, will appear in a recital at Jordan Hall, Boston, on December 1.

The leading tenor role of the new American opera, Alglala, will be taken by Judson House when the work is given next month by the Cleveland Opera Company for the first time. Two performances are scheduled for the 14th and 15th of November. The tenor will also sing the role in the production of the work by the English Grand Opera Company in New York.

The Musical Coterie of Little Rock, Arkansas, of which Mrs. Alice C. Henniger is president, has opened its season of eight Morning Concerts and nine Evening Concerts. An artist course has been announced which will include recitals by Pavloska on January 22; Burmester on February 20; and the Operatic Trio consisting of Sharlow, Lamonte and Lazzari on April 9.

In addition to this, the Coterie is planning eight "Morning Lessons" which will provide weekly meetings for real study and advancement in the understanding and appreciation of music.

Joseph Schwarz, who has been appearing in opera and concerts in Europe, arrived in New York on last Friday on the Aquitania. Mr. Schwarz has been engaged by the Chicago Civic Opera Company for the entire season 1924-25.

At the beginning of his career, one of Theo Karle's first appearances was with the Worcester Festival. On October 9 Mr. Karle made his fifth appearance in Worcester, singing the tenor role in Henry Hadley's newest choral work, Resurgam. Mr. Karle has been engaged to sing this work again on Easter Monday in Chicago.

Marie Sundelius will take part in all three performances of the Pittsburg, Kansas, Music Festival on April 29, 30 and May 1. She will sing in performances of Elijah and the Messiah, and will appear in a miscellaneous concert program.

At the opening concert of the International Composers Guild, at Aeolian Hall, on December 10, Eugene Goossens will conduct a work of his own and one by Frederick Laurence, a young British composer.

Nathan Abas, violinist, will make his New York debut at Aeolian Hall this evening. Raymond Baumann will be his accompanist.

The first American appearance of Winifred Macbridge, English pianist, is scheduled to take place tomorrow evening in Aeolian Hall, New York. Brahms' Sonata in F minor and compositions of Liszt, Chopin, and Schumann will make up her program.

The tenth season of the Young People's Subscription Concerts, under the direction of Veronica Govers, in New Rochelle, N. Y., will be opened on December 9 with a piano recital by Ossip Gabrilowitch. Efrem Zimbalist will be the artist for the second concert, January 23; Jeanette Vreeland will be heard on February 17, and Paul Althouse will close the season on March 2.

For his Carnegie Hall recital tonight, Socrate Barozzi, Roumanian violinist, who made his debut at Town Hall last season, has chosen a program which includes a Grieg Sonata; a group of Pugnani, Tartini-Kreisler and Bach; and a modern group consisting of Godowsky, Faure, Grainger and Saint-Saens. Mr. Barozzi will be accompanied by Bernard Wagenser.

Georgette La Motte, young American pianist, who has been studying in Europe for the last two years, will return in December to start a concert tour of the Middle West after the first of the year. Miss La Motte has appeared in concerts abroad.

Claire Dux concludes her third tour of the Pacific Coast within one year on November 7 at Piedmont, Calif., and will then proceed East. En route, Miss Dux will give a recital at Des Moines, Iowa, on November 11. Her accompanist this season is Bruno Seidler-Winkler, who is well known not only as a pianist but also as a composer and arranger.

The New York recital early in November of Thalia Sabanieva, Greek soprano, has been postponed because of the extension of Mme. Sabanieva's concert tour in the West. She will have two appearances with the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra.

Carl Erb, one of the tenors of the Staatsoper in Vienna, is giving up his winter engagements in order to see the United States with his wife, Maria Ivogun, when this coloratura soprano makes her next tour of the United States beginning next January. He will not give any concerts or make any public appearances in this country.

L'Isle Joyeuse, by Debussy, is one of the first of the novelties to be brought out this season by Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, its first New York performance being scheduled for the opening concert at Carnegie Hall, October 31.

This work, originally composed for piano in 1904, has been transcribed for full orchestra by Bernardino Molinari, conductor at the Augusteo, Rome. It was published in 1923. Honegger's Pacific 231 has been added to this first program of Mr. Damrosch.

The Washington Heights Musical Club has engaged Ethel Grow to give an all-American program at the concert of the club on January 6 at Aeolian Hall.

John Barclay has returned from England, where he gave two London recitals, and is already occupied with concerts. Mr. Barclay sings in Godfrey, Ill., on November 7, his fourth appearance in that city within two years.

Emilio de Gogorza, recently returned from Europe, will appear in a New York recital on Nov. 16. He will present several novelties, a French Basque song Aitaric es dut.

In her next trip, the S. S. DeGrasse will bring to this country Renee Chemet, violinist. Mme. Chemet is due to arrive about the first of November and her tour will open in Burlington, Vt., on November 6. Her pianist this season will be Arthur Loesser.

The program for the opening of the Little Symphony, George Barrere conductor, at the Henry Miller Theatre, November 9, is made up of Mozart's A major symphony, Florent Schmitt's suite Puppazzi, Howard Brockway's Andante and Humoresque, Adriana Mikeshina's suite Le Temps Passe, and, after the concert, a characteristic sketch in seven movements entitled From the Life of an Ant by a composer who styles himself Hiugoli-Chisarn. Ratan Devi will be the assisting artist.

Cecile de Horvath will give a joint recital with Sophie Braslau in Pueblo, Colorado, on November 21, the day following her joint appearance with Miss Braslau in Denver. Other additions to Mme. de Horvath's list of engagements include a return engagement at Blue Mountain College, Blue Mountain, Miss., and recitals in Terre Haute, Indiana, the University of Oregon in Eugene, Oregon, Webster City, Iowa, and Ellendale, North Dakota. Mme. de Horvath's tour will extend from coast to coast this season.

Sophie Braslau will be soloist with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Willem van Hoogstraten conducting, in its concert at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, on November 2. On November 7 Miss Braslau will sing at one of the Biltmore Musicales.

Adolfo Betti, Alfred Pochon, Iwan d'Archambeau and Felicien d'Archambeau, the latter the new violinist of the Flonzaley Quartet, have arrived in the United States for the annual season of the quartet. Immediately before sailing the Flonzaleys toured in Switzerland, giving concerts in Bern, Lausanne, and other cities.

In the first concert of the New York series of three appearances the Flonzaley Quartet will present a new composition by Albert Spalding; in the second, a quintet by Ernest Schelling, in which the composer will assist; and in the third, the Brahms Quintet, with Harold Bauer at the piano.

FLORENCE EASTON
SOPRANO, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
BRUNSWICK RECORDS EXCLUSIVELY
MANAGEMENT: HAENSEL AND JONES—AEOLIAN HALL, N. Y.

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

Naná Genovese
MEZZO-SOPRANO
OPERA — RECITALS — CONCERTS
Management: Ottokar Bartik, 1425 Broadway, New York City

JESSIE CHRISTIAN
SOPRANO
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger 1322 Kimball Building Chicago, Ill.

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

KENNETH CLARK, of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, sends some interesting data concerning the campaign that organization is to launch to serve as an aid to municipal music.

Practical steps to this end, writes Mr. Clark, were taken a few days ago in Atlantic City by the Recreation Congress. A resolution then passed to appoint a committee to co-operate in efforts to secure greater cash appropriations for municipal music.

Statistics showed that some 310 municipalities appropriated annually nearly $2,000,000 for music; but it developed that 283 other towns spent not one penny.

The tabulation by states reveals that California leads all others in its annual municipal music appropriation of $244,245.04 . . . covering sixteen cities. Ohio, with eleven cities represented, expended $142,159.50. The lowest ranking, according to the statistics secured, was given South Carolina, which had one city which spent last year $150 for music.

Mr. Clark urged the recreation experts to promote efforts to legislate for the appropriation of adequate sums of money to be devoted to municipal music. Some states now have laws which specify a very small tax to advance band music and "music culture in general."

It is pointed out that the United States cities are far behind those of Europe in voting and appropriating money for music.

MRS. ALICE CAMPBELL McFARLANE, of San Francisco, who has agreed to provide $75,000 of the $150,000 which is now being pledged to provide for the establishing of the Master School of Arts in California, has taken this step to create a memorial to her parents.

Lazar Samoiloff, of New York, is to be general director of this school which will be located in San Francisco. The faculty members thus far announced as having been engaged are Joseph Lhèvinne and Sigismund Stojowski, piano; Cesar Thomson and Samuel Gardner, violin; Julia Claussen and Lazar Samoiloff, voice; 'cello and chamber music, Felix Salmond; lecturer, W. J. Henderson; coaching and repertoire, Richard Hageman and Emil J. Polak; composition, Sigismund Stojowski; accompanist, A. Kostelanetz. Miss Alice Seckels will be the manager.

It is the purpose of Mrs. Campbell and Mr. Samoiloff to offer every reasonable assistance to talented musical persons to obtain an education under advantageous conditions. Those who qualify as thus deserving will be afforded free tuition.

It will be interesting to observe the progress of this "master school" which is to operate six months in every twelve. In the event that the achievements touch the standard desired a precedent will have been established which may result in the founding of similar institutions elsewhere.

SERIOUS OPERA has never been taking so firm a hold generally upon the communities of this country as in the past two years. Persons may rise to challenge that statement, so perhaps it should be explained in detail.

Those in touch with music activities in general are aware that the United States has had considerable opportunity during the past decade to hear performances of opera. New York has its Metropolitan; Chicago its Civic company, which travels enough in the course of each year to visit more than a score of other cities; and the country as a whole has the San Carlo company. Other less soundly established organizations (some of them operating for only a short time each season) have also been active.

So there has been a fair quantity of opera; but it has not been sufficient to reach to many communities which have an interest in this form of art.

It was about two years ago that the seeds of genuine civic opera began to take root. By that we mean opera fostered by residents in a city or town, presented with its own chorus and with principals consisting mostly of routined artists who could sustain the major roles.

Then, in a few places, there began to appear civic opera projects in which only local talent participated . . . the works performed being usually of the lighter school. Therefore, these latter efforts could not be placed in quite the same class as others of a civic nature which concentrated on serious operatic works.

The fact that opera in itself is engaging the active interest of communities which have not heretofore displayed any such interest is evidence that the people want it. And in various places there is being shown a pride in having recognized singers appear and doing things somewhat pretentiously.

A letter just received from Buren Schryock, director general of the Grand Opera Association of San Diego (Cal.), relates the success attending the recent presentation there of Rigoletto, with Giuseppe de Luca in the title role. The Metropolitan baritone had associated with him in the cast artists less illustrious than he, yet they seem to have given satisfaction to the San Diego newspaper chroniclers as well as to the three thousand auditors present in the Civic auditorium of that city.

Louis d'Angelo, and Paolo Ananian, of the Metropolitan, were respectively the Sparafucile and Monterone; Conchita Chavez was Gilda and Miguel Laris sang the Duke. La Traviata was the performance scheduled for the following night.

Mr. Schryock writes that the chorus consisted of singers who have been appearing in San Diego in modest opera undertakings for the past three years.

The enthusiasm caused by this affair has caused plans to be made for an outdoor representation of Aida next May in the San Diego stadium. Giovanni Martinelli is mentioned as the tenor who will appear and Mr. de Luca will arrange the casts and invite Armando Agnini, the Metropolitan stage manager, to direct matters.

Mr. Schryock states that efforts will be made to have opera annually every autumn in San Diego, on the same scale as this year. And he mentions the possibility of the building of a new theatre to seat several thousand persons.

IF A LINE could be formed of debutant musicians who are now marching past the public and critics in serious review it would extend, before the season ends, a great distance. Some of these young folk are young and wholly new to New York; others have tried their luck once before, without finding it a fortunate luck.

The dozen or more singers, pianists and violinists who have "tried out" here lately aroused from the more discerning of their auditors a deal of sympathy. For some of these embryo artists have talent, and a few are of considerable ability. And yet, with tremendous competition to face (much of it from musicians much their superiors) there seems little hope for even the most outstanding ones. They will go on for a time, and then, as has happened so often before, they will drop out of sight.

YOUTH, a tall, upstanding figure and an abundance of vitality are characteristics of Carlos Sedano, a Spanish violinist who comes to this country with a record of music conquests in Madrid's court circles, and who made his American debut a few evenings ago in Carnegie hall.

It was scarcely a program, however, to permit one to judge of the newcomer's broad musicianship or to permit him to plumb the depths of his art. Sedano's offerings were of the spectacular and appealing order, in which technical facility and effects of a popular nature were uppermost.

An audience of good size was present; and there was genuine interest shown and a degree of enthusiasm which indicated how strong was the leaning toward such playing and compositions as the young violinist gave.

ABBY MORRISON
SOPRANO SAN CARLO GRAND OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON, 1451 Broadway, New York City

MAY PETERSON
VOCALION RECORDS
SOPRANO
Formerly Opera Comique and Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: HAENSEL & JONES, AEOLIAN HALL
NEW YORK CITY

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management: Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1924
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

Ethel HAYDEN
Lyric Soprano
Management: Loudon Charlton—Carnegie Hall, New York

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO
BRUNSWICK RECORDS

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York
Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

Orchestra Plans In Minneapolis

Sixty-four Concerts Scheduled for Henri Verbrugghen's Players; to Present Novelties.

Minneapolis, Oct. 20.—What promises to be the most successful season in the history of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra will get under way shortly under the leadership of the Belgian conductor, Henri Verbrugghen. Sixty-four concerts are on the schedule of the orchestra, a number of which will be given in the sister city, St. Paul.

The main feature of the season will be the seventeen pairs of evening subscription concerts at which the most serious symphonic programs will be offered. The first concert of each pair will be presented in St. Paul on a Thursday evening, and repeated in Minneapolis the following night. Twenty-four Sunday afternoon popular concerts in Minneapolis and six young people's concerts round out the home schedule.

Henri Verbrugghen spent the summer visiting friends in England and Belgium, and meantime was in search of novelties for his orchestra. Among the symphonic masterpieces which will be included in the concerts of the winter, many of them new to Minneapolis, are Stravinsky's Petrouchka, Holst's The Planets, Carpenter's Adventures in a Perambulator, Brahms' Fourth Symphony, Schelling's Victory Ball, Raff's Leonore Symphony, Franck's Symphonic Variations, and four of the Bach Brandenburg Concertos.

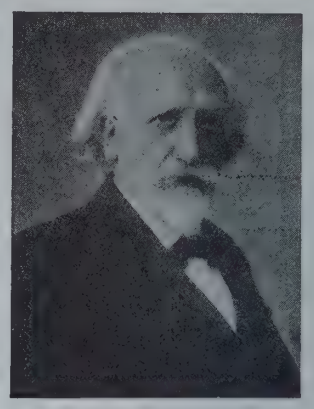
Besides the purely orchestral works there will be performed a series of compositions which will require the co-operation with the orchestra of the Minneapolis Symphony Chorus, organized by Mr. Verbrugghen last year. Among these will be Mendelssohn's Elijah, Handel's Messiah, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and excerpts from Bach's B minor Mass. The Messiah will be sung near Christmas time, the Ninth at the end of the season. In March the entire first act of Wagner's Valkyries will be given in concert form. All these productions will be included in the regular concerts of the series.

The old Auditorium in Minneapolis where the concerts have been given for years, has been remodelled and renamed the Lyceum Theatre. It is opening as a first class Motion Picture house but the Orchestral Association has a lease covering all of its concert dates and rehearsals.

Among the soloists who have already been engaged for the series are: sopranos, Margaret Matzenauer, Alice Gentle, Elsa Alsen, Mary Mellish, Grace Kerns, Emily Stokes Hagar, Enid Watkins, Olive June Lacey, Ora Hyde, Jeannette Vreeland; contraltos, Amy Ellermann, Agnes Rast Snyder, Claire Brookhurst; tenors, Paul Althouse, Judson House, Lewis James, Tandy MacKenzie, Colin, O'More; baritones, Arthur Middleton, Bernard Ferguson, Jerome Swinford, Fraser Gange; pianists, Harold Bauer, Percy Grainger, Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, E. Robert Schmitz, Leo Ornstein, Mme. Baily-Apfelback, Harrison Wall Johnson, William Lindsay, Elsie Wolf; Lewis Richards (clavecin); violinists, Albert Spalding, Carl Flesch, Stefi Geyer, Gustav Tinlot, Richard Czerwonky, Rudolph Polk, Phillip G. Clapp, and cellist, Horace Britt.

THE ITHACA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

SEASON 1924 - 1925



Cesar Thomson

Violin Master School under direction of the world's great master of the violin, announces the same system of class instruction employed at the Brussels Conservatory of Music under such eminent teachers as Wieniawski, Leonard, Vieuxtemps, Ysaye, and Thomson will be presented by Cesar Thomson at the Ithaca Conservatory of Music. Professor Thomson has able assistants and others will be added from time to time to meet the constantly increasing demand for preparatory work for young violinists seeking instruction from this great violin teacher.

CESAR THOMSON

Auditorium and Administration Building of the Ithaca Conservatory of Music

PRIVATE LESSONS may be arranged for when desired; but Professor Thomson's teaching schedule is limited and reservations should be made as far in advance as possible.

For further information address

ITHACA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Dewitt Park - - Ithaca, N. Y.

NOTE: By special arrangement with the Ithaca Conservatory of Music, Cesar Thomson will teach at the JUILLARD FOUNDATION for two days every other week.

St. Louis Civic Music League Presents Pianist

St. Louis, Oct. 15.—A concert by Vladimir de Pachmann opened the first season of the Civic Music League here last night. The recital was well-received by the audience which filled the Odeon, but the newspaper reviewers expressed annoyance at Mr. de Pachmann's garrulity.

There were moments of "enchanting beauty" in the concert, the Times reviewer wrote, and Mr. de Pachmann showed, at times, some of his old "fire and enthusiasm." But Richard L. Stokes in the Post-Dispatch said his music was merely an accompaniment to his "antics and chatter." Of his Chopin numbers, the Globe-Democrat reviewer, Richard Spamer wrote that they were given "colorfully and with the true Chopin flavor."

Los Angeles Hears Rothwell Conduct

Starts New Symphonic Season With Brahms, Strauss, and Ravel; Will Visit Pasadena.

Los Angeles, Oct. 11.—Walter Henry Rothwell conducted the opening concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra's season yesterday afternoon. The audience that welcomed the orchestra was a large and appreciative one and applauded the well balanced program warmly. Ravel's La Valse was the novelty of the occasion. The other numbers were Brahms' First Symphony, with which the concert opened, and Strauss' Death and Transfiguration.

The Ravel work was liked by most of the reviewers. Edwin Schallert of the Times called it "a dazzling adventure in musical writing . . . a modern super-piece." The presentation of the work, this reviewer felt, was "a feat of power and endurance which reflected great credit both on the conductor and the orchestra." Florence Lawrence of the Examiner felt that the interest of the afternoon centered in the Ravel composition, which was a "choreographic poem using the waltz rhythms and various tempestuous emotions as its motivations." Of Mr. Rothwell's reading of the work Carl Bronson in the Herald wrote: "Rothwell's reading was tremendously brilliant and very clear in thought." Florence Lawrence said: "Mr. Rothwell conducted it with dynamic force and the house was electrified by his achievement."

The playing of the Brahms and that of the Strauss were equally well spoken of. The Brahms finale was "a stirring piece of tonal magnificence and the conductor received an ovation after its exultant close. . . . Rothwell's Brahms is unassailable." The Examiner thanked Mr. Rothwell for modulating his modernism so "splendidly" so that the transition from purely melodic form might not be "too oppressive."

The Philharmonic has been engaged to play in Pasadena for its sixth season there, beginning November 17. Due to the increase in popularity of the concerts, the number of the series has been increased to six.

The Los Angeles Trio, made up of May MacDonald Hope, pianist; Sylvain Noack, violinist, and Ilya Bronson, 'cellist, have announced that they will soon start on tour. The trio, which has been in existence for eight years, will give its first concert here on October 30 at Ebell Auditorium. A Brahms program will be presented.

Endows Columbia University To Aid American Composers

THE WILL of Lillia M. Bearns of Brookline, Mass., filed for probate last Wednesday, establishes a trust fund of $50,000 in memory of her father, Joseph M. Bearns, the income to be used by Columbia University for the encouragement of original composition in music by American citizens. The total value of the estate is said to be about $167,000.

Five to nine musicians with high standing in the musical world, the will directs, shall be selected as judges on the competitions, one of whom shall be the head of the Music Department at Columbia. The will also suggests that another of the judges be a director of one of the leading orchestras of the city.

The remainder of the estate was divided among relatives and various charities.

Philharmonic Tours

Following its opening concert the New York Philharmonic Orchestra went on tour for nine concerts under Mr. Van Hoogstraten's direction. The itinerary for this annual fall trip included Stamford, Providence, New London, New Haven, Northampton, Worcester, Holyoke, Pittsfield and Boston. The soloists on tour were Scipione Guidi and Esther Dale in Stamford, Elly Ney in New London, Carol Robinson in New Haven and Worcester, and Yolanda Mero in Providence and Boston.

The next New York concert of the Philharmonic, following the tour, will be on October 29 at Carnegie Hall, when the first of ten Students' Concerts at popular prices will be given.

Chicago Manager Dies

F. Wight Neumann, Chicago music impresario, died in his home in Chicago last week.

YVONNE TRAVA
Made Her Debut With the San Carlo Company During Its Recent New York Season

Brunswick Artists Broadcast

The first broadcasting of first-rank Brunswick artists took place last Thursday evening from the New York laboratories of that phonograph company. A feature was the withholding from the public of the identity of the musicians who provided the program.

Errolle to Make Debut

The formal introduction of the American tenor Ralph Errolle to a New York Metropolitan Opera audience will take place Saturday evening, November 8. He will appear as Romeo in Romeo and Juliet.

Jeritza Returns from Tour

Mme. Jeritza, accompanied by her manager, F. C. Coppicus, has returned from her autumn concert tour. Mme. Jeritza will sing with the Metropolitan Opera Company during its coming first week.

Announce Faculty of New California School

New York musicians make up most of the faculty for the newly organized Master School of Musical Arts in California, announced here recently. The school, to open in San Francisco next May, is to provide free scholarships on an initial foundation of $150,000, half of which was given by Mrs. Alice Campbell MacFarlane.

Joseph Lhevinne and Sigismund Stojowski will head the piano staff, with César Thomson and Samuel Gardner for violin, Felix Salmond for 'cello and Julia Claussen and Lazar S. Samoiloff for voice. W. J. Henderson is named as lecturer. Richard Hageman and Emil J. Polak have charge of coaching and répertoire and Mr. Stojowski of composition. Others are A. Kostelanetz as accompanist and Alice Seckels of San Francisco as Director Samoiloff's Western manager.

Harry Farbman

Harry Farbman gave a violin recital in Aeolian Hall, New York, last Thursday evening, Oct. 23. The Times said that the audience "was cordial to his free and spirited playing." With Max Rabinowitsch at the piano Mr. Farbman played the Franck Sonata, and, according to the same report, "achieved a dashing finale in the Saint Saens concerto." Mr. Henderson in the Sun liked the youth's performance, but found it a trifle "immature."

Will Give Election Night Opera

An extra performance on the evening of Election Day, Nov. 4, has been announced by the Metropolitan Opera Company. The opera to be given is La Boheme. This will be the second presentation of the Metropolitan season.

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN - HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

The Cleveland Institute of Music
A MODERN LABORATORY SCHOOL
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
The Institute carries pupils from the initial steps in musical training through the most advanced grades.
Rhythm, Ear-Training, Solfege, play an important part in the foundation lessons.
Orchestral Training, Composition, Pedagogy, Accompany ing, under master instruction, are offered advanced students.
Write for catalogue on regular instrumental and vocal courses
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

Concert Direction ANNIE FRIEDBERG
Announces the return of MYRA HESS
FOR THE SEASON OF 1924-1925
Only New York Recital: Aeolian Hall, Saturday Afternoon, January Third, 1925
STEINWAY PIANO DUO ART RECORDS

SEVEN RECITALS

ILLUSTRATING THE LITERATURE OF THE PIANO

From the Sixteenth Century to the Present Day

By

HUTCHESON

ÆOLIAN HALL—SATURDAYS

November 8, Afternoon
November 22, Afternoon
December 13, Evening
December 27, Afternoon
January 10, Evening
January 24, Evening
February 14, Afternoon

PROGRAM I

Composers for Harpsichord and Clavichord

ENGLISH

WILLIAM BYRDE (1538-1623)
Sellinger's Round

JOHN BLOW (1648-1708)
Prelude in C major

ORLANDO GIBBONS (1583-1625)
The Lord of Salisbury His Pavin
The Queenes Command

HENRY PURCELL (1658-1695)
Prelude, Cebell, Minuet and Rigadoon

FRENCH

CLAUDE DAQUIN (1694-1772)
Le Coucou

FRANCOIS COUPERIN (1668-1733)
Le Tambourin
Les petits moulins a vent

JEAN PHILIPPE RAMEAU (1683-1764)
Tambourin

JEAN-BAPTISTE LOEILLET (1687-1728)
Gigue in G minor

ITALIAN

PIETRO D. PARADIES (1710-1742)
Toccata in A major

LEONARDO LEO (1694-1744)
Arietta

DOMENICO SCARLATTI (1683-1757)
Sonata in F minor
Sonata in C major
Sonata in A major

GERMAN

JOHANN GOTTLIEB GRAUN (1698-1771)
Gigue in B flat minor

GEORG FRIEDRICH HANDEL (1685-1759)
Fantasia in C major
Sarabande from Suite in D minor

JOHANN MATTHESON (1681-1764)
Gigue in D minor

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH (1685-1750)
Partita in B flat major
Two Preludes and Fugues from
"The Well Tempered Clavier"
E flat minor, Part 1, No. 8.
C sharp major, Part 1, No. 3.
Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue

PROGRAM II

The Classical Viennese Period

JOSEPH HAYDN (1732-1809)
Variations in F minor

WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART (1756-1791)
Gigue in G major
Fantasia in C minor

LUDWIG van BEETHOVEN (1770-1827)
Sonata in C, Op. 53 ("Waldstein" Sonata)
Andante in F major
Sonata in C minor, Op. 111

PROGRAM III

The Romantic Composers

FRANZ SCHUBERT (1797-1828)
Fantasia in C major ("Wanderer" Fantasia)

FELIX MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY (1809-1847)
Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Op. 35, No. 1
Three Songs Without Words:
F sharp minor, Op. 30, No. 6
G major, Op. 62, No. 1
C major, Op. 67, No. 4

ROBERT SCHUMANN (1810-1856)
Des Abends
In der Nacht } From Phantasiestucke, Op. 12
Romance in F sharp major, Op. 28, No. 2
Novelette in E, Op. 21, No. 7
Vogel als Prophet
Etudes symphoniques, Op. 13

PROGRAM IV

FREDERIC CHOPIN (1810-1849)
Sonata in B minor, Op. 58
Ballade in G minor, Op. 23
Six Preludes, from Op. 28
No. 20, C minor
No. 22, G minor
No. 3, G major
No. 7, A major
No. 10, C sharp minor
No. 16, B flat minor
Valse in A flat, Op. 69, No. 1
Mazurka in B minor, Op. 33, No. 4
Scherzo in C sharp minor, Op. 39
Nocturne in B major, Op. 62, No. 1
Five Etudes:
C minor, Op. 10, No. 12
E minor, Op. 25, No. 5
G sharp minor, Op. 25, No. 6
A flat major, Op. 25, No. 1
C minor, Op. 25, No. 12

PROGRAM V

JOHANNES BRAHMS (1833-1897)
Rhapsody in B minor, Op. 79, No. 1
Intermezzo in A flat major, Op. 76, No. 3
Capriccio in B minor, Op. 76, No. 2
Ballade in G minor, Op. 118, No. 3
Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Handel

FRANZ LISZT (1811-1886)
Sonata in B minor
Etude de Concert in F minor
Waldesrauschen
Two Caprices after Paganini:
E major (La Chasse)
G sharp minor (La Campanella)

PROGRAM VI

Modern Composers

EDWARD MacDOWELL (1861-1908)
Keltic Sonata, Op. 59

HOWARD BROCKWAY (born 1870)
Evening Song, Op. 26, No. 4

CHARLES T. GRIFFES (1884-1920)
The Night Winds, Op. 5, No. 3
The White Peacock, Op. 7, No. 1

EUGEN D'ALBERT (born 1864)
Scherzo in F sharp major, Op. 16, No. 2

RICHARD STRAUSS (born 1864)
Traumerei

ERICH KORNGOLD (born 1897)
The Brownies
Ruebezahl

MAX REGER (1873-1916)
Andante sostenuto, Op. 82, No. 3
Gavotte, Op. 82, No. 5

ERNO von DOHNANYI (born 1877)
Rhapsody in F sharp minor, Op. 11, No. 2

BELA BARTOK (born 1881)
Bear Dance

IGNACE JAN PADEREWSKI (born 1860)
Nocturne in B flat major, Op. 16, No. 4
Caprice in G major, Op. 14, No. 3

LEOPOLD GODOWSKY (born 1870)
Nocturnal Tangier
Ethiopian Serenade

MODEST MOUSSORGSKY (1835-1881)
Tableaux d'une exposition

PROGRAM VII

Modern Composers, continued

CESAR FRANCK (1822-1890)
Prelude, Aria and Finale

GABRIEL FAURE (born 1845)
Impromptu in F minor, Op. 31

CHARLES ALKAN (1813-1888)
Etude a mouvement semblable et perpetuel

MAURICE RAVEL (born 1875)
Sonatine

CLAUDE DEBUSSY (1862-1915)
Des pas sur la neige
Les collines d'Anacapri
Minstrels

ERNEST BLOCH (born 1880)
"In the Night" (A Love Poem)

RUDOLPH GANZ (born 1874)
Fileuse pensive

PERCY GRAINGER (born 1882)
Irish Tune from County Derry
Shepherd's Hey

CYRIL SCOTT (born 1879)
In the Forest

EUGENE GOOSSENS (born 1893)
Marionette Show (from Four Conceits)

JOHN IRELAND (born 1879)
Ragamuffin

SERGEI RACHMANINOFF (born 1873)
Elegie, Op. 3, No. 1
Three Preludes:
E flat major, Op. 23, No. 6
G major, Op. 32, No. 5
G sharp minor, Op. 32, No. 12

NIKOLAUS MEDTNER (born 1879)
Conte, B flat minor, Op. 20, No. 1
Conte, E flat major, Op. 26, No. 2

ALEXANDER SCRIABINE (1872-1915)
Sonata in F sharp major, Op. 30

STEINWAY PIANO

LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall Tel. Circle 2156

Amateur Music in the Antipodes

Percy Grainger Gives His Impressions of Music Organizations in His Home Country.

by MARGARET JARMEN CHEESEMAN

REFRESHED by his Pacific voyage after a strenuous Australian vacation, Percy Grainger came sailing into San Francisco Harbor a few days ago as blithesome as ever.

"Yes," he was "rested," he was in "great health," he was "happy to be back," and "anxious to commence" his recital tour of the western states which was soon to open. . . With an eagerness characteristic of him Mr. Grainger launched into an animated conversation, and in a few words he was telling about his experiences on the island continent.

"The most pleasant music impression of my Australian trip was aroused by the achievements of Australian amateur music organizations. In Adelaide Dr. E. Harold Davies conducts with skill and music insight a small choir called the Bach Society, which is very much at home in every kind of capella music. It sings with a near approach to perfection, and, when needed, a passion and volume that cannot, it seems to me, be equalled by any American choir known to me.

"In the same city W. H. Foote lends his personality and wide music experience to training orchestral bodies and military bands (mainly amateur) that do credit to him and to themselves; while in Melbourne, Albert Zeiman, after years of keen and devoted effort, has raised his Melbourne Symphony Orchestra to an unusual degree of amateur achievement. This orchestra is not merely amateur in spots—it is amateur right through, its woodwinds and brass players no less than its strings—but it is capable of giving efficient interpretations of most exacting standard and modern works.

"However, as high as these amateur bodies stand it must be admitted that in the matter of professional activities Australian cities cannot hope to vie with the professional standards of American cities of the same size—either in the music material available or in the readiness of the public and of art patrons to endow, subscribe and ensure the music best to the place they live in. In this respect, of course, American cities stand absolutely alone. . . . America may well envy Australia her amateur music bodies as Australia may well envy America her unsurpassable professional music organizations. Artistically, as well as commercially, America today is the foremost country in the world."

Mr. Grainger found the antipodean public quite familiar with American popular music but altogether unacquainted with the compositions of America's serious composers. "It was some of our delight to be the first to bring the vivid and racy works of best known native composers to Australian ears and to note the immediate and electric response they aroused.

"However, do not misunderstand me, I gave no public recitals. What little playing I did was confined to private musicales at gatherings of my friends and relatives. I gave six such, and did as much talking about the music as playing.

"Before leaving Australia, though, J. and N. Tait had me sign a contract for an extensive tour through Australia and New Zealand in 1926, after completing my tour booked for America and Europe. I will conduct orchestras as well as play piano programs, and it is my intention to follow in Australia the same policy I have been pursuing elsewhere—a consistent effort to make the works of British and American composers more widely known, particularly those of Carpenter, Sowerby, Guion, Dett, Brockway and Dillon, and Cyril Scott, Balfour Gardiner, Roger Quilter and Frederick Delius.

"In my opinion, quite extraordinary strides have been made by the Anglo-Saxon school of composers. I am sure that no other group speaking one language has so many first-class musicians composing."

Mr. Grainger had many intimate things to say about his hike across the Australian desert. To quote him direct he had "a bully good time" during his vacation in his native land, his first trip there in many years.

N. Y. Chamber Symphony Presents Second Program

The second concert of the New York Chamber Symphony Orchestra, Max Jacobs conducting, took place on October 19 at the Earl Carroll Theatre. The program was composed of several novelties and a few "familiars." Two compositions offered here for the first time were Rimsky-Korsakoff's Sinfonietta on Russian Themes and Darius Milhaud's Catalogue des Fleurs, which has been sung in New York before only with piano accompaniment. It was sung by Irene Wilder, contralto. Honegger's Pastorale d'Ete; Jarnefelt's Prelude; the Zouave's Drill by Manna Zucca; Saint-Saen's Havanaise and the Ballet-Suite of Gluck-Mottl were also on the program. Josef Stopak, violinist, and Miss Wilder were the soloists of the occasion.

The Sun reviewer called the program "interesting," and Olin Downes of the Times thought the music of "uncommon interest and entertainment." Mr. Downes complimented Mr. Jacobs for presenting "unhackneyed" programs, and for choosing novelties that "could well be presented by this miniature orchestra."

PERCY GRAINGER

Portland to Hear Orchestra

Portland, Oct. 22.—The Portland Symphony Orchestra has nine concerts scheduled for this season, three of them with the Chorus Association. Percy Grainger will be soloist at the first concert, Nov. 5. Other assisting artists engaged are Royal Dadmun, Alfred Cortot, Georges Enesco, Mieczyslaw Munz, and Sophie Braslau.

Schwartzenstein Gives Recital

Sigmund Schwartzenstein, violinist, was assisted by Alberto Bimooni in his first recital of the season at Aeolian Hall October 18. Mr. Schwartzenstein played Goldmark's Concerto, Corelli's La Follia; a nocturne by Hugo Kaun and a melody and dance by Cyril Scott.

Detroit Symphony Opens With Brahms

Chausson's Tone Poem, Viviane, Only Novelty on First Gabrilowitsch Program.

Detroit, Oct. 17.—The opening concert of the eleventh season of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Ossip Gabrilowitsch conducting, was welcomed by a large and responsive audience in Orchestra Hall last evening. The one novelty on the program was Chausson's tone poem, Viviane. Other numbers were Mendelssohn's Overture to Ruy Blas; Brahms' Second Symphony in D major; and the Polovetskian Dances from Borodin's Prince Igor.

The Times reviewer, R. H., complimented Mr. Gabrilowitsch on arranging a "cunningly contrived" program, "calculated to send the audience out on a rising inflection and with a tingle at the roots of the hair." This reviewer disliked the Brahms symphony but admitted that it was a "fine performance." The conductor did all he could to "clarify the work" and bring the "melodic outlines into relief."

Chausson's tone poem was called "surpassingly beautiful" by R. H. Mr. Player agreed that it was a "fascinating and imaginative work" and Charlotte M. Tarsney, writing in the Free Press, enthused over both the composition and the rendition of it by the orchestra. "Mr. Gabrilowitsch read the work with great care," she wrote, "stressing its beauties and bringing all its iridescent color to the surface."

STELLA de METTE
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Formerly with Metropolitan Opera
Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.
Exclusive Management of
ANTHONY BAGAROZY
Aeolian Hall New York

CYRENA VAN GORDON
Prima Donna Mezzo Contralto Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management:
For the East: R. E. Johnston, 1451 Broadway, New York City
For the West: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill

RICHARD HAGEMAN
Conductor Metropolitan Opera Co. for Thirteen Seasons
STUDIOS
257 West 86th Street, New York

Entire Vocal and Dramatic Preparation for Concert, Opera, Oratorio
Instruction in Orchestral Conducting
A Limited Number of Pupils Accepted in the Art of Accompanying
CLASS LESSONS
Opera Coaching—Repertoire—Interpretation Accompanying
FOR INFORMATION ADDRESS MISS M. MYERS, SEC'Y.
TELEPHONE 5627 SCHUYLER

RUDOLPH POLK
AMERICAN VIOLINIST
Exclusive Management: S. HUROK, INC., Aeolian Hall, New York.

THE MUSICAL DIGEST

ALL READY TO PLAY: And during this season Jascha Heifetz will confine his concert activities to the United States.

N. MURAY, N.Y.

MISHKIN, NY

A GOLDEN VOICED AIDA is this soprano, Elizabeth Rethberg, who will appear in that role at the opening of the Metropolitan season on November 3.

NOT AT ALL CONCERNED is the pianiste, Herma Menth, just before her recent flight from Vienna to Buda-Pesth.

A VACATION MOMENT for Rosa Raisa and Giacomo Rimini at their Villa Giacrosa in Verona, Italy.

HERE IS Mme. Walska, with Montemezzi, in a spot at Carlsbad

TULLIO SERAFIN, the new Metropolitan Opera conductor, with his daughter Vittoria.

MISHKIN, N.Y.

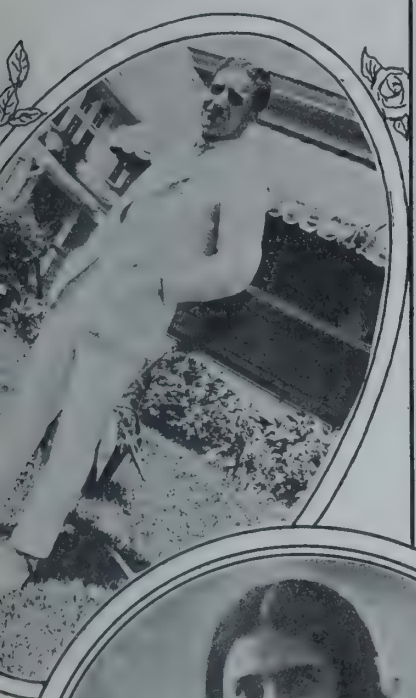
TWO DAYS HENCE Renee Thornton will offer a program of songs before a New York audience in the often-used Aeolian Hall.

MAILLARD KESSLERE

STROLLING in Mariahalden, Baden Baden: Joseph Schwarz and Mrs. Schwarz vacationing.

PICTORIAL SECTION

A STANDBY for prima donnas is J. Henri Bove, who plays flute obbligatos for them.



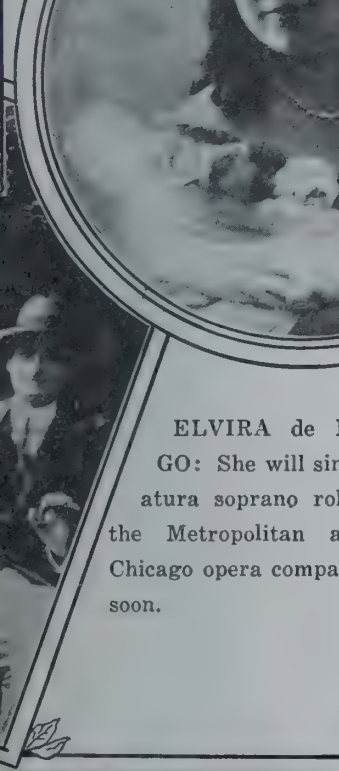
WHITE, N.Y.

IN A HAPPY MOOD is Feodor Chaliapin. His three daughters may be partly responsible.

PICTORIAL PRESS, N.Y.

ELVIRA de HIDALGO: She will sing coloratura soprano roles with the Metropolitan and the Chicago opera companies . . . soon.

A HAPPY FIGARO is Pavel Ludikar who will appear this year with W. W. Hinshaw's Marriage of Figaro.



BAIN NEWS SERV. N.Y.

YOLANDA MERO and her daughter Babe as the Aquitania docked recently in New York.

APEDA, N.Y.

ONE OF the Denishawn Dancers, Doris Humphreys, in an attractive pose.

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Jean Nolan

Irish and English folk-songs made up the program offered by Jean Nolan, Irish mezzo-soprano, at her recital in Aeolian Hall on October 19. She opened with an old English air arranged by Arthur Somervell and two numbers from Purcell's Dido and Aeneas. The Tribune reported that Miss Nolan's "best medium" was found in the Irish group, to which the singer contributed "an expressive and vivacious charm." The Times agreed that the soprano was "especially at home" in the Irish airs, arranged by Herbert Hughes, which brought out "the pleasing quality" of the singer. "The diction of Miss Nolan," read the review in this paper, "was particularly clear, and, though her tragic note is one of gentle melancholy, her humor was deliciously unforced and free. . . ."

Isa Kremer

Isa Kremer, singer of Russian and other folk-songs, gave her first New York recital of the season at Carnegie Hall on October 19. Mme. Kremer was assisted by Leon Rosenbloom, accompanying pianist, and Arkady Birkenholz, violinist.

The program, with "its effective combination of songs sung and, to a considerable extent, acted out by expression and gesture," as the Tribune put it, included seven languages: English, French, German, Italian, Polish, Russian and Yiddish. The versatility of Mme. Kremer's entertainment was emphasized by the reviewers. Pitts Sanborn spoke of the "keen pleasure" she gave to her large audience through her "understanding of the songs of several nations and her clear enunciation of the words she sang." The Times felt that her "versatility enables her to express a remarkable variety of moods and shades of dramatic expression." This paper referred to some of Mme. Kremer's folk-songs as "distinctive and valuable additions to concert literature."

Vladimir de Pachmann

Vladimir de Pachmann, Russian pianist, gave his first New York recital this season on October 17 at Carnegie Hall. Mr. de Pachmann, who, according to Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram and Mail, "was in his most effusive and confidential mood," gave a program consisting of Bach's F major concerto; Mozart's C minor fantasia; a group of Chopin's preludes, mazurkas and scherzos; and offerings by Schumann, Liszt and Brahms.

The newspaper reviewers divided their comment between the artist's playing and his running stream of informal conversation during the recital. The Sun reviewer felt the "moving vitality" and "admirable mastery of tonal color" of his playing in spite of the fact that the pianist discoursed on the lighting system, ventilation, Chopin, pedalling and his sore finger throughout his performance. Olin Downes, the Times reviewer, was moved by the "rare tonal beauty, the exquisite sense of phrase and the subtle mastery of dynamics" of this artist who, at one moment, was "the exquisite singer of melodies" and the next, "the comedian, amusing himself and his audience." Alison Smith of the World enjoyed an "absorbingly dramatic evening" at what seemed to her "a show of one personality, with rich musical accompaniment."

Florence Stern Gives Recital

Florence Stern, violinist, gave her first recital here in two years at Carnegie Hall on October 18. Olin Downes of the Times wrote that the "predominant musical characteristic" of the concert was "a rich and vibrant tone which is evidently personal with the artist . . . an extremely ingratiating characteristic."

Spokane Orchestra Names Soloists

Spokane, Oct. 21.—Among the assisting artists engaged for the coming concerts of the Spokane Symphony Society are Claire Dux, Percy Grainger, Sophie Braslau, Albert Spalding, and the Flonzaley Quartet.

Edwin Ideler

A sonata by Arnold Bax opened the debut recital of Edwin Ideler, violinist, at Aeolian Hall on October 20. From the modern British school, Mr. Ideler passed into more familiar fields with the Vieuxtemps D major concerto. Harry Kaufman was the assisting pianist.

The Sun reviewer welcomed Mr. Ideler as a young musician who "played musically, simply and with authority" and whose outstanding qualities were "a sound musicianship and an unerring taste in publishing what he had to say in the most effective manner." The Times commentator also felt that Mr. Ideler "is an artist of talent, whose tone on his instrument is true and sweet," and who showed "a nice attention in shades of emotion." Pitts Sanborn said that the young violinist played his "exacting" program with "agreeable tone and sufficient technical skill."

Sara Grossman

The first public appearance of Sara Grossman, fifteen-year-old pianist took place in Aeolian Hall, October 20. Miss Grossman offered a difficult program, which ranged from Bach and Beethoven to Chopin, Grieg and Liszt. In Beethoven's Thirty-Two Variations, the pianist showed "much facile contrast," according to the Times reviewer. F. D. Perkins wrote in the Tribune that Miss Grossman's fingers "flew swiftly" through her program, but that she had not yet learned to moderate an inclination toward an almost continuous forte. Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail expressed the opinion that her debut was premature.

Vladimir Rosing

Vladimir Rosing, Russian tenor, who is now the opera director of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, gave his first and only New York concert this season at Carnegie Hall on October 20. Mr. Rosing was well received by the reviewers, two of whom noted in his art a resemblance to that of his countryman, Feodor Chaliapin.

Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram and Mail said that the tenor turned each song into a "miniature drama;" the Sun reviewer spoke of his "talents of temperament and dramatic flare;" and Ernest Newman in his daily column in the Post explained that in spite of the singer's penchant for songs that lend themselves to dramatic interpretation he "has a good sense of where the line should be drawn between the concert stage and the theatre." Continuing along this line, Mr. Newman wrote: "When purely lyrical singing is required he gives it to us." Mr. Sanborn characterized Mr. Rosing's art as abounding in "subtleties and finesses" and felt that in some of the Russian songs and in Duparc's Invitation au Voyage "one heard the best of Mr. Rosing's very personal art." The Sun reviewer agreed that his Russian songs were "much the best of his offerings and merited the abundant applause of his audience." Olin Downes of the Times was struck, as were other reviewers, by the "flare for dramatic effect" in Mr. Rosing's interpretations, which, in certain of the Russian songs, "thrilled his hearers by his imagination and emotional power." The Tribune felt that his singing of Duparc's song was "a notable performance."

RAFAELO DIAZ
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Management: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
HARDMAN PIANO

FRANCES PERALTA
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
MANAGEMENT: NATIONAL CONCERTS, INC., 1451 Broadway, New York

BUZZI-PECCIA
FOUNDATION OF THE OLD ITALIAN METHOD
VOICE DICTION PERSONALITY
38 WEST 67TH STREET NEW YORK

PLEASE WATCH THE ENTRANCE INTO THE AMERICAN CONCERT WORLD
of
STEFI
GEYER
The Violinist
Who arrived yesterday

She will open her brief introductory season with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, November 7th.
She will remain in America two months only. She will return for the full season of 1925-1926.
On September 30th at the Concert Gebouw, Amsterdam, Holland, and on consequent dates at The Hague and Rotterdam.
I witnessed her unusual triumphs.
America will soon endorse my opinion that STEFI GEYER is a distinguished violinist.
I am quoting a very low fee for a few more introductory November, December dates.

M. H. HANSON,
437 Fifth Avenue,
New York City.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

E. Robert Schmitz

In his recital at Aeolian Hall on October 22, E. Robert Schmitz gave the first complete performance in New York of Karol Szymanowski's twelve Etudes. Bach and Chopin; the Sonatine by Albert Roussel; and works by Debussy, Medtner and Liszt made up the rest of the program.

Mr. Schmitz was called a "propagandist" for ultra-modern schools of music by the Sun reviewer who felt that in modern music the pianist "dazzled by his rhythmic sense, clarity of note and speed." His playing in this music, according to this writer, showed "force, intelligence, imagination and a brilliant finger technique." The writer in the Times also considered that Mr. Schmitz played modern music with "force and facility" and complained that Szymanowski's work was "intriguing, irritating but unconvincing; it starved the soul while it fed the ear." These twelve short pieces because of their brevity and contrast offered an impression, wrote the Tribune reviewer, "of restless variety and clearly defined colors, which Mr. Schmitz was just the right pianist to bring out."

Alison Smith in the World thought that Mr. Schmitz recaptured the "uncanny quality of chattering thoughts in this work with vivid understanding and sympathy."

Raisa-Rimini-Brard

Rosa Raisa and her husband, Giacomo Rimini, assisted by Magdeleine Brard, pianist, appeared in a concert at Carnegie Hall on October 18.

The reviewers believed that Mme. Raisa was not up to her best form, but according to Ernest Newman in the Post she improved as the evening wore on. This writer considered that the "Russian songs were sung with a good deal more freedom of voice and of expression" than the aria from Il Trovatore.

Mr. Newman expressed the judgment that Mr. Rimini's intonation on this particular evening was not perfect, but was inclined to blame the fault on too timid accompaniment. According to this reviewer Mr. Rimini "reeled off the rapid patter of Rossini's Largo al Factotum with a good deal of ease."

Miss Brard played several pieces of Chopin and a group of works of modern French masters.

Hurok Controls Opera House

It has been announced that by an arrangement with the owners of the Manhattan Opera House, New York, all bookings for that hall will be made through the offices of S. Hurok, Inc., managers of concert artists. Many Hurok artists are making their New York appearances in this auditorium this season.

Ernesto de Curtis

A "composer concert" in which Ernesto de Curtis, Italian composer, played the accompaniments of his songs for several artists, drew a large audience to the Town Hall on October 20. The principal artists were Giuseppe Danise, baritone of the Metropolitan Opera; Caterina Gobbi, soprano; Mischa Goodman, violinist, accompanied by Mr. Spiegel-Kantrowitz, pianist; Maria Rosa Vidal, harpist; and Mary Menk, pianist.

W. J. Henderson, in adding his words of praise of Mr. de Curtis to those of the other newspaper reviewers, asked "is it any wonder that all the Italians who can gain admission to Town Hall go to hear his songs, especially when he has such cantori as Il Commendatore Giuseppe Danise and La Signorina Caterina Gobbi?" Signor de Curtis "revealed his tal ent," Mr. Henderson thought, in such songs as Voi ed Io, Odorano le Rose, Tramonto d'un Sogno and "the delicious Luntananza." F. D. P. reported in the Tribune that Mme. Gobbi "seemed to have an exceptional voice."

Arthur Hartmann

"A violin recital of more than ordinary interest," according to Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram and Mail, was that of Arthur Hartmann at Aeolian Hall on October 21. The "skillful, scholarly playing" of the program, much of which was devoted to Bach, gave "evident pleasure to an audience of good size," continued Mr. Sanborn.

The Times reviewer could not but admire "the seasoned musicianship" of the violinist, and the "directness and simplicity of Mr. Hartmann's style" were accorded due praise by the writer in the Sun. Alison Smith of the World said that the program was "characteristically thoughtful and scholarly" and that it was played with the "fine regard for intonation" and the "sure and generous contours which have always marked his work." In the Tribune, Mr. Hartmann received applause for his "firm, strong tone of unruffled surface" and his quality of playing with "assurance and confident technical skill."

Harry Kaufman's "skill and perfect co-operation" at the piano were called "a notable feature of the performance" in this review.

To Give Opera in Palestine

Modern Palestine as the National Jewish homeland has made its first contribution to the world of music, says a report to the New York Times by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency. The first Palestinian opera, Ha Chalutz, has just been completed by the composer Weinberg, a pianist in Jerusalem. It will be performed shortly. The libretto is taken from the life of Jewish pioneers in Galilea.

Alberto Sciarretti

Alberto Sciarretti, young Italian pianist, was heard at Aeolian Hall October 22. The Bach-Busoni Toccata, with which he opened the recital, was "excellently done," according to the Times review and Mr. Sciarretti revealed himself as a musician with a "velvety" touch who can produce a tone "capable of many modulations." Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram and Mail also felt that the pianist "put to his credit a capable performance" in his opening number.

In his third group, Mr. Sciarretti demonstrated his capacity "for high speed and brilliance," wrote the Tribune reviewer. And, this reviewer continued, in Liszt's Spanish Rhapsody he displayed an ability for "tossing off fast and tangled passages" which won "warm approval" from his audience. The writer in the Sun thought this composition "ably executed. . . . Mr. Sciarretti often displayed plenty of talent and a considerable degree of brilliance."

Carlos Sedano

Carlos Sedano, violinist, made his first American appearance at Carnegie Hall on October 19. Richard Hageman was his accompanist.

Mr. Sedano, according to the Sun, displayed a "fine sense of rhythm, a nice attention to detail, finished phrasing and an engaging technical facility," and revealed himself as an artist delighting in an "untoward perfection of style and technique." F. D. Perkins in the Herald Tribune found the violinist's tone "of an unusually fluent, crystalline quality in the higher notes, and a rich and mellow warmth in the lower ones....seeming to flow from the violin." The Times writer said that he had "power and variety" of tone, and a "sure feeling" for Southern rhythm.

Chickering Hall Formally Opened

Three Programs Presented in Music Salon; Play Schonberg and Jazz.

Chickering Hall, a new thirteen-story building at 27 West 57th Street, New York, was formally opened last week by a series of three invitation concerts given on consecutive evenings commencing Tuesday. These were given in the intimate Music Salon on the first floor, which seats about two hundred.

Josef Lhevinne, Dorothy Moulton and the Lenox Quartet appeared in the first concert a feature of which was Schonberg's F minor String Quartet with voice.

The second program consisted of works of Leo Sowerby with the composer appearing as pianist and accompanist for Ruth Rodgers and Hans Kindler. Wednesday evening's program was a miscellaneous one presented by Helen Davis, Victor Young and Victor Lopez with his orchestra.

The Festival Committee in charge of these programs consisted of the American Music Guild, City Music League, Franco-American Musical Society, International Composers' Guild, International Society for Contemporary Music, League of Composers, Musicians' Club of New York and Dr. Eugene Noble.

The first five floors of Chickering Hall contain the offices and display rooms of the Chickering Piano Company. Above these are several floors of studios. The musicians' Club of New York has its headquarters on the eighth floor. The top stories house the Ampico laboratories and recording rooms.

RAYMOND HAVENS Pianist
Solist with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 8 performances
Soloist with CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 2 performances
Soloist with MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 3 performances
For Dates and Terms Address:
EVELYN LIGHT, Sec. 87 Pinckney St., Boston, Mass.

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones Aeolian Hall, New York
Aeolian-Vocalion Records

Anton BILOTTI Pianist
London Debut Recital Nov. 27th
Management: Lionel Powell & Holt, London, England

ELSA ALSEN
Famous Wagnerian Dramatic Soprano
FIRST N. Y. RECITAL—Evening of November 25 at Aeolian Hall
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG 1425 Broadway, New York City

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

RUTH ST. DENIS with TED SHAWN and the Denishawn Dancers
Season 1924-1925 Now Booking
Pacific Coast Tour Nov. 24—Jan. 10 Already Booked
Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO

Philadelphians Play Stravinsky

Stokowski Gives Second Subscription Program and First Children's Concert.

Philadelphia, Oct. 21.—A program of Stravinsky and Brahms was offered by the Philadelphia Orchestra, Leopold Stokowski conducting, at the second subscription program of the season last Friday. A children's concert by the orchestra and a recital by Harold Samuel, English pianist, were other recent musical events.

Mr. Stokowski opened his program with the Brahms First Symphony which, according to the reviewer in the North American, Linton Martin, he read "with the kind of crystal purity and perfection that made one almost ache for a flaw." The three Stravinsky numbers, Fireworks, extracts from The Fire Bird, and Song of the Volga Boatmen, received much praise in the press. The Record referred to this composer's orchestration as "beautiful in texture and full of refreshing color and of a melodic charm surpassing much of the modern music." Linton Martin called it "sound, sympathetic and most effective." The Public Ledger said that the orchestration was "of the utmost originality and beauty," and complimented Mr. Stokowski for a "delightful and interesting" concert with a "perfectly balanced program." Of the Stravinsky numbers, the second was the only new one. The others had been heard here before. The reviewer in the Inquirer felt that Mr. Stokowski's interpretation of the entire program, different as it was in mood, was "such as to create a tonal picture wholesome and virile."

There were three thousand children at the Children's Concert given in the Academy of Music last Wednesday afternoon. Before playing the Polovetzki dances from Borodin's Prince Igor, Mr. Stokowski told the children the story of the music. After the completion of Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, the conductor introduced David Sokolove, twelve-year-old pianist, soloist of the occasion. Master Sokolove played Rachmaninoff's Humoresque, Mendelssohn's Sweet Remembrances and MacDowell's Witches' Dance. Before the last number, Sibelius' Finlandia, Mr. Stokowski had the audience stand up and sing Swanee River with the orchestra.

Harold Samuel's Bach recital at Bryn Mawr College last night was well attended. Mr. Samuel's rendition of Bach's Partita in B-flat major received great applause.

Godowsky Injured in Fall

Leopold Godowsky, pianist, suffered two broken ribs in a fall in his apartment in the Hotel Ansonia, New York, last week. He slipped on the smooth floor and collided with a heavy piece of furniture. Although he is still confined to his bed Mr. Godowsky is convalescing quickly.

JOYCE BANNERMAN
Appearing in Her First New York Recital Next Saturday

Sousa to Play Jazz in New York

John Philip Sousa, who is now on his thirty-second annual tour at the head of the band which bears his name, this season for the first time has added jazz music to his programs. He will make his annual appearance in New York at the conclusion of his tour, on Sunday, November 16, when he will give a matinee at the Academy of Music, in Brooklyn, to be followed by an evening concert at the Manhattan Opera House, New York.

Veteran Personnel for Philharmonic

There was only one new player at a first desk when the Philharmonic Orchestra began its eighty-third season at Carnegie Hall on October 16 under the direction of William Van Hoogstraten. He is Hans Lange, assistant concert-master. Mr. Lange joined the Philharmonic last year and formerly was concert-master with Willem Mengelberg at Frankfort.

Pavlowa Enters Second Week of New York Stay

The second week of Anna Pavlowa's New York engagement at the Manhattan Opera House was commenced on October 20 with the presentation of dance settings of Weber's Invitation to the Dance, Liszt's Preludes, and a number of smaller pieces. Mr. Stier and his orchestra again accompanied, and Mme. Pavlowa was assisted by Laurent Novikoff and Alexandre Volinine.

The reviewer of the Post found Mme. Pavlowa "superb as always," and considered the divertissement Coquetterie de Columbine the best number on the program. The writer of the Sun believed that "nothing could be more exquisitely graceful than Pavlowa in this number....She was excellently supported."

The same program was repeated last Friday evening, while the Don Quixote piece, given on the first night, was danced again on Tuesday and Saturday. Sleeping Beauty and Fairy Doll on Wednesday, Coppelia and Chopiniana on Thursday afternoon and Saturday night, and Amarilla and Oriental Impressions Thursday evening, completed the week's schedule.

Pasternack Resigns

Josef A. Pasternack, conductor of the Philharmonic Society of Philadelphia, has resigned as director for business reasons. At the November concert, which he was to have conducted, Richard Hageman of the Metropolitan Opera House forces will direct and another conductor will be secured later. Leopold Stokowski conducted the opening concert last Sunday.

Three ESTELLE LIEBLING Pupils

AT THE MAINE FESTIVAL

Marcella Roeseler : Joan Ruth : Devora Nadworney

Dramatic Soprano
Metropolitan Opera Company

Coloratura Soprano
Metropolitan Opera Company

Contralto
English Grand Opera Company

Were a Triple Success at the Maine Festival

Bangor Daily News

"Mme. Roeseler won the audience completely in her first aria; has the graces of a finished actress. A great Leonora."

Bangor Daily Commercial

"Leonora portrayed in brilliant manner by Marcella Roeseler. Beautiful voice, marvelous dramatic ability, enchanting personality."

Lewiston Daily Sun

"Roeseler as Leonora proved a sensation. Her voice is rich, powerful, yet high; intensely dramatic, and a finished artist."

Portland Evening Paper

"A voice of ravishing sweetness, the lyric tones being beautifully delivered."

Portland Press Herald

"Took the audience by storm in first solo (Roeseler); rich lower voice, skill[illegible]ing of coloratura passages."

Bangor Daily Commercial

"Petite Joan Ruth captivated a very large audience. A wondrous voice, beautiful face and dainty figure made her an instant favorite. The power emanating from this diminutive body was simply beyond explaining."

Bangor Daily News

"Joan Ruth has a voice with an appeal that goes straight to the heart; a real and captivating personality."

Portland Press Herald

"This American newcomer to the Metropolitan (Joan Ruth) is an artist born. The singer's voice is a genuine coloratura of singular beauty; is mistress of runs and trills; sings high 'E' as clear as a bell in the taxing and brilliant Straussiana, an arrangement made by her teacher, Estelle Liebling."

Portland Press Herald

"Joan Ruth, as Inez, was charming in her limited but well portrayed part; singing with freshness and clarity of voice, giving an appealing portrayal of the sympathetic friend. Much that is unusual lies in the quality of her voice, which lends itself gracefully to coloratura ornaments. She is capable of intensity without sacrifice, of tonal beauty, besides which she possesses an undeniable personal charm."

Lewiston Evening Journal

" 'BABE RUTH' SURPRISES FESTIVAL AUDIENCE. SMALL STAR SANG DELIGHTFULLY.

"Like a vision of spring she was in her fresh girlish beauty. Springlike too was her voice. Fresh, pure, with the melody of the birds and the brooks in its clear, flutelike trills and cadenzas, it rose high and free above the orchestra."

Portland Press Herald

"As Azucena Nadworney presented a powerful and poignant portrayal of the gypsy. She acted well and sang beautifully. She sang her aria with intense dramatic energy."

Lewiston Daily Sun

"NADWORNEY'S AZUCENA THRILLING.

"Like a true artist, Devora Nadworney was concerned only in giving the most life-like portrayal of Azucena. She swept her hearers along with her. Her voice is more beautiful and lovelier than ever."

Bangor Daily News

"NADWORNEY SUPERBLY CAST AS AZUCENA.

"Devora Nadworney added new laurels to herself for the forceful and convincing portrayal of Azucena. Her rich contralto voice found much real music to give it an opportunity, of which she availed herself to the utmost."

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

ESTELLE LIEBLING STUDIOS—145 West 55th Street, New York City Telephone Circle 8815

THE

Concert-Giving Industry

Article VIII.

PUBLICITY AND PROMOTION

TO THE EXPERT MIND the words publicity and promotion convey a great deal. To the layman they are looked upon as something written in which adjectives are used liberally, and as something done by others intended to interest many people in a specific project.

Among wholesale music bureaus there is, in general, a comprehensive understanding of what constitutes publicity, and they are aware also of the value to which other forms of activity can be put to give impetus to an attraction or a concert.

It is unfortunate that most local managements (individual and organization) have had limited opportunities to acquaint themselves with what publicity is, and what promotion is—and how they may be most efficaciously employed.

Local managements who have studied those subjects and acquired the ability to engage and direct persons capable of performing creditable jobs in both assert that they form the life-blood of their business.

There can be no questioning the uselessness of a stock of fine merchandise piled upon the shelves of a store if the people do not know that that merchandise is there. In this country advertising has come into a prominence which places it among the foremost of industries; and so important is it to most persons and firms engaged in business that men and women have gone into advertising with the same seriousness that an artist enters the music profession. For advertising has become almost a science (some experts contend that it is).

What Constitutes Publicity

Publicity is a word used to embrace the preparation of copy for reading columns of a publication, and the preparation of copy for advertisements. Each differs from the other; both require much analysis before a move is made to write a line of copy—for what is designed either for the reading columns of a newspaper or the advertising columns.

Now, it is a fact that the experienced and resourceful publicity man or woman brings to bear on whatever individual or undertaking that is to be exploited a discerning viewpoint. The mere stringing together of words does not make a satisfactory piece of publicity for an editor to consider publishing. It should have—and it must have, if it is to be fully acceptable to the editorial mind—a news value or else a feature value. And it must be something which will interest a certain percentage of the readers of that particular newspaper.

The most successful and highest paid publicity writers are those who know the editorial viewpoint and who write what will please an editor. Such a writer studies the likes and the dislikes of each editor to whom he caters. If there be a tendency for a long story the writer governs himself accordingly; and he exercises the utmost care to keep his copy short, if another editor has a passion for brevity.

Able publicity writers shun the adjective because it really has no place in either a news or a feature story. They are cautious also in the expressing of opinions, since that is the function of editorials and does not belong in stories offered for publication in the general reading columns of a newspaper.

Local managements consulted by The Musical Digest concerning publicity insist that their success in securing liberal acceptation of their news and feature stories has resulted from learning editorial wishes and trying to conform to them. The same is true of pictures of artists. If they are interesting in pose and good photographs there is a keener desire to make use of them than if they are the contrary.

Heavy Burden Here

Now everyone knows that most of the copy which is gotten up for artist-attractions is written by the publicity man for the wholesale bureau which manages the attractions. Since much copy must be written (and about several artists, oftentimes about many artists) the burden put on that publicity writer is heavy.

Progressive local managements who cooperate with the editors of the newspapers in their communities go over very carefully every piece of publicity copy which reaches them. If it serves its purpose, then all well and good, but if it doesn't the progressive local managements do their utmost to make the copy and, by editing it (or rewriting such portions as require such attention) it is made to conform to requirements.

The clever and painstaking local manager goes to great effort to cultivate the editor of each newspaper published in his community. Or it may be the managing editor or the city editor whose influence is the one to be courted. Whoever it is, the resourceful local manager makes it part of his duty to keep on the best of terms with him and in every way possible to make him welcome whatever publicity material that manager sends or takes in to him.

Gaining Editorial Support

In not a few instances support is gained to an extent that prompts the publication, from time to time, of editorials on the value of music to the community. And in those editorials there may be, as quite occasionally there is, reference made to the course of concerts conducted by the individual local manager or the club or other organization thus engaged.

Advertising copy should be written with the same care as publicity copy. For, after all, it is the official utterance of the local management. It should not exaggerate, because the patronage of the public rests invariably on the establishing of confidence. When that confidence is not treated with the respect to which it is entitled it may act to the disadvantage of the local management.

Placing emphasis on the important facts to be set forth is right and proper. Each one should have typographical prominence, and yet great care is needed to make the advertisement typographically attractive to the eye . . . to give it some twist which makes it differ in appearance from other advertisements on the same page, and to arouse the interest of the reader.

One of the crying evils of most advertisements about artist-attractions is the filling of the white space completely, or nearly so, with type. The best advertiser is the one who arranges a nice balance in his advertisements, with a sufficient amount of white space in which no type appears, to impart to the entire advertisement an artistic touch.

Concerning Promotion

Promotion covers much and includes everything which can be made use of to attract public attention in a concert course, or a concert, or an attraction. It includes the personal approach to everyone who can be thus reached; appearing before all the organizations which have members likely to be interested in concerts; sending out folders through music stores and department stores (which can be done readily by arranging to have folders not too large sent out with the monthly statements to the customers of those stores); getting the cooperation of colleges and schools—in short, establishing a contact wherever it will yield returns.

Sales promotion can be developed to an amazing degree if there be systematic and insistent methods employed. It requires thought and effort and time to do this, but once it is brought up to an adequate level the benefits accruing work two ways: It stimulates civic interest in music and concert courses and it brings to the local management pursuing that course a financial support which makes it a paying proposition.

Some Fundamentals

While no hard and fast rules can be laid down to cover every situation existing in each city and town where concert courses are given, there are underlying fundamentals which prevail in nearly every instance.

One of these fundamentals is the complete charting of the various avenues of sales promotion which can be utilized.

The other fundamental of outstanding importance is to plan the promotion campaign to fit each of the elements which figure and can be advantageously utilized.

Approaching the promotion problem deliberately and with thoroughness will always give a local management the information essential to the forming of a plan to include in it all which belongs there. Thereafter, by working matters out in detail—and practical procedure—one may discover what is best to do, and what should not be done.

[Stars and Non-Stars is the title of Article IX in The Musical Digest series of articles on The Concert-Giving Industry. It will appear in the next issue.]

League to Offer Much New Music

Composers' Organization Plans Stage and Chamber Music Novelties; to Continue Review.

The League of Composers has prepared a program of concerts, lecture-recitals, and issues of its new Review designed to expand the pioneer work undertaken last year. The three concerts, which will be given in the Klaw Theatre, New York, will introduce several important chamber orchestral works to America, a few "premieres," and one or two rehearings of significant modern compositions, as well as several new works by young Americans.

El Retablo, a marionette opera by Manuel de Falla, the Spaniard, will be given its first hearing in this country. This little work, founded on an incident in the life of Don Quixote, has been heard chiefly in Paris.

The Sette Canzoni of Francesco Malipiero will likewise receive a first American performance, in an arrangement for small orchestra and voices which the composer is now preparing especially for the League.

The League will also give several stage performances during the season. It will introduce a distinctive work by Erik Satie, and two or three new compositions by young Americans. Among the latter are Daniel Jazz, a musical interpretation of Vachel Lindsay's poem by Louis Gruenberg, and a chamber-opera Gagliarda of a Merry Plague by Lazare Saminsky.

Pierrot Lunaire, Arnold Schoenberg's melodrama for which the public has made several requests, will be presented again during the season, and the Stravinsky Concertino will be given a rehearing.

The concerts will further include new works by Aaron Copeland, Frederick Jacobi, Roger Sessions, Emerson Whithorne and others.

The League plans to give two lecture-recitals and the League of Composers' Review, which was published experimentally last spring, will appear three times during the musical season, with a possible summer issue, and will be available to the general public.

The first concert will take place on Sunday evening, November 30; the second and third concerts in February and March. The lecture-recitals in November and January will be given at the Anderson Galleries.

Musicians on S. S. France

On its arrival at New York last Friday the S. S. France carried among its passengers Wanda Landowska, pianist and harpsichordist, and Mme. Delaunois, member of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

PERSIS COX
Pianist and Teacher
Address: Pierce Building
Copley Square, Boston, Mass.
and
Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass.
Baldwin Piano Welte-Mignon Records

Sokoloff Starts Cleveland Season

Full House Greets Orchestra at First Concert; String Quartet Plans.

Cleveland, Oct. 17.—The Cleveland Orchestra, Nikolai Sokoloff conducting, gave the first concert of its seventh season at Masonic Hall last evening. The audience which packed the hall greeted Mr. Sokoloff and the orchestra with enthusiastic applause. The C minor symphony of Brahms opened the program which included Goossens' scherzo, Tam O'Shanter; Debussy's Afternoon of a Faun; and Liszt's Preludes.

The orchestra was warmly welcomed by the critics. Archie Bell in the News wrote: "Mr. Sokoloff directed beautiful music and did it in a masterly fashion; his men gave a wonderful account of themselves." This reviewer also spoke of the program as an "unusually fine" one, and added that Mr. Sokoloff's rendition of the Brahms' symphony was "magnificent."

The Press reviewer, Wilson G. Smith, predicted a season of "artistic consummation" for the orchestra in view of their excellent performance. Mr. Smith was particularly impressed with the playing of Debussy's Prelude, which received a "diaphanous and iridescent play of color at the hands of both Sokoloff and his players."

Eleanor Clarage of the Times-Commercial agreed with the News reviewer that the Brahms' symphony was the "high spot" of the evening. She considered Mr. Sokoloff's reading of the score "magnificent." The second movement, Miss Clarage felt, was especially beautiful, "with Arthur Beckwith doing some lovely solo work."

Another writer who considered the rendition of the symphony as unusually well done, was James H. Rogers of the Plain Dealer. It was played and led, he wrote, with "warmth, eloquence and masterful authority." The Afternoon of a Faun, Mr. Rogers reported, was led "con amore" and played with "enchanting pianissimos" as well as some "deliciously rounded phrases."

A novelty figured on the program in the scherzo Tam O'Shanter by the young English composer, Eugene Goossens. Mr. Rogers called the composition a "clever and characteristic piece of music . . . ingenious, diverting and uncommonly effective as to orchestration."

The Cleveland String Quartet, under the auspices of the Musical Arts Association, will present a series of five Monday Evening Concerts in the ballroom of Wade Park Manor beginning November 3. The Quartet, which consists of Arthur Beckwith, Ralph Silverman, Carlton Cooley and Victor de Gomez, will have the occasional assistance of members of the Cleveland Orchestra, including the Woodwind Ensemble.

Aeolian Hall Resold At $1,000,000 Profit

WITHIN three months of its purchase by the Schulte Retail Stores Corporation that organization resold Aeolian Hall, at 29 West Forty-second Street, New York, not long ago at a profit said to be close to $1,000,000. The purchaser was Samuel Keller Jacobs, real estate operator. The deal involved some $7,000,000.

According to plans recently announced the street floor of the building will be occupied by the Woolworth Company as a branch store as soon as the Aeolian Company vacates the premises, which it may not do for several years to come.

The Aeolian Company is reported to have several new sites under consideration in the new music center on Fifty-seventh Street, adjacent to Carnegie Hall.

Music of the Movies

Ruth Williams, soprano, and Avo Bambarger, supported by an ensemble of voices, are singing the feature song of the musical program at the Capitol Theatre this week. This composition by Martha Wilchinski and Jeanette Tourner is being used as the love motif in the leading picture of the program, Mary Pickford's Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall.

Heading the music program at the Rivoli is the Hallowe'en Fantasy, with Miriam Lax, soprano, and a troupe of dancers. The overture to Thomas' Raymond is being played by the orchestra. Hallowe'en Jazz is part of the attraction at the Rialto, and Theodore Webb is singing a baritone solo.

Rochester Greets Orchestra Again

Eugene Goossens Directs Symphony in First Concert of Second Year.

Rochester, Oct. 20.—The Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra gave the first concert of its second season Thursday evening, October 16, in the Eastman Theatre under the direction of Eugene Goossens, young English conductor, who recently returned from London to resume his duties with the Rochester organization. Mr. Raymond Wilson, of the Eastman School, was the piano soloist of the evening.

The press was unanimous in its praise of the concert. The reviewer of the Democrat and Chronicle said, "Mr. Goossens got from the orchestra a playing of its part of the second MacDowell Concerto which was a revelation to the writer, who happened to hear the first public performance of this work with MacDowell playing and Theodore Thomas conducting; many other hearings have none of them given such musical satisfaction as that of last night."

Harvey W. Southgate in Rochester Herald wrote, "The orchestra has worked hard and to excellent purpose and the program through which Mr. Goossens put it last night required the best effort it could give. Strictly modern, from the Dvorak Carnival Overture to the Rachmaninoff E minor symphony, it was not the sort of music that 'plays itself.'"

"Eugene Goossens—by the sheer force of his magnetism and musicianship drew from that organization a performance which, in its best moments, achieved the finest orchestral playing the city's new temple of music has yet heard," wrote A. J. Warner in Rochester Times-Union.

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

ANNE ROSELLE
PRIMA DONNA SOPRANO
Exclusive Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall New York City

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.

FLORA
GREENFIELD
SOPRANO
Management ERNEST HENKEL, 1451 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Bryant 3352 KNABE PIANO

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Varied Music in Rome

Banda Comunale Appears Under Vessella; Dispute New Opera House Project.

Rome.

In Rome at present there is more music being produced than that which is heard in theatres where opera is given. The public crowded the Piazza Colonna on two evenings this week to hear the communal band, directed once more for a short time by the famous leader, Vessella.

It is useless to repeat comment on the perfection of this musical organization, unique in Italy. It is a pleasure to report, after hearing the group for the first time in two years, that they seem on the road to an ulterior perfection, unbelievable as that may seem. The musicians are soloists beautifully trained in precision of attack, in intonation, and in virtuosity.

They are a group always unified and well balanced, playing the most delicate of passages with finesse, and without a shade of affectation. The band shows exquisite dynamic sense in the fugati, and a moment later it can sound as robust and colorful as an orchestra. If Vessella insists upon going into retirement Rome will miss him.

Dispute Theatre Project

The newspapers are discussing with considerable heat the project of erecting the Teatro Nazionale dell'Opera according to the financial and artistic plans and designs of the architect Piacentini. The Tribuna is supporting him in every way, while the Messagero believes that the time is inopportune because of the national economic and building crisis. The project involves the expenditure of some 30 million lire. The edifice is planned for the principal and most beautiful street in Rome: La Via Vittorio Veneto, right near the church of the Cappuccini.

After its opening on November 15 with Nerone La Scala is planning a pretentious series of performances. Among the new operas to be offered is Puccini's Turandot, which at last seems sure of presentation. It will be directed by Toscanini, the difficulty between the conductor and the composer having finally been settled. The former had not wished to saddle himself with the responsibility of the first performance of Puccini's work because of his health, which has not been of the best. Turandot will be given some time early in April.

Other Novelties

Giordano's La Cena delle Beffe will be given in the first part of December, and I Cavalieri di Ekebu of Zandonai is scheduled for the first part of February. The second opera of the season will be L'Oro del Reno, directed by Gui, and Panizza will wave the conductor's baton in the third performance, that of Wagner's Valkyries. Near the beginning of January will be seen the new ballet of Casella, Convento Veneziano. It will be paired off with the new opera of Lualdi, Il Diavolo nel Campanile, or perhaps with Strauss' Salome.

On the fifteenth of October there commenced in the Verdi Theatre of Ferrara an autumn season with the following operas: Mefistofele, Guglielmo Tell, and Carmen. The artists taking part include the tenor Sullivan, the basso Pinza, and the mezzo-soprano Zinetti.

F. C.

CATERINA GOBBI

Soprano, Who Took Part in the Recital of Folk Songs of Ernesto de Curtis in Town Hall

Organize Educational Orchestra

The Educational Alliance, New York, is organizing a symphony orchestra, which will be under the direction of a prominent conductor. The Alliance offers to semi-professional and advanced amateur musicians an opportunity of acquiring ensemble and orchestra routine under competent leadership.

French Critic Writes Review of Boito Opera

Paris.

Alfred Mortier has written a long study of Boito's Nerone which was published a short time ago in the Courier Musical.

According to M. Mortier the musical score of Nerone is inferior to the libretto, simply because the musician was not the equal of the poet. The learned critic, after examining at length each act of the entire score, and after praising the magnificence of the spectacle, as well as the immense ability of Toscanini, concludes his argument as follows:

"In its entirety Nerone is a work of art, thoughtful, of noble qualities and proportions. It possesses practically everything that ingenuity and knowledge could give it, and lacks quite everything that genius refused to give. It is a work more than honorable, but less than sublime. In it are to be found passages of incontestably great beauty along with other pages of indifferent interest and merit.

"It may well be asked, for the sake of the glory of the Italian school of music, whether this score deserved the great pains which were expended on it, or the great hopes which it was permitted to arouse. With the same quantity of money and effort it would have been possible to stage worthily at least five lyric dramas by unknown composers, either younger men or already mature artists, who are awaiting the time to appear in public.

"Italy has never been poor in musical genius. It is difficult to believe that it does not possess at present any unknown musician who is worthy of the attention and of the expenditure of the powers of La Scala."

GLADYS AXMAN

Scores as "Tosca" With San Carlo Opera Company at the Jolson Theatre on October 10, 1924

EDWARD CUSHING IN THE BROOKLYN EAGLE.

"Miss Axman is our choice from among the sopranos of the Gallo company. She has the Metropolitan air, the grand carriage, the taste that one associates with singers of the larger line. Her Tosca was dramatic and well sung. She is the best Tosca, the best Santuzza, that Gallo boasts."

NEW YORK TELEGRAM AND MAIL—Oct. 11, 1924

"AXMAN LAYS OUT SCARPIA

"Gladys Axman added the title role of 'Tosca' to her local repertory in the San Carlo performance at Jolson's Theatre last evening. As is her custom. MME. AXMAN SANG WITH INTELLIGENCE, MUSICIANSHIP AND FINE TASTE.

"Her vocal utterance has gained unmistakably in freedom and fullness. AND EXQUISITE, YESTERDAY, WAS HER TREATMENT OF THE OPENING MEASURES OF 'VISSI D'ARTE,' which, unlike Mme. Jeritza, she sang lying on her back and with one arm pointing hieratically to the distant stellar spaces.

"DRAMATICALLY, MME. AXMAN ROSE TO AN IMPRESSIVE HEIGHT, SHOWING IN THE TAXING SCENES OF THE SECOND ACT AN ADMIRABLE SENSE OF PICTURESQUE GESTURE AND AN UNEXPECTED PROVISION OF HISTRIONIC RESOURCE. * * *

NEW YORK AMERICAN—Oct. 11, 1924

"GLADYS AXMAN AS TOSCA SHOWS NEW SURPRISING TALENT

"Gladys Axman, who for years hid her vocal capability in unimportant parts at the Metropolitan, gave a surprisingly satisfactory performance of the exacting role. She sang with feeling and wore several beautiful costumes effectively."

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE—Oct. 11, 1924

"GLADYS AXMAN, NEW TOSCA, DRESSES PART STRIKINGLY AND VOICE IS IMPROVED

" 'Tosca,' as performed by the San Carlo Opera Company, had an unfamiliar Tosca last night at the Jolson Theatre—Gladys Axman who gave a generally effective performance. Strikingly clad in yellow and green in the second act, MISS AXMAN FLED FROM SCARPIA, CURSED SCARPIA AND EVENTUALLY KILLED HIM WITH A WEALTH OF ACTION, MUCH VIGOR AND DRAMATIC INTENSITY. Vocally, she showed improvement over last season."

NEW YORK TIMES—Oct. 11, 1924

"TALL AND DARK, TIGER-LIKE IN INTENSITY, she gave a well considered interpretation, vocally adequate and approaching the melodramatic quality of Sardou's play."

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

Give Novelty at Dal Verme

Twenty Year Old Opera of Pratella Has First Milan Performance; Other Presentations.

Milan.

La Sina di Vargonn, an opera by Balilla Pratella, finally was performed for the first time at the Dal Verme, last week. This opera has waited long for its first presentation in Milan, for it was written some twenty years ago, and after its premiere at the Concorso Baruzzi was given at the Teatro Comunale in Bologna. The Dal Verme performance was favorably received, although its reception can hardly be called enthusiastic. There were several curtain calls at the end of each act.

The Story

The plot of La Sina di Vargonn is set in Romagna. A youth by name of Lidio falls in love with Sina, and he brings about the seduction of her betrothed by a coquettish lover of his, Lisetta. It is a time of the rural corn-husking festival. Sina discovers the two lovers, and begs Selmo, her betrothed, to have pity on her for the sake of a child which she is bearing him, but he answers harshly, and she swoons.

The second act takes place on St. Martin's Eve. It is set in characteristic country surroundings of Romagna. Autumn and winter have passed. After her terrible experience Sina has fallen ill, but now she is well. But in her heart have grown up terrible passions of hate, and she prepares to be revenged.

The action of the third act passes on the night of Epifania, that magic period in which dumb animals acquire supernatural powers, and are able to speak to and to understand those who know how to listen to them.

Selmo and Lisetta are about to be married to each other. Lidio meanwhile repents of the evil that his desire has brought about, and aspires to make himself beloved by Sina. She does not respond, but lurks ominously amid the crowd outside the church in which Lisetta and Selmo are being married. When they emerge she rushes upon the groom, pierces his heart with a dagger, and in a moment has vanished in the throng.

Picturesque Atmosphere

The librettist and composer have managed to catch a true and lively atmosphere in their portrayal of the characters of Romagna, which is an interesting and picturesque locale, with its characteristic popular songs, its colorful dances, and peculiar customs.

The duet between Selmo and Sina, the interlude of the evening fete, and the finale of the first act stood out particularly in the musical score. In the second act the narration of Sina, the duet between Lidio and Lisetta, and the final duet made an effect of increasing dramatic interest by the crescendo of the passion of the music. Particularly moving also was the passage of the orchestra after the relation of the sorrow of Sina.

Rather less happy was the intermezzo in the last act. In fact the entire third part of the opera fell down in musical and dramatic interest. The effect of sincerity is much less perfect than in the first two acts, and the music and libretto are not wholly innocent of mannerism and excessive length. Yet the entire presentation was undoubtedly pleasing.

The orchestra, directed by Maestro Benvenuti, did particularly well in a score which presented not a few difficulties, and gave steady support to the cast from scene to scene.

Baldossarre Tedeschi played the part of Sina, and handled the musical and dramatic problems of her role with excellent skill and feeling. The remainder of the cast, including Signor Chiara, as Selmo, Signora Alberti, as Lisetta, and Signor Beuf, as Lidio, were also effective.

Guglielmo Ratcliff

On another recent evening Mascagni's Guglielmo Ratcliff was put on at the Dal Verme, and won its usual success. This youthful opera of the composer, full of color and inspiration, if it only had been written to a better libretto, could very well stand beside Cavalleria, and would probably be equally popular.

The presentation of this work was particularly good. One of the difficulties in the performance of Ratcliff is that of securing a tenor who can sing in the arduous ranges of the part of the protagonist. Signor Taccani overcame the difficulties of the role with great mastery, and was very vigorously applauded after the important passage in the second act.

Others in the cast who did commendable work were Signora Ravenga Maria, Signor Douglas, and Signora Amato. The Margherita of the last artist, a difficult part, was received by the public with uproarious applause. Signor Benvenuti conducted with admirable spirit, and had to bow with the singers of the cast on more than one occasion.

The third presentation of the Dal Verme season was that of L'Adriana Lecouvreur of Cilea on September 23. The matter, form, and style of this work are well known, since it has long been making the rounds of the theatres of Southern Europe. The present performance was particularly important because it was a sort of revival after a long period over which the Dal Verme neglected this particular work.

The success of the performance was unusually striking. The greater part of the credit in the presentation is due to Signora Cervi-Caroli, who took the principal role. She displayed a voice as careful as it was pleasing, and proved herself once more an actress full of dramatic powers. At all times she showed perfect taste in the treatment of the various vocal effects in her part, and was both expressive in accent and lovely in tone.

Among our singers she is one of the few who can give a distinct impression of character by the force of her own spirit. Perhaps at times this dramatic fire burns too warmly, and she may seem to exaggerate, especially in a piece such as L'Adriana, in which the French delicacy of coloring predominates.

The tenor Chiaia seemed somewhat uncertain in the first act, but the clarity of his voice triumphed in later acts. The baritone Pilotto also did very well, and the danseuse, Leonidoff, made her customary favorable impression. Signor Benvenuti, who conducted, was called before the curtain at the end with the artists of the cast.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

Question Box

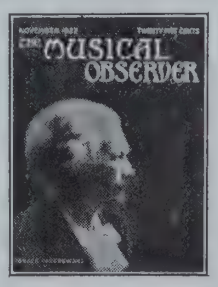
1. What is the seating capacity of the Metropolitan Opera House?
2. Is the pianiste Maria Carreras Spanish or Italian?
3. Which is the oldest symphony orchestra in the United States, and who was its first conductor?
4. How old is Vladimir de Pachmann?

Last Week's Answers

1. Leopold Stokowski was born in London of a Polish father and an Irish mother, and is a naturalized American citizen.
2. The lowest tone sounded by a musical instrument is the low C pedal of a pipe organ. With an organ having a 32 ft. pedal pipe this sounds the C below the piano low A and creates but 16 vibrations per second. Some few organs have a 64 ft. pedal stop, sounding an octave lower, vibrating but 8 times per second. Such sounds are felt rather than heard.
3. Theodore Thomas died January 4, 1905, in Chicago.
4. Mendelssohn wrote no operas. His several Midsummer Night's Dream compositions were written as incidental music to be played during the Shakespearean play.

Hess to Appear in Boston

Myra Hess, pianist, will give a Boston recital under the management of Mrs. David Chase this season on a date yet to be announced. On March 30 Miss Hess will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Hess made her first appearance in Boston last season.



For a $2.00 bill attached to this coupon, we will enter your subscription for one year for the Musical Observer,—the up-to-date music magazine, which among other interesting features contains music for piano, violin and piano, piano and voice,—and send you one of the following premiums.

MINIATURE MASTERPIECES for Violin and Piano (Collection of 24 simplified arrangements of famous solos.)

MODERN PIANO ALBUM (a collection of 24 modern compositions.)

SELECT SONGS OF THE MASTERS (high or low voice), Vol. 1 (20 easy songs each a popular favorite).

FRANZ SCHUBERT ALBUM for High or Low Voice (a collection of 13 selected songs).

THE MUSICAL OBSERVER CO.
62 COOPER SQUARE, N. Y. CITY

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

Margaret MATZENAUER
PRIMA DONNA CONTRALTO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, Inc., Fisk Building, 250 West 57th Street New York City
STEINWAY PIANO VICTOR RECORDS

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1924-1925
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

EDITH MASON SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NE W YORK CITY

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

London Hears Many Pianists

Cortot, Rachmaninoff, Scharrer, and Rummel Give Concerts in English Capital.

London.

Besides the recital of Mme. Galli-Curci, report of whose concert was given last week, this London music week has been marked by the appearance of many pianists.

Alfred Cortot gave a recital to a Queen's Hall audience on October 12 which won him much commendation. He is "a very great artist" according to the Post writer: "On this occasion he was a master armed at all points." "He drew a large and attentive audience," states the Times critic. "His playing has indeed reached a high pitch of excellence, and there is little to be got of the instrument which he does not get." The artist's fine "imaginativeness" seemed notable to the Telegraph commentator: "Listening to the magical ease and intimate feeling of his playing, one was able to forget the prodigious skill that made such interpretation possible; it was the artist we honored, the technician we scarcely thought about till it was all over."

Two English pianists were heard earlier in the week: Miss Irene Scharrer and Walter Rummel. The former, it was thought, played a little more melodramatically than is her wont, and perhaps too much so for complete satisfaction. Nevertheless, she was of course much commended. Mr. Rummel has always had the critical welcome which greets his appearance tempered by remonstrances for "exceeding the limits of pianoforte tone" (to use the Times' phrase), but he, too, like Miss Scharrer, ranks high in the esteem of both critics and public. A new pianist, Mme. Frieda Kwast-Hodapp, made an excellent debut impression both for power and technique and interpretation.

Rachmaninoff Plays Twice.

Serge Rachmaninoff was twice heard in the period October 6-13; once in recital on the earlier date, once with the Queen's Hall Symphony Orchestra in the first concert of its new season, on the twelfth. Of the recital, the Telegraph writer said: "The pianist's readings of Chopin are familiar enough by now, and one experiences in listening to them that he feels all the poetry inherent in the music of that composer, and has at command all the resources to express his changing moods." Practically all Mr. Rachmaninoff's other performances were of his own compositions—in the case of the symphony concert, the third concerto. Here the same critic wrote: "From the standpoint of the soloist, the work bristles with difficulties. Yet in his finely restrained and sensitive playing the composer never once obtruded those difficulties or allowed any thought of personal display to mar the rare beauty of his performance." According to the Post, "Under its composer's fingers, all its force and power were realized. Mr. Rachmaninoff's playing was finely contrasted, with its delicacy at one point and its executive facility at the other." As for the recital, this same critic held the composer's playing to be "the best we have heard in London for many months."

First Symphony Concert

Save for its soloist, this first of London's winter symphony concerts was not noteworthy. Indeed a glance at the prospectuses of the local orchestras and of the provincial organizations show that the presentation of novelties during 1924-25 is to rest entirely on the shoulders of the latter. Only the Philharmonic, among London bands, is to give any new works this season—one or two. A third is to be presented at one of the concerts of the Hallé Orchestra of Manchester, which for the first time since before the war plans to come down to the capital for a series of three concerts under Hamilton Harty. This is the orchestra with which the name of Hans Richter is associated; it was his during the greater part of his stay in England.

Further critiques of the concert here of the Cleveland String Quartet bear out the praise of the first reviewers. The writer of the London Era found a particular satisfaction in seeing Arthur Beckwith, an English musician, in company with three such musicians as his American comrades, Ralph Silverman, Carlton Cooley, and Victor de Gomez. This reviewer said further, "As quartets go, the musical life together of these players has been very short. Yet they need not fear comparison with others who have been years in association. Their ensemble was perfect, not alone in points of technique, but also in tone color and texture, and sensitiveness of expression. It was strong sincere playing, full of character and of a fine emotional fervor."

The commentator in the Westminster Gazette agreed that the Cleveland Quartet is an ensemble "of the first quality," although he felt that at certain rare times "one could have done with a little more subtlety and light and shade." The Times reporter spoke of their sensitive performance, and praised particularly the manner of presentation of the Goossens' Two Sketches.

HAMILTON HARTY
English Conductor, Who Will Lead the Halle Orchestra of Manchester on Its Reappearance in London

The Halle Orchestra of Manchester will commence its sixty-seventh season this year. Charles Halle started with a band in 1857 at the Manchester Art Exhibition. It was so successful that he began a series of concerts in 1858 and soon established his fame as a conductor and pianist. He was a friend of Berlioz and introduced his works into England. When Sir Charles Halle died, in 1895, Sir Arthur Sullivan and Sir Frederick Cowen took up the reins. In 1899 Dr. Hans Richter became its conductor and remained for thirteen years. He was succeeded by Michael Balling, in 1912, who resigned when the war broke out in 1914. During the war Sir Thomas Beecham came forward and kept the orchestra in running order, assisted by Alfred Coates, Eugene Goossens and Hamilton Harty. Mr. Harty became permanent conductor in 1920. The orchestra gives between sixty and seventy concerts every year. It is ten years since it visited London and it is booked for three concerts at Queen's Hall, Oct. 28, Nov. 11 and 25.

P. L.

Paris Orchestral Plans

Paris, Oct. 8.—The Lamoureux Concerts will begin on Oct. 19 under Paul Paray at the Salle Gaveau. The Pasdeloup series will commence five days later at the Theatre Magador.

Colonne Concerts Begin

Paris, Oct. 8.—The Concerts Colonne announce their opening on Oct. 25 in the Theatre du Chatelet.

"Music & Letters"
FOUNDED 1920
The British Musical Quarterly
100 pages: 20s per annum post free
"The leading Music Magazine we possess."—London Daily Telegraph.
LONDON: 22, ESSEX STREET, W. C. 2

Ethel Grow
A SINGER WHO IS A MUSICIAN
BUILDER OF UNUSUAL, EFFECTIVE PROGRAMS
NEW YORK STUDIO
200 West 57th Street Telephone: Circle 10117

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

REGINA KAHL, soprano, a pupil of Ethel Grow, will give an informal recital at the studios of the Washington Heights Music Club on November 18.

Augusta Lenska, contralto, stopped over in New York on her way to Chicago to give a recital for the pupils of Estelle Liebling at her studio on October 16. Among the guests were Alexander Kipnis, basso of the Chicago Opera Company; Marcella Roeseler, Arnold Gabor, Max Altglass, Ellen Dalossy, Paul Eisler, all of the Metropolitan Opera Company; and Henry Bellaman of the Juilliard Foundation.

The New York Chapter of the Musical Guild held the first meeting of the season at Edwin Hughes' studio. The president, Mrs. Arthur B. Wells, presided. The audience enthusiastically received the program presented by Margot Samoranya, soprano, and Bedrich Vasha, cellist of the New York String Quartet. Miss Samoranya's program consisted of two groups of songs including She Was Once Thine by Gretchaninoff; Lilace by Rachmaninoff; Voici que le Printemps by Debussy; Fantoches by Debussy; Kitty of Coleraine; Beyond by Barnett; The Little Shepherd Song by W. Watts and Love Went A-Riding by Frank Bridge. Mr. Vasha played the Adagio from the Concerto by Dvorak; Ballade by Suk; and Rondo by Dvorak. Both artists added encores to their program.

An opportunity for music students who wish to become professional critics is offered in a new course at Harvard University. This course will attempt to train such students in the profession of music criticism. Professor Edward B. Hill, who will be one of the instructors, says that the course will be one of the first of its kind. Although courses in harmony, composition, history and appreciation of music have been given, provision rarely has been made for the student planning to enter the field of professional criticism.

Arthur Weick and Raymond Anders, artist pupils of Anna Tomlinson Boyd, furnished a musical program recently for the Woman's Club of Brookfield, Ill.

The annual fall meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Federation of Music Clubs will be held in Pittsburgh, Pa., November 17 to 21, upon invitation of the Tuesday Musical Club of Pittsburgh of which Mrs. W. C. Dierks is president. Mrs. T. C. Donovan, chairman of the entertainment committee, has arranged an interesting program of teas, concerts and receptions for the guests.

The recently issued prospectus for 1924-1925 of the Schubert Club of St. Paul, Minnesota, of which Florence L. C. Briggs is president, announced three one hundred dollar scholarships to be awarded members of the Club after competitive examinations. Preliminary trials for vocal, piano and violin students are scheduled for January 24 and the finals for February 7.

The series of artist recitals was opened by Jeanne Gordon, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, on October 16. Other artists who will be heard are Richard Crooks, tenor, on November 10; Marion Rous, pianist, on November 19; the Letz Quartet on December 2; Maria Ivogun, coloratura soprano, on January 15; and Myra Hess, pianist, on February 26.

The Cleveland Institute of Music is offering a lecture course, conducted by Roger Huntington Sessions, in which the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra programs are discussed for the benefit of those concert-goers who desire a better understanding and appreciation of the music. Mr. Sessions, who is a composer and teacher of theory, will give seventeen lectures during the winter.

Another new course is being offered by Beryl Rubinstein in piano pedagogy.

Following the lead of several other schools, the MacPhail School of Music in Minneapolis has incorporated into its curriculum for the post-graduate course, the piano technique of E. Robert Schmitz under the supervision of Mrs. Charles S. Hardy. Forty weeks' study of these technical principles is obligatory to all pupils who wish to qualify as teachers.

ETHEL GROW
Contralto, and Singing Teacher, Who Opened Her New York Studio Once More a Fortnight Ago

Edward Robinson, pianist, played Schumann's Carnival in illustration of the lectures of Prof. Schutze before the classes in music history and appreciation at Columbia University last week. The Carnival pieces were selected by the lecturer as typical of a certain period in Romantic musical thought. Mr. Robinson played the Carnival once before the students of the Columbia College class, and once for the Barnard College class.

The Oberlin Conservatory in Oberlin, Ohio, will have an imposing program of artist concerts this season. Roland Hayes, Dusolina Giannini, Guiomar Novaes, Maria Ivogun, Ernst Von Dohnanyi and Albert Spalding will give recitals. The Flonzaley Quartet, the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra will also be heard.

In Columbus, Ohio, the Morrey School of Music, Inc., has succeeded the Grace Hamilton Morrey School of Music. The reorganization is a result of the steady growth of the school since its founding as a conservatory in 1916.

The annual season of concerts at Alabama College, Montevallo, Ala., opened on the evening of October 18. The first program of the series, which is open to the public as well as to those connected with the faculty and student body of the college, consisted of a joint appearance of Rebecca D. Stoy, contralto, and Polly Gibbs, pianist.

Both are members of the Alabama College faculty. Miss Stoy was graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music, and followed up her undergraduate work with further study at that school. At present she is the head of the voice department of Alabama College. Miss Stoy sang in two of the three groups on the program. Her first groups consisted of songs by Strauss, Weingartner, Poldowski, and Bizet.

Immediately following the first group Miss Gibbs, who is a graduate from Henderson-Brown College, and from the Northwestern School of Music, appeared in a number of solo selections for the piano. Among other compositions Miss Gibbs played Oldberg's Praeludium; Leschetizki's Barcarolle; and Liszt's Ricordanza.

In the final group Miss Gibbs again accompanied Miss Stoy, who sang songs of Horn, Chadwick, Treharne, Dunhill, and Henschel. The next concert of the Alabama College series will follow soon.

The development of a choir in Ottawa, Canada, from an unorganized group of forty boys into a well-knit organization of over one hundred trained singers, is making a distinct addition to the musical life of the city. The organization, now known as the Ottawa Kiwanis Boys' Choir, has a director who gives a sound musical training in individual as well as group work.

Irene Peabody, soprano, a former pupil of Charles W. Clark, has been appointed instructor of voice at Kansas University, Lawrence, Kan., by Dean Swarthout.

Not only in the United States are American teachers immersed in the problems of their newly-commenced season. Miss Phoebe Monvel, the young American pianist of whom London critics thought so well last year, has opened her studio in Chelsea, the English capital's Greenwich Village.

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

EMILIO ROXAS
VOCAL COACH
Studio: 2231 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Phone: Endicott 6306
Coach and Accompanist to MARTINELLI for six years

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director
120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application
Address Dept. V

V. TREVISAN
VOCAL STUDIO
Chicago Civic Opera Association
74 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

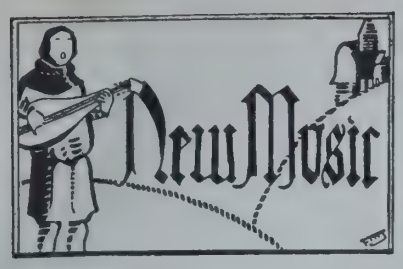
Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

ARTHUR J. HUBBARD — VINCENT V. HUBBARD
Teachers of Singing in All Its Branches
246 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON, MASS.

VOCAL ART-SCIENCE STUDIO
ANITA MASON WOOLSON
125 East 37th Street
N. E. Corner Lexington Ave.
New York City
Endorsed by Dr. Frank E. Miller
Founder of Vocal Art-Science
Telephone Murray Hill 0991

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS



SEVERAL new numbers have been added to the series of Negro Spirituals, which Harvey B. Gaul is arranging for Oliver Ditson. De New Born Baby, published for medium and low voices, is a Christmas song of fishermen. It is a solemn piece with simple harmonic accompaniment, and with a characteristic unsophisticated melodic line. Ride On, King Jesus, which is issued in keys for high and medium ranges, is a moving sacred song of the negroes.

Three new songs of Charles W. Cadman, From a Tropic Land, with lyrics by J. M. Stuart-Young, also are Ditson publications. All of them are published for high and medium tessitura. Moon-Flower is an effective composition in which the roll of triplets in the voice against a duple time in the accompaniment (and vice versa) adds expressiveness to the melody. Wild Sweet Land is a livelier song in which the irregularity of rhythm accomplishes a charming effect of free, natural melody. The third number of this group, which seems to have interest for the concert artist, is called Starry Waters. The striking flow of the accompaniment, broken now and again by stern chords, adds an interest which no song with a purely subordinate accompaniment is likely to have.

Several sacred songs are among the recent Ditson issues for voice. Ho Every One That Thirsteth, by Grace Mayhew Putnam, is published for high and medium ranges. The spirit of the text from Isaiah is caught with moderate success, although sometimes the words and music are rather awkwardly set together. T. Frederick H. Candlyn's An Evening Hymn is a sacred duet for soprano and tenor.

In respect to religious music the recent issue of the publishers has not been scant. H. W. Gray's Quarterly No. 47 is a new volume of Anthems for Christmas and general use. The volume includes a Christmas cantata by T. F. H. Candlyn, entitled The Light of the World, for soprano, alto and baritone solo with chorus and organ; On a Winter's Night, an anthem for mixed chorus, by Hugh A. Mackinnon; The Joyful Morn Is Breaking, and O Little Town of Bethlehem, by William Lester; In Bethlehem's Manger Lowly, for soprano and contralto solo with women's chorus, by Clarence Dickinson; The Good Shepherd, for mixed chorus, by Arthur B. Jennings.

The Andanto Languido from the Three Little Waltzes of Cyril Scott has recently been arranged for cello and piano by Cedric Sharpe (Elkin & Co., London; Ricordi, New York). The piece is in no sense modernistic. The smoothness and simplicity of the diatonic melody and accompaniment are far from the style of the works of Cyril Scott, modernist.

The same publishers have issued lately a number of new songs. Among them are Tresses, by George Oldroyd, set to a text of Robert Browning; The Dove, by Eric Fogg, to a text of Keats; and Cyril Scott's The Garden of Memory. The two former songs are published in two ranges, the last named only for medium voice.

The Scott song is much more advanced in technique than his waltz. After a short recitative over colorful dissonant chords the voice part becomes more melodious, and is supported by figurations in eccentric rhythmic groups. On the last page of the song the accompaniment supplies some quaint color in parallel fifths.

A new song of Pearl Curran, which this composer has written to her own text, is To Eostra (G. Schirmer). It is a lively opus published for high and low voices. Eostra is the early Teuton goddess of dawn and early spring (whence the name Easter), and spirit of the piece fits her well. For the enterprising soprano there is an optional thrill on high A and G sharp which should prove more than interesting.

Two Moon Songs, by Henry C. Castleman, both for high and medium voice, are also in the recent Schirmer output. Shake Out Thy Tresses is a piece full of tricky rhymth. Its meter changes sometimes every measure, with the effect, in the vocal part, of irregular recitative. The syncopations are clever and difficult, both for singer and accompanist, but the piece has individuality. If the Moon is more conventional and smoothly melodic in style.

E. ROBERT SCHMITZ
Included the Szymanowski Etudes in His Recent New York Recital Program

Cumberland Hears Whiteman

Cumberland, Oct. 24.—Opening the Hunt Concert Course for this season and their own transcontinental tour, Paul Whiteman and his Orchestra presented here their program called An Experiment in American Music on September 19. For his second attraction, Mr. Hunt presented the United States Marine Band under Captain W. H. Santelmann. Mischa Elman drew a big house October 20 when he appeared here under the same management.

On October 27, the San Carlo Opera Company will sing the Barber of Seville with Tina Paggi, the new Italian coloratura, in the leading role. Last season the San Carloans presented here Madam Butterfly with Tamaki Miura.

In addition to these attractions, Mr. Hunt is offering the Kibalchich Russian Symphonic Choir; Maier and Pattison in their two-piano recital; Anna Pavlowa and her Ballet Russe; Vladimir De Pachmann, and Fritz Kreisler.

THE EVOLUTION OF HARMONY, by C. H. Kitson (Oxford Press, England). In spite of its title this work is essentially a pedagogical treatise on harmony. It is admirably arranged for teaching; neat and clear, with very excellent illustrations which carefully avoid useless complication. Despite its inclusion of many historical details of interest, the practical part of the book, its empiric side, is much better developed than the theoretical. The author, for example, does not say a single word concerning the genesis of the chords of which he teaches the use. The phenomenon of natural resonance is not even hinted at.

On the other hand, each chapter is accompanied with exercises for the training of the ear, which are very well chosen. All that Mr. Kitson says about the use of the chords of the fourth and the sixth is full of good sense. Likewise the manner in which he indicates the different ways of writing for voices, strings, the piano and so on, is quite judicious.

If one is surprised at not finding any descriptive material concerning the advance of harmony, nevertheless one is pleased to be instructed in the use of very recently established chords, such as those of the eleventh and the thirteenth. And the illustrations of the last chapter are borrowed from the compositions of Debussy, Ravel, Elgar, and other recent composers.

Mr. Kitson maintains as one of the principles of musical pedagogy the necessity of strict observance of rules, although in respect to their absolute value he expresses a most intelligent scepticism. "The history of the evolution of the resources of harmony," he writes in his preface, "is naturally the history of the infraction of rules." Such wisdom unfortunately is very rare in works of this kind.—(Raymond Petit in La Revue Musicale.)

Concert Artists Arrive

Mme. Marie Leschetiszky, pianist, and Cecilia Hansen, violinist, were among the arrivals on the S. S. Olympic last Tuesday. Thamar Karsavina and her dancing partner, Pierre Vladimiroff, were on the same ship. On the same day the liner Duilio brought from Italy Antonio Scotti, Metropolitan baritone, who is here for his twenty-sixth season with that opera company. Anna Case was also on the Duilio.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Special free scholarships will be awarded under the following eminent artists

PROFESSOR LEOPOLD AUER
Violinist—Guest Teacher

HERBERT WITHERSPOON
Voice Culture—Guest Teacher

LEO ORNSTEIN
Pianist

LEO SCHULZ
Cellist

For further particulars address
Charlton L. Murphy, Managing Director

ZECKWER-HAHN
PHILADELPHIA MUSICAL ACADEMY
FREDERICK HAHN, President

1617 Spruce Street Philadelphia, Pa.

J. HENRI BOVE
FLUTE SOLOIST
Recitals and Obligatos
191 Claremont Ave. New York
Phone—Morningside 4595

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
5 West 55th St. ew York City
Telephone Circle 8815

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

Friends of Music Give Bach Concert

Society Announces Programs for Series of Ten Concerts in Town Hall.

The first of the ten concerts scheduled by the Society of the Friends of Music was held at Town Hall, New York, last Sunday. An all-Bach program was offered. Lynwood Farnum opened the concert with a Prelude and Fugue for organ. The Metropolitan Opera Company orchestra, Arthur Bodanzky conducting, played the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3. Other numbers were the Bauren Cantata and the Actus Tragicus, with the chorus of the Society, trained by Stephen Townsend, and, as soloists, Elizabeth Rethberg and Paul Bender of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Digests of the reviews of the concert will be published in the Musical Digest next week.

Marcella Roessler of the Metropolitan will be the vocal soloist of the next concert on November 9 and Carl Friedberg, pianist, will play Schumann's unfamiliar Concertstuck Opus 96 and John Alden Carpenter's Concertino at the performance on November 23. At the fourth concert on December 13 Mr. Bodanzky will present a little known symphony of Schubert in B major, and a Suite of Scarlatti arranged by Tommasini. The chorus will sing the Naenie chorus of Brahms and the soloist, Olga Samaroff, will play Mozart's piano concerto, No. 14. Mendelssohn's Walpurgis-Nacht will be offered on January 11 and Henry Purcell's opera, Dido and Aeneas, will be sung on February 8 with well-known soloists, including Florence Easton and George Meader. The program of March 8 will contain the Prelude, March and Dream Music from Smetana's Dalibor. Bach's St. John's Passion comes on March 22 and a program from Beethoven, Schumann and Haydn on April 5. The series will close on April 12 with Gluck's Orfeo.

Lent to Play With Stransky

Sylvia Lent, American violinist, will appear as soloist with the State Symphony Orchestra, Josef Stransky conducting, at the second Wednesday evening subscription concert in Carnegie Hall on November 5. Miss Lent will play the Bruch G minor Concerto.

Lhevinne Engaged for Syracuse

Joseph Lhevinne has been engaged by the Syracuse Symphony orchestra, to appear at its second subscription concert to be given on November 1. Conspicuous in the program to be performed under the conductorship of Vladimir Shavitch will be Strauss's Don Juan tone poem.

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
Second Week
MARY PICKFORD
in "DOROTHY VERNON OF HADDON HALL"
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps.

Judge Gary Buys Opera Box From Frick Estate

JUDGE ELBERT H. GARY, Chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation, has bought from the estate of Henry Clay Frick the opera box in the New York Metropolitan parterre occupied by Mr. Frick's family for some years before that financier's death.

Mrs. Frick and her son and daughter had not resumed operagoing since their mourning, but had given the use of the box to various friends rather than let it be offered for lease. The sale has now been arranged with the approval of the directors of the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate Company, which has supervision of all transfers within the so-called "golden horseshoe."

The amount of the purchase was not disclosed, but the few sales of boxes in the last ten years have ranged around $200,000 for a place in the lower row of boxes. Each of these carries with it a one thirty-fifth share in the ownership of the Metropolitan Opera House and the block on which it stands.

Landowska Plans Three Concerts of Old Music

Wanda Landowska, exponent of early music for the harpsichord and piano, will give a series of three subscription concerts in Aeolian Hall this season. Mme. Landowska will devote herself to music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries and will play both harpsichord and piano at each recital. In the third of the subscription concerts, Mme. Landowska will have the assistance of a chamber music orchestra from the Philharmonic, directed by Willem Mengelberg.

Mme. Landowska's first program on November 10 will be made up of works by Bach. In addition to Bach's C minor Partita for the piano and the Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue for harpsichord (in the manuscript version), she will play harpsichord music by Pachelbel, Vivaldi, Teleman, Couperin and Rameau. Descriptive music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries makes up the second program on January 16. Kuhnau's Combat Between David and Goliath, Bach's Capriccio on the Departure of his Beloved Brother, and Mozart's Andante con Variazoni are some of the works to be played. The third concert will be on March 31.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
"MANHATTAN"
with Richard Dix and Jacqueline Logan
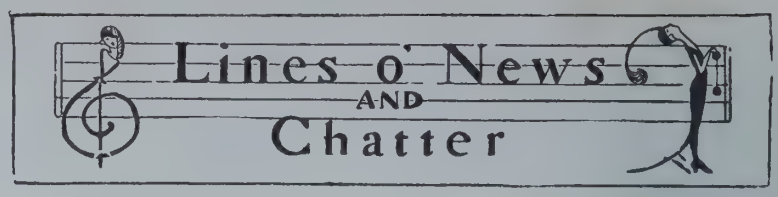
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
"CAPTAIN BLOOD"
With
J. WARREN KERRIGAN and JEAN PAIGE
A Vitagraph Picture
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz



Rosa Ponselle has returned to New York, much improved in health. Her recent illness, which necessitated the postponing until spring of some of the concerts in which she was to have sung, should not keep her long out of the Metropolitan opera casts. But the title role in the first Gioconda, on November 8, which Miss Ponselle was to have sung, will be taken by Florence Easton.

* * *

Walking briskly down the gangplank of the SS Duilio a few days ago were Anna Case and Antonio Scotti. Both singers confessed to having enjoyed themselves during the voyage . . . when the weather permitted.

* * *

Those who have heard Bianca Saroya and Demetrio Onofrei, soprano and tenor principals of the San Carlo Opera Company, may be interested to learn that they were married in New York last week. Following a reception held at the Ansonia hotel the couple departed for Memphis to rejoin their organization.

* * *

Last Tuesday was noteworthy in New York music circles for another cause than the season's first concert there of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Frank Warren, music editor of the Evening World, had a birthday anniversary. Mrs. Warren was hostess to a little group of the reviewer's friends. Among those present were Brock Pemberton, Charles Hand, W. J. Guard, Paul Morris, W. A. Chase, H. O. Osgood, Thomas Chalmers, Grenville Vernon, and Pierre Key.

* * *

Mrs. Otto H. Kahn was one of those who went to greet Conductor Stokowski after the first New York concert.

* * *

There is plenty of music activity, by the way, in other cities and towns. New York may lead in quality and quantity, but there are plenty of communities where the proportionate achievement is worth tabulating.

* * *

Philadelphia's Matinee Musical club gives today its charter luncheon, in the Bellevue-Stratford. There will be some fifteen hundred persons present.

* * *

Richard Barthelemy is a father. The baby has been christened Georges Richard Jr. Many persons remember Richard Sr. . . . accompanist to and friend of Enrico Caruso. Barthelemy is now music advisor of the management of the Monte Carlo Casino.

* * *

Incidentally, General Manager Gatti-Casazza is disturbed over the list of sick principals which appears on his desk. And it need surprise no one if he should establish a rule forbidding a Metropolitan artist to appear in concert during the four weeks preceding a season opening.

* * *

New York's music-ball has been started to rolling. It will likely hit several bumps before the season has ended.

On her way to Chicago—after her New York concert appearance—Rosa Raisa stopped off at Pittsburgh and sang in a benefit given in the Syria Mosque. The funds will go towards the campaign to raise $1,500,000 for the Montefiore hospital. One patron of the concert paid $2,700 to have Mme. Raisa sing as an encore number an aria from Madama Butterfly; then the singer herself subscribed $1,000 to the fund.

* * *

There is to be a "hobo day" at the South Dakota College, in Brookings, and Reinald Werrenrath has been engaged to sing there. Good luck, Werry; but don't forget you have some other appearances, elsewhere.

* * *

That sharp noise recently heard was only the sound of Ernest Newman's pen, which he was sharpening up on the New York Evening Post's grindstone preparatory to digging into things musical hereabouts for the next few months.

* * *

The Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra is to make records exclusively for Brunswick.

* * *

Tenors who can sing are in demand, and one of them appears to be Rhys Morgan who is being kept busy. Next year, according to present plans, he will head his own concert company.

* * *

May Peterson is back in New York from far-off Texas which has now adopted her as a "permanent resident." But the soprano will not stop there for any length of time during music seasons. Concert engagements continue to occupy a considerable part of her time.

* * *

A new Bach pianist who appears able to play him in a unique fashion is Harold Samuel.

* * *

It is just possible that the Worcester (Mass.) Country Music Festival Association may decide to raise a $200,000 endowment fund to provide a permanent income for annual deficits.

* * *

Now comes Alessandro Bonci who declared that his coming appearances in this country will not mark his farewell. "We may stray away," he declared soon after his arrival here from Europe a few days ago, "but we come back, happier than ever to be here."

* * *

Rafaelo Diaz, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, sang at the reception given for His Eminence Patrick Joseph Cardinal Hayes, D.D., by the Catholic Writers Guild of America, at the Guild House, New York City, on October 15. Mr. Diaz gave two groups, singing the Flower Song from Carmen and several songs by Fuster, Rabey, Del Riego and Hageman.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

Progress of the Ballet
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 3 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc. 15 CENTS A COPY

Giulio Gatti-Casazza, who is beginning his seventeenth season as general manager of the New York Metropolitan Opera Company. His experience, sagacity and skill are three qualities which have enabled him to make for himself a unique position as an opera impresario.

Bulletins of News

According to a report to the New York Times, dated November 1, Richard Strauss has resigned from his post as conductor of the Vienna Opera House, although he had just signed another five year contract. Strauss, who has had differences with Director Schalk, is reported to have been dissatisfied with the reception of his opera, Whipped Cream.

The promised revival of Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann, which has not been given at the Metropolitan Opera House for ten years, will take place on the evening of November 13, according to an announcement last Sunday by Mr. Gatti-Casazza. The opera will be conducted by Louis Hasselmanns. The cast includes Joan Ruth (debut), Lucrezia Bori, Miguel Fleta, Giuseppe de Luca, and George Meader.

The recital of Fritz Kreisler, scheduled for the Paris Opera House on Armistice Day, has met with much patriotic opposition there, according to a despatch by the Associated Press. This concert is to be the post-war debut of the violinist in France. The opposition centers in the fact that the concert is scheduled for the Paris Opera House, a government institution, on the anniversary of the end of the War.

A telegram received at the time of going to press from Melville Clark, president of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, states that at last Saturuay's concert the orchestra played before 2,600 people, under Vladimir Shavitch; and with Joseph Lhevinne as soloist a deep impression was made.

The Philadelphia Civic Opera Company will open its season next Thursday with La Boheme. The members of the cast will be Anna Fitziu, Emily Stokes Hagar, Tom Burke, Alfredo Gandolfi, Henri Scott, Valentine Figaniak, Theodore Bayer, Reinhold Schmidt, Nino Mazzeo, and Thomas F. Shay. Seven of these are Philadelphians.

Chicago Civic Opera Will Visit Cleveland

CLEVELAND, Oct. 31.—The Chicago Op ra Company will pay this city another visit in February, it has just been announced. The decision was reached after the tremendous success their productions met with last season when they appeared here for the first time. A group of prominent Clevelanders has formed a committee of guarantors who will stand behind the enterprise and make it possible for the citizens to hear grand opera at moderate prices.

Four operas will be presented during the engagement: Tannhauser, Feb. 19; The Barber of Seville, Feb. 20; a matinee performance of Thais, Feb. 21; and La Gioconda that evening. Among the artists scheduled to appear are Rosa Raisa, Mary Garden, Feodor Chaliapin, Cyrena Van Gordon, Charles Hackett, Giacomo Rimini, Olga Forrai, Josef Schwarz and Forrest Lamont. The conductors will be Georgio Polacco and Roberto Moranzoni.

THE LIBRARY OF THE
NOV 13 1924
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

S. Hurok Reported Keen to Give Opera

According to a story appearing in the New York Times yesterday, S. Hurok, of New York, whose managerial activities included the representation of a number of well and favorably known attractions, is interesting himself in a plan to give opera.

Since Mr. Hurok is arranging the bookings for New York's Manhattan Opera House he would have available a theatre. The story mentions Mr. Hurok's belief that he has the nucleus for such a company—at least in so far as certain principals are concerned—in Mme. Ernestine Schumann Heink, Mme. Alma Gluck, Mlle. Elvira de Hidalgo, Mme. Anna Pavlowa, and Feodor Chaliapin.

Nothing specific appeared in the Times story concerning any positive arrangements having been made. The substance in the main was an expression of Mr. Hurok's belief in certain directions, and among other things touched on New York's growing population, and the possibilities for an opera company being conducted successfully.

Efforts to reach Mr. Hurok were unsuccessful. He was not in his office and could not be located. Nor was there anyone available at the moment having authority to speak for Mr. Hurok.

Plan Chickering Concerts

A number of concerts are planned for the music salon of the new Chickering Hall, New York. In December Germaine Schnitzer, pianist, will present six evening programs, and in January Erno Dohnanyi will give a series of five piano recitals there.

New Composition of Schmitt Played by Philharmonic

French Composer's Antony and Cleopatra Suite Offered in Second Subscription Pair.

ELLY NEY PLAYS BRAHMS

The novelty of the second concert of the Philharmonic Society, given at Carnegie Hall last Thursday, was a group of three pieces taken from the music that Florent Schmitt wrote for the French production of Antony and Cleopatra in 1920. The concert, Willem van Hoogstraten conducting, opened with Schubert's Rosamunde overture and ended with the Brahms B flat piano Concerto, played by Elly Ney.

W. J. Henderson, writing in the Sun, gave expression to what seemed to be the prevailing sentiment of the reviewers, when he said that Schmitt had "nothing to say and no way to say it." Ernest Newman of the Post felt that he was not "really absorbed imaginatively in his subject." Although admitting the composer's "undeniable virtues," among which were a "sensuous feeling for instrumental color, a warm harmonic imagination and an instinct for rhythm," Lawrence Gilman, the Tribune reviewer, was agreed that "his invention is feeble and he has lamentably little to say."

Of the three episodes, Le Camp de Pompee, Orgie et Danses, and Le Tombeau de Cleopatra, the most impressive, according to Olin Downes of the Times, was the first. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram and Mail and Ernest Newman agreed with Mr. Downes in this. Mr. Sanborn wrote that certainly it was "the best of the music heard." Mr. van Hoogstraten's reading of the suite was commended by the press. Ernest Newman thought that the conductor and the orchestra "seemed to have a thorough grasp of the work and to be doing it full justice." Their rendition of the Schubert overture, he wrote, was done with the "fineness of line and beauty of color" that Schubert's "charming" work demands. The World reviewer considered that the Schmitt music was played with "sensitive appreciation," and Mr. Henderson wrote that the orchestra "played it with skill and Mr. van Hoogstraten conducted it resolutely."

The soloist of the evening was Elly Ney of whose playing of the Brahms B flat piano concerto Olin Downes said it was "the thrill of the evening." Pitts Sanborn found that both Mr. van Hoogstraten and Mme. Ney "achieved their finest results" in the "lovely andante" of the composition. Mme. Ney, who, wrote Lawrence Gilman, "has seldom played with more beautiful a devotion to the conveying of the music's substance," was applauded enthusiastically and recalled again and again.

Chicago Season Well Under Way

Stock Conducts Brahms, Debussy, and Loeffler; Many Recitalists Give Programs.

Chicago, Oct. 27.—With the third concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra; the second of the Orchestra's popular concerts; and concerts by Alma Gluck, Edward Johnston, Ossip Gabrilowitsch and Anna Burmeister, the past week has been one of uncommon musical activity here.

"Cheers for Brahms, loud and continued applause for Charles Martin Loeffler made the Chicago Symphony Orchestra concert take on a festive mood," wrote Edward Moore in the Tribune. Mr. Loeffler was present, having come from Boston to hear the presentation of his symphonic poem, Memories of My Childhood. Mr. Stock's reading of Debussy's Clouds was, according to Karleton Hackett of the Post, "of perfect beauty." Glen Dillard Gunn was elated at the cultural growth evidenced by the warm reception of anyone as scholarly as Brahms. "Under Stock's baton, Brahms, the scholarly and austere," he wrote, "became Brahms, the ardent melodist."

The second of the popular concerts, Frederick Stock conducting, was also cordially received. Glen Dillard Gunn considered Mr. Stock's reading of Grieg's Peer Gynt suite superior to any he had ever heard. The suite seemed as fresh, he said, "the mild acid of its harmonies as stimulating" as when he heard Grieg conduct it himself with the Gewandhaus Orchestra of Leipsic.

At their concert on October 21, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, and Anna Burmeister, soprano, were enthusiastically applauded and had to respond to many demands for encores. Alma Gluck's recital on the 25th was admired by the reviewers for its "intelligence and musical style." Other concerts were those of Edward Johnston, tenor, which the papers called a "pronounced success;" Carol Robinson, pianist; Parish Williams, baritone; and Lola B. Borchers, mezzo-soprano.

Kinsey Sues Railway

Karl D. Kinsey, manager and treasurer of the Chicago Musical College, whose wife was killed in the wreck of the Twentieth Century at Forsyth, N. Y., on December 9, and who was himself severely injured, has brought suit in New York for $400,000 damages from the New York Central Railroad, it has been announced. Mr. Kinsey's Chicago attorney, George Schein of Schein & Beckwith, who made the announcement, declared two suits, each for $200,000, were filed. One is to compensate for Mrs. Kinsey's death, and the other for Mr. Kinsey's injuries.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
25 East 35th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 5609

Don Quixote Given By Fritz Reiner

Cincinnati Symphony Opens Thirtieth Season With Novelty; Paul Whiteman Appears.

Cincinnati, Oct. 28.—"Artistic achievement" were the key words used by Cincinnati reviewers in describing their impressions of the concerts given by the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra under Fritz Reiner on Oct. 24 and 25. These programs marked the opening of the thirtieth season of this organization. "A more technically perfect concert has never been played in this city by our own or any other orchestra," declared Mrs. N. P. Smith in the Times-Star.

The program of the concerts consisted of Beethoven's Leonore Overture, No. 3, Strauss' Don Quixote, and Brahms' Second Symphony. The Strauss Poem was played for the first time in this city. Samuel T. Wilson writing in the Commercial-Tribune found the work "in the nature of a musical paradox, with a loveliness and unity which make it equally enjoyable as abstract music." This writer praised particularly the playing of Karl Kirksmith, first cellist, in the Strauss composition. The reviewer was rather less pleased with the Brahms, cricizing it as "invested with sentiment rather than with passion." Nevertheless he thought that Mr. Reiner "brought it to a thrilling conclusion."

"A general improvement in the balancing of the choirs," and a greater strength, precision and flexibility in the brass, were found by William S. Goldenburg in the work of the orchestra. This writer thought that the Don Quixote was "admirably expressed" by Mr. Reiner, and enthused over the eloquence of the Brahms. Mrs. Plogstedt in the Post approved particularly of the first two movements in the Symphony.

Paul Whiteman's Orchestra played here yesterday. Mrs. Plogstedt liked the music and orchestra in its regular dance selections, but felt that it is "little short of sacrilege" to adapt music to the Jazz orchestra which was never written for it.

The reviewer of the Times-Star was inclined to be unfavorable to Mr. Whiteman and his players: "It is not music at all, nor American music least of all. It is distortion." The audience apparently thought differently.

B. G.

Engaged for Hartford

Louise Stallings, American mezzo-soprano, has been engaged for a joint recital with Percy Grainger at the Hotel Bond, in Hartford, Conn., on January 30, 1925.

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TONIGHT

Boheme—with Mmes. Bori and Hunter and Messrs. Fleta, de Luca, Rothier, Ananian, Paltrinieri, d'Angelo, and Picco; Mr. Bamboschek conducting.

WEDNESDAY

Tannhauser—with Mmes. Jeritza, Gordon, Delaunois, Bonetti (debut), Hunter, Egener, and Ryan; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Whitehill, Bender, Meader, Bloch, Schlegel, and Gustafson; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

THURSDAY

Boris Godunoff—with Mmes. Dalossy, Gordon, Delaunois, Howard, and Wakefield; and Messrs. Chaliapin, Chamlee, Rothier, Ananian, Bada, Ellglass (debut), Paltrinieri, Picco, Reschilian, d'Angelo, and Tibbett; Mr. Papi conducting.

FRIDAY

Tosca—with Mmes. Jeritza and Wakefield; and Messrs. Fleta, Scotti, Ananian, Malatesta, Reschilian, Bada, and Picco; Mr. Serafin conducting.

SATURDAY

Gioconda (matinee)—with Mmes. Easton, Matzenauer, and Alcock; and Messrs. Gigli, Danise, Mardones, Malatesta, d'Angelo, Reschilian, and Paltrinieri; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Romeo and Juliette (evening)—with Mmes. Bori, Anthony, and Egener; and Messrs. Errolle (debut), de Luca, Rothier, Didur, Ananian, Gustafson, Bada, Picco, and Paltrinieri; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

MONDAY

Lohengrin—with Jeritza, Matzenauer, Laubenthal, Whitehill, Bender, Bodanzky conducting.

Socrate Barozzi

Socrate Barozzi, Roumanian violinist, played Grieg's G minor Sonata and a group of shorter pieces at his recital in Carnegie Hall last Tuesday. The reviewers were agreed that Mr. Barozzi showed to better advantage than ever before. Alison Smith wrote in the World that he had "immeasurably improved in technique and interpretation." The Herald-Tribune writer also felt that his performance had improved "distinctly" and that he showed a tone "generally smooth and agreeable, and ample technical and expressive ability." The Telegram and Mail found much to commend in his recital, while the Times said that, as an artist, "he still avoids summits of musical thought, preferring the sunlit foothills."

Play Tschaikowsky In Philadelphia

Stokowski Leads Orchestra in Fourth Symphony; Conducts in Philharmonic Society Program.

Philadelphia, Oct. 27.—The Philharmonic Society of Philadelphia gave its first concert of the season last night with Leopold Stokowski conducting his Philadelphia Orchestra. The soloist was Elsa Alsen, German dramatic soprano.

The Ledger reviewer, S. L. L., was not hesitant in praising Mr. Stokowski's reading of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony as "highly inspirational" and superior "both in interpretation and performance" to the regular concerts. He also considered Stravinsky's "exquisite Fire Bird ballet beautifully played." The writer in the Bulletin called it a "superb entertainment" and enthused over Miss Alsen's singing of three Wagner arias as "positively thrilling." Her voice, he felt, was a "lovely and colorful instrument" with a lower register as "richly golden as a contralto's and upper notes that are full and rounded."

Three Tschaikowsky numbers made up the program played by the Philadelphia Orchestra at its regular Academy concert on October 24. Michael Press, violinist, made his local debut as soloist of the occasion. Mr. Stokowski's interpretation of the Russian composer's Fourth Symphony was particularly lauded in the newspapers. The Public Ledger wrote that few symphonies have been played better by the orchestra or read with more "enthusiasm and power by the conductor than this one." Linton Martin in the North American said that the conductor's reputation as an interpreter of the Tschaikowsky was strengthened considerably by the concert.

Mr. Press was commended for his tone and technique by the reviewers in the Record and the Inquirer.

FRANCES PERALTA
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
MANAGEMENT: NATIONAL CONCERTS, INC., 1451 Broadway, New York

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Haensel and Jones MANAGEMENT Aeolian Hall, New York
Aeolian-Vocalion Records

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
Victor Records
Steinway Piano
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York

Philharmonic Visits Boston

New York Orchestra Presents Conservative Program; Koussevitsky Conducts Novelties.

Boston, Oct. 28. — The symphonic week here was marked by the third concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, and by the visit of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Willem van Hoogstraten. Yolanda Mero, Hungarian pianist, was the soloist of the latter performance. John McCormack and the Durrell String Quartet were among the numerous recent recitalists.

The reviewers were inclined to greet the Philharmonic Orchestra with some reserve. The Herald reviewer called them "an admirable band of players . . . singularly well drilled in matters of technique, highly responsive to the conductor's will," but said that their program was hardly one to offer a Boston audience. The writer in the Christian Science Monitor also felt that the orchestra must consider Bostonians as "musical outlanders," but he admitted that the men were well-trained, "pliant, instantly responsive." He felt, however, that in the more delicately expressive passages, the phrasing was "uncertain."

The Transcript reported that although Mr. Hoogstraten, who seemed an "earnest and sincere" conductor, held his band in control "firmly and flexibly," his ear for quality of tone and his measuring and shading hand "might have been a little more sensitive." The reviewer in the Globe considered his playing of Beethoven's Eroica lacking in "controlled intensity," but thought that Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel was given a "clear and vivid interpretation, suave as well as sparkling."

Mme. Mero's rendition of Tschaikowsky's second concerto was warmly applauded by the audience. It showed "superb technique," according to the Herald; and the Monitor said it displayed her "power and technique to advantage."

Mr. Koussevitzky, who offered a Russian program relieved only by a Bach concerto and Brahms fourth symphony, broke a precedent last Saturday in responding to the applause which followed Rimsky-Korsakoff's Flight of the Bumble Bee by playing the composition over again. All of the music, excepting the Brahms, was heard for the first time in Boston. The audience received the program with the same enthusiasm which has been shown at the previous concerts.

The critical audience was not agreed as to which part of the program deserved the most commendation. Philip Hale of the Herald was enthusiastic over the Russian music, in particular the Scythian Suite of Prokofieff. "The suite is deftly planned," he wrote, "broadly conceived and carried out with rare dramatic intensity." The "magnificent" finale with its "amazing" climax, he called "one of the most original pages in the whole literature of music." This same reviewer thought the Rimsky-Korsakoff scherzo a "dazzling virtuoso piece, played brilliantly by the orchestra." H. T. P., writing in the Transcript, lined up with Mr. Hale in his praise of the Russian part of the program. He liked particularly the Prelude to Khovantchina by Moussorgsky, that "many-sided master" of tone-painting.

On the other side were Warren Storey Smith of the Post and S. M. in the Christian Science Monitor. Of the Russian numbers Mr. Smith found "singular charm" in all but the Scythian Suite. But he was most delighted with the conductor's "puissant and persuasive reading" of Brahms and found it more than a match for the moderns. The Monitor reviewer thought Prokofieff's suite only "mildly exciting."

Although it was his second appearance within three days, there was a large audience at John McCormack's concert on October 21. On October 26 there was a performance of the Durrell String Quartet with Lee Pattison, pianist, assisting. Their playing was "keenly sympathetic," wrote the Globe reviewer, while the writer in the Monitor discovered a "welcome maturity new to their playing."

Other recent recitals were given by the Jubilee Singers; Crystal Waters, soprano; Tom Williams, baritone; Raymond Havens, pianist; Socrate Barozzi, violinist, and Felix Fox, pianist.

Orchestra Returns From Tour

The New York Symphony Orchestra returned from its pre-season tour on October 28, having appeared in Amsterdam, Binghamton, Toledo (twice), Detroit, Lansing, Poughkeepsie and Montclair. Walter Damrosch conducted all the concerts.

Schipa Sings in Peoria

Peoria, Oct. 25.—Tito Schipa, tenor of the Chicago Civic Opera Company, appeared here in a song recital in the Shrine Temple last night. Mr. Schipa sang under the auspices of the Amateur Musical Club.

Edward Johnson, tenor, has just returned from his summer trip to Europe, and is scheduled shortly to commence his season of recitals and operatic appearances in the United States.

Dora Rose

In a program which included many light soprano airs, Dora Rose appeared in a recital at Aeolian Hall on October 26. She sang these "pleasingly" as the Times put it, and, even in modern Italian and American lyrics and somewhat more classic German and French songs, the young soprano "showed good command of her resources." W. J. Henderson in speaking of the "delicacy and lightness" of her voice, commented on its freshness and "flutelike quality of tone." Miss Rose's vocal field, Mr. Henderson thought, was rather a narrow one, but "within those confines, Miss Rose disported herself with considerable grace and charm." Miss Rose was assisted at the piano by Emilio Roxas who was called by this reviewer "an able accompanist."

Illness Prevents Recital

The piano recital by Mme. Marie Leschetizky which was scheduled for Carnegie Hall, New York, on the evening of October 27 was postponed on account of illness. Mme. Leschetizky was reported to be suffering from an attack of influenza.

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6140
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Nicholson Schmitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

EDITH MASON
SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK CITY

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 3

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

239 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Tardy Concert Starts

Delaying the advertised starting hour of New York music performances has grown to such an extent that (excepting those of the Metropolitan Opera Company and the symphony orchestras, and now and again some other undertaking) beginning a program at the announced time is sufficient to provoke comment.

Only a few days ago, in his review of a New York recital, a daily newspaper commentator emphasized this bit of consideration for that part of the audience which had arrived early; and he had some kind words for the management of that recital.

For years the custom has prevailed of beginning a concert whenever the artist, or the management, was ready to begin—chiefly, it should be stated, a recital by an individual. It has not mattered apparently that the majority of those finally present already had gathered when 2:30 o'clock had arrived . . . or 8:15 o'clock, or whatever the scheduled hour chanced to be.

Delays of from ten to twenty minutes have gone on almost uninterruptedly; and not long since one concert advertised to commence at three in the afternoon was still in the future thirty-five minutes afterward. The fact that many hundreds of people were already in their seats well in advance of the moment for the introductory number seemed not to concern that management—or was it that the artist was responsible?

Persons who have been thoughtful enough to reach an auditorium in advance of the published starting hour are entitled, it would seem, to courteous treatment. There is no good reason for anything short of that. Once the public which is habitually of the late-arrival class discovers that concerts will start promptly it will govern itself accordingly. Those who do not may change their ways when they learn they cannot go to their seats until a composition, or group of compositions, has been performed.

Object Lessons

The New York music season for 1924-1925 is barely a few weeks old, yet it has been productive of its lessons . . . for those discerning and wise enough to profit by them.

A considerable number of debutant musicians have been heard—in the song, violin, and pianistic fields. Only a few were really ready, in technical and interpretative ways, to justify their asking consideration as serious and well equipped artists.

The Musical Digest believes that these young people should refrain from undertaking to give recitals in New York until there is reasonable assurance that they can do credit to themselves. To be premature in coming before the public often leads to regrettable consequences.

The Complete Violinist

IT HAS BEEN customary to believe that only the athlete need worry about physical conditioning, and that for the brain worker, the artist, mere good health is sufficient. "I disagree," said John Corigliano, young violinist, when this opinion was suggested to him. "It seems to me that the musician must work as hard to keep in trim as must the athlete.

"The physique is the foundation of all the functions of the human body and mind. The mind is simply the most important and most delicate nerve center. For it to function well and accurately the body must be in the best of condition, and it stands to reason that the mind must work well to produce the first class artist.

"For that reason I believe that musicians and artists of any kind must take regular and effective exercise in order to keep their art on its highest plane. Of course the technic suffers most and soonest from neglect of the physique, although the spirit eventually suffers, too. Many artists have produced wonderful works in literature when they were practically invalids, but I defy a man whose health is irregular, whose physique functions erratically, to give a clean and finished performance to a difficult Bach piece for the violin.

"The study of the technic of a difficult instrument like the violin has more to it than simply practice. The whole physical background of the player needs constant attention. There is such a thing as over-practicing too. From my experience with my own career and with that of other musicians I know for a fact that we are as likely 'to go stale,' to run into slumps from overwork, as are athletes.

"Don't mistake me. I do not mean that the young artist must not work, and work, and work. So long as he finds difficulties in the music which he wishes to play which trouble him and hold him back, his practice must be almost unlimited. But when he feels the path growing smoother, when his technic is equal to its problems, he will do well to ease up, and to keep his mind fresh for interpretation. By that time two or three hours of daily practice will suffice where five or six or more were necessary before, and much of that time should be spent in broadening the repertory."

JOHN CORIGLIANO

When he was asked what he thought the violinist ought to do with the rest of his time, Mr. Corigliano said, "To be a good violinist one must be more than merely a violinist. Nothing in the world need necessarily be outside the scope of one's interest. Athletics and exercise I have mentioned already. There is also the world of books, of education, of experience. These increase the insight of the artist and give his music new and more poignant significance.

"But the best way to learn music, I think, is to play music. A musician would do very well to know some other instrument besides the one in which he is specializing. For the violinist a knowledge of the piano is very helpful, almost essential. The ability to study over one's own accompaniments is invaluable."

"How about chamber music?" Mr. Corigliano was asked.

"I was coming to that," he replied. "I think that a knowledge of the chamber music repertory and experience in ensemble playing is as important as anything in the training of the violinist. For one thing the chamber repertory is immensely rich in fine music, much richer in fact, than the violin soloist's repertory. Then again, there is the factor of the subordination of the musician to the necessity of being harmonious with a group of persons, rather than being always the dominant one. This is likely to teach the artist a thousand nuances, a thousand shades of color and dynamics which he might not learn so easily if he confined himself to outplaying a piano accompaniment. Of course the rhythmic training is very valuable too."

"A good violinist must do and be able to do a great many things," we ventured.

"It is very difficult to be a good violinist," was Mr. Corigliano's reply.

When You See This Insignia

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

in an advertisement carrying any part of a reprinted criticism, it means that the editor of The Musical Digest has examined the criticism, and certifies that the published portions have been rightly used.

Progress of the Ballet

Preservation of Classic School Essential to Life of the Ballet—Warns Thamar Karsavina

by RICHARD ANDREWS

THOUGH Thamar Karsavina had arrived in New York just a few days before my visit to her apartment in the Great Northern Hotel, there were no linguistic difficulties to impede conversation. The Russian danseuse spoke English fluently; London had been her home for several years and she is the wife of the British delegate to the Inter-Allied Council at Sofia, Mr. Henry James Bruce. She greeted me with an interrogation—

"Before you begin asking me to give my psychic reactions to your skyscrapers, the glitter of your Broadway and the reckless speed of everything in New York, please tell me which you prefer—tea or coffee? I have just returned from a long rehearsal—my first since leaving London—and I really would enjoy something to eat."

Mme. Karsavina is a graduate of the Imperial School of the Ballet at Petrograd, and a contemporary of that revolt led by Michael Fokine which gave birth to the Ballet Russe.

"Until Fokine awakened to the romantic possibilities of the dance the ballet in Russia was conventionally classic," she explained. "French-Italian tradition ruled the Academy. All was technic. The dance was solely an exhibition of skill and agility, beautiful in itself but a static art form.

"A remarkable standard of technic had been developed in the schools at Petrograd and Moscow, and time was ripe for the liberating conceptions of Fokine.

"Pavlowa, Nijinski, Bolm, Novikoff, Lopoukowa, Volinine, Mordkin . . . we were all quick to grasp the interpretative possibilities of the combination of the art of mime with terpsichore which Fokine conceived. To step and pose was fused dramatic eloquence. Emotion was injected into classic grace. . . . We were called heretics, lawbreakers, and as the ballet schools were under governmental control matters became serious.

"Then came M. Serge Diaghileff to the rescue. He diplomatically secured permission of the Russian government to organize the revolutionists into a company and take them to Paris. Such artists as Bakst and Anisfeldt were in sympathy with the movement, likewise the contemporary Russian composers. And so with a new art, new music and new scenery the ensemble went to Paris in 1909, and at the Chatelet Theatre was born the new Ballet Russe."

"No," said the premiere danseuse as she took a piece of toast, "I cannot conceive of dancing as an art except as built upon the foundations of the classic school. The ballet is a live art; it is in a state of progress. The romantic has been added to the classic. The classic is beauty, and beauty is immortal. The music of Stravinsky and Schoenberg has not killed our appreciation of Bach. Bach is immortal. Without the classic, romantic dancing would be incomplete. I do not see how it could continue to satisfy and develop as an art. The classic dance gives one the—what shall I say?—the vocabulary.

"Dancing—interpretative dancing—is not merely flinging oneself into the air according to the emotional impulses of the music. There are, as you know, dancers unskilled in the technic of classic steps who have succeeded in gaining popularity, but isn't such popularity largely the result of personality? An analysis of their performances reveals in some of them limitations in expressiveness similar to those of a pianist of incomplete technique who is thereby handicapped in expressing what he finds in a composition.

"The classic ballet must be preserved. It is beauty in itself. Without it as the foundation, the dramatic school cannot thrive. It is the dictionary and grammar of the dance."

There was a knock at the door, and in came Pierre Vladimiroff, Madame's dancing partner.

"M. Vladimiroff, too, was a member of the Diaghileff company," she added in introduction, acting as interpreter in the exchange of greetings.

Remention of the Diaghileff company had reminded me of Nijinsky. Had Madame recent news of the unfortunate danseur?

"According to latest reports Nijinsky is alive," said Mme. Karsavina, "but reported to be still suffering from the mental illness that has kept him in retirement . . . a great loss to the ballet. Nijinsky and I were long partners. What a genius! An unconscious genius. On the stage there seemed no shade of thought or emotion that he could not eloquently reveal. He was a superlative technician with an unerring instinct for beauty . . .

"Your cup is empty. Please! And M. Vladimiroff, I know, will have another piece of toast."

"Sposeebo!" thanked M. Vladimiroff.

"M. Vladimiroff wishes me to say that he was quite surprised to find so many churches crowded into the commercial sections of New York.

"I had much fun," continued the danseuse, "impersonating an American flapper in a humorous ballet called 'Parodie' in Paris. Yes, the rhythm was ticked out in the orchestra score in sounds resembling the 'click, click' of a typewriter, but as a typewriter did not sound loud enough the sounds were imitated . . ." I suggested that there were typewriters hereabouts that I thought could be used in the orchestral pit.

Madame explained that she would carry no corps de ballet on her American tour. She and M. Vladimiroff are to present the entire program, just as in New York last Saturday.

As I arose to go Madame insisted upon another cup of coffee with characteristic Russian hospitality. Then handshakings and an exchange of "Do svidanias!" With what grace these Russian dancers can shake hands . . . but not all of us can enjoy a training in the technic of the classic school.

THAMAR KARSAVINA

Herbert Concert Series Starts

The Letz Quartet opened the first of a series of eight Sunday evening concerts arranged by Emile W. Herbert at the Greenwich Village Theatre, New York, on October 26. The members of the quartet are Messrs. Letz, Bachmann, Borth, and Schubert. Their program consisted of quartets by Haydn, Brahms and Ravel, which they played, said the Post report, "with smooth ensemble and accustomed ease. They were as much at home in the modern work as they were in the older classic and romantic."

SAMAROFF
NEW YORK RECITAL AEOLIAN HALL
Tuesday Afternoon, November 11th, at 3 o'Clock
Later New York appearances with:
FRIENDS OF MUSIC, Artur Bodanzky conducting,
and the
NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Fisk Bldg., New York Pennsylvania Bldg., Phila., Pa.
STEINWAY PIANO VICTOR RED SEAL RECORDS

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

CHARLES MARSHALL
TENOR CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Clara Clemens

A series of seven historical song recitals was opened in Town Hall on October 27 by Clara Clemens, mezzo-soprano. Her program consisted entirely of folk songs, French, German, Swedish, Italian, Russian and Scotch. Mme. Clemens's singing and the versatility of her performance were much applauded by the large audience.

The Tribune reviewer said that her singing had "qualities found in her recitals of past seasons; intelligence, expressive ability, a voice of sufficient volume." This opinion was typical of other critical comment in the press. The Sun found her singing "marked by great sincerity and an intelligent grasp of the significance of her numbers." This reviewer also felt that Mme. Clemens deserved commendation for "her care and earnestness in the preparation of these programs and for the opportunity she offers students to obtain a birdseye view of song literature." The arrangement had "musicianly merit," according to the Times, "they were seldom elaborate or in any way out of keeping with the songs." The Tribune agreed with this judgment.

Walter Golde, at the piano, played, to quote the Sun, "discreetly simple and appropriate accompaniments."

The Kibalchich Choir

The Kibalchich Russian Symphonic Choir, conducted by Basil Kibalchich, which made its American debut at Town Hall last spring, gave its third concert there last Tuesday before an audience which, "carried off on a wave of sympathetic feeling" by the Russian songs, to quote the Times, insisted on the repetition of many numbers.

Ernest Newman in the Post and Deems Taylor in the World, in spite of their admiration for the excellent training of the choir, expressed themselves at a loss as to why the choir is called "symphonic." Mr. Newman congratulated the singers for being "thoroughly responsive" as well as "extremely well-trained" and Mr. Taylor felt that the choir was interesting because it was "so excellently drilled." Mr. Taylor was particularly impressed with the "beautiful quality" of the bass section. W. J. Henderson also thought that Mr. Kibalchich has trained his forces "to an extreme nicety." F. D. Perkins in the Tribune did not agree with the other critics, but felt that the word "symphonic" was justly applied to their singing because of its orchestral effects.

Mlles. Theodorova and Ivanova and Messrs. Creona and Danilov were the soloists.

Maryon Vadie and Ota Gygi

Maryon Vadie, dancer, shared the program with her husband Ota Gygi, violinist, in a recital at Town Hall, on Oct. 24. Mr. Gygi gave violin solos and accompanied Miss Vadie's dances to the Beethoven-Kreisler Rondino; the Chopin-Powell Will o' the Wisp; and MacDowell's Wild Rose.

Her performance, according to the Tribune, was of the ballet type, "lighter and very graceful," and was marked by her "lightness of foot, ease of gesture and motion." In addition to the "fine color sense" displayed by the costume and settings, Miss Vadie "gave evidence of an attractive personality, good technical knowledge, including that of toe dancing, and poetic insight," wrote the reviewer in the Sun.

The Tribune called Mr. Gygi a "first-class violinist" with a fluent tone and technical competence, with which opinion the Sun agreed.

Maria Theresa

A former member of the Duncan dancers, Maria Theresa, danced before a large audience at Carnegie Hall, Oct. 24. She danced with "youthful charm and freedom" as the Times said, to music by Gluck, Bach, Scarlatti, Schubert and Brahms. Alison Smith in the World objected to dancing to Brahms "who has said the last perfect word in his theme without benefit of any posturing and pirouetting, however graceful." The dancer's work, continued Miss Smith, showed "skill and surety." Maria Theresa, "a graceful interpreter," according to the Times, revived memories of his famous teacher, Isadora, in the minds of both the Times and Tribune reviewers.

Nathan Abas

A young violinist from Holland, Nathan Abas, made his New York debut last Tuesday in Aeolian Hall. According to the writer of the World, Mr. Abas showed "a true distinction" in style, a smooth and "pellucid" tone, and a keen understanding of his "carefully selected" program. The Tribune reviewer felt that he was to be complimented for his "light, fluent" tone and technical skill. The Times report commented on "a quiet grace and clean technique" in the lighter part of the program, and Pitts Sanborn, writing in the Telegram-Mail believed that Mr. Abas showed "fine promise," playing with "uncommonly pure" tone, "musical feeling, taste, and finish."

George Morgan

George Morgan, baritone, gave a recital last Tuesday in Town Hall, where he made his debut last February. Mr. Morgan sang with "taste and intelligence," to quote the Tribune review. This advance in "style and assurance" was noted also by the Telegram and Mail. The Sun reviewer agreed with the Tribune that the baritone was especially successful in his French group, where he showed "grace, tender accent and good diction." The World was pleased with the "emotional certainty" of his voice as well as his "extraordinarily sensitive" appreciation of the moods of his songs. His "cultivated and flexible" voice was praised by the Times writer.

Frank Bibb's "sensitive accompaniments," according to the Sun, added to the enjoyment of the recital.

Rose Raymond

An ambitious program which included Schumann, Beethoven and Godowsky proved the technical skill of Rose Raymond, pianist, who gave a recital in Aeolian Hall on October 26, according to the reviewers. The Tribune reviewer's opinion that Miss Raymond's "partiality to fortissimos and high speed" had a "blurring" effect was shared by the writer in the Times, who thought that this haste was confusing. Apart from this, the pianist's playing "was agile, fluent and well-balanced dynamically," according to the Sun. The Times commentator felt that the defect mentioned was offset by the display of "real sensitiveness and feeling." Besides a "considerable degree of digital skill," the Tribune found Miss Raymond to have "ample zest and energy" and, at times, "lightness and delicacy."

The Beethoven Association

"It is not often that Bach is cheered," wrote Lawrence Gilman in the Tribune of the Beethoven Association's concert at Aeolian Hall on October 27, "but he was last night . . . the audience let loose and . . . burst into a storm of applause and cheers—for Bach, for Harold Samuel, and for the excellent and indispensable Beethoven Association."

Mr. Gilman's enthusiasm for the concert was echoed by the other reviewers. Ernest Newman said in the Post that it is not often in a lifetime that "one has the good luck to meet with Brahms' C minor piano quartet evening." Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram and Mail, W. J. Henderson of the Sun and Olin Downes of the Times all indorsed this for the most part. The concert, which was devoted to Beethoven, Bach and Brahms, opened with Brahms' C minor piano quartet played by Harold Bauer, pianist; Paul Kochanski and Albert Stoessel, violinists, and Felix Salmond, cellist. Pitts Sanborn said that this was "admirably" done and the finesse of the players "well nigh ideal." Fraser Gange, baritone, then sang, with Mr. Kochanski and Harold Samuel, two arias from the sacred cantatas of Bach. Following, Beethoven's sonata in G, opus 29, for violin and piano, played by Messrs. Bauer and Kochanski, was called by Mr. Newman "the finest thing of the evening . . . a perfect performance." The last number was the D major concerto for orchestra of strings, conducted by Leopold Auer. The soloists were Messrs. Samuel and Kochanski and George Barrere, flutist.

Mr. Samuel's performance was called "irresistible" by Mr. Gilman; Mr. Henderson thought Mr. Gange "one of the most intelligent and sympathetic of Bach singers;" and Ernest Newman said he carried away "especially vivid memories of Mr. Salmond's moving performance of the cello solo."

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Elena GERHARDT
Management: DANIEL MAYER—Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

ANNE ROSELLE
PRIMA DONNA SOPRANO
Exclusive Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall New York City

ERNA RUBINSTEIN
Management—Daniel Mayer, Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

FREEMANTEL

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Tomford Harris

Several novelties were on the program of Tomford Harris, pianist, in his first New York recital at Aeolian Hall on October 24. The reviewers found Mr. Harris equally at home in the "proclamations" of the moderns as in Bach or Haydn. He was warmly applauded and recalled after every group, according to the Times. This paper was particularly appreciative of the pianist's "sobriety, clearness and exactitude;" his "painstaking and efficient" craftsmanship, and his "reticent" use of the pedal. The Sun also commented favorably on this same restraint in the use of pedal effects.

The modern group, including two Goossens pieces (played here for the first time), was "triumphantly capped by a Prokofieff toccata," the Times reviewer wrote. The Tribune found the number merely monotonous, in spite of the young player's "thoroughly competent technical skill, with expressive capacity to flavor it." The Sun writer thought the Goossens numbers interesting, but discovered "exquisite clarity, repose and delicacy" in the playing of the Haydn sonata. This reviewer called Mr. Harris a good pianist, with a technique of "great brilliancy and resource."

Edmund Burke

Edmund Burke, bass-baritone of the Metropolitan Opera, was heard in a recital at Town Hall on October 27, where his program, which opened with arias by Handel, was warmly applauded. Mr. Burke continued with Lully and Bizet, some "rollicking" love ballads, lyrics of Wolf and Brahms, Buzzi-Peccia, a song dedicated to him by Ida Bostelman, and Deems Taylor's Song for Flowers. It was "unhackneyed, romantic music," said the Times, "delivered in the spirit of the songs with admirable taste, humor and abandon."

The writer in the Tribune thought Mr. Burke's singing that of a "thorough musician, expressive in softer and lighter numbers as well as in the resonant climax of Schumann's The Two Grenadiers." The Sun spoke of the "ease and dignity" of his style and the intelligence of his delivery. Ludvik Schwab played "artistic accompaniments."

Bertha Farner

"A voice of promise considerably beyond the average," according to the Tribune, was displayed by Bertha Farner, soprano, at her recital at Aeolian Hall October 27. This opinion was shared by the other reviewers, who seemed to feel that her style and taste as well as her "naturally rich" voice, as the Times characterized it, were deserving of praise. The Sun writer said that Miss Farner's voice, which is of mezzo range, had good quality which she knew how to use well. He also thought that she sang with taste and considerable knowledge of style. The Tribune admired her "full and resonant" tone, and the Telegram and Mail said that she disclosed a "pretty voice."

Miss Farner was accompanied by Charles Albert Baker.

Anne Hull and Mary Howe

A pleasurable and satisfactory evening was spent at the two-piano recital given at Aeolian Hall on October 24 by Anne Hull and Mary Howe, according to press comment. The reviewers commended the "attractive" program, which included a Bach chorale transcribed by Miss Hull; Mozart's sonata in D, a colorful transcription of Ravel's La Valse made by the composer himself, and Gliere's Orientale.

"A workmanlike exhibition of unity in rhythm, technique and dynamics" was how the Sun characterized the performance. The audience was interested, Olin Downes of the Times felt, by the "musicianly zeal and catholicity of taste" of the two young ladies, who accomplished the "substantial and intelligent treatment of compositions which made a well-balanced program." Deems Taylor of the World was pleased with the way they played "neatly and confidently, with a singleness of purpose that bespoke compatibility." The Tribune writer found that they played with "ample unity and skill." The Sun considered the Ravel composition "admirably done" with a wealth of "fine rhythms, plenty of color and a unity which knit together two difficult transcriptions into an impressive product."

The Friends of Music

An all-Bach program was offered by the Society of the Friends of Music at their first concert of the season at Town Hall October 26. The chorus of the society, trained by Stephen Townsend, and an orchestra from the Metropolitan Opera under the direction of Artur Bodanzky were, according to Ernest Newman of the Post, in spite of occasional rough edges, "very Bachian and thoroughly enjoyable." Lynwood Farnum "interpreted with delightful taste and simplicity" the C major toccata and fugue for organ which opened the program, wrote Olin Downes in the Times. He considered Mr. Farnum "an excellently equipped musician."

The two cantatas that were given, the Peasant's Cantata and God's Time Is the Best, were 'admirably calculated to show Bach's range of dramatic expression," Mr. Newman said. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram and Mail, who called the concert "an exhibition of supreme genius in contrasting moods," thought that Mr. Bodanzky "conducted with reverent absorption in his work, the orchestra played well, the chorus sang well and would have sung better if it had enunciated better."

Elisabeth Rethberg, Marion Telva, George Meader and Gustav Schutzendorf were the soloists. Their work was praised by Mr. Newman, who said they sang excellently. Olin Downes considered that Mr. Meader sang "with his wonted intelligence and style," and that Mme. Telva united "a beautiful tone quality with emotional expression." Lawrence Gilman of the Herald-Tribune said that Stephen Townsend's chorus "sang admirably."

Nina Tarasova Sings

Nina Tarasova reappeared in New York in a recital at Aeolian Hall on October 25. She sang in costumes by Soudeikine, artist of Balieff's Chauve Souris. The program included a number of national and folk songs, with which, according to the Times review, Mme. Tarasova "won her audience's cordial appreciation with her varied and vivacious treatment."

Gabrilowitsch in New York

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, gave a New York recital on October 25 in Aeolian Hall. The newspaper reviewers praised him again as they have in previous years for his "poetic feeling" and "musicianship."

John McCormack

An audience that filled the stage as well as the ordinary seats was on hand in Carnegie Hall for the first New York appearance of the season of John McCormack on October 26. Besides songs by Brahms, Bach, Rachmaninoff and Schubert, Mr. McCormack sang a number of Irish folk songs which he has recently found and added to his repertory. Lauri Kennedy, cellist, assisted.

The writer of the Times thought that the Irish tenor met his audience "in a mood of high musical endeavor," and the Telegram and Mail reviewer referred to his "inimitable manner."

The Tribune report included praise of his "admirable diction," which had laudatory comment by other reviewers as well. Mr. Henderson in the Sun, A. S. in the World, and Ernest Newman in the Post also found Mr. McCormack as of old. The former said: "Mr. McCormack continues to give public lessons in the art of singing," while the latter reviewer congratulated the tenor on the "common sense which has kept him from using his voice for purposes for which it was never intended," and which has kept it so well in order through long seasons of use.

Homer-Stires

The personal note was touched in the mother and daughter song recital of Louise Homer and Louise Homer Stires in Carnegie Hall on October 26, the first program of the Wolfsohn subscription series. The program included solos by each singer and duets for both contralto and soprano.

The reviewers agreed that Mme. Homer's voice retains its "solidity and quality," as the Times report said. W. J. Henderson in the Sun thought that "authority and style" were for the most part in the possession of the mother, "whose voice shows a growing mellowness."

The consensus was that Mrs. Stires showed an improved voice. Mr. Henderson wrote that "she showed some facility in florid passages," and the Tribune writer praised at its best, a very agreeable clearness and fresh-phrase" in the singing of Mrs. Stires, while the Telegram-Mail wrote that the quality of her voice was irregular. The duets were most applauded.

The Post writer heard "beauty of ness of tone. The Times review found Mrs. Stires' voice at times brilliant, although sometimes it lacked in fullness of color.

WILLIAM GUSTAFSON

Basso, Metropolitan Opera Company

A FESTIVAL FAVORITE

ASHEVILLE FESTIVAL

"Brought recollections of Chaliapin * * * audience enthusiastic."—(Citizen, Aug. 12th, '24).

"An excellent artist * * * won a host of friends."—(Times, Aug. 14th, '24).

BANGOR FESTIVAL

"Recalled for three additional songs * * * wonderful impression * * * captivated all."—(Daily Commercial, Oct. 6th, '24).

"Was all the most exacting could have asked for."—(Daily News, Oct. 6th, '24).

LEWISTON FESTIVAL

"Imbued with dramatic fervor."—(Daily Sun, Oct. 11th, '24).

PORTLAND FESTIVAL

"Glorious voice * * * a singer whom the audience enjoyed."—(Press Herald, Oct. 9th, '24).

WORCESTER FESTIVAL

"Sang with authority."—(Gazette, Oct. 10th, '24).

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Concert Direction of Evelyn Hopper, Aeolian Hall, New York.

On The Music Highway

WITH her husband and accompanist, Boris Zakharoff, Cecilia Hansen has arrived in New York for her second tour in America which will take her to the Pacific coast in December.

The Apollo Club of Janesville, Wisconsin, opened its season on October 20 with a concert by Reinald Werrenrath. The next concert in the Apollo Club course is on November 17 by the Flonzaley Quartet, followed by a recital by Harold Bauer on March 30.

George Perkins Raymond, young American tenor, has returned from Paris for his first concert tour in America. Mr. Raymond appeared in a number of musicals in Paris. He will start his tour here early this month.

Jascha Heifetz begins his concert season in Wilkesbarre, Pa., this Friday. He will also play in Baltimore November 10 before his New York recital November 15.

The first concert of the Brooklyn Orchestral Society will be given at the Academy of Music under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute on November 20. The concert will be part of the Institute's Centenary celebration. The first formal concert to open the season will be held at the Academy on December 15. Mary Thornton McDermott and Helen Wright will be the soloists of the occasion.

Mabel Garrison appeared in Charlottesville, Va., on October 22 and in Birmingham, Ala., October 24.

Richard Keyes Biggs, American organist, who has not been heard in solo recital since his return from France immediately following the war, will give a New York recital at Town Hall on November 25.

Charles Wakefield Cadman left Los Angeles for a tour in the South, Middle West and East, accompanied by the Princess Tsianina with whom he will appear in joint recital, as has been his custom for several years. Before his return to Los Angeles the end of December he will witness the production of his opera Shanewis which is to be produced by the Civic Music Association of Denver on December 5 and 6. Mme. Tsianina is to have the leading role. The opera is to be preceded by the Sunset Trail for which Mr. Cadman has written an interlude.

Plans have been completed for the second season of concerts for children by the Philharmonic Society, to be directed, as last year, by Ernest Schelling. The concerts will be known as the Philharmonic Junior Concerts, and will take place on five Saturday mornings and five Saturday afternoons in Aeolian Hall. The dates will be January 24, February 7 and 21, and March 7 and 21.

Harold Samuel gave his second New York piano recital of the season at Aeolian Hall October 17. This second Bach concert was as well received as the first.

The New York Trio, whose personnel consists of Clarence Adler, pianist; Louis Edlin, violinist, and Cornelius Van Vliet, cellist, has just entered its sixth season. Early November bookings are: Hunter College, November 5; Lawrence, L. I., November 9; Peekskill, N. Y., November 24; White Plains, N. Y., November 25; People's Symphony, New York City, November 28. Two Aeolian Hall concerts will be given, the first to take place on January 19.

Cecil Arden of the Metropolitan Opera Company has been engaged to sing at the Florida Centennial in Tallahassee on November 13. On this occasion she will sing Carmen's Dream especially arranged for her by Buzzi-Peccia.

Ruth Breton is to make her Boston debut on November 6, when, with Walter Golde at the piano, she will present the program which she played at her New York debut. She will be heard in recital in Chicago on November 26.

This fall Fred Patton will sing eight guest performances with the English Grand Opera Company in New York and five guest performances with the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company, all in leading roles.

A string orchestra, conducted by Franz Kneisel, will assist Sascha Jacobsen at his violin recital on Friday evening at Aeolian Hall.

Charles Courboin, formerly organist of Antwerp Cathedral, is on a transcontinental tour. His season opened late in September and during October he played in Fulton, Potsdam, Springfield, Oswego, Syracuse, Dayton, Mount Carmel, Scranton, Huntingdon, Pulaski, St. Johns, New Brunswick, Montreal, New York City, Hamilton, Ont., Cleveland, Milwaukee, and St. Louis.

Jerome Swinford, American baritone, has just been engaged as soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra for an appearance on November 23. Having filled his fifth re-engagement at Providence last Wednesday evening, Mr. Swinford is soon to start on his first Western tour of the season opening with an appearance at the Blackstone Musical Mornings in Chicago, November 11, where he will appear in joint recital with Claudia Muzio.

Gitta Gradova, pianist, will give her first New York recital on November 26 in Aeolian Hall. Mme. Gradova will appear in a joint recital in Philadelphia with Claire Dux.

Two concerts which Elizabeth Gutman will give in the near future will take place on November 12 at the dedication exercises of the new Y. M. H. A. building in Philadelphia and on December 2, under the auspices of the Friends of Art of Baltimore.

Grace Leslie, contralto, who made her debut at Town Hall last season, will be heard there in recital again next Tuesday evening. Conal O. Quirke will be at the piano.

The Saturday evening subscription series of the Philharmonic Orchestra at Carnegie Hall will begin this Saturday, and the Sunday afternoon concerts in the same auditorium will begin on November 16. The five Sunday afternoon concerts at the Metropolitan Opera House will begin next Sunday.

Hulda Lashanka will appear in recital at Philadelphia on November 12.

Yascha Fishbèrg, Russian violinist, who was concert master of the late City Symphony Orchestra, gave his debut recital at Town Hall, New York, last Sunday.

Felix Salmond, English cellist, and Knight McGregor, Scotch baritone, will give a joint recital at Charlottesville on November 6.

Alexander Brailowsky, Russian pianist, will make his American debut November 19 at Aeolian Hall.

Paul Kochanski, Polish violinist, has been engaged as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Providence, February 24, and at Cambridge, February 26. He will play with the Philadelphia Orchestra November 28 and 29 in Philadelphia, and December 2 in New York. He appears with the New York Symphony November 20 and 21 and March 8 in New York, in Brooklyn March 7, in Washington December 9, in Baltimore December 10, in Philadelphia December 11. At his recital in Chicago on December 7, he will introduce Ravel's new Rhapsodie de Concert Tzigane and a new work by the Spanish composer Manuel de Falla entitled Suite Populaire Espagnole. These will also figure on the program of his first New York recital scheduled at Carnegie Hall on the afternoon of December 13.

Gilbert Ross, with Harry Kaufman at the piano, will play Cecil Burleigh's Ascension Sonata at his recital at Town Hall on Friday evening.

The Famous Artists Series of Stamford was accorded an auspicious welcome at its opening program on October 18 when the State Armory was filled with an audience which came to hear the New York Philharmonic orchestra with Esther Dale and Scipione Guidi as soloists.

Marie Tiffany starts her season with an appearance as soloist with the Reading Symphony Orchestra on November 2. Following this engagement, Miss Tiffany will start West for a tour, beginning on November 12 at Ada, Okla.

After her series of appearances in the newly opened music salon in the Gimbel establishment in Philadelphia Herma Menth, pianist, was re-engaged for another recital there last week.

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Mason & Hamlin Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK

JESSIE CHRISTIAN
SOPRANO
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger
1322 Kimball Building Chicago, Ill.

MAY PETERSON
VOCALION RECORDS
SOPRANO
Formerly Opera Comique and Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: HAENSEL & JONES, AEOLIAN HALL NEW YORK CITY

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

THE HUBBARD OPERALOGUES
"Entire operas ideally presented"
HAVRAH HUBBARD
HOMER SIMMONS
Management:
Beckhard & Macfarlane, Inc.
Fisk Building, New York

ARMAND TOKATYAN
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York City
Season 1924-1925 Now Being Booked

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

PHILADELPHIA is certainly taking its place in the music sun. It has always been a city of distinction. Culture has long been one of the factors which has made the city one of the most unique in this country. Then, at a psychological moment, came the ripening of the Philadelphia Orchestra into one of the very foremost anywhere (some experts believe it is not surpassed by any similar organization). The achievement of Leopold Stokowski is a notable one; and the part Philadelphia citizens played in providing a huge guaranty fund, secured under the leadership of Edward Bok, is now history.

A number of music educational institutions have long flourished in Philadelphia, and the activities of chamber music societies and others having an art incentive have contributed to the cultural progress of that community.

One of these is the Matinee Musical Club of Philadelphia which gave, last Tuesday, a charter luncheon. This club has what is contended to be the largest active membership of any women's music club in the United States. Some fifteen hundred women are united in a work which is eminently constructive, in every-day practical ways no less than in advancing music after the fashion of most organizations of its kind.

THE WRITER enjoyed the privilege of being a guest at the luncheon mentioned, which was given in the Bellevue-Stratford hotel ballroom. Every seat at the many tables was occupied, and a number of persons prominent in the music activities of Philadelphia were present.

There were speakers who had interesting and helpful words for the listeners. Mrs. Samuel W. Cooper, president of the Matinee Musical Club, explained for the benefit of the guests just what the members are doing; how they give musicales every week in one of Philadelphia's hospitals; the activities of the club's opera class, its harp class, and other departments which have definite objectives which are being achieved.

Again have we evidence of the inestimable aid which women are giving to the cause of music and musicians. Without them the art in this country never would have gotten far, nor would it be possible to go forward in it.

THE METROPOLITAN Opera Company began its current season last night. The performance was one worthy of the traditions of this institution and the audience characteristic of a Metropolitan premiere night assemblage.

There were the renewing of personal acquaintanceships and a common discussion of what the next few months are likely to bring forth. It is always that way. "What kind of a season is it to be?" is a rather general question heard in the lobbies durin entr'acts.

Unless all signs are greatly to be discounted the 1924-25 Metropolitan endeavor should be one to remember.

EVERY TIME we hear John McCormack sing we are fired with a desire to go out an do likewise. Consideration for John's business restrains us from making any such move, for, in addition to being an artist, he has personal qualities which have endeared him to us.

But, seriously, singing appears not in the least a difficult art when McCormack sings. Nor the technical side of it. He was in rare vocal trim last Sunday week when he returned to New York; and his audience which overflowed from the Carnegie Hall seats to places on the stage, was not content with the McCormack part of the program . . . in the matter of quantity. They insisted on more and more, and the tenor was generous in yielding to this insistence.

To hear John spin out the tone as few singers nowadays can was a delight. His legato, his phrasing, his enunciation all were finished to the last detail of perfection. So little did he do of which we disapproved that to refer to it at all seems almost out of place. There are only a very few great singers in this world and, in our judgment, John McCormack is one of them.

INQUIRIES concerning the precise purpose of the American Institute of Operatic Art come to us with more or less regularity. Persons interested wish to know precisely what it is and what it will undertake to do. With the hope of clearing up some of the evident misunderstanding we chatted a few days ago with Max Rabinoff, whose idea the Institute is and who is carrying it forward towards the moment of its first functioning . . . with the aid, naturally, of a considerable number of representative men and women in this country who have faith in the project and in its practicableness. William L. Hubbard, the lecturer (former music editor of the Chicago Tribune, who is associated with Mr. Rabinoff), was present during our interview, and he assisted in supplying some of the information which is to follow.

It appears that the American Institute of Dramatic Art is, first of all, to be a means for giving singers, instrumentalists, dancers, composers, and librettists opportunity to gain some practical experience. While gaining that experience in the "laboratory" of the Institute at Stony Point, N. Y., each person thus working will be given a chance to enhance their resources. Later, when the Institute Grand Opera Company is formed and goes its way to give performances in different parts of the country, certain of those who are considered most eligible to fill places in the company (as singers of leading and secondary roles, orchestra players, and dancers are to have appearances) will be members of that company.

Primarily, then, the Institute is to serve as a place where experts in every department of opera art will guide and direct such talent as may be accepted to the end that it may be further developed to a point rendering it as useful in opera giving. Also aid is to be supplied to those composers and librettists and scenic artists who desire such aid . . . again in thoroughly practical ways.

MR. RABINOFF emphasizes that the Institute is not a school in the sense of the conservatory. It does not seek any candidates save those pupils declared by music conservatories, or by private teachers, as ready for the practical side of their training. It is the desire of the Institute heads to accept as "workers" only those who are of exceptional merit and seemingly qualified in the utmost degree to receive the experience-opportun ties which it is the endeavor to supply.

So far so good.

During the first year (which it is the plan to begin next spring) work will be done to prepare one opera company which, the following autumn, will be in readiness to give public performances. A certain number of experienced principal singers, and others needed in the various departments of such a company, will supply the mainstay part of that first-year company. In it will be placed those singers, instrumentalists, and dancers (and as many as is possible) as have developed, under the guidance of the Institute experts, to a point justifying that end.

Americans will be given the first consideration as members of the Institute colony. Thereafter foreigners will have their chance.

It is part of this plan also to prepare operas for presentation in the English language, and to make librettos which may serve as standard everywhere for such presentation; to build a repertoire suitable for practicable opera-giving; and to do all possible to help in their creative efforts American composers who desire to avail themselves of assistance.

Since the American part of the Institute is to be cultivated to the fullest degree consistent, an exhaustive supply of material touching American folk-lore is to be obtained and made available in a library for native composers and librettists who wish to have conveniently accessible such material . . . to assist them in writing librettos and opera scores.

All the foregoing is specific. It is fitting perhaps to state that the staff of Institute experts will be made up of Americans and foreigners, with their assistants all Americans.

It would appear that the interpretative opera talent will have the greatest opportunities—and they are the ones who surely have the utmost need for it. If plans work out as it is hoped they will, the Institute company (and companies, should conditions later justify them) will ultimately consist almost wholly of Americans.

In a phrase: The effort is to be made to give Americans who are ready to appear in opera preparation of a practical kind for such appearances, and then let them gain operatic experience . . . in this country, which now is limited in supplying such opportunities.

Francis Rogers
Concert Baritone and Teacher of Singing
Member American Academy of Teachers of Singing
144 East 62d St., New York City

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway, New York City — Telephone Endicott 6074

FORREST LAMONT
TENOR, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson
4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Aeolian Hall, New York

RUTH RODGERS
SOPRANO

"It was a privilege to hear such singing."—Philadelphia Record.

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Bldg., New York — Pennsylvania Bldg., Philadelphia

Margaret MATZENAUER
PRIMA DONNA CONTRALTO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, Inc., Fisk Building, 250 West 57th Street, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO — VICTOR RECORDS

Concert Management Arthur Judson

ANNOUNCES

RUTH BRETON

A STUDY IN UNANIMITY

Olin Downes, New York Times,

October 24, 1924.

"Ruth Breton, violinist, made her debut yesterday afternoon in Aeolian Hall. She has evidently a sensitively musical and emotional nature. Her tone is rich, brilliant and personal in quality. Her sincerity and enthusiasm in interpretation were contagious. Others play their Vitali ('Chaconne') and Lalo ('Symphonie Espagnole') with the glibness of well-taught youth, but few young musicians who give first recitals in this city possess Miss Breton's imagination, feeling and inherent individuality.

"Miss Breton was eloquent without pretense or exaggeration. She revealed an ingratiating personality and the instincts of the virtuoso."

Grena Bennett, New York American,

October 24, 1924.

"Ruth Breton entered the ranks of professional violinists yesterday afternoon when she gave her debut recital in Aeolian Hall. The event was significant, for rarely does a 'first time' in musical affairs make so definitely favorable an impression in an artistic way.

"Miss Breton, though still young in years, has achieved much in her particular field. Her performance of Vitali's 'Chaconne' was notable for nobility and style. Its polished phrases were invested with beautiful tone and fine feeling.

"Her bowing was ever effective and her left hand fleet and accurate. These qualities plus dramatic feeling restrained within an artistic compass marked her version of Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole."

Pitts Sanborn, New York Telegram and Evening Mail,

October 24, 1924.

RUTH BRETON DELIGHTS

"The occasion was doubtless the prelude to many appearances in New York. * * * First of all, Miss Breton draws a firm, rich tone from her violin. Her bowing is free and elastic, her left hand technic is highly developed. Never was her playing careless or slovenly. It had poise and musical understanding.

"In the earlier part of the program there was observable a touch of the constraint that always accompanies a trying debut. But in due course this wore off. When Miss Breton reached the rondo of the 'Symphonie Espagnole' she caught the sparkle and verve of Lalo's music, and her playing gained in warmth and color.

"Miss Breton was a charming apparition of youthful rose-clad slimness, making as successful an appeal to the eye as to the ear. And it must be admitted that pulchritude is just as gratifying on the concert stage as anywhere else."

Lawrence Gilman, N. Y. Herald-Tribune,

October 24, 1924.

"Miss Breton is a product of the Auer greenhouses and reflects much credit on that accomplished nurseryman. She has a fluent and confident technique, a large, warm and often beautiful tone (helped out by the uncommonly fine Amati upon which she plays), and she knows how to make her phrases sing.

"Her genuine talent, her feeling and sincerity, the modest and charming dignity of her bearing and address, make her a welcome apparition on the concert stage."

Alison Smith, New York World,

October 24, 1924.

"Ruth Breton gave her first violin recital in Aeolian Hall yesterday. The season is still young in debuts, and it would be too faint praise by far to say that this one was the most interesting of the lot. As a matter of fact, this simple and spontaneous recital proved to be among the most arresting and persuasive in several years of first appearances.

"Miss Breton plunged at once into the Chaconne of Vitali—a breathless leap for the first number of a debutante. There was the sure round tone, the admirable sense of structure of the true musician and with it the most engaging and sensitive appreciation of the varying moods of her program.

"There is a tradition that all personal charm of manner and appearance is sternly discounted in a review of a musical recital. This, of course, is utter nonsense. It would be entirely inhuman to insist that the ingratiating picture made by Miss Breton did not add to the delight of her concert. And the fact that the excellence of her professional work did not need it is just another one of life's little ironies."

W. J. Henderson, The Sun,

October 24, 1924.

"It was a good tone, with abundant dynamic range and incisive quality. * * *

"Miss Breton's bow arm was admirable in its freedom, its strength and its elasticity, while her finger technic had the vitality essential to co-operation with the bow in the production of warm tone. Her performances were marked furthermore by manifestations of that indefinable but well known possession called temperament, while her treatment of rhythm and the melodic line disclosed musical instinct as well as good schooling."

Miss Breton is under the Exclusive Direction of

Concert Management Arthur Judson

Fisk Building, New York — Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia

The Symphony Society of New York

Concluding Chapter: The Facilities of the Orchestra; High Lights in Its Long and Varied Career

by C. E. LE MASSENA

IF a man is known by what he reads, a musician is by what he plays; therefore, as a library of books reflects the mind of the owner so does a library of music furnish a key to the artistic sense of the compiler. The library of the Symphony Society of New York is located in Aeolian Hall, near the general offices. It represents a collective period approaching seventy years, which was begun by Dr. Leopold Damrosch in 1857.

During his seven years as director of the Society he added considerably to the collection which has been further augmented by Walter Damrosch since the time he succeeded his father as conductor of the orchestra in 1885. This collection therefore represents virtually the whole symphonic development to date. Many of the most valuable scores are a part of Mr. Damrosch's private collection and are kept in his home library. Among such are the priceless volumes of the Beethoven symphonies which von Bulow analyzed for him during his visit to Frankfort in 1887, the two going over the nine masterpieces, bar by bar. On departing, the young musician was presented with a copy of the Ninth Symphony with the von Bulow annotations, many of which were based on the analysis of Wagner.

The Symphony Society collection numbers some 1,400 scores, with the additional instrument parts. It fills many shelves in the specially designed and equipped quarters of the librarian, Hans Goettich, who has presided over the portfolios for the past thirty years. A complete catalogue, with a unique system of classification and arrangement on shelves, also an infallible method of selection, distribution and shipment, renders this department an interesting feature of the organization. As one glances at the rows upon rows of neatly-bound and marked bundles, the mind naturally turns to statistics. In one section may be noted some thirty-seven full scores by Bach, and, close by, sixty scores by Beethoven, while farther along are seventy-two Wagner scores together with the complete set of the music-dramas and operas.

Dead Matter

In such a library as this much of the material becomes obsolete. The "dead" composers are legion, but their works, now forgotten, repose dignifiedly on dusty shelves. Times, taste, idioms, methods, culture change. Music has to keep step with this continuous ebb and flow, which accounts for the disappearance from concert programs of compositions which had a vogue in years gone by.

Other works, contrarily, are of such transcendent glory as to impart to them immortal value—a value that can never become old-fashioned or dull. They figure perennially on programs in every country where the best music is played. Consider a few of the mighty who, as concert attractions, have passed on—Gluck, Bruckner, Handel, Haydn, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Rubinstein, Cherubini, Gade, Raff, Goldmark. Seldom do these names appear on programs of today.

VLADIMIR GOLSCHMANN

One no longer finds upon a symphony program the names of Auber, Goetz, Glinka, Herold, Keler-Bela, Lachner, Lortzing, Meyerbeer, Marschner, Moszkowski, Spohr, Suppe, Volkmann. Rapidly disappearing from the orchestral sphere are Elgar, Chopin, Humperdinck, Rossini, Thomas and others familiar to concert-goers.

Changing Tastes

This condition is due to the birth of a new mode of musical expression which links itself with new harmonies, new rhythms, new forms, new melodic lines, new counterpoint, new orchestration and new instrumentation. The modern mind refuses to think in terms of the past. No wonder a Haydn symphony falls dull upon modern-schooled ears! Does this mean that even Beethoven is to pass on with Tschaikowsky and Brahms in the days to come—and perhaps the mighty Wagner too?

In his book, My Musical Life, Walter Damrosch says. "For years a Wagner program drew the largest audiences, and the same orchestral excerpts were repeated, year after year, and received by our public with excited enthusiasm. Today the amazement which his music called forth is no longer apparent. He is admired and loved, but the nerves of the younger generation are not thrilled by his harmonies as ours were. His works repose upon our shelves and occupy places of honor, but, alas, on several of them the dust is beginning to gather and many of the young people of today find Lohengrin monotonous, and vote unanimously that Tannhauser's recital of his pilgrimage to Rome is too long."

Strauss set the fashion for the moderns who are striving to out-Strauss Strauss, and the amazing thing is that they are doing it. That condition presents a problem to every program-maker. Walter Damrosch solves the problem by keeping one foot on the classics, the other on the moderns.

BRUNO WALTER

The Damrosch model for making a symphonic program is balance, properly adjusted at both ends and solid in the middle. Analyze any of his programs—those of today or those of years ago—and observe this characteristic feature. While overtures have given way to symphonic poems and suites to descriptive pieces the Damrosch scheme holds stoutly to point of balance and interest. This is apparent in his programs for children and for young people as well as in those prepared for cultured grown-ups.

"My orchestral parts of the symphonies of Beethoven, Mozart and Brahms," says Mr. Damrosch, "are old and worn by many rehearsals and performances, and some of them have been patched up and pasted together so many times that they have had to be replaced by new ones twice over. I have performed them for nearly forty years and the grandchildren of my audiences of 1885 are now listening to them with equal happiness."

Classics Holding Out

There need be no fear then, at least for the present, that the extremists and fanatics will overthrow entirely the sacred traditions of the past and permit thousands of us to still receive spiritual uplift from such immortal things as came from the pens of Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Wagner, Brahms and others who dwell upon the summit of music.

In the sphere of education, the New York Symphony Society stands out.

During the thirty-nine seasons Mr. Damrosch has presided on the director's stand of the New York Symphony Orchestra he has brought a wealth of educational material to the attention of thousands of students, teachers, musicians and music-lovers. The new, if it seem good, has had an equal chance with the old. There has been carried from coast to coast, from north to south, the message of music. By this means has the taste of communities been rightly shaped.

Young People's Concerts

Then there have been the Young People's Concerts. For thirty years our youth have been attending these symphony concerts, specifically designed for them; and these same young people often refuse to grow up and move into the regular concerts, so that one now sees children, parents and grand-parents all crowding into one hall. In order to graduate this mass of musical humanity, Damrosch inaugurated a series of Saturday morning concerts for little children, which has elicited a large response. So popular has "Uncle Walter" become, that these events now have to be limited; nevertheless Mr. Damrosch did find time to broadcast last winter a lecture on the Beethoven Eroica symphony from Carnegie Hall, and to give a children's concert in London last spring.

Another phase of the education work associated with the New York Symphony Orchestra is that given in conjunction with the New York Board of Education. To encourage student members of High School orchestras the principals of the several sections of the New York Symphony Orchestra were detailed to examine and to select the six most promising players of each instrument, who were to win thereby free scholarships. Violins, violas, 'cellos, basses, wood-winds and brasses, even the kettle drums, answered the call. Seventy-eight came through and received their weekly lessons during the season. The expense was borne by the directors of the Symphony Society.

Golden Anniversary Soon

In 1928 the Symphony Society will celebrate its golden anniversary. Forty-six years of epochal achievement form indeed a full and honorable record. Since its beginning under Dr. Leopold Damrosch the organization has ever striven to lead in advancing musical art in this country and in developing music taste, talent and appreciation.

The Damrosch idea of progress and achievement has been adhered to religiously. Year after year the Society has shown a development of and and steady advancement toward an idealism bred of a musical soul which awoke in a great musical country, finally to expand and flourish in an unknown land. Dr. Damrosch could have advanced no other policy or labored for any cause of lesser scope. He bequeathed to the society of which he was the founder and artistic head, a legacy which the officers were in duty bound to accept and foster. Trained in that same inflexible school of principles and aims, Walter succeeded to the post and has sought to pursue the plan inaugurated by his father.

(The End)

Hear Recitals on Coast

Dux, Bourskaya and Graveure Sing in San Francisco; Other Concerts.

San Francisco, Oct. 23.—The recital of Claire Dux on October 19 was one of the most important events of the early local season. The reviews were all laudatory. Mr. Mason in the Examiner summarized his impressions in the statement, "Singers are many—artists are few, and Claire Dux is one of the few." In the Chronicle Ray Brown said likewise, "Few are the sopranos who live on the same plane of artistry with Mme. Dux. Her innate graciousness is one of her charms, and her every tone is alive with true feeling."

The first Alice Seckles Matinee Musical was presented on Monday at the Fairmont. Ina Bourskaya was the attraction. There was a difference of opinion among the various reviewers as to the quality of Mme. Bourskaya's singing on that day. The concert suffered under the handicap of the distraction offered by the impending arrival of the transcontinental dirigible, the Shenandoah. In fact, just as Mme. Bourskaya was in the midst of her first number the entire house was emptied of audience, artist, and attendants, who rushed out to see the airship. It was difficult, once the concert was resumed, to recover the quiet atmosphere of the song recital.

Mr. Mason wrote, "Personality Bourskaya has in an astounding measure, and she has also a keen sense of the dramatic." Ray Brown also thought her "an interesting singer," but he spoke besides of "unsteadiness of breath." This reviewer commented on the "intensity" which the artist applied to her singing.

The concert season in this city was begun some days previously when Louis Graveure, baritone, gave his recital on the afternoon of the twelfth. The critics were full of praise for his "tone control and perfect diction." The writer of the Chronicle in particular considered Mr. Graveure "in perfect voice," and said that he "sang with refinement that makes him one of the arbitrators of tonal and dictional elegancies."

Mr. Woodman in the Call felt that "Mr. Graveure delivers his message with a sincerity and emphasis that leave it long in the memory of those that hear it." Redfern Mason, writing in the Examiner, asserted, "Louis Graveure is a singer to be reckoned with in vocal art today. He has many devotees and not a few detractors, but much is to be said on both sides." This writer thought that he could detect a "dilletant" strain in the art of Mr. Graveure.

Among the other recent music activities in San Francisco was the opening concert of the Pacific Musical Society. Mrs. Frederick Crowe is the new president of this organization. Annie Louise David, harpist, and Max Gegna, cellist, appeared together in the first program of the society.

There was keen local interest in the Pfund Moore concert given last Friday evening. It was presented in the ballroom of the St. Francis under the management of Alice Seckles. Christine Howells-Pfund, flutist; Jessie Moore, pianist, and Eula Gradberry took part in this concert. M. J. C.

Announce New Artists for Plaza Musical Mornings

Two additions have been made to the list of artists previously announced by Andres de Segurola for the series of Musical Mornings in the ball room of the Hotel Plaza which he is inaugurating on November 13: Toti dal Monte, the soprano of La Scala, Milan, who is singing with both the Metropolitan and Chicago Civic Opera Companies this winter, and the De Reszke Singers. The latter organization, a quartet which has sung throughout the British Isles and on the continent, will be heard at the opening concert of the series. This will be its New York debut. The program will range from Irish folk songs and French bergerettes to the last word in modern music.

A novelty which Mr. de Segurola promises for the series is 20 minutes of "causerie" at each concert—intimate talks by well-known actors and actresses. Among those scheduled to appear are Elsie Janis, Irene Bordoni and Laurette Taylor.

Musical artists previously engaged include Lucrezia Bori, Elizabeth Rethberg, Marguerite d'Alvarez, Sylvia Lent, Frances Alda, Nina Morgana, John Charles Thomas, and Ralph Errolle. The dates of the series are Nov. 13 and 27, Dec. 11 and 26, and Jan. 8 and 22.

Chicago Opera Bill

TOMORROW

La Gioconda—with Rosa Raisa, Giorgio, Polacco conducting.

THURSDAY

Tosca—with Claudia Muzio and Mariano Stabile, Roberto Moranzoni conducting.

FRIDAY

Le Prophete—with Louise Homer and Charles Marshall, Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

SATURDAY

The Pearl Fishers (matinee)—with Graziella Pareto, Charles Hackett, Giacomo Rimini, and Edouard Cotreuil, Mr. Polacco conducting.

Aida (evening)—with Rosa Raisa, Augusta Lenska, Forrest Lamont, and Cesare Formichi.

MONDAY

Lucia—with Toti dal Monte.

TUESDAY

Tannhauser—with Olga Forrai, Cyrena Van Gordon, and Joseph Schwarz, Henry G. Weber conducting.

Winifred Macbride

Winifred Macbride, English pianist, made her American first appearance in recital at Aeolian Hall last Wednesday. The Times writer thought that "she made more than average musical impression of 'arrival' in the musical world" in her performance of the Brahms F minor Sonata and the Liszt B minor. "She played Brahms like a man," continued this writer. The Tribune reporter agreed that her Brahms was excellent and "emphatic without being banged." He thought that the performance of Schumann's Papillons showed also a capacity for the "lighter mood."

The Sun commentator liked the program and thought that once she had the feel of the platform Miss Macbride played "impressively" and with plentiful "power, feeling, and technic." The reviewers were inclined to agree that even though her Brahms was best the English pianist could do lighter things well. Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram and Mail pointed particularly to a Chopin Prelude for illustration.

Addison F. Andrews Dies

Addison F. Andrews, composer and musical manager, died from pneumonia on October 27 in his home in Bretton Hall, Eighty-sixth Street and Broadway, New York. Mr. Andrews was born in 1857.

Sokoloff Gives Russian Program

Mischa Elman Plays Tschaikowsky Concerto With Orchestra; Cleveland Quartet Appears.

Cleveland, Oct. 24.—An all-Russian program by the Cleveland Orchestra under Nikolai Sokoloff in its second subscription appearance last evening, and the first concert of the Cleveland String Quartet last Monday stood out in this week of music here.

Not only the conductor and program were Russian at the orchestral concert, but also the soloist, Mischa Elman, who played the Tschaikowsky Concerto. "The tuneful periods in this composition were delivered with the opulence which never fails him," said James H. Rogers in the Plain Dealer of the playing of Mr. Elman, and "the formidable difficulties were surmounted with an all-conquering ease and brilliance."

Wilson G. Smith, reviewer of the Press, also commented on the soloist's technical mastery, and noted besides that his "one-time exuberance of emotional utterance now has the saving grace of self-restraint and intellectual balance." Archie Bell in the News grew enthusiastic over the Elman tone and the "sharp, clean execution."

In the purely orchestral part of the program Scriabine's Extase received most applause, and according to the reviewers showed the orchestra and conductor to their very best advantage. Mr. Rogers called the symphonic poem "a colossal, overpowering work, gorgeous in its orchestration." Mr. Smith, who confessed a conservative bias, was more reserved, although he admitted that with cultivation one could doubtless learn to like this music despite "its cacaphony" and "frenzied utterance." Rimsky-Korsakoff's Antar Suite, which was the other number on the program, was praised rather faintly. Its reminiscences of Scheherezade was remarked by all the reviewers and melody and orchestral color found "interesting," as Mr. Smith put it.

The appearance of the Cleveland String Quartet, consisting of Messrs. Beckwith, Silverman, Cooley and de Gomez, was under the auspices of the Chamber Music Society. Compositions of Beethoven, Reger, Speaight, and McEwen were on the program. According to Eleanor Clarage in the Times, the quartet "plays with a perfection of shading, an opulence of expression, and a unity that can be likened only to an organ played by a master hand." Mr. Smith in his review was prepared to compare the quartet with any that has been recently heard in Cleveland, "had Mr. Beckwith more warmth in his tone, and less brilliancy." "As it is," this reviewer continued, "his tone, with its crystalline certainty of intonation, stands out rather too prominent." Mr. Rogers thought that the McEwen piece, in three movements, showed "temperament and imagination."

RHYS MORGAN
THE WELSH TENOR
Management: ROGER DE BRUYN, 1540 Broadway, N. Y. C.
DR. J. O. HOWELLS, Associate

FLORA
GREENFIELD
SOPRANO
Management ERNEST HENKEL, 1451 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Bryant 3352 KNABE PIANO

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
First appearance with N. Y. Symphony Orchestra Nov. 30, 1924
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals, After January, 1925
Brunswick Records Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

THE

Concert-Giving Industry

Article IX.

STARS AND NON-STARS

FOR THE MUSIC STARS the stars always are bright. That seems to be the way of things in this world; to him that hath, and so forth. So the artist-attraction which occupies a favored place before the public is always assured of acceptation and support. As the king can do no wrong, we find some stars entrenched so firmly in the graces of their vast clientele that sins of inartistic commission and omission are forgiven . . . very often in instances which would not be tolerated in an artist held in lesser esteem.

Now it is a fact that in many communities throughout the country there are local managements (individuals and organizations alike) which incline perceptibly to the engaging of stars. Where conditions permit, some of these local managements prefer to present to their patrons only the sure-fire box-office attractions. And this puts a hardship on the excellent artists who have little or no power to interest the music public.

Judging from statistics available, the trend today is stronger towards the star than it was a few years ago. During the past three seasons that tendency has become more pronounced than ever . . . more particularly amongst the long-established managements which make concert-giving their sole business and who feel they must, as a consequence, consider always the profit side of their operations.

Power of the Stars

The keenness of many local managements to secure attractions well known to and liked by their patrons seems to be growing steadily. Some of them will listen to sales talks of representatives for the wholesale bureaus, then, in the end, say in effect: "Yes, I have no doubt that So-and-So is an admirable musician, but—I've got to consider what the people will pay to hear and see." And there you are.

These local managements do engage the $500, $600, $750, and even the $1,000 attraction which has slight drawing powers; but it is because such an attraction is known to be of high artistic quality, and that presenting that attraction imparts prestige to a course even if the monetary return is not wholly satisfactory.

Now and again a progessive local manager will devote time and ingenuity to promoting a non-star attraction . . . using publicity material generously, going on occasions to additional advertising expense in the daily press and with posters and window cards and heralds, and utilizing also every known means of sales-promotion to impress upon the people in the community the superiority of the attraction.

Sometimes, if not always, such methods increase the single-ticket sale. But it means hard work and the exercising of resourcefulness; and those are matters which do not appeal to as many local managements as they should. Perhaps that fact is one of the causes which makes so hard nowadays the task of introducing an unknown or virtually unknown attraction. The wholesale bureau realizes the patience and effort which will be required to gain the signature to a contract of a local management, and that in most cases its lack of initiative and ingenuity is likely to result in a monetary loss so pronounced as to make a reengagement of that attraction extremely difficult.

Supply and Demand

It appears to be a matter of nine-pin knocking down: the public wants the stars (which prompts the local managements to also want them); the wholesale bureaus are well aware that the public and the local managements want the stars, and so they do everything possible to get as many of them as they can; and, finally, the stars, appreciating the demand for their services, insist on the highest fees the traffic will bear (too often, unfortunately) and now and again upon fees that are more than the traffic can bear.

Wherefore some of the stars sit back contentedly, pay large income taxes, and seem not at all to mind (in certain instances) if their own managers and the local managements make so small a profit that, compared with their own, it is trifling.

It is no more than natural that one in a position of strength should be tempted to use that strength. For an artist is not unmindful of the average length of a career, and wishes to provide financially for the future. Nevertheless, it works a hardship. And even in some percentage contracts, where large returns to a local management are practically assured, it is the exception when the latter's profit is much to brag about.

Some local managements are of the opinion that building their business solely or almost that, on star music-attractions has its dangers. "What will happen," they inquire, "when the present number of stars diminishes to a point that makes it imperative to engage artists—fine though they may be—who lack the stars' drawing powers? I feel that I am wise to protect myself by engaging, and developing amongst my patrons, attractions which have certain box-office potentialities." And such reasoning appears to be eminently sound.

Planning for the Future

If that be true then it may be said to apply equally to the medium-priced attraction, who has been getting decidedly the worst of things during the past three years. So, some local managements are selecting what to them seem the most promising of the fine attractions who may be worked up into drawing-cards, and young attractions which seem to be susceptible of going ahead if they are well promoted; and therefore these local managements are proceeding to get busy in behalf of such attractions.

From the standpoint of what is best for the art itself this plan is most worthy. It not only provides additional outlets for attractions which have found recently their opportunities curtailed, but it is also something which the public should have. Otherwise it looks as though the artistic taste throughout the country, instead of advancing, will retrograde in time to an undesirable point. And it is by no means impossible that if commercialism be permitted to be the ruling element in the concert-giving industry that a decade hence may witness some startling conditions.

Percentage Contracts

With the rise of the star-attractions in local management popularity there has ensued also a desire on the part of the latter to promote the percentage idea. It was brought about first by the big box-office attractions which reached such strength that their managers discovered it more profitable to play on percentage rather than to make a contract for a specific fee. As, for example: When an artist who had been receiving $2,000 or more an appearance discovered that he drew into the house as much as $3,500 (sometimes even more) his manager gradually shifted the booking plan to bring the returns to his star to a higher figure.

Thereafter some attractions put forth as having drawing powers found it necessary, on occasions, to accept percentage contracts . . . especially when lengthy tours were undertaken and high fee guaranties could not invariably be obtained. That sent quite a number of local managements to carrying the percentage booking plan to lengths which is disturbing more than one wholesale bureau mind—particularly when a big attraction occasionally fails to receive as its percentage share a sum equal to its guaranty fee. For it is a fact that quite a few attractions which ask a fee in the neighborhood of $1,000 do not always (some of them cannot) draw into the box-office the $1,400 to $1,800 necessary to pay the local expenses of an appearance and yield, into the bargain, a profit to the local management. That is likewise true of some attractions which ask a fee much in excess of $1,000.

An Unfortunate Situation

According to some persons, there is danger threatening to certain attractions because of this percentage idea which exists amongst those local managements mentioned. It is asserted that here and there a local management will say: "All right, if your attraction is worth $1,000 or $2,000, he should be able to draw that amount, plus what it costs to give a concert and enough to let me make money, too. So we will play on percentage."

Since a number of admittedly distinguished attractions (who for services performed are unquestionably in the $1,000 class) have slight box-office powers any such arrangement is resisted by their bureau managers. For if that kind of a contract were made it would mean a drastic cut of the fee, which the attraction insists is out of the question. And yet, the local management answers: "Well, what am I to do? If I pay $1,000 I am sure to lose money." So the argument goes on, with both sides unhappy over existing conditions.

(Continued on page 20)

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

American Baritone

Because of his engagement as premier baritone at the Brussels Royal Opera—La Monnaie Theatre—Mr. Thomas will not be available in the United States in 1925-6.

Mr. Thomas will be in this country continuously during the current season until May 20 next.

Management:

R. E. Johnston

1451 BROADWAY - NEW YORK

BRUNSWICK RECORDS EXCLUSIVELY

KNABE PIANO USED

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

Conductors Active in Berlin

Mascagni, Kleiber and Blech Lead; Furtwangler Criticized for American Engagement.

Berlin.

Musical holidays are past. In this sunny fall it is 150 years since Spontini, 100 years since Bruckner and 50 years since Schonberg were born. It is a long way which leads us from the founder of the heroic opera by way of the composer of the Romantic symphony to the champion of atonal music. It was all the more interesting to make comparisons in three concerts of the past week. Mascagni, who is still in Berlin and conducted at the Spontini festival a few forgotten works by his countryman, has been followed by Kleiber, with a posthumous Bruckner Symphony, and by the Roth Quartet with representative works by Schonberg. Spontini, who as long as he lived was certainly a most active musician is surely—quite dead. As for Schonberg, one does not know yet if he will ever find the true contact with the living. But it is evident that Bruckner will flourish to everlasting life.

Good Performances

All three composers—unlike in their original, and still comparable in their present worth—had excellent interpreters. Maestro Mascagni approximated in the D major Symphony by Spontini the spirit of Mozart. The distinguished Kleiber knew how to make the audience forget that the F minor Symphony by Bruckner belongs to the weakest creations of the great Viennese composer. The Roth Quartet, accompanied by the pianist Heinz Jolles by its technical mastery silenced the criticism of the opponents of Schonberg, but probably not their thoughts. Dr. Schmidt declared in the Berliner Tageblatt that he admired most of all the audience: "Certainly there are still a considerable number of adherents of Schonberg—but the awakening will be cruel." The string quartet op. 10 and the piano piece op. 23 were played. Meanwhile we receive news from Vienna that Schonberg in his latest compositions has once more changed his style.

Play Busoni Suite

While Kleiber dedicated the first of his ten concerts with the State Orchestra to the memory of Bruckner, Furtwangler opened the series of his Philharmonic concerts with a suite of the late Ferruccio Busoni. How quickly Furtwangler has won for himself a surpassing position in Berlin is proved by the fact that news of his intentions to conduct during the winter in America caused considerable ill-humor in Berlin.

Prof. Weissmann was the first one to sound the alarm and announce the "American danger." "One of the Philharmonic concerts is going to be postponed from December to March. Incidentally to this news we are informed of facts which more or less shake the foundation of our musical life. The voyage of Furtwangler to America is in reality a long guest tournee. They are certain to offer him heavy compensation there, but the fact remains that a man who has here a most responsible place has not the strength to refuse New York, although he ought to know that he is indispensable to Berlin. Nikisch did not give in and would never have done so. The ambition of Furtwangler does not allow of such refusal. He is reaping the practical reward of his triumphs in London. Are we to be proud of this? No: for as Berlin must give way to America this time, so will it be in future."

At present Berlin can make no complaint about a want of great conductors. Furtwangler, Kleiber, and Bruno Walter are conducting large series of concerts. Leo Blech, that most highly gifted of all conductors of German Opera has been bound tightly to the Volksoper by manager W. O. Lange. He proved only a short time ago what a first class conductor can do even with soloists of the second class when he conducted a splendid performance of Don Juan. Felix von Weingartner as a guest conductor of the German Opera House is hard at work.

Younger Leaders

Also a few of the young conductors of the second rank raise a claim, not without qualification, to step into the first rank. So does the assiduous Dr. Heinz Unger, who lately has shown remarkable improvement in routine, precision, depth and suppleness. The performance of the Twenty-second Psalm by Ernest Bloch, was one of Unger's masterpieces. Supported in the alto solo by the finished singing of Mme. Cahier, Bloch proved himself "to be a musician full of knowledge and one who has mastered the modern means of expression," according to the Tageblatt.

The Berlin platform has not been enriched only by memorial concerts, a line of prominent conductors and a number of splendid soloists like Julia Culp in a Hugo Wolf evening, Emil v. Sauer in the Appassionata of Beethoven, the violinists de Vecsey and Cecilia Hansen, but also a copious arrival of dancers is to be announced.

Of course the Russians are at the head. One Russian troop is dancing at the largest music hall of Berlin. Max Reinhardt's German Theatre has opened its doors to another troupe under the leadership of the celebrated Michael Mordkin, and the Diaghilew troupe is giving nine performances at the Volksopera. The latter organization is offering yearly the same program as the one which it gave fourteen years ago. The effect is the sam . Dr. Michel asserted in the Vossische Zeitung that "the old magic has seized the spectators once more with irresistible power. This ballet remains one of the wonders of our times. Of course the greatest names of former years are missing, but the skill of the ensemble closed the gaps."

The greatest personalities of the past years are mostly on the road with their own troupes. Pawlowa, Karsavina, and Michael Mordkin, are on their own. Mordkin, a finished acrobat in every movement, embodies with true virtuosity the inimitable technical science of the Russian Ballet school. To him a brilliant successful jump, a charming whirl of the limbs are more important than those gyrations which attempt to express the spirit in the modern dance. The most prominent member of his troupe is Mlle. Bekefi, who is just as beautiful as she is temperamental. Her Hungarian and her Spanish dance are of the very first class.

Isadora Duncan in Berlin

While thus the traditional art of dancing was having its triumphs, an aeroplane brought from Russia the representative of a once revolutionary type of dancing, namely Isadora Duncan. It is twenty years ago and more since she broke lose from the rigid rules of expressing meaning by dancing. But time is more cruel with the revolutionary dancers than with the traditional ones. Only acrobatic technic can disguise coming old age. Duncan has thrown overboard the old technical science and put in its place the free movement of expression, but this time she has come stout and flabby, and has brought only disappointment.

Between old and new, technical science and expression, form and soul, is the young Vienna dancer Lucy Kieselhausen, who already has an European reputation. On the evening of her appearance Bluthner Hall was full. Seldom are there to be seen such grace, mental, security, rhythm, and charming music combined in the body of one woman as there are in Lucy Kieselhausen. She is neither prim nor kittenish, neither continually serious nor half playful. She is fresh, girlish, vivacious, charming, she is a joy to behold.

ARTHUR KURSCHNER.

Question Box

1. When was the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra disbanded?
2. Is Nikolai Sokoloff, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, son or brother of the Russian composer bearing the same name?
3. How many violin sonatas did Grieg write?
4. Is it true that Giuseppe Campanari was at one time a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

Last Week's Answers

1. The seating capacity of the Metropolitan Opera House is 3,500.
2. The pianist, Maria Carreras, is Italian born of Spanish descent.
3. The New York Philharmonic Orchestra is the oldest symphony orchestra in the United States. It is in its eighty-third season.
4. Vladimir de Pachmann celebrated his seventy-second birthday on last July 27.

The Center for Modern Music
J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1924
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

MITJA NIKISCH
"WORTHY OF THE GREAT NAME HE BEARS"
Management: DANIEL MAYER—Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Play Posthumous Mahler Work

Schonberg Piece and Other Novelties Produced; Vienna Festival Comes to End.

Vienna.

The great music and theatre festival in Vienna has just come to an end. Its features toward the end were even more significant than the important events which marked the opening of the month of music and drama in honor of Viennese artists. The performance of Mahler's posthumous Tenth Symphony and of the latest music-drama by Arnold Schonberg were high points in the series of novelties with which the festival closed.

Also very noteworthy in the second half of the festival were two evening programs of modern chamber music. They corresponded in spirit and content with the programs which have been given here in recent seasons by the International Society for New Music. An unusual impression was made by the Wiener Quartet, which took part in these concerts. The first violin is Rudolf Kolisch, a splendid instrumentalist and musician. Surprisingly enough he is left-handed, and wields the bow with his left hand and holds the violin with his right. For some weeks now Herr Kolisch has been the brother-in-law of Arnold Schonberg, for his younger sister recently became the composer's wife,—his second.

The other players of the new quartet, which already seems to be in a class with the Hindemith and Pro Arte Quartets in the performance of new music, are: second violin, Fritz Rothschild; from Cologne; viola, Marcell Dick, soloist of the Vienna Symphony, and cello, Joachim Stutschewsky, from Zurich.

Chamber Music Programs

On the two evenings of chamber music the group played quartets of Berg and Paul A. Pisk, as well as compositions of Haydn and Mozart. The Pisk piece, which was heard for the first time, seemed a very memorable and profound piece of music. Felicie Huni-Mihacsek, opera singer, sang some new spirited songs of von Webern with instrumental accompaniment, and Rudolf Kolisch himself played for the first time and with eminent mastery a violin sonata of Paul Hindemith. Both these evenings belonged to the best part of the festival, and the public filled the hall on each occasion.

Mahler and Schonberg

The last days of the festival were marked by the performance of the Tenth Symphony of Gustav Mahler and the music-drama, Die Gluckliche Hand, of Arnold Schonberg, both given for the first time. It has always been well known that when he died in 1911 Mahler left behind him nine symphonies and one other symphonic work, Das Lied von der Erde. He had already been well along, however, in the composition of a Tenth Symphony, but on his deathbed he expressed the wish that the incompleted manuscript be destroyed. His widow, Frau Alma Maria Mahler, kept this work secret until last winter, when she expressed an intention of making it public, partly because the composer just before he died withdrew his request that the composition be destroyed, and partly because she felt that posterity had a right to this final product of his genius.

It was intended that the orchestra of the Vienna Opera, under Franz Schalk, should have the privilege of first performance, but it was decided in December of last year that it be delayed until the festival of the city of Vienna.

The score, which is being published by the Verlag Zolnay here in an edition very little different from the original, is divided into five movements. Almost complete and written in full score is the long Adagio, and a little Scherzo is quite worked out in the sketches, with instrumentation indicated. The three other movements, all also in scherzo form, are more or less completely inscribed in the sketches.

Two Movements Performed

Only two complete movements were played, and those with rather light orchestration which was supervised by the director, Franz Schalk, Alban Berg and Ernst Krenek, the son-in-law of Mahler.

The Adagio, which was played first, begins with a long, fervent solo for viola, whose characteristic theme is recurrent. Soon another theme is worked in with it. The mood of the Adagio is solemn and dark enough to make one shudder, in which respect it is comparable to the slow movement of the Ninth Symphony of Mahler.

On the other hand the Scherzo is ironic in spirit, although at times it becomes more serious. In the original sketches are included a number of expressions, such as "Mercy!", "Death," and "Thy Will Be Done," although in the later versions of the score they are omitted, or combined sometimes with homage to Frau Mahler.

The work was played in the Opera with the sincerest possible feeling and devotion, and was affectionately received by the public. A concert in the Opera House always takes the form of some sort of celebration. Concerts are rarely given there. The evening was begun with the overture to Gluck's Iphigenia in Aulis, and was closed with Mahler's Fourth Symphony.

Two days later Schonberg's Die Gluckliche Hand was performed. It was put on in the Volksoper, the second of the private opera houses in Vienna, which is now being regenerated under the direction of Stiedry, although the financial crisis in which the country is now struggling makes it appear sometimes that the municipality may have to take over this enterprise too.

Splendid Presentation

Stiedry gave this work, which hitherto has been considered quite unperformable, as fine a presentation as was given that other difficult piece of his last May in Prague, his melodrama, Erwartung. Especially effective was the work of the orchestra and of the chorus, who sometimes had to speak their parts, sometimes to sing, and sometimes to do something between the two.

The composer calls this piece a drama with music, for only one of the main characters, the leading man, is called upon to sing. The rest of the cast act in pantomime. The great

(Continued on page 17)

Grand Opera by American Is Produced in Germany

FOR the first time in many years an American opera was produced in Frankfort, Germany, on the evening of Oct. 29, according to dispatches published in several New York evening newspapers. It is a work in three acts, called Sakhara, by a Chicago composer, Simon Bucharoff, and was presented by the company of the Frankfort Opera House. The text is by Isabel Buckingham and the German arrangement and translation by Dr. Rudolf Lothar.

Bucharoff's music is reported to be in the style of modern Italian and French composition. The instrumentation is rich and colorful, and all modern musical and technical stage devices have been brought into play in the opera.

Simon Bucharoff was born in Russia in 1881, but went to the United States when eleven years old. After studying under various masters in New York and Vienna he took to composing, and has written an oratorio, a psalm for chorus, soloists and orchestra, a symphonic poem for orchestra, a string quartet and an opera, A Lover's Knot. A Lover's Knot was produced some time ago by the Chicago Opera Company.

GUY MAIER and LEE PATTISON
Management: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANOS

MME. ETHEL PARKS
Lyric-Coloratura Soprano
MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

CLAUDIA MUZIO
SOPRANO, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: HARRISON & HARSHBARGER,
1322 Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: O. SCOTTO, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

British Orchestras Open Season

London Symphony and Provincial Organizations Start Work; Hofmann in Recital.

London.

Many minor and a few major concerts last week gave London the festive air of a music season at last under full way. The Prom concerts came to an end, too, on October 18, honored in mid-week by a visit from the King and Queen. The beginning of the regular Queen's Hall symphony concerts has been reported; tonight (21st October) the London Symphony Orchestra begins, under the baton of Albert Coates.

At the same time, several provincial orchestras have been inaugurating their seasons. The City of Birmingham band, under Dr. Adrian Boult, have already given their first concerts. The Halle Orchestra, under Hamilton Harty, will this week make their second appearance in Manchester. In Liverpool, the Philharmonic Orchestra commences tonight under Sir Landon Ronald. Only the Scottish Orchestra's Glasgow and Edinburgh seasons have yet to be heard from.

Hofmann Plays

In London last Saturday, October 19, Josef Hofmann made what is said to be his only appearance here in recital this season. The Post thinks him "a master for whom appreciation easily appears to run into hyperbole. His art cannot be summarized in a few lines." Other journals attempt the task, however. "In his playing everything the composer wrote is to be heard," says Mr. Scholes in the Observer, and gives admiring details. Mr. Hofmann "is a musician gifted with poetic fancies" who can "make changing fancies appear inevitable"—thus the Sunday Times. The Daily Telegraph specifies Mr. Hofmann's attainments: "The deadly certainty and the magnificent impetuosity of the arpeggios; the flute-like quality of rapid scale passages; the supreme beauty of tone." Although the writer prefers other pianists' interpretation of one or two items on the program, he must "still give Mr. Hofmann credit for qualities unsurpassed of their kind." "Perfect pianism" and "poetical insight" are some of the expressions used by the Times critic.

Mme. Galli-Curci gave a second recital the day following—Sunday, October 20. Again her audience filled the great Albert Hall; as the Post writer commented, she is likely to "become a breaker as well as a maker of records." Serge Rachmaninoff also made a reappearance before his departure for the United States.

Choral Music

The Oriana Madrigal Singers, under Mr. Charles Kennedy Scott, gave their usual Fall program of madrigals and part songs, ancient and modern, on the 19th, winning the usual commendation from the press for their singing, and as well for the well-selected program they presented, ranging from Thomas Weelkes to Ralph Vaughan W lliams. In the evening, the Royal Choral Society began its season, under Albert Coates. Elijah was chosen for the opening work; only Elgar's seldom-heard Spirit of England will provide anything like a novelty during this body's year. The morning of the same day—surely a busy one for the critics—Mr. Robert Mayer's second series of children's symphony concerts, on the American plan, commenced, Dr. Adrian Boult acting as conductor and lecturer. P. L.

Leone Kruse Sings in Munich

Munich, Oct. 16.—Leone Kruse, American soprano, sang Santuzza in Cavalleria in her first appearance here as permanent member of the Munich opera. Last spring Miss Kruse appeared as guest artist in Tosca.

Monteux to Lead Concertgebouw

Amsterdam, Oct. 16.—Pierre Monteux, former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be one of the guest conductors with the Concertgebouw Orchestra here, of which Willem Mengelberg is regular leader.

JOHN BELLUCCI

Who Has Left His Position Occupied Since 1909 at the Metropolitan Opera House to Devote All His Time to His Concert Bureau.

Hempel Sings in London

London, Oct. 27.—Frieda Hempel gave her first London recital of the season yesterday afternoon in Albert Hall. The great auditorium was quite filled.

Rachmaninoff Hears Own Work

London, Oct. 14.—Sergei Rachmaninoff, pianist and composer, who has appeared in recital here and will shortly leave for the United States, attended a performance of his Mass at the All Saints' Church last week. He also heard his Offertorium.

Play New Schonberg Work At Vienna Music Festival

(Continued from page 16)

sacrifice of the leading character, who gives up his life and his work for his love, is portrayed symbolically. Fabulous animals fill the stage, and lights and colors are used to aid the impression of the music and action, just as in the color work of Scriabine.

The woman of the story is herself sacrificed to some unknown man, but the hero of the piece is none the wiser for this experience. Love is his destiny, but he is not fortunate enough, he has not the Gluckliche Hand, to win and hold it.

The music proved quite different from anything to which we have yet been accustomed. Here is something entirely new, something which the hearer is not likely to appreciate at a first hearing. Nevertheless the impression was definitely established of a masterpiece to which we will sooner or later become adapted.

The performance of the Gluckliche Hand took only twenty-five minutes, for the entire score consists of some 255 measures. The public gave both the director and the composer a great ovation.

PAUL STEFAN.

Bruno Walter Active Abroad

Bruno Walter, guest conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, will begin the new season with a performance of the Brahms Requiem in Vienna, after which he goes to Berlin for a cycle of concerts with the Philharmonic Orchestra. He also has a cycle with the Friends of Music orchestra in Hamburg. Mr. Walter will go to London for the first part of December where he will preside over the Philharmonic and London Symphony followed by concerts in other English cities.

On January 15 he begins his concerts in Amsterdam appearing as guest conductor of the Concertgebouw Orchestra until February 12 when he leaves for another concert in London, sailing for New York directly afterward.

Duncan Plans Berlin School

Berlin, Oct. 29.—Isidora Duncan, dancer, who has been teaching dancing to children in Moscow, announced to the spectators at her recent Berlin recital that she intends to remain in this city to found a school for children of the masses which will have a capacity of five hundred pupils.

Writes Book on Schonberg

Vienna, Oct. 24.—Paul Stefan, Vienna music critic and Austrian correspondent of the Musical Digest, has just had published a new critical work on Arnold Schonberg. It is being issued by the Zeitkunst Verlag.

GIGLI

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer — Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO — Victor Records

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

CYRENA VAN GORDON
Prima Donna Mezzo Contralto Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management:
For the East: R. E. Johnston, 1451 Broadway, New York City
For the West: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York — Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

THE district contests of the New York Music Week Association will not open until the first of the year. This delay has been found necessary because of the numerous requests of prominent teachers throughout the city for more time in which adequately to prepare their pupils before entering the contest, and because the association wishes to be assured of its entire budget for the year before preparing its program. A committee has been named to start a financial campaign which will include thousands of active workers who believe in the educational, cultural and social value of the program of music contests which was inaugurated a year ago and in which 3,000 entries were registered.

The contest committee, of which Dr. T. Tertius Noble is the chairman, and George H. Gartlan, vice-chairman, has prepared a syllabus which is much broader in scope than last year's. New classes have been added and a wider choice of compositions is allowed in the various departments. The program prepared for the public schools by Mr. Gartlan, director of music for the public schools, is now in the hands of school orchestras and choruses in preparation for the contest. Benedict Fitz Gerald has prepared the program for the parochial schools.

Clarence Adler, pianist and teacher, has returned to New York and resumed teaching at his studios, 137 West 86th street, after a summer season at Karen-ni-o-ke, Lake Placid, N. Y. Mr. Adler has founded a music colony there in the heart of the Adirondacks. A number of his pupils spent the entire summer with him, practicing and preparing programs.

Two October recitals by members of the Utica Conservatory of Music were those of Frank Parker, baritone, asisted by Mary Nightingale at the piano; and Anne Hitzelberger, soprano, assisted by Clara Wenner, pianist. Mr. Parker was heard at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Coates in Oneida, and Miss Hitzelberger, who is a pupil of Mr. Parker, made her appearance at the New Century Auditorium.

A group of musical educators, representing some of the largest schools of music in the United States, met last week at the Hotel Schenley, Pittsburgh, Pa., for the purpose of forming an organization of these schools. The purpose of the organization, to be known as the National Association of School of Music and Allied Arts, is to establish closer relationship between such schools, State Departments of Education and other educational associations as they may affect the cause of music.

At first the Association will consist of individuals from the schools. Later, when definition of educational policies and standards is effected by the commission on curricula and unit credits, the schools will be admitted to membership and will assume control of the association's affairs.

A tentative constitution having been adopted, the following officers were elected to hold office for one year: president, Kenneth M. Bradley of Chicago; vice-presidents, F. L. Butler of Syracuse, William MacPhail of Minneapolis, Edwin J. Stringham of Denver and Anthony W. Mason of Louisville; secretary, Burnet C. Tuthill of Cincinnati; treasurer, Charles N. Boyd of Pittsburgh.

Besides these, there were present at the meeting John J. Hattstaedt of Chicago; Miss Louise St. John Westervelt of Chicago; G. C. Williams of Ithaca; Earle V. Moore of Ann Arbor; Gilbert Raynolds Combs of Philadelphia; Howard Hanson of Rochester, N. Y.; Harold Randolf of Baltimore; William Boeppler of Milwaukee; P. C. Lutkin of Evanston, Ill.; Francis L. York of Detroit; Wm. H. Oetting and Dallmeyer Russell of Pittsburgh.

The following, though unable to attend the meeting, indicated their desire to participate in the organization: Ernest Bloch of Cleveland; Miss Kate S. Chittenden of New York; Miss Nellie C. Cornish of Seattle; Carl Faelton of Boston, Adolph Hahn and Miss Bertha Baur of Cincinnati, Frederic H. Cowles of Louisville, Glenn Dillard Gunn of Chicago; Dr. Frank Damrosch of New York: George W. Chadwick of Boston; J. A. Cowan of Kansas City; Charlton L. Murphy of Philadelphia and Wm. J. Shaw of Oberlin.

GEORGE E. SHEA
Again Active in His Vocal Studios in New York.

Chosen from more than sixty applicants, Marie Boyd Mitchell, pupil at the American Conservatory in Chicago, will be soprano soloist of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, Oak Park.

The children's classes of the Conservatory, under the direction of Louise Robyn, have a larger registration this year than ever before. This department will have the assistance of Ethel Lyon, Florence Nichols, Evelyn Chase, Marion Roberts and Marie Stange.

The Williams College Musical Clubs will give their annual New York concert at the Hotel Plaza on December 27. Mrs. Charles F. Seeley, their coach, has arranged a program of semi-classical numbers. The complete itinerary of the Christmas tour includes concerts in Boston on December 23, Stamford on December 26, Montclair on December 29, East Orange, December 30 and Summit December 31.

The St. Louis Municipal Theatre had the services last summer of Thomas Conkey, baritone, pupil of Dudley Buck, who sang leading roles in several operettas. He sang also a tenor role in the Lilac Domino.

Branches of the Glen Dillard Gunn School of Music have been opened in Hyde Park and Austin. Elizabeth Saviers Guerin, Lucille Manker and Carol Rosenfeld teach piano at the Hyde Park branch; Techla May Knoll teaches voice; and Emily Volker, violin. The two last named also teach at the Austin School which is under the direction of Cleo Munden Hiner. Mrs. Hiner has the assistance of Hadassah Delson and Lola Rosencranz in the piano department. Miriam Benario has charge of the dramatic department of the school.

Artist pupils of Elsa Arendt gave a recital recently at Sherwood Recital Hall, Chicago. Helen B. Cole, soloist at the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church; and LeRoy Hamp, soloist at the First Presbyterian Church, took part in a large part of the performance. Lucille Long, soloist of the Austin M. E. Church and George Gordon, soloist and director of music at the Normal Park Baptist Church, completed the quartet.

E. H. F. Weis, director for many years of the music department of Muskingum College, New Concord, O., started in as head of the music department of Cornell College, Mount Vernon, Ia., early in October. Mr. Weis succeeded Frank Shaw who is now director of Oberlin Conservatory.

Mr. Weis has received degrees in music from Northwestern University and also from the Potomac University in Washington. He was elected president of the Ohio State Music Teachers' Association at its last meeting.

Herbert Witherspoon has been engaged as a guest teacher by the Zeckwer-Hahn Philadelphia Musical Academy. John Quine, formerly dean of the vocal department of the Illinois Conservatory of Music, will be Mr. Witherspoon's assistant, teaching at the Philadelphia academy regularly. Mr. Quine appeared as soloist at the first of the Academy's series of recitals on October 24. Mr. Witherspoon's Philadelphia activities will not interfere with his regular teaching in his New York studio.

Bernice Schalker, artist student of Mr. Yeatman Griffith, recently made her debut with the San Carlo Opera Company in Baltimore.

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

SAMOILOFF
BEL CANTO STUDIOS
309 W. 85th St. Tel.: Schuyler 6952 New York

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

DUDLEY BUCK
Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty comprised of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

THE book adopted not long ago by the National Federation of Music Clubs for study in the second year of the general course in music understanding conducted by the Club is From Song to Symphony, by Professor Daniel Gregory Mason, American composer, and head of the Department of Music in Columbia University. It is published by the Oliver Ditson Company.

The aim of Professor Mason is much the same as that which he has pursued in his other historical and critical works, such as From Grieg to Brahms, Beethoven and His Forerunners, The Romantic Composers, Great Modern Composers, and the rest. The author writes in his preface, "It is hoped that this book may so present the chief types of musical art as to assist readers to distinguish for themselves its great masterpieces, to understand their aims and methods, and to respond to their appeal. Only as we Americans can learn to react individually to art, resisting the herd opinions that are so easy and so false, can we become discriminating enough to acclaim the good and reject the bad."

Prof. Mason's method is to proceed from the simple to the more complex forms of music. His first chapter is devoted to a study of the folksong, the nucleus, as it were, of the later great forms in music. In it are discussed the facts of the origin and development of folksongs, the importance of rhythm, balance of phrase lengths, and the effectiveness of elementary harmonic language.

The other chapters in turn consider the more advanced art song, opera and oratorio, the smaller forms in piano music, piano sonatas and concerti, chamber music, the classical compositions for the orchestra, and symphonic music of more modern times.

Prof. Mason does not in any way pretend to be exhaustive in From Song to Symphony, although there is much sheer fact in the book. He simply is making a rough preparatory sketch which may be succeeded by a more detailed and more complete picture as the student increases his information and improves his observation.

"As what we are seeking," says the author, "is the development and refinement of individual faculties, in which different people differ widely, the only method is one of individual activity. In other words, each student has to listen, compare, distinguish, judge, for himself. Mere facts as facts are of little avail to him, and are not the proper subject of this book. Information, the accumulation of knowledge, must here give place to education, the 'leading out,' or developing of faculties."

It is this approach that makes From Song to Symphony particularly interesting to read, and to study also. The illustrations are chosen from a wide range of music. It is gratifying to find excerpts from the compositions of Debussy and Scriabine quoted, as well as others from Mozart, Beethoven, and Chopin. Too often the more recent figures in music are neglected in favor of the accepted geniuses long dead.

In mechanical arrangements From Song to Symphony is exceptionally rich. The index is complete and clear. Besides, each of the chapters is equipped with a set of questions for review, which have a pedagogical usefulness; with a number of references to other critical works on music, use of which should increase the student's interest and information in music; and with an index to phonograph and automatic piano records and rolls of music bearing on the subject matter of the chapter.

From Song to Symphony should be as useful to school teachers of music as it is to adult amateurs in search of training in music. The three companion pieces to Prof. Mason's book are: First year, The Fundamentals of Music, by Prof. Karl W. Gehrkens; third year, Musical Instruments, by Dr. Edgar Stillman Kelley; and fourth year, Epochs in Musical Progress, by Prof. Clarence G. Hamilton.

Anita Damrosch to Wed

Anita Blaine Damrosch, daughter of Walter Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, will be married to Robert Littell, one of the editors of the New Republic, next Saturday afternoon in the home of Dr. Damrosch in New York.

ELSA ALSEN

Was Soloist With the Philadelphia Orchestra in the First Concert of the Philharmonic Society in That City Last Week.

Hutcheson to Commence Piano Historic Series

The first of the seven piano recitals in the historical series by Ernest Hutcheson will be given in Aeolian Hall next Saturday afternoon. The program will be devoted to works of the early harpsichordists. In the English group will be compositions of Byrd, Gibbons, and Purcell. The early French writers will be represented by Daquin, Couperin, Rameau, and Lully. Paradies, Leo, and Scarlatti wlil represent the Italian school.

In the Bach group Mr. Hutcheson will play the Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, a Partita, and several selections from the Well Tempered Clavichord. Handel, Graun, and Matthe-son will also be included in the German part of the program.

A NEW edition of Bach's Well-Tempered Clavichord, edited by the American pianist and teacher Edwin Hughes has just been issued by G. Schirmer. So far as the sheer printing and presentation of the forty-eight preludes and fugues are concerned the new edition is beautifully clear and readable. The advantage of this lucidity cannot be over-estimated, especially in the case of the polyphonic music of Bach, where the complication of polyphony can be made to look like confusion by careless and close printing.

The new edition has other good qualities. Apparently the editor has studied the Bach material very carefully with a view to recovering the truest possible version of these compositions. Mr. Hughes has included a minimum of dynamic directions, for, he says, "They will give sufficient indications for the guidance of musically intelligent students (no others need hope to approach the Well-Tempered Clavichord with any expectation of success)." The use of phrasing marks is also economical, but in respect to fingering, which to the ordinary medium musician, is probably the greatest difficulty in the playing of Bach, Mr. Hughes has been most generous. Suggestions as to the treatment of the various turns and trills are also plentiful and seem well considered.

Hinds, Hayden, and Eldredge are the publishers of Little Pilgrims, a book consisting of fifteen little pieces for the young pianist, by Cedric W. Lemont. They cover the usual problems of the child pupil, yet diminish the difficulty of approach by their sweetness of melody.

For the piano also is Valiant Volunteers, an assembly march by Mabel Metzger-Wright. It runs strictly to type. This also is a Hinds, Hayden, and Eldredge publication. The same house has just issued a number of new songs, including: When Mother Wields the Shingle, a Tennessee mountain song arranged by Victor Young; Alaska, by the same composer, a melodious piece of humor; Sunset, by Horace Clark, composed to verses of Sidney Lanier, a solemn song with pretentious piano accompaniment; and June, a ballad published in three ranges, by Robert Braine.

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND
Tenor
CONCERT—RECITAL—ORATORIO
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

Examples of tone production aid both teacher and pupil

A man's voice does not demonstrate well to a woman student and vice versa, but with the actual examples of tone production are afforded for each student's type voice, and so are of invaluable assistance.

Oscar Saenger Course in Vocal Training

Victor Records of the Oscar Saenger Course are on sale by all dealers in Victor products. Ask to hear them.

There is but one Victrola and that is made by the Victor Company—look for these Victor trade marks

TRADE MARK Victrola

Victor Talking Machine Company, Camden, N.J.
Victor Talking Machine Co. of Canada, Ltd., Montreal

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1924-1925
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1481 Broadway New York

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN - HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

New York Critics Laud Ruth Breton

Young Violinist, Known in West, Well Received in Gotham Debut.

Ruth Breton, violinist, who has been heard in many Western cities, made her New York debut at Aeolian Hall on October 23. Miss Breton was cordially received by a warmly responsive audience. The reviewers in the newspapers were equally enthusiastic in their praise of the tone, technique and personality of the young debutante.

Mr. Downes, who felt that Miss Breton was of a "sensitively musical and emotional nature," was impressed by the richness and brilliance of her tone as well as by the "sincerity and enthusiasm" of her interpretation. She was, he thought, "eloquent without pretense or exaggeration" and showed most unusual imagination, feeling and "inherent individuality" for a young musician. Pitts Sanborn, of the Telegram and Mail, agreed that Miss Breton's tone was firm and rich and that her playing had "poise and musical understanding." Both Mr. Sanborn and W. J. Henderson of the Sun commented on the strength and "elasticity" of her bow-arm and the technique and dexterity of her fingers. Mr. Henderson discovered Miss Breton to have that "well known possession called temperament," while her treatment of rhythm and the melodic line disclosed "musical instinct as well as good schooling."

The "genuine talent" and sincerity of the young artist were stressed by the Tribune chronicler who felt that her "fluent and confident" technique, her "large, warm and often beautiful tone" as well as her ability to make her "phrases sing," made her a welcome addition to the concert stage. Alison Smith wrote in the World that "this simple and spontaneous recital proved to be among the most arresting and persuasive in several years of first appearances."

Miss Breton was accompanied by Walter Golde.

Stokowski Signed for Next Decade in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 29.—The board of directors of the Philadelphia Orchestra announced today that it has extended the contract of Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the orchestra, for seven additional years. The present contract, including this season, expires in the spring of 1927. The extension of the contract, therefore, assures the Orchestra Association the services of Mr. Stokowski for ten years.

The announcement ends rumors that Mr. Stokowski was considering going to New York to conduct a symphony orchestra at a salary of $70,000 a year. No official announcement was made of the salary which he has been receiving here, but it is said to be $40,000 per year.

Mr. Stokowski has been at the head of the orchestra since 1912, when he succeeded Pohlig.

Find Haydn Score

It has been reported that the original score of Haydn's Seven Last Words has recently been found in the library of the Ursuline convent in Czecho-Slovakia.

The Concert-Giving Industry

(Continued from page 13)

It is doubtless true that the fees charged for some attractions are higher than the patronage possible to secure for them warrants. At the same time—in specific instances—they cannot be materially reduced, because of the expense for railways travel, hotel and incidental expenses, managerial commissions, advertising and other costs which mount up, not infrequently, to nearly or quite one-half the gross fee an attraction receives.

On the one hand we have local managements insisting that stars are the best commercial investments; that fees, for the most part, must come down; that they like percentage contracts; and that it is very difficult to interest the public in very many attractions not of the star drawing-power variety. Opposed to them are the attractions, who insist they are not getting too much; those who shy at percentage contracts; another group which cries aloud for its opportunity; and the wholesale bureau heads who are trying their best to please everyone. It is a preplexing situation with the outcome not clearly apparent.

[The concluding article in the Musical Digest Series on the Concert-Giving Industry will appear in the next issue.]

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
BETTY COMPSON
IN
"A GARDEN OF WEEDS"
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
"WORLDLY GOODS"
With AGNES AYERS and PAT O'MALLEY
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
BEGINNING SUNDAY
NORMA TALMADGE
in "The Only Woman"
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

Willem van Hoogstraten was seen rushing into Carnegie Hall Friday night just as Walter Damrosch threw open the throttle of Honegger's Pacific 231.

* * *

And, by the way, those few bars of orientalism in Honegger's score merely mark the plunging of the transcontinental flier through Cairo, Ill.

* * *

Lines-o'-Newser met Treasurer Earle R. Lewis of the Metropolitan Opera crossing Broadway with Assistant Conductor Paul Eisler. Suddenly, with that dexterity he utilizes in dealing with Metropolitan subscribers, Lewis detached (seemingly) from an Eisler pocket a roll of yellowbacks. It was so well executed a bit of sleight-of-hand that even Eisler gasped slightly, looking beatifically the while on the roll of money so temptingly displayed.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Kahn, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sachs, Mr. and Mrs. Felix Warburg, and a party of which Mrs. Charles S. Guggenheimer was hostess occupied boxes at the song recital Mischa-Leon gave in Aeolian Hall last Friday evening.

* * *

To be seen almost any day in Brown's chop house: Artur Bodanzky, of the Metropolitan and the Society of the Friends of Music, eating a hasty lunch and wearing as part of his attire a seersucker coat. Rehearsals sometimes cause one to forget about the detail of costuming.

* * *

A growing prosperity at an early date is predicted for this country . . . in which musicians, it is asserted, are to have their full share.

* * *

"The aim of the Chicago Opera Company," writes Arthur Ryan, its new publicity manager, "is to perfect itself in the minutest detail." Arthur is a capable chap and his engagement shows discernment.

* * *

Mario Chamlee and Mrs. Chamlee (Ruth Miller) returned last week from a concertizing expedition to the Pacific coast . . . with many newspaper reviews which had in them commendatory things. Chamlee will begin shortly his duties as tenor at the Metropolitan.

* * *

A reception is to be given by Adolph Lewisohn at his New York Fifth avenue home on Thursday evening.

* * *

O. B. Stephenson of Chicago, affiliated with the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, was a New York visitor last week. One of the reasons was his desire to be present at the recital given by Miss Bertha Farner, soprano.

THE WASHINGTON HEIGHTS MUSICAL CLUB
J. R. CATHCART, Founder President

AEOLIAN HALL
Saturday Evening, November 8, 1924
At 8:30 o'clock

VIOLIN RECITAL BY RUTH KEMPER
ARTHUR LOESSER at the piano

Program

I.
Concerto in G minor ..... Bach-Nachez
Allegro molto moderato
Largo
Presto

II.
Symphonie Espagnole ..... Lalo
Allegro non troppo
Andante
Allegro

III.
a Tempo di Minuetto ..... Pugnani-Kreisler
b Within the Potter's Shop ..... Charles Wakefield Cadman
c Le Printemps ..... Darius Milhaud
d Up the Ocklawaha ..... Marion Bauer
e Humoresque Orientale ..... Josef Borissoff

IV.
Sonata, op. 75, for Violin and Piano ..... Saint-Saens
Allegro agitato—Adagio
Allegretto moderato—Allegro molto

STEINWAY PIANO

Tickets, Parquet $1.50 and $2.00 Balcony 50c. 75c. and $1.00
Boxes $15, war tax 10 per cent extra, on sale at Box Office

MUD

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

Strauss-ky and Stransky
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 4 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc. 15 CENTS A COPY

Polacco Conducts in Chicago Civic Opera Premiere

Ponchielli's Gioconda With Raisa, Meisle, Kipnis, and Cortis Commences Season.

REVIEWERS ARE ENTHUSIASTIC

Chicago, Nov. 5.—With Ponchielli's La Gioconda as the offering, the Chicago Civic Opera opened its current season last evening, Giorgio Polacco in the conductor's place and Rosa Raisa as the ballad singer, "were two potent figures who helped insure a highly artistic and musically brilliant" occasion, as Maurice Rosenfeld expressed it in the News.

The role of La Cieca was sung by Kathryn Meisle. Alexander Kipnis was Badoero and Enzo was sung by Antonio Cortis. Other members of the cast were Flora Perni, Cesare Formichi, Antonio Nicolich, Lodovico Oliviero, Desire Defrere and Gildo Morelato. The performance received "spontaneous and generous applause," Mr. Rosenfeld wrote, and after each act there were numerous curtain calls for all the principals.

Mr. Rosenfeld waxed enthusiastic over the performance of Mme. Raisa, who "sang gloriously." Her voice, to him, "is an organ which thrills with its beauty and its power . . . so grippingly emotional, so warm in expression, so true and ringing in quality." Mme Meisle, contralto, received her share of praise from this reviewer, who congratulated her for giving a "fine vocal and equally meritorious dramatic performance." Mr. Cortis, who made his Chicago operatic debut in this performance, has a dramatic voice of "power and compass," it was said, and received commendation for the "evident assurance" with which he used it. The chorus, Mr. Rosenfeld asserted, "sang with big tone and good accent" and the orchestra "had in Polacco a master who obtained from each member of the large ensemble the best possible results."

Karleton Hackett of the Post found in the opera proof that the "organization is keyed up to the top notch." He was impressed with Mme. Raisa's tone "which had the warmth for the tender phrases and the full-throated power to drive the meaning home." This chronicler said that in the last act she sang "magnificently." Mr. Kipnis, wrote Mr. Hackett, "sang well and played his part forcibly . . . he sang with firm, rich tone." Mme. Meisle's tone was "mellow and well sustained;" Mme. Perini sang with "warmth and beauty;" Mr. Cortis showed at times "a lovely quality of tone;" and Mr. Formichi, who was "right in his element," used his voice with "artistic discretion."

The reviewers felt that the colorful costumes and scenery made Gioconda an excellent opening opera.

Beniamino Gigli, as Enzo in La Gioconda, which was revived last Saturday by the New York Metropolitan Opera Company. Mr. Gigli's singing attracted much favorable attention from the newspaper music reviewers and moved his auditors to considerable enthusiasm.

Bulletins of News

Ignatz Waghalter, music director and conductor for the English Grand Opera Company, resigned last Sunday on the eve of the organization's opening performance of The Rhinegold, scheduled for New York's Carnegie Hall. Mr. Waghalter declared the failure to receive the score of the opera until last Saturday made it impossible to rehearse adequately the performance. Ernest Knoch was secured from the Hinshaw Opera Company in Mr. Waghalter's place. Manager Blumenthal said that there had been friction between him and Mr. Waghalter, which the latter denied.

Gustave Holst, the English composer, has been awarded by Yale University the Howland memorial prize which is conferred to "a citizen of any country in recognition of some achievement of marked distinction in the field of literature or fine arts or science of government."

The premiere performance of the Rochester American Opera Company, identified with the Eastman School of Music, and of which Vladimir Rosing is director, is to take place in the Rochester Eastman Theatre. Pagliacci and two acts of Boris Godunoff will be given. The members of the organization are Eastman School pupils.

Fritz Kreisler appeared in Paris on Sunday night last at the Grand Opera for the first time in twenty years. A huge throng was present and displayed much enthusiasm.

Miss Anita Damrosch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Damrosch, was married in New York November 8, on her birthday anniversary, to Robert Littell.

Anna Pavlowa gave the closing performance of her four weeks' stay in New York last Sunday afternoon at the Manhattan Opera House. Don Quixote, the most important novelty in Mme. Pavlowa's current repertoire, was presented. The program was for the benefit of the dancer's home for Russian refugee children in Paris. This was said to be the final appearance of Mme. Pavlowa's career before a New York audience.

Gioconda Given By Metropolitan At First Revival

Leads Season's Way Amongst Novelties Before Large Matinee Audience.

NOV 17
UNIVERSITY OF

SERAFIN IS THE CONDUCTOR

Ponchielli's La Gioconda, which has not been presented at the New York Metropolitan Opera House since the season of 1914-1915, was revived last Saturday afternoon. With Tullio Serafin conducting the work was performed on this occasion with Mmes. Florence Easton, Margaret Matzenauer, and Merle Alcock and MM. Gigli, Danise, Mardones, d'Angelo, Reschiglian, Paltrinieri, and Malatesta.

Deems Taylor in the World thought "the cast provided by Mr. Gatti-Casazza was an eminent and sumptuous assembly. Merle Alcock deserves particularly hearty congratulations . . . and acquitted herself nobly. Mr. Gigli's beautiful voice was at its best and he sang exquisitely throughout the afternoon. His rendering of Cielo e mar was extraordinarily fine and the cheers with which his auditors greeted it were emphatically deserved. Mme. Easton struggled bravely with the sarcastically named title against fearful odds. Her opportunities were vocal rather than histrionic and she improved them with her usual fine skill and excellent artistry.

"Mr. Mardones was an impressively sonorous Alvise, and Mr. Danise, whose authority and poise have increased perceptibly during the summer, had a grand time with the villainous Barnaba. Mme. Matzenauer was vocally and physically miscast as Laura. There was no visible teamwork among the cast.

"The chorus was in its best form. Mr. Serafin not only maintained an entente that was distinctly cordiale between orchestra and singers but managed to coax considerable dramatic effectiveness from the score."

Mr. Downes in the Times approved highly Mr. Serafin, gave the vocal honors to Mr. Gigli, and commended the other singers. In the Herald Tribune Mr. Gilman felt Mr. Gigli to be "the right sort of tenor for Enzo," and agreed with Mr. Taylor concerning the rest of the principals.

An ovation for Mr. Serafin occurred, with the principals joining in.

Please Notice

THE new address of The Musical Digest is 243 West 39th Street, New York. The telephone numbers remain unchanged: Longacre 3257 and 0566.

Orchestras Heard in New York

Soloists Take Part in Concerts of Four Local and Visiting Organizations.

Concerts by the Philharmonic Orchestra on October 29, November 6 and 7, by the New York Symphony Orchestra on the latter two dates, by the State Symphony Orchestra November 5, and by the Philadelphia Orchestra on November 4, all at Carnegie Hall, have been among the most recent orchestral fare of musical followers in New York. Cecilia Hansen, Nicholas Medtner, Sylvia Lent and Ossip Gabrilowitsch were soloists at the various concerts.

The Russian composer Nicholas Medtner played his own piano concerto at the second New York concert of Mr. Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra, an appearance which marked his local debut. The reviewers were almost unanimous in the opinion that the concerto was not very good music. The structure, all in one movement, was much in the style of theme and variations. W. J. Henderson, writing in the Sun, said: "Some of the variations were very musical, and some of them exceedingly dry." This reviewer detected several "anti-climaxes" in the development of the ideas. Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail was sharpest in his criticism. He called the work "empty, reminiscent, repetitious."

The Post reviewer called Mr. Medtner's concerto, which was anything but modern in tone, "deeply impressive in technique." Olin Downes in the Times was inclined to agree with this opinion: "It impresses more by the combination of brilliancy and substance in the writing than as a work of arresting originality of invention." Lawrence Gilman regretted to find more signs of compositional "craftsmanship" than of originality of idea or treatment.

The reviewers were agreed that Mr. Medtner is a pianist of the foremost rank. He played "brilliantly," said the Post, while Mr. Gilman found him "a player of taste, of assured musicianship; a virtuoso in the best sense of the word." The other reviewers were perfectly in accord with this view.

Mozart's E flat major Symphony, excellently played, according to the reviews, the Polovetskian Dances of Borodine, and Beethoven's Leonore Overture completed the program.

Sylvia Lent, violinist, played the Bruch G minor concerto with the State Symphony Orchestra in a conservative program. The Times review was typical of the reports of Miss Lent's playing: "Her performance had remarkable force and vitality. Her tone is broad and full, nearly always of a beautiful texture, and she showed in the fast passages that she had her technic at her fingers' ends." The Telegram-Mail report was likewise full of praise, and said besides: "She skillfully avoided sentimentalizing." The "agreeable tone" of the violinist and her fluent technic were lauded in the Sun, World and Herald-Tribune. The reviewers considered the orchestra's work effective, but not too good.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch's performance of the Schumann Piano Concerto revealed his old qualities, said each of the reviewers of the concerts of the New York Symphony Orchestra in which he appeared. "Sympathy," "tenderness," "cool, sure technic," "brilliancy" and "poetic feeling," were words used by the reviewers of the New York newspapers in describing the pianist's playing. Mr. Damrosch played once more Honegger's Pacific 231 on this program, which was completed by compositions of Haydn, Lekeu and Mendelssohn.

The Chausson B flat Symphony was marked "first time on a Philharmonic program" when Mr. Van Hoogstraten conducted it last Thursday evening in Carnegie Hall. The reviewers were unanimous in their surprise that such an excellent composition should never have been given at a Philharmonic concert before. Its smoothness, melodiousness and sincerity were mentioned in reviews, as were its reminiscences of Wagner and Franck.

Cecilia Hansen, Russian violinist, was soloist at this concert. She played the Karlowicz Concerto, which has been little heard in New York. Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail said of the composition: "It does not attempt to rank among the major concertos for the violin, but in its modest way it is a pleasant thing to hear." This writer said: "Miss Hansen played it generally well, though not with all the security that has usually marked her performances." The Times writer also believed that Miss Hansen was somewhat below form, pointing to intonation and clarity of technic as not in her best manner.

Mr. Henderson wrote, on the other hand, that Miss Hansen "performed her part in the concerto with beauty of tone and sensitive appreciation of the character of the music. The Herald-Tribune writer said that Miss Hansen "gave a performance befitting a first-class violinist," and the Post reviewer agreed in his favorable review.

The Philharmonic Society began its third annual series of popular-priced students' concerts on October 29. The program consisted of Weber's Euryanthe overture, Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel, Ravel's Mother Goose Suite, and Beethoven's Eroica. The Herald-Tribune said: "The symphony had a performance notable for the richness of the orchestral tone, precision and ample emotion."

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Andrea Chenier—with Mmes. Easton, Howard, Telva, and Dalossy; and Messrs. Gigli, Danise, and Didur; Tullio Serafin conducting.

THURSDAY

Tales of Hoffmann (revival)—with Mmes. Bori, Morgana, Howard; and Messrs. Fleta, and de Luca; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

FRIDAY

Fedora (special matinee)—with Mmes. Jeritza, and Alcock; and Messrs. Martinelli and Scotti; Mr. Papi conducting.

Mefistofele (evening)—with Mmes. Alda, and Peralta; and Messrs. Gigli, and Chaliapin; Mr. Serafin conducting.

SATURDAY

Die Meistersinger (matinee)—with Mmes. Rethberg, and Telva; Messrs. Laubenthal, Whitehill, and Bender; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Rigoletto (evening)—with Mmes. Mario, and Gordon; and Messrs. Fleta and de Luca; Mr. Serafin conducting.

MONDAY

Gioconda—with Mme. Gordon and familiar cast.

Flonzaley Judgment Upheld

The refusal of Judge Giegerich last April to grant Louis Bailly, violinist, an injunction against his former colleagues in the Flonzaley Quartet, Adolpho Betti, Alfred Pochon, and Iwan d'Archambeau, has been upheld in subsequent proceedings. Early in the summer Judge Tierney ruled that Mr. Bailly, who as a retiring "partner" wished to dissolve the quartet, had no cause of action, and this opinion was supported later by Judge Mahoney. On October 10 the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, composed of five justices, unanimously confirmed Judge Giegerich's decision. The re-organized quartet, with Felicien d'Archambeau as violinist, arrived in New York just after this decision was reported.

Announce Adler Musicales

The dates of the five morning Musicales to be presented this winter in New York by Josef Adler, pianist, have just been announced. The concerts will take place in Mr. Adler's studio on Nov. 18, Dec. 16, Jan. 24, Feb. 17 and March 24. Among the artists who will take part are Kathryn Meisle, Cornelius Van Vliet, Clarence Adler, Josef Adler, the New York Trio, and Vladimir Dubinsky.

French Symphony on Detroit Program

Gabrilowitsch Conducts Firebird Suite of Stravinsky; Edith Mason Is Soloist.

Detroit, Oct. 31.—Cesar Franck, Igor Stravinsky and Edith Mason combined to make the second pair of concerts by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra a "thrilling" occasion, according to the press. W. K. Kelsey wrote in the News that the orchestra, under the baton of Ossip Gabrilowitsch, offered a "memorable program." The audience gave "unstinted approval" of the judicious" blending of the familiar and novel, the Free Press reviewer, Charlotte M. Tarsney, thought. Opening with Beethoven's Egmont overture, the program continued with Cesar Franck's symphony in D minor and Stravinsky's Firebird suite.

This last number was executed "memorably" by the orchestra, Mr. Kelsey found, and in the Franck work Mr. Gabrilowitsch "worked the orchestra up to a powerful climax." Ralph Holmes of the Evening Times considered the juxtaposition of the compositions of Franck and Stravinsky "a demonstration of the possibilities of music both to arouse and to release emotions," especially when interpreted by a conductor "so penetrating" and an orchestra "so splendid."

Miss Mason, soprano of the Chicago Civic Opera, won the demonstrative approbation of her audience by her singing of the entrance song of Puccini's Butterfly and Depuis le Jour from Charpentier's Louise. Her voice, said Charlotte Tarsney, "has freshness, flexibility and engaging purity and her tone is warm and easily produced." Mr. Kelsey considered her voice "as lovely as her appearance, an equable soprano of good range and beautiful, powerful top-notes."

CLAUDIA MUZIO
SOPRANO, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: HARRISON & HARSHBARGER,
1322 Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: O. SCOTTO, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

CYRENA VAN GORDON
Prima Donna Mezzo Contralto Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management:
For the East: R. E. Johnston, 1451 Broadway, New York City
For the West: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

FORREST LAMONT
TENOR, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson
4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Aeolian Hall, New York

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
25 East 35th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 5609

QUEENA MARIO
Soprano, Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: Metropolitan Musical Bureau, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Metropolitan Season Begins

Tullio Serafin Makes Operatic Debut in Presentation of Verdi's Aida.

Verdi's Aida was the work chosen by General Manager Gatti-Casazza to open the current New York Metropolitan Opera Company season last Monday night week. As Olin Downes, in the Times, wrote, "circumstances such as these do not call for a lengthy dissertation."

Principal interest, apart from that displayed in the personages occupying the boxes and parquet seats and the smart frocks and jewels, centered in the first appearance in this country of Tullio Serafin, the new conductor of Italian operas whose rank in Italy is very high.

Mr. Downes had nothing specifically to say of Serafin beyond the phrase "whose spirited and enthusiastic reading of the score added to the interest of the occasion." He found that Miss Rethberg "accomplished some of her most beautiful singing," that Mme. Matzenauer "was a regal and sumptuous figure with a voice that matched in its inherent quality the dramatic personality," that Martinelli in the Nile scene "sang with a fine ardor and gave more artistic value to his lines" than was apparent in the Celeste Aida aria, that Danise's Amonasro "is the performance of one well accustomed to the ways of the part" authoritative and convincing, and that the other roles were "well adjusted to the ensemble."

Mr. Henderson, in the Sun, felt it "the duty of the chronicler to record that the one novel element in the representation was Tullio Serafin." He felt "that there has not been such a vital performance of the great opera since Mr. Toscanini set his face to the east, and it was chiefly due to Mr. Serafin that the evening was one of artistic delight."

"What he achieved was an improvement in all that tended toward refinement in execution and a well knit execution. The orchestra was perfectly subordinated to the voices, but without losing the value of a single significant phrase in the instrumental song. There was a new and exquisitely delicate nuance both in movement and in dynamics and the beauty of polophony too often lost in a turmoil of sound was fully disclosed." This reviewer agreed in substance with Mr. Downes concerning the principals, as did Mr. Sanborn of the Mail and Telegram, who also had commendatory things to say of Mr. Serafin.

In the Post Mr. Newman was less impressed by the conductor, but found the principals generally satisfactory even though he found fault slightly with the contralto. Mr. Gilman of the Herald-Tribune was warm in his praise of Mr. Serafin, analyzing, quite as Mr. Henderson did, the conductor's feeling for fine shadings. He had approving words, too, for the leading singers. Mr. Taylor in the World did not write judicially.

La Boheme, given last Tuesday under Giuseppe Bamboschek's baton, with Miss Bori as Mimi, Miguel Fleta as Rodolpho, and MM. de Luca, Picco, Ananian, and Rothier and Miss Hunter, drew scant critical comment from the press . . . with the exception of Mr. Newman of the Post, who devoted nearly a column to pointing out what he felt to be a "third rate" performance of "almost unbelievable crudity." The writer felt that Miss Bori was the ablest of the singers, and he found her performance "histrionically unsatisfying." Other reviews disagreed with Mr. Newman's.

The Herald-Tribune notice was perfunctory and not analytical; so was that appearing in the Times, and in the Telegram-Mail. The Sun chronicler declared that "Miss Bori scored a deserved and convincing triumph" and that Mr. Fleta "sang well," and that the remainder of the bohemians "sang well, individually and collectively," and that "the performance as a whole was an excellent one."

Tannhauser was the Wednesday opera, which represented Mme. Jeritza, Jeanne Gordon, Rudolf Laubenthal, Clarence Whitehill, Paul Bender, Meader, Bloch, and Gustafson, and a newcomer in the person of Mary Bonetti, who had a very small role.

Mr. Henderson discovered that Mme. Jeritza "sang her music with full bodied voice and warmth of feeling," and was warmly received. "Mr. Whitehill was the admirably tender and thoroughly musical Wolfram as he has always been." The remaining principals were lightly mentioned in the phrase that it "was a generally competent cast."

The World's reviewer, Mr. Taylor, termed it "Maria Jeritza's night," and commended strongly Miss Gordon, Mr. Whitehill and Mr. Bender. He had less praise for Mr. Laubenthal, and stated that "Mr. Bodanzky's orchestra was, at its best, brilliant and spirited." Mr. Downes felt "there were not many moments when Wagner's music struck fire." He also found the singers failing to give him all he sought.

Only Clarence Whitehill held up the tempo to the proper level—for Mr. Newman who, however, found Mme. Jeritza "singing divinely and moving like a statue endowed with life." There was praise also for the others in the cast. Mr. Perkins, in the Herald-Tribune, found the performance "conscientious."

GIULIO SETTI
Chorus Master of the Metropolitan, Who Drilled the Vocal Ensemble for the Revival of Gioconda.

Boris Godunoff, given Thursday evening last, brought forward Feodor Chaliapin for the first time in opera here this season, and among his associates Jeanne Gordon, Mario Chamlee, Raymonde Delanois, Kathleen Howard, Henriette Wakefield, Lawrence Tibbett and Louis d'Angelo... with Gennaro Papi conducting.

There seemed a division of opinion amongst the reviewers regarding the performance in general and some of the singers. Admitting that Mr. Chaliapin's impersonation of Boris reflected the art he previously has revealed, Mr. Gilman in the Herald Tribune felt the basso was "not in his happiest vocal estate" as did Mr. Downes in the Times and Mr. Newman in the Post, which was contradicted by the Sun.

Mr. Taylor in the World approved of Mr. Chaliapin's portraiture and stated that "many in the cast were individually good" with the Dimitri of Mr. Chamlee "well conceived and sung" and Miss Gordon making her single scene "impressive." He felt the chorus sang "pretty well," yet declared "there was no sense of homogeneity, no animating spirit."

Mr. Downes felt it superfluous to write at length of Mr. Chaliapin. He believed that "the interpretation next in interest was Mr. Chamlee's False Dimitri" and that Miss Gordon "was able to employ the sensuous beauty of her tone."

Mr. Gilman did not comment upon any principals other than Mr. Chaliapin. Mr. Newman felt that Mr. Chaliapin was not the artist he heard in the summer of 1914, "and yet his Boris is still something beyond the capacity of any other singer. Mr. Chamlee sang very mellifluously." Miss Gordon, too, he thought, "gave an excellent study of the haughty and calculating Marina."

In the Telegram-Mail one read that "Mario Chamlee was most satisfying" and that in the scene in which Miss Gordon appears "the audience rose to enthusiasm."

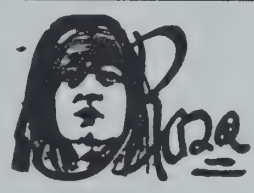
The Sun chronicler mentioned that Max Altglass, a newcomer, sang and acted competently his brief part" and has commendatory words for others in the cast.

Boris Presented at Metropolitan

Feodor Chaliapin Appears in Title Role of Moussorgsky Opera.

To Give Lecture Musicales.

Besides regular concerts the Schola Cantorum will give a series of five lecture musicales this winter. The lectures will be as follows: Chabrier, by Kurt Schindler, with illustrations by Marguerite D'Alvarez and Leon Roth, on Dec. 1; Schumann, by Ossip Gabrilowitsch, illustrated by the lecturer, on Dec. 8; Italian folk songs, lecture and illustrations by Geni Sadero, on Jan. 13; Bach's St. Matthew Passion, by Thomas Surette, illustrated by Schola Cantorum and soloists, on Jan. 29, and Musical Mannerisms of Composers, by Ernest Newman, on Feb. 18.



Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
First appearance with N. Y. Symphony Orchestra Nov. 30, 1924
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
Victor Records
Steinway Piano
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 4

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Opera at the Metropolitan

Another season of opera was begun this week at the New York Metropolitan. Scenes resembling those of other years brought to old-time patrons memories of once glorious artists in their glorious moments. Time passes; new faces replace those which have been long familiar, and voices too which continue to ring in the recesses of our inner ears.

But the Metropolitan goes on. Its representations command admiration because most fair-minded people know that nowhere else in the world is there duplicated what the Metropolitan accomplishes in any single season. In variety, in quantity, and in quality no other existing opera house can match the Metropolitan. It is unique, and it will doubtless continue so for years to come.

Chairman of the board Otto H. Kahn, and his co-directors—Messrs. Clarence H. Mackay, Edmund Baylies, Paul D. Cravath, George Eastman, Frederic A. Juilliard, Henry Rogers Winthrop, Rawlins Cottenet, Robert Goelet, Frank Gray Griswold, Alvin W. Krech, Harry Payne Whitney and Edward T. Stotesbury—are zealous upholders of Metropolitan traditions. Yet they appreciate that the large part of the honors for what is accomplished belong to General Manager Giulio Gatti-Casazza.

Mr. Gatti is beginning his seventeenth season as general manager of this institution. His sagacity and vision and administrative skill have long since been abundantly proven. His problems are many, yet he meets them in the main as they should be met and with an endeavor to serve the best good of the majority interests.

There is reason to believe that during 1924-1925 the Metropolitan will surpass its finest efforts of recent years, artistically and financially.

Opera in Chicago

The Chicago Civic Grand Opera Company also launched this week its current season. Confronted with greater difficulties than those experienced its older companion in the field the western organization is pushing determinedly on. Large mistakes of policy chargeable to previous administrations have made the task of the Chicago company a considerable one, and it still has to overcome obstacles caused in part by errors of judgment of those administrations mentioned.

But Chicago should eventually pass over the top of the hill. It will if there develops in the next few years the broad capacity to carry on in a manner befitting an institution serious in its efforts to establish the first-class opera on a secure foundation.

Samuel Insull, Herbert Johnson and Giorgio Polacco are entering now their crucial period. They have only to prove equal to the occasion to settle for all time the operatic future of a city which can, and will, support opera if it be rightly conducted and promoted.

High Lights and Luminaries

AN OPENING night at the Met is an event with double character: artistic and social. The success of operatic seasons is based largely on its social interest. If this wanes, or is lacking, the season tends to lose in musical effectiveness.

We can't complain of the Met's artistic achievements. Mr. Gatti has gathered together the best that the market has to offer. No available singer with highest class reputation either in America or in Europe is left out of the plans of the New York Metropolitan Opera Company. Mr. Gatti, Mr. Ziegler, and the other officials are always on the lookout for new talent.

Last Monday night the artistic and social successes of the Met opening were unquestionable.

The famous horseshoe looked gorgeous! The orchestra was full of celebrities. Everybody was there.

The cast! It was the best the Met has to offer in Aida,—and that is the best that there is anywhere.

SITTING at the conductor's desk was a new personality: Tullio Serafin, who was making his debut in the United States. It seems strange to speak of Serafin as making a debut. In Italy he is well known,—standard, even.

What an ovation he received after the Triumphal Scene! He shared in the triumph, and he well deserved it. This was quite the high spot of the evening.

There was only one jarring note in the evening. The costumes of Mmes. Rethberg and Matzenauer were anything but Ethiopian or Egyptian, and Miss Rethberg's wig was certainly not very becoming. The Met ought to have a censorship department to pass on the costuming of its artists. But these artists sang as they know how.

Giovanni Martinelli, Danise, and Mardones were familiar figures in the cast. They lived up to expectations, too.

The usual first night crowd was on hand. They are talking about new opera houses in New York. No new place could be like the old. It would take years and years to restore that unique Metropolitan Opera House atmosphere. Tradition's the thing! Tom Bull and Hugh Brown in their shining top hats were on the job "at the gate," and,—wonder of wonders—there was a new chap there too, taking the place of the popular "Jerry," who died last summer! We missed "Jerry" very much!

Outside the double line at both box offices extended well down the street quite early in the evening. They had their books and papers to while away the time and turned to rubber when Gatti himself strolled down the street with his cane. The old chocolate and chestnut vendors were on the job again too. The first nighters were mighty lucky though,—we have known Metropolitan openings when it was cold, but last week it was almost like the summer time.

THE WALK down the corridor was one handshake after another. We met Alessandro Bonci. That "retirement" story surely can't be true; he was looking better and younger than ever. And way down front was Frances Peralta, all eyes and ears for the Nile scene trio.

And there was Ned Ziegler chatting with Berthold Neuer. All in a minute we were greeting de Segurola (with the monocle, of course), Papi, Earl Lewis, and Bill Guard,—and dozens more.

Almost all the New York managers were there; and so were the singing teachers, but without the "almost." And many, many celebrated pupils.

The Fourth Estate was out in full force. We tried to spy Ernest Newman, but couldn't. Each one was accompanied by respective wife, of course, the newspaper man shows up consistently with Madame,—on first nights, that is. Let's not forget the press agents . . . one for every artist, and each grew enthusiastic at the right time.

Earl Lewis was smiling more than usually: evidently the receipts were totalling up pleasantly.

After Aida exhaled her last breath on Radames' broad breast, Serafin dropped his baton and fled. An unusual gathering greeted him at an Italian-American restaurant; there was a supper there in honor of the new Met conductor. Walter Damrosch welcomed his new colleague in his usual clever manner. Not everybody talked, but everyone did eat!

THINGS looked much different at the House last Tuesday night. There was an extra Election night performance and of course "the popular assemblage" was there in full force. . . . The silk hat merchants had less to be pleased with if they were there, and evening dress was not universal as it had been the night before.

But standees and "conoscenti" were out in squads.

La Boheme was the opera, but the performance was not up to Metropolitan standards,—perhaps the excitement of the Election and the firecrackers had something to do with it.

We could see Conductor Bamboschek trying his best to get the artists together, but he was not successful. We are waiting for another Boheme. Wednesday was Tannhauser night, Jeritza night. There was a little more room to move about. . . .

Strange that Wagner is not popular in the S. R. O. sense,—but his following is perhaps most intelligent. Jeanne Gordon, Laubenthal, Bender, and Whitehill were welcomed back.

Wagner at the Metropolitan means Artur Bodanzky. He was there. We saw Maria Bonetti, who was making her debut as one of the four pages.

Next night Chaliapin! . . . but more anon.

BRUNO ZIRATO.

Strauss-ky and Stransky—and a New Opera

Wherein Is Related the Tale of How Richard Strauss Got the Plot for His Intermezzo, Just Produced in Dresden

Dresden, Nov. 5.—Intermezzo, an opera by Richard Strauss, had its world premiere here yesterday. An assemblage which included many prominent persons was present, and a number of the representative music critics of this country.

These writers appear at first blush to be favorably impressed with Intermezzo, one reviewer declaring in print that it is the finest stage work ever written by Strauss. The reception given the new opera was warm, and an ovation resulted, with twenty stage recalls for the composer and principals at the close of the performance.

The composer in this instance was his own librettist, and the subject matter is based on an incident in his domestic life which is said for a time to have threatened the happiness of Strauss and Mrs. Strauss . . . because of a letter addressed to Strauss intended for the conductor, Josef Stransky, the writer of which letter appears, in addition to confusing two names, to have assumed a familiarity altogether unjustified.

Ludwig Karpath, in an article published some time since in the Neues Weiner Tageblatt, presents an interesting tale of the comedy of errors which led up to a situation out of which Strauss was able to select material for the libretto for Intermezzo.

A part of the article, translated for The Musical Digest by Jacques Meyer, is as follows:

Dr. Strauss began the work [Intermezzo] in the year 1917. The book, since then materially altered, had been conceived in the summer, and in the fall some of the music was first composed. The composer had in mind the creation of a new style whereby the unusually realistic present-day story could be united with music fully expressing it.

Strauss himself felt some anxiety regarding the work which he had undertaken, and again and again much was changed without the right tone being found, and finally Strauss was conronted by an obstacle which for a time he found impossible to overcome.

The work therefore was laid aside until the mood imperatively demanded a decision. Suddenly, almost overnight, the fire of inspiration overtook him, rapid progress ensued, and on the return journey from a South American concert tour two years ago the last touches were made.

Some months ago various versions of the plot appeared in various newspapers.

Strauss was not at home when the tragi-comedy began. The wife opened a letter addressed to him in which Richard was asked to a rendezvous. Frau Strauss felt that she had been deceived and went to great lengths in order to get at the bottom of the matter. She at once put in an application for divorce and answered none of her husband's letters. When the latter, after a prolonged journey at last returned home there was a scene.

All of his avowals that he was absolutely ignorant of the very existence of the woman were in vain, and so also, were his assertions that there must be a mistake in the name for at that time a Mr. Edmund von Strauss was also a conductor at the Berlin Opera. In one word, an elaborate apparatus had to function so that the real facts could be found, and an end put to the turbulent drama of jealousy. The investigation had resulted in the discovery that the gay gentleman to whom the ominous missive was directed and who was unjustly considered as having assumed the name of Richard Strauss was Conductor Josef Stransky. The latter, naturally, was also the one who straightened out the matter.

Now comes the question: What could have induced Josef Stransky to assume the identity of Richard Strauss? [which he actually did not do].

A fortnight ago at Carlsbad I had an opportunity to meet Stransky and to talk about "the case."

"I was engaged as a conductor by Angelo Neumann, manager of the Prague Landes theater," said Stransky. "One day we went to Berlin with an Italian company which was guesting with us and gave performances at the New Royal Opera House. I alternated with the conductor Arturo Vigna. The star of the troupe was the Italian tenor De Marchi, whose manager was Edgar Strakosch, an American. After a performance of Aida De Marchi said to Strakosch: 'Go and get Stransky, we want to go out.' Our way led us into the bar of the Hotel Bristol, where we made ourselves comfortable. Suddenly, a 'lady' joined us. As we were in a jolly mood we treated the uninvited but not at all unpleasant stranger to some American drinks.

"As Strakosch and De Marchi conversed in Italian, our momentary guest was soon aware that we were of the Italian Opera and asked for a ticket to the next performance. In his very broken German De Marchi answered: 'Herr Straussky will attend to it.' (You must know that the tenor always insisted upon calling me 'Straussky.') I never for a moment thought of complying with our bar-guest's request, but the decidedly forward young woman had gained from our talk that I was one of the conductors of the company and she later looked up my name in the telephone directory.

"Since De Marchi had placed a strong accent on the first syllable, the young woman had the word 'Straussky' in her ear and was apparently convinced when she found the name Richard Strauss, Joachimistalerstrasse 17, that that was my address. Whereupon she wrote to Strauss the fateful letter which Richard Strauss's wife opened. It read: 'Dear Sweetheart! Do bring me the tickets. Your faithful Mitze. My address: Mitze Mucke, Luneburgerstrasse 5.'

"When Herr Rosch, Strauss's intimate friend, in the course of his attempts to clear up the apparently mysterious but really exceedingly simple matter at last succeeded in reaching me I at once solved the puzzle whereby the reconciliation of the Strausses was happily effected."

If the opera is a success, it will heighten Stransky's fame. To incite an opera by Richard Strauss is also a matter of consequence, a service indeed for which alone one may figure in music history. Therefore, Stransky-Straussky should be satisfied with this course of events, all the more because he is to be credited for restoring peace, the conjugal peace in the Strauss family. All's well that ends well.

GRADOVA
Concert Pianist
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Duo Art Records Steinway Piano Fisk Building New York

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Victor Records Steinway Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records Mason & Hamlin Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

MISCHA LEVITZKI
Management: DANIEL MAYER—Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

On The Music Highway

FOLLOWING a number of recitals in the East after his first New York recital on November 15, Jascha Heifetz will tour the American and Canadian Northwest, appearing in Minneapolis November 24, Edmonton, Alberta, November 29, and in Calgary on December 1.

Phradie Wells, soprano, is starting her second year at the Metropolitan. Miss Wells will make her first concert appearance in Boston on February 15.

For her only New York recital of the season, Olga Samaroff has chosen a program consisting of Beethoven's Sonata Opus 10, No. 2, the Mendelssohn Song Without Words in E major, the Brahms E flat Rhapsody, the B minor Sonata of Chopin, and a group of short compositions by Rachmaninoff, Mary Howe, Paul Juon and Liapounow. Mme. Samaroff's recital will take place at Aeolian Hall on November 11.

Guy Maier and Lee Pattison, pianists, will give a recital tonight in Chicago. They will be heard in La Crosse, Wis., tomorrow.

After his recital in Montreal, E. Robert Schmitz was engaged for a return concert in March. This was the pianist's first appearance in Canada.

Ida Deck, a young pianist from West Virginia is to make her New York debut at Aeolian Hall on Thursday. Miss Deck recently won scholarships in both piano playing and composition from the Juilliard Musical Foundation, and one of her works, a set of variations on an original theme, is included on her program. Miss Deck will be heard in the English Suite in G minor of Bach, the Beethoven Sonata, Opus 31, No. 3, and shorter compositions by Mozart, Beethoven, Liadow, Rachmaninoff, Glinka-Balakirew and Chopin.

The second New York recital of John McCormack too place last Sunday at Carnegie Hall. Mr. McCormack will leave immediately for a tour of the Middle West which will keep him away from New York until Christmas time.

Roszi Varady, Hungarian cellist, is to start her season at Quebec next Monday. She will be heard in Montreal on November 13.

Herma Menth, pianist, will give the opening concert of the season at Georgian Court College, in Lakewood, N. J. After the concert there will be a reception for Miss Menth.

Ernest Davis, English tenor, who has recently returned from England where he sang as soloist with London's noted Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of Sir Henry Wood, will give his New York recital on November 18 at Aeolian Hall.

Edwin Hughes, pianist, will give his first New York recital of the season at Aeolian Hall next Sunday evening. Mr. Hughes will play two compositions of Henry Cowell, modernist American composer who makes use of "tone clusters" in his music. These pieces will be played in the American group, which will follow the Beethoven Sonata Op. 31 No. 3, and a Chopin group.

Artists engaged to appear at Robert Kellogg's Friday Morning musicales in the ballroom of the Hotel Bond, Hardford, Conn., are Anna Case and Maximilian Rose, Louis Graveure and Thelma Given, the De Reszke Singers and Mildred Dilling, Percy Grainger and Louis Stallings, Marie Sundelius and Rafaelo Diaz, and Edna Thomas with Lionel Tertis.

Vincent Lopez was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by his comanagers, William Morris and S. Hurok, at the Friars' Club, New York, October 31. Guests included representatives from the foreign language newspapers as well as the metropolitan press.

Vincent Lopez and his orchestra will make their first concert appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House, Sunday afternoon, November 23. European cities are included in the extensive tour being booked for the organization.

Contracts have just been signed for an appearance by Nevada Van der Veer in The Messiah at Reading, Pa., on December 18. She will sing the role six times during the Christmas season.

Following singing of Mozart roles abroad this summer, Irene Williams has returned for her third season with the William Wade Hinshaw Opera Company. She opened her season at Roanoke singing Norina in Don Pasquale.

The Stringfield Trio, consisting of Lamar Stringfield, flutist; Charles McBride, cellist, and Carroll Hollister, pianist, gave the first New York performance of Gaubert's Trois Aquarelles at the Art Center on October 26. At this concert, which was one in the New York Flute Club's regular series, the trio also gave the premiere hearing of Mr. Stringfield's Mountain Sketches.

Recent bookings of Gitta Gradova included a Toronto recital under the auspices of the Ladies' Morning Musical Club on November 6. Mme. Gradova has also signed to appear with the St. Louis Orchestra at New Orleans on March 27.

The Lenox String Quartet will play its first New York concert of the current season on the evening of November 20th, in Aeolian Hall. Their program will include Alois Reiser's String Quartet which gained honorable mention at the first Pittsfield Festival, in 1919, and also the Haydn Quartet, Op. 77, F major and the Brahms C minor Quartet.

The Quartet numbers many return engagements among its bookings for the current season. These include concerts at Yale and Harvard universities and with several music clubs through the Middle West, as well as for Stamford, Farmington, Morristown, Paterson and South Orange. Their Western tour will be made in March and takes them as far as Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska.

Returning from her third Coast tour, Clair Dux will stop off at Louisville on November 18, Wheeling on November 20 and Birmingham on November 24 for recitals. Her first Eastern appearance of the season will be made at Philadelphia on December 1.

Mischa Elman, who is offering a series of three chamber music concerts by a string quartet this season at Town Hall, will present quartets by Haydn, Mozart and Schubert at the first appearance on the evening of November 19.

Mr. Elman, occupying the desk of first violinist, will have as his associates Edward Bachman, second violin; Nicolas Moldovan, viola, and Horace Britt, cello.

Harriet Eells, mezzo-soprano, will make her New York debut as a recitalist at Aeolian Hall tomorrow afternoon, with Kurt Schindler at the piano. Miss Eells comes from Cleveland, and has made several appearances in the Middle West. Her program for Wednesday afternoon includes a group of songs by Lully, Mozart, Beethoven and Donaudy, a group of lieder by Franz, Brahms, Wolff and Arensky, a group in French by Rhene-Baton, Balakirew and Gretchaninoff, and songs in Italian and English by Respighi, Griffes, Carpenter and Homer.

Renee Thornton has been re-enaged to sing in Wilmington, Pa., after the enthusiastic reception she received there.

The first American recital of Nicholas Medtner, pianist, will be at Town Hall, New York, Thursday evening. Mr. Medtner's program is arranged in an unorthodox fashion, composed of two parts. The first part includes the Chopin F minor Fantasy, three little sonatas of Scarlatti and the Beethoven Apassionata Sonata. The second part will consist of selections from Mr. Medtner's Maerchen. A week later Mr. Medtner will make his Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Ernst von Dohnanyi, Hungarian composer, pianist and conductor, will make another tour in the United States this season going once more to the Pacific Coast. He will not arrive here until the first week in January and will make his first appearance of his 1925 American tour as soloist with the Detroit Symphony.

Abby Morrison, soprano, sang last night at the Victory Ball of the American Legion in the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, New York.

Horace Britt, cellist, has been engaged to play Ernest Bloch's Schelemo with the Minneapolis Orchestra, Henri Verbruggen conducting, on Nov. 30. Besides his appearances with the Letz Quartet and as first cellist of the State Symphony Orchestra this season, Mr. Britt will appear with Mischa Elman in a series of chamber music concerts in Town Hall, New York.

Mr. Britt will also be teacher of cello and chamber music at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

Elizabeth Rethberg, the Dresden soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Sylvia Lent, young American violinist, and the quartet, the De Reszke Singers, will be the soloists at the first concert of Andres de Segurola's Musical Mornings next Friday at the Hotel Plaza, New York.

A novelty on the program will be four songs especially written for the De Reszke Singers, who are making their New York debut on this occasion: The Emir's Serenade by Cyril Scott, Hunting Song by Charles Gilbert Spross, and Two Studies in Imitation by Herbert Hughes—Simple Simon (after Corelli) and There Was a Crooked Man (after Czerny). The quartet will also sing two old English madrigals and French chansons of the fifteenth and seventeenth centuries. Mme. Rethberg's offerings include the aria, Leise, Leise, from Weber's Freischutz, and three Strauss songs. Miss Lent will play the Chaconne of Vitali and a group of smaller pieces by Chopin, Wieniawski, and Cecil Burleigh.

Naná Genovese

MEZZO-SOPRANO

OPERA — RECITALS — CONCERTS

Management: Ottokar Bartik, 1425 Broadway, New York City

JESSIE CHRISTIAN

SOPRANO

Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger 1322 Kimball Building Chicago, Ill.

MARIO CHAMLEE

TENOR

Metropolitan Opera Company

Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau

Fisk Building 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.

Brunswick Records

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

MISS HELEN FISH, of the Rockford (Ill.) Register-Gazette, is building a music page along lines which should develop still further for that newspaper a reading clientele. Miss Fish combines the other arts with music, which imparts to the department a broad touch and makes for variety in the material offered.

There is a splendid opportunity for daily newspapers to assist in the music enlightenment of the nation by such methods as are now being followed by the Rockford Register-Gazette.

It opens the minds of the musically inclined by informing them on the important happenings in the important music centers of the world. And by thus reinforcing the local music events of Rockford there is made available a source for keeping posted on current music happenings which must ultimately promote the music progressiveness of that city.

Now that music has been lifted from the lap of luxury to the mound of necessity the people are giving more thought to it. They have come to realize that music possesses a definite civic value and that it is a positve aid in promoting the welfare of the people in whatever community good music is adequately interpreted.

It will be interesting to observe the progress of the Rockford Register-Gazette's music and art page. The idea is excellent and should be emulated by every newspaper in every city which is not following such a course.

ALL the voice possible to bestow upon a human being, and no matter how well it may be used, is wasted if the singer lacks the interpretative gift. When one has developed that gift to a rare degree we have an artist.

The United States can boast of as many fine natural voices as any other country in the world. Some experts assert that nowhere is there such a wealth of superior vocal material, and yet . . . we have only a few singers of outstanding calibre.

The reason lies in the fact that our young people want to get ahead too fast. They lack the patience to persevere in one of the most difficult callings; and this insistence upon speed has interfered with more than one promising career.

Reading some reviews written on the concert appearances of Edward Johnson in different parts of the United States and Canada gives proof of what has been stated concerning interpretative artistry. We remember well the first impressions this Metropolitan Opera tenor made on us when he came back to this country after having spent several years singing opera in Italy. He has continued, ever since, to develop; and the reason is that he is a student.

♭ ♮

IN A RECENT issue of The Nation Miss Henrietta Straus has an article entitled A Municipal Exploit in Music. It refers to Baltimore's activities in the music line. And since such projects are now beginning to attract attention in a number of communities we reprint much of what Miss Straus wrote:

"If our municipalities were given generally to adventures in the arts there would be no need for this article. But when such adventures are almost isolated instances they cannot be localized in value. For this reason an organization like the Baltimore Symphony takes on a certain national significance, for it is the first and, I believe, only municipally endowed and managed symphony orchestra in the country. Its history is doubly significant in that its entire existence has been the triumph of art over politics and that it was due originally to a concert manager, Frederick R. Huber, and to a politician, James H. Preston, the latter one time mayor of Baltimore.

"In the autumn of 1915 these two got together and laid their plans. Mr. Huber offered his services as manager gratis for the first year. Mr. Preston engaged to extract from the city council an appropriation of $7,000. It was a brave pledge on the part of the mayor. But then, what was such a pledge to one who had dared to have the streets of Baltimore paved? The miracle was somehow performed, and the orchestra became a fact. A conductor was found in Gustav Strube, head of the theory and composition department of the Peabody Conservatory, and for twenty-five years an assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony; and a concert-master located in Joan C. Van Hulsteyn, head of the violin department of the Peabody, and formerly concert-master of the Lamoureux Orchestra of Paris.

"As only $1,500 and five or six rehearsals were allotted each performance, high-class symphonic men were out of the question, for the players were on no fixed salaries, but were paid by the performance and the rehearsal. And so the orchestra, numbering, the first year, fifty-three in all, had to be recruited from the Peabody faculty and from the various theatre orchestras throughout the city.

♮ ♮

"THE first concert took place in February, 1916, with Mabel Garrison, a native Baltimorean, as its soloist.

"This established its future policy, which has always been definitely constructive toward the community. Not only are local musicians encouraged as soloists but also as composers, the latter at times even being invited to conduct their works. There are no subscription and no free tickets; the prices range from fifteen to fifty cents. There were a few years, during the war, when the prices went up to a dollar, and attendance fell off in consequence; but now that the old scale has been resumed the orchestra plays to sold-out houses.

"It initiated the plan of holding its final rehearsals at some high school, which the students could attend, free of charge, and which were always followed by explanatory talks on the program. And it has followed up this educational work by inaugurating this year, besides its regular series of eight concerts, a supplementary series of children's concerts, which have been indorsed by the Public School Association and which are prefaced by explanatory remarks by Mrs. Henrietta Baker Low, a member of the National Board of Music Supervisors. The program notes are written by a sixteen-year-old Baltimore boy named Richard Moses.

"As is to be expected, an orchestra so dependent on the benevolence of city politicians has had many ups and downs. First, there was the question of its home. Its only logical one, the Lyric Theatre, was in danger of being sold to commercial interests. After much agitation Mr. Otto H. Kahn, who owned the theatre, generously waved aside these interests and gave Baltimore a chance to buy it for artistic purposes. And so a stock company was formed called the Lyric Company, and the hall was not only saved for the cause of music but is today on a lively paying basis. The next problem to be met was that of Baltimore's "blue laws," for it was found that the day most desirable for concerts was the one day forbidden, namely, Sunday. The city finally solved the problem by breaking its own ordinance, giving permission for concerts on the Sabbath, provided that no tickets were sold on that day.

"THE orchestra's greatest difficulty, however, is the uncertainty of its appropriations, for which it has to depend upon each succeeding administration. And it speaks well for both itself and its management that both have already successfully weathered three political changes. Moreover, through them all, Mr. Huber has not only remained Municipal Director of Music—as his title goes—but he has also gone ahead with his plans.

"The city now has a special budget for musical expenditures. These were in 1916 about $30,000 to New York's $24,600. This perhaps is not surprising considering that a New York manager computed recently that out of the ten million people who make up the population of New York and its surrounding territory only sixty thousand support its musical enterprises. Today Baltimore spends $100,000 annually upon music."

ABBY MORRISON
SOPRANO SAN CARLO GRAND OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON, 1451 Broadway, New York City

MAY PETERSON
VOCALION RECORDS
SOPRANO
Formerly Opera Comique and Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: HAENSEL & JONES, AEOLIAN HALL
NEW YORK CITY

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1924
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

Ethyl HAYDEN
Lyric Soprano
Management: Loudon Charlton—Carnegie Hall, New York

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO
BRUNSWICK RECORDS

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York
Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

Respighi Concerto Played in Chicago

New Italian Work Given American Premiere; Alda Metropolitan Quartet Sings.

Chicago, Nov. 3.—Ottorino Respighi's Gregorian Concert for violin and orchestra, was given its first performance in America by Jacques Gordon, concertmaster of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, at the orchestra's concert last week. Other musical events of importance during the week were the popular concert of the Orchestra, Frederick Stock conducting; two concerts by John Philip Sousa and his band; the performance by the Alda Metropolitan Quartet; and the concert given by Mischa Elman.

The novelty of a "mellow and excellently played program," as Edward Moore of the Tribune put it, was Mr. Gordon's playing of the Respighi work. "A fine performance of a difficult work," Mr. Moore called it. Karleton Hackett of the Post agreed that it was "a very fine" performance of "a new work that was worth hearing." The concerto, Mr. Hackett found, "proved to be beautiful music, brilliantly played . . . with a fine appreciation" by Mr. Gordon.

Mr. Gordon also played Spohr's concerto for violin, Gesangscene, with a "thorough grasp of the music," wrote Mr. Hackett. Other numbers offered by the orchestra were a set of symphonic variations by Dvorak and Smetana's overture to The Bartered Bride.

A violoncello obbligato by Alfred Wallenstein was offered at the "pop" concert of the Symphony Orchestra. The program included Goldmark's overture to Sakuntala and selections from The Country Wedding; Sibelius' tone poem Finlandia; and Massenet's suite, Les Erinnyes. "Everything went in the expected way," wrote Karleton Hackett.

The Alda Metropolitan Quartet, composed of Frances Alda, soprano; Carolina Lazzari, contralto; Armand Tokatyan, tenor; and Lawrence Tibbett, baritone, gave an operatic concert for the benefit of the Orphans' Home. The artists were obliged to sing extra numbers and were recalled many times. All four voices received laudatory comment from Karleton Hackett, who thought Mme. Alda's "clear and ample." Edward Moore found the concert, with its operatic melodies sung by "four fine voices," a pleasant variant from the usual run of concerts. Mme. Alda, Maurice Rosenfeld said, "sang with a pure and lyric voice, with musical taste and with temperamental warmth." Glenn Dillard Gunn in the Herald-Examiner found in her performance technical skill and "much keen, artistic intelligence."

A "completely satisfying" concert was played by Mischa Elman, who gave a generous program and many encores.

The two Sousa concerts were enthusiastically received by large audiences. Sousa's band, wrote Edward Moore, "is a unique organization, with a mellowness, a flexibility, and a facility that other bands may envy but not attain." Maurice Rosenfeld called it a "more nearly perfect musical organization" than ever before.

The Concert Debut of

MARYON VADIE

and the Maryon Vadie Dancers with Mary Izant pianist

OTA GYGI

at Town Hall, New York, October 24th

Acclaimed by Press and Public

New York American

"Each is a gifted representative of a particular art. Ota Gygi played Wieniawski's elaborate concerto with emotional warmth and efficient technique. Maryon Vadie is graceful and eloquent.

Brooklyn Eagle

"One saw dancing of the ballet type—tow dancing, contes de la danse, with changes of costume and other pretty accessories. Maryon Vadie did lovely dances to Beethoven. Mr. Gygi played with breadth and conviction.

New York Sun

"A novel and attractive recital was that given in the afternoon at Town Hall by Ota Gygi, who was violinist to King of Spain, and Maryon Vadie, an American dancer. In solo numbers and obligatoes to dance numbers. Mr. Gygi showed that he is a good and pleasing artist. Miss Vadie in a long and varied list gave evidence of an attractive personality, good technical knowledge and poetic insight and a fine sense of color. Many of her dances were encored, including one, Bo-peep, music by Beethoven-Kreisler. * * * This brought down the house completely.

New York Tribune

"Lightness of foot, ease of gesture and motion and vivacity marked Miss Vadie's solos, and ease and grace were also to be found in the work of her ensemble. Mr. Ggyi is a first class violinist, with fluent tone and technical competence.

New York Times

"Three dancers in a day, Maryon Vadie, Maria Theresa and Mme. Pavlowa. * * * an unusual occurrence in local halls, begining with a much applauded matinee by Maryon Vadie."

Concert Direction

EVELYN HOPPER

Aeolian Hall, New York.

Koussevitsky Heard in Wagner

Boston Conductor Plays Roussel Symphony Also; Much Music Activity in Hub.

Boston, Nov. 4.—The fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting; the first concert of the fifth season of the People's Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Emil Mollenhauer; and the San Carlo Opera Company's opening of its two week season here with La Gioconda were the most important events of a week of great musical activity.

"Once more a great Wagnerian conductor is among us," was the final sentence of the review of Koussevitzky's Wagnerian program by Warren Storey Smith in the Post. In addition to Weber's Overture to Oberon and Roussel's Symphony in B flat, which was heard here for the first time, the program included Wagner's Bacchanale from Tannhauser, the Funeral Music from Dusk of the Gods and the prelude to The Mastersingers of Nuremberg. S. M., writing in the Christian Science Monitor, found the playing of Wagner "unqualifiedly superb." The performance of Bacchanale was, according to Philip Hale of the Herald, "a glowing, gorgeous one." Warren Storey Smith spoke of the playing of this number as "unbelievably eloquent."

The Roussel symphony, to quote the Monitor, is music "nobly conceived" and not to be "lightly dismissed." Mr. Hale felt that in spite of "the honesty, the high aims, the musical equipment of Roussel" and of some of the impressive and beautiful parts, the composition was "lacking in clearness of design and firmness of structure." The work establishes Roussel "beyond question as a force in contemporary music," wrote Mr. Smith, who considered that the music had "deep feeling, frequent lyrical beauty and architectural strength." The Transcript admired the piece and commented particularly on Mr. Koussevitzky's reading of his program.

Heinrich Gebhard, pianist, was the soloist of the People's Symphony Concert and gave, as the Monitor said, "an unusually musical interpretation of Liszt's Concerto, an interpretation full of poetry and imagination." The paper considered that the orchestra under Mr. Mollenhauer's skillful guidance gave a "spirited performance" of Elgar's Overture and accompanied Mr. Gebhard "sympathetically." The reviewer in the Transcript found that "Svenden's fantasie Romeo and Juliet, melodic and not particularly intense in spirit . . . was admirably executed." The Tschaikowsky serenade for string orchestra, the most "impressive piece of the afternoon," was treated with "marked sympathy" by Mr. Mollenhauer. The Boston Herald was pleased to find that this season the conductor has a "more flexible, better co-ordinated and more responsive" orchestra than before.

The audience seemed well pleased with the first offering of the San Carlo Opera, La Gioconda. The Herald noted particularly the "distinguished ability" of Mary Kent, who sang the role of La Cieca. She has a contralto voice, "admirably trained, of rare beauty." The music of the opera, which has "frequent charm and color," was played "less flexibly and less sonorously" by the orchestra than "may be expected later."

Recent recitals here were those of Arthur Hartmann, Jesus Sanroma, Jean Bedetti, Jean Nolan, Carmela Ippolito, Frederic Lamond and others.

The Question Box

1. How many symphonies did Dvorak write before the New World?
2. In the premiere of what famous Russian opera did Anna Case appear at the New York Metropolitan Opera House?
3. Who was Theobald Bohm?
4. When did Hugo Wolf, composer of songs, live?

Last Week's Answers

1. The Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra was disbanded in 1910. It was organized in 1896.
2. Nikolai Grigorovitch Sokoloff, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, is in no way related to Nikolai Alexandrovitch, the Russian composer.
3. Grieg wrote three sonatas for violin and piano—in F and G major and A minor.
4. Giuseppe Campanari before becoming an operatic baritone played cello in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from 1884 to 1893.

Gerhardt Offers Schubert Program

Reviewers Give Unbounded Praise to German Soprano in First Concert of Season.

With a program consisting of eighteen Schubert songs, Elena Gerhardt, soprano, was heard here for the first time this season at Aeolian Hall on November 2. Every song, from the opening Suleika I. and II. to Erlkoenig, was, wrote Deems Taylor of the World, "a fresh revelation of her mastery of her art." Mr. Taylor found her voice in much better condition than when she was heard last year in that it "sounded unwearied and tonally much more under control." Because of Miss Gerhardt's "magnificent" style, "her perfect sense of balance and proportion, her subtle flexibility of rhythm, her flawless diction, and coupled with this technical surety the sincerity and noble simplicity of utterance," he hailed her as "one of the few great singers in the world."

Mr. Taylor's enthusiasm was shared by Ernest Newman of the Post who was delighted with the perfection of her art, her easy command of the "delicacies of tone color," and the "grace and beauty" of her phrasing. In writing of his admiration for her rhythm and "keen harmonic sense," Mr. Newman admitted himself dismayed because he had long ago exhausted all his superlatives on her. Mr. Henderson in the Sun and the Herald Tribune review praised her "sincerity" and "range of emotions."

MARCELLA
Roeseler

Dramatic Soprano, Metropolitan Opera Company

"Proved a Sensation" at the Maine Festival

The unanimous consent of the critics:

. . . Was a most agreeable surprise . . . Her voice is rich, powerful, yet high and she proved a sensation.—Lewiston Daily Sun, Oct. 11.

. . . She won the audience completely . . . Truly a great Leonora by any standard or by all.—Bangor Daily News, Oct. 11.

. . . Superb voice and marvellous dramatic ability . . . Enchanting personality.—Bangor Daily Commercial, Oct. 11.

. . . Won pronounced success taking the audience by storm . . . Rich lower voice . . . Ability to project highly dramatic moments.—Portland Press Herald, Oct. 11.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Address Personally: Metropolitan Opera House—New York City

FIRST AMERICAN TOUR

At Last Karsavina!

—The New York Telegram and Mail, Nov. 3, 1924.

She was accorded an ovation.

—The Baltimore Sun, Oct. 31, 1924.

Karsavina is now an artist of the first rank.

—The New York American, Nov. 2, 1924.

Scored a triumph.

—Newark News, Nov. 3, 1924.

"KARSAVINA'S DEBUT EVOKES ENTHUSIASM"

Karsavina was to the eye all that her gorgeous name would imply.

—Olin Downes in the New York Times, Nov. 2, 1924.

Karsavina's Debut Evokes Enthusiasm.

—The New York Tribune, Nov. 2, 1924.

Always she was lovely to look upon, everything she did was instinct with grace.

—Pitts Sanborn in the New York Telegram and Mail, Nov. 2, 1924.

FULL CRITICISMS FURNISHED ON REQUEST

JANUARY - FEBRUARY, 1925, NOW BOOKING

WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, INC.
250 West 57th St., New York City.

KNABE PIANO

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Rothwell Gives Novelty Program

Thalia Sabanieva Soloist; String Quartet and Recitalists in Los Angeles Concerts.

Los Angeles, Oct. 25.—Four of the five numbers played by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra at their second concert, conducted by Walter Henry Rothwell, were heard for the first time in this city. Works by Glazounow, Rabaud, and, with the aid of Thalia Sabanieva, soloist, selections from Rimsky-Korsakoff and Glinka were offered for the approval of the audience which filled the auditorium.

Edwin Schallert considered the program exceptional, and wrote that Mr. Rothwell's conducting "has gained notably this year." The conductor was commended by the Examiner for his "fine musicianship . . . and for his exceedingly fine reading" of Glazounow's Sixth Symphony. Mme. Sabanieva's singing of the Hymn to the Sun and the Cavatina and Rondo from Glinka's opera, A Life for the Tsar, received laudatory comment. The reviewer in the Express was pleased with the flexibility and clearness of her voice in spite of the fact that the singer was just recovering from a cold. However, Mme. Sabanieva has a voice "of real quality and handled her offerings with skill," thought the Daily News commentator, and she was recalled by an appreciative audience.

The Zoellner Quartet gave the first recital of the Coleman Chamber Concert series this season. The reviewers found the Quartet even better than before and thought the concert an auspicious start for the series.

Claire Dux who sang here recently was hailed by Francis Kendig of the Times as a "great artist." Her voice, according to this reviewer, "is pure and clear in quality, but in certain of the German lieder . . . she colored the tones with unusual richness and mellowness." Mme. Dux had to respond with numerous encores.

The first of the popular concerts of the Philharmonic was conducted by Mr. Rothwell in the auditorium last Tuesday. Marjorie Dodge, soprano, was soloist with the orchestra. She sang selections from Debussy's Prodigal Son and from Pagliacci. The orchestra played the Prelude and Love Death from Tristan, Tschaikowsky's 1812 Overture, Massenet's Neapolitan Scenes, and the Coronation March from Le Prophete.

The reviewer of the Examiner found "moments of great lyric beauty" in the singing of Miss Dodge, and the writer of the Express praised her "warmth of tone and brilliancy." The reviewers were unanimous in praise of the work of orchestra and conductor, and the auditorium was filled despite the warm weather.

Among the recitalists of the week were Ina Bourskaya, soprano, and Gregor and Alexander Cherniavsky, violinist and pianist. Edwin Schallert in the Times thought that Mme. Bourskaya's best talent is for the operatic stage, but her program, as much as it restrained her in this reviewer's opinion, "exhibited the oft-so triumphingly effulgent quality of her voice."

The Cherniavsky concert drew a large audience, and the newspaper writers agreed in their praise. The Times report said, "Gregor Cherniavsky produces a tone of warmth and beauty," although this writer felt at time the virtuoso more than the artist. The consensus was also that Alexander Cherniavsky is "an extraordinary acompanist."

A concentrated effort is being made, following the recent success of the community chorus concert in Hollywood Bowl, to form a tremendous choral organization in Los Angeles by combining into one group all the leading singing societies in the city. The leaders of the various organizations are meeting late this week to consider the proposition.

Sokoloff Conducts First Pop Concert of Season

Cleveland, Nov. 4.—The first "pop" concert of the season was given in Masonic Hall Sunday afternoon by the Cleveland Orchestra, Nikolai Sokoloff conducting. The soloists were Marie Simmelink, contralto, and Arthur Beckwith, concertmaster.

Starting with the Euryanthe overture, by Weber, and ending with Liszt's Les Preludes, the concert, wrote Eleanor Clarage in the Times, "moved along at a swift pace with never a moment that was not wholly delightful." Debussy's Afternoon of a Faun, Strauss' Tales From the Vienna Woods and Rachmaninoff's Vocalise were also on the program. To James H. Rogers, of the Plain Dealer, it seemed that conductor Sokoloff and his orchestra were especially fond of playing the Strauss music. He found a "delectable lilt and sway" in the performance. Archie Bell, of the News, lauded Miss Simmelink's rendition of an aria from Jeanne d'Arc.

The Denishawn Dancers were cordially welcomed at their appearance here last week. Wilson G. Smith in the Press said he realized that it was unnecessary to comment on the art and popularity of the dancers who, he thinks, have "elevated the terpsichorean art to a psychological status." Another recent concert was that of the Cleveland String Quartet, assisted by the Woodwind Ensemble from the Symphony orchestra. There were two novelties on the program: a string quartet by Vaughan Williams; and an octet for wind instruments by Beethoven which has never before been played here. James H. Rogers found the performance a wholly admirable one, "warm in tone, discreet, and well-balanced."

VIRGINIA C. THOMAS

Appeared in an Organ Recital in Town Hall, New York, Last Week.

Start Wagner Series.

The first performance of the series of Wagner Operas by the English Grand Opera Company was given yesterday evening at Carnegie Hall. The opera presented was Rheingold. Walkure, Siegfried, and Gotterdammerung will follow on sucessive Mondays. The series will be given also on Thursday afternoons, beginning November 13.

Reiner Conducts Wagner Program

Cincinnati Orchestra Gives First Popular Concert Before Crowded House.

Cincinnati, Nov. 4.—The popularity of the all-Wagner program was again demonstrated here last Sunday when Fritz Reiner conducted the first of the popular concerts of the Cincinnati Symphony in Music Hall. The program opened with the Meistersinger Prelude, and included selections from operas of the Ring.

Carl Adams, writing in the Enquirer, had nothing but praise for Mr. Reiner and his men, who played, he said, "with all the requisite spirit and energy," revealing "all the inherent beauties of the music."

"Mr. Reiner is a Wagner expert and an orchestra director among the first of the art world today," was the judgment of Mrs. W. P. Smith, who reviewed the concert in the Times-Star.

Mrs. Lillian T. Plogstedt, the reviewer of the Post, referred in glowing terms to the performance of the Meistersinger Prelude, and praised especially the clear treatment of the contrapuntal passages, which "were developed with masterly sense of dynamic proportion" in her opinion.

B. G.

STELLA de METTE

MEZZO-SOPRANO

Formerly with Metropolitan Opera

Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.

Exclusive Management of
ANTHONY BAGAROZY
Aeolian Hall New York

The Washington Heights Musical Club

JANE R. CATHCART, Founder President

announces a series of

CONCERTS AND RECITALS

including a

Benefit for the MacDowell Colony

PETERBORO', N. H.

to be given at

AEOLIAN HALL

on the following dates
at 8:15 P. M.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1924

TUESDAYS——1925

JANUARY 6, JANUARY 27, MARCH 10, APRIL 14

RECITAL ARTISTS

MICHAEL ANSELMO, Violin
ETHEL GROW, Contralto
Charles Albert Baker at the piano
RUTH KEMPER, Violin
Arthur Loesser at the piano
EDWARD KREINER, Viola
Assisted by Fritz Reiner

Concert Artists will be announced later

SINGLE TICKETS

Parquet, $1.50 and $2.00 Balcony, 50c., 75c. and $1.00
Boxes, $15.00

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES

Parquet, $7.50 and $10.00 Balcony, $3.00 and $5.00
Boxes $75.00

War tax 10 per cent extra. On sale at Box office.

NOTE—One-sixth of all subscriptions, and the proceeds of the Concert of April 14th, 1925, will be given to the MacDowell Colony.

RUDOLPH POLK

AMERICAN VIOLINIST

Exclusive Management: S. HUROK, INC., Aeolian Hall, New York.

Toscha Seidel in Scandinavia

THE FOLLOWING NOTICES, appearing in the Christiania daily newspapers on the recent playing of Toscha Seidel in that city, were received direct from the violinist. He wrote that they are translations of the complete reviews. But Mr. Seidel forgot to send with the typed translations the original clippings from the newspapers. They are published just as translated for Mr. Seidel, who is still concertizing in Europe.

From "Aftenposten," 4th Sept., 1924.

Toscha Seidel had of course a full house for his concert in the University Hall yesterday evening, for he is one of the pronounced favourites of our public, one of those who are not forgotten, even when several years elapse between each visit.

The young master-violinist has now appeared once again in Christiania and has charmed with his brilliant art the keenly-interested musical public of our city.

Toscha Seidel's playing is especially characterized by ardent feeling, often rising to impetuous passion. He reels out no conventional phrases, academic coldness is alien to him, he cannot stand unmoved by the music he interprets; on the contrary, one feels that he always lives in the message he is conveying at the moment by his notes, and these notes seem to flow up from the depths of his heart with the unstudied freshness of improvisation.

His technique Toscha Seidel has, as we know, acquired when he was still a child. Now he is a perfect virtuoso, and there lies intense power in his broad strokes, while his tones are at once powerful and ingratiating.

There was only one novelty on his program yesterday: "Indian Snake-Dance" by Burleigh, a very beautiful and attractive number, with its broad ballet-music style. With this composition the violinist completely captured his audience. It had to be played twice, and afterwards there were constantly increasing demands for encores, which were also for the most part acceded to.

Otherwise, all the works, both great and small, were brilliantly executed. We heard a concerto by Nardini, of the old Italian school, who seems of late to have come into fashion again. Also Saint-Saens' great and effective concerto in H-minor, a romanza and rondine by Beethoven, a Hungarian dance by Brahms-Joachim, as well as Wieniawsky's polonaise in D-major, besides extra numbers.

Hjalmar Borgstrom.

From "Dagbladet," 4th Sept., 1924.

Violin.

Toscha Seidel is a mighty master of his instrument. We have followed his development since he was a yard high, the infant prodigy from the early days of the war, and it is almost with a kind of parental pride that we read of his triumphs all over the world.

His art must now be measured by the highest standard. Toscha Seidel is a dazzling virtuoso, but the vital point is that the artist in him proves to be greater still. In a young musician's development this will always be the critical point. He may amaze us with his unrivalled dexterity with bow and left hand, but we note that this is a secondary matter and merely a means for the violinist, while the tone, the self-abandonment, the music, the soul are for him the most important. At the proper moment there can be a sweetness and beauty, an intensity and a noble, simple purity in Toscha Seidel's interpretation that are absolutely bewitching.

From "Tidens Tegn," 4th Sept., 1924.

Concert.

One of the darlings of the Christiania musical public, Toscha Seidel, yesterday gave a concert in the University Hall. He has advanced still further since his last visit and now stands at the summit of his art. He is a master of the violin, with that we have said everything. It is unnecessary to speak further of his beautiful, rich, luxuriant tones, his brilliant command of technique, his sound musical interpretation, perfect phrasing and glowing temperament. All this we know from before. Only it all appears in an intensified degree. To this, no doubt, the magnificent instrument he uses also contributes its share.

The program gave Seidel an opportunity of displaying with brilliance the most various sides of his rich talent. Arne van Erpekum Sem.

From "Morgenbladet," 4th Sept., 1924.

Concert.

The golden violin,—the name is a good expression for Toscha Seidel's splendid instrument and for the notes he draws forth from it. Like golden sunbeams they bring with them light and pure air. Like light and air they banish everything that is unwholesome and impure, and remove all the masses of gray dust that may have been deposited in the minds of men during the daily struggle for existence. Everything is bright and radiant. In an elegiac song like the wonderful second movement in Pietro Nardini's "Violin Concerto" these tones disclose to us a glimpse into the finest and tenderest feelings of the heart. Or else they soar aloft as in Saint-Saens' "Concerto in H-Minor" and in Beethoven's "Romance" and "Rondino." A flight of such irresistible power that the hearers long to follow this heaven-aspiring violinist up to the heights.

The renewal of acquaintanceship between Toscha Seidel and his friends took place yesterday in the University Hall under the most pleasant circumstances. The densely-packed house testified its joy at this meeting after 3 long years of separation. It was one of the great events in the musical life of the city.

From "Orebladet," 4th Sept., 1924.

Concert.

Toscha Seidel is something apart. We have heard a legion of splendid violinists since he made his debut here, but his power is just as wonderful as ever. Had he lived in the dark Middle Ages he would have been burned alive as a wizard,—if indeed he had not at the last moment bewitched even his executioners. In the presence of such genuine, all-conquring art it is purposeless to go into details. Toscha Seidel is, in short, the chosen darling of the Muses; he has already brought the world to his feet. What is it that effects this? Perhaps the fact that he does not merely play his pieces, but lives in them, with life and body. He weeps with the composers, laughs with them, worships with them. Can we wonder that people become enthusiastic almost to madness.

Seidel's new violin is a miracle. Since it has cost its owner 25,000 dollars, it is, to be sure, more or less in duty bound to sound like a voice from heaven. And it really does so. Its tone is to a rare degree soft and ingratiating, but at the same time it revels in festive splendour. In chord-playing it sounds as full-tones as an entire orchestra. A more beautiful D-string I do not think I have ever heard on any violin. And its flageolet-notes really sound like tones "from another world."

IN AMERICA SEASON 1925-1926

Management

WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, Inc.

250 West 57th Street, New York

Steinway Piano

Pacific 231 Played By N.Y. Symphony

Walter Damrosch Introduces Honegger Novelty at First Concert; Easton With Orchestra.

Honegger's Pacific 231 was played for the first time in New York at the opening concert of the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch conducting, at Carnegie Hall October 31. The other novelty on the program, which consisted of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, Vaughan Williams' Fantasie on a Theme of Thomas Tallis and d'Indy's Istar variations, was Debussy's L'Isle Joyeuse, transcribed for full orchestra by Bernardino Molinari.

The critics were divided in their reactions toward Pacific 231.

Lawrence Gilman of the Tribune was enthusiastic over the Honegger composition. He thought the music was made "so thrilling, so puissant, so genuinely moving" by the genius that gave a "rhapsodic paean in praise of the creative energy of the human soul." Mr. Damrosch and the orchestra, wrote Mr. Gilman, "played the piece with gusto and virtuosity." The music did not seem so important to Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram and Mail, who doubted, conceding the interest a first hearing had, if anyone would care to hear it again. Deems Taylor in the World did not agree with Mr. Sanborn, but felt that the music was "highly important, the first completely successful attempt to express machinery in terms of music." Lined up with Mr. Sanborn was W. J. Henderson of the Sun. Mr. Henderson considered the work "amazingly poor music and assuredly not worth talking about" and predicted that it "will soon be forgotten."

The Times reviewer, Olin Downes, who considered Pacific 231 "successful" and an "amusing jeu d'esprit," was particularly pleased with L'Isle Joyeuse, "music that might have been wafted from the Island of Cytherea." Mr. Downes complimented Mr. Damrosch and the orchestra for their moving and skillful entertainment.

Florence Easton was the soloist of the orchestra's second concert in Aeolian Hall November 2. "Miss Easton was in glorious voice and left her hearers in a state of happiness," wrote the Post reviewer. The program began with Mendelssohn's Fingal's Cave overture, followed by Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Mme. Easton sang Deh vieni non tardar from Mozart's The Marriage of Figaro and the finale from Wagner's The Twilight of the Gods. Pacific 231 was played for the second time.

Honor Piccadilly Conductor

A dinner in honor of Mischa Guterson, conductor of the Piccadilly Theatre Orchestra, was given last Saturday evening in the home of the Marquis of Irosa in New York. A number of musicians were present.

Josef Lhevinne in New York Recital

Pianist Plays Schumann Carnaval, Mozart, and Chopin; Audience Overflows to Stage.

An audience which filled Carnegie Hall and over-flowed to the stage welcomed Josef Lhevinne, pianist, at his first recital here on Nov. 2. "An outstanding pianist, Mr. Lhevinne preserved the high standard that has marked his playing in past seasons with a happy combination of expressive vigor, color and fluent, polished technique." This statement in the Herald-Tribune review is a fair exemplification of press comment. The World lauded him as not only a "musician's musician," but an artist with the power to communicate his art to the layman. The Mozart Andantino was made, said this reviewer, "a tender and living thing, and Schumann's Carnaval flashed its contrasting colors under his smooth and powerful command."

Mr. Lhevinne "surpassed himself" in the Schumann work, agreed the Times reviewer, who noticed the same quality of "taking his audience deep into his confidence" that was commented on in the World. He was eager, according to the Times, "to make his hearers aware of the beauty that stirred him, and he re-created that beauty with a sincerity and mastery that more than compassed their ends." The Post was another paper to comment on his ability to give his message "just as clearly and delightfully to the layman." The lack of "mere virtuosity" in his playing delighted the Times reviewer, who found that "even in passages of technical purpose, there was individuality and musical color."

The program also included a Chopin group, three pieces by I. Albeniz, Debussy and Rubinstein.

Easton Orchestra Starts.

Easton, Nov. 1.—The first concert of the season by the Easton Symphony Orchestra, of which Earl Laros is conductor, was given on Oct. 28 at the Orpheum Theatre. J. Ellsworth Sliker, baritone, was soloist with the orchestra in two Tschaikowsky songs; and Helena Schiff, pianist, played in Liszt's Hungarian Fantasy. Dawes' Melody in A, Weber's Jubel Overture, Grainger's Irish Tune from County Derry and Shepherd's Hey, and Mozart's E flat symphony made up the rest of the program.

Gigli Sings in Akron.

Akron, November 2.—Opening the concert course of Windsor-Poling in this city, Beniamino Gigli, tenor, gave a recital at the Akron Armory on Oct. 23. A reception by leading citizens of Akron was accorded the tenor immediately after his concert.

FRANCE GOLDWATER

Concert Manager on the Pacific Coast, Who Will Be California Representative of Arthur and Harry Culbertson.

Music of the Movies

Included in the anniversary program which is celebrating this week the fifth year of the Capitol Theatre is the presentation of an elaborate music accompaniment. The Overture 1812 of Tschaikowsky is being played by the orchestra, and the theatre ballet is doing a number to the Dance of the Hours, from Gioconda. Compositions by Geoffrey, O'Hara and Grieg are also being sung.

On the musical program of the Piccadilly Theatre is a presentation of a Paganini concerto by E. Beerman, concertmaster of the orchestra. Joseph Turin, tenor, is singing Vesti la Guiba from Pagliacci.

Several songs by various artists, and a violin selection by Rosa Polnariow are on the Rivoli bill this week, and Eileen Van Biene, soprano, former prima donna of Maytime, is singing two songs at each performance at the Rialto.

Karsavina Makes American Debut

Russian Dancer Formerly of the Diaghileff Troupe Appears in New York.

Thamar Karsavina, Russian dancer who succeeded Pavlowa as head of the Imperial Ballet at Moscow, appeared in New York for the first time at Carnegie Hall November 1. Mme. Karsavina was assisted by her partner Pierre Vladimiroff and a small symphony orchestra under the direction of Sepp Morscher.

Both performers, to quote the World, "brought with them the fantastic color and life which have characterized their school" and presented an "unusually interesting program" of Russian dances and music. Pitts Sanborn, writing in the Telegram-Mail, said, "She was lovely to look upon; always her presence and dancing were in character . . . everything she did was instinct with grace." In a dance arranged for Mozart's Serenade, Mme. Karsavina, "assisted in irreproachable fashion by Vladimiroff, gave a most effective performance," according to the Post. F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune thought the performance marked by a "striking degree of curvilinear grace, agility and fine sense of rhythm." After a slight self-consciousness at first, wrote Olin Downes in the Times, the dancer, a woman of "much personal beauty and of a brilliant technique," became more brilliant in her performances "and the cordiality of the beholders grew." Mr. Vladimiroff was particularly praised for his interpretation of the Greek warrior dance.

Mme. Karsavina danced in "striking" costumes to music by Glazonuoff, Borodin, Bach, Mozart, Lanner, Goossens, Delibes and others. The performance of Goossens' The Hurdy-Gurdy Man was well received.

ALMA BECK

Contralto

"The haunting loveliness of her voice will remain with her audience long."—The Cincinnati Tribune.

Bookings for Season 1924-1925 may be secured through

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON

Fisk Bldg. New York City

Pennsylvania Bldg. Philadelphia, Pa.

KOLITSCH

Management: Antonia Sawyer, Inc,. Aeolian Hall, New York

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Renee Thornton

At her recital at Aeolian Hall, October 30, Renee Thornton had for her accompanist her husband, Richard Hageman. The large audience warmly applauded Mme. Thornton's program, which included Mr. Hageman's song, Me Company Along, which, according to the Sun, is "brilliantly written" for voice and piano accompaniment.

The reviewers were agreed that the soprano's interpretation was excellent. Alison Smith of the World felt that Mme. Thornton's singing showed "earnestness of interpretation," while the Sun reviewer, who found that "refinement featured her style generally," considered that she showed "sensitive regard" for the texts of most of the songs. Mme. Thornton's "personal charm was communicative," wrote H. F. P. in the Telegram and Mail, and her interpretation of lighter songs was pleasing. The Times spoke of her singing as "pleasing her admirers greatly." The recital which the singer gave last spring suggested that she would be well worth another hearing, and her second recital proved it, said the Tribune. Her singing, to quote this paper, "indicated considerable progress and development . . . especially in volume. Strength and resonance has been added to the clearness and fluency of her tone."

Ralph Leopold

A novelty in the form of five short pieces composed by Mozart at the age of eight years was the feature of the program at the recital of Ralph Leopold, pianist, at Town Hall on October 29. The reviewers were enthusiastic over the simplicity and finish of these compositions, the "brightness and sparkle" of which were well brought out in the "fluent, polished playing of Mr. Leopold," as the Tribune expressed it. This paper said the pianist gave his familiar impression of "skillful, clear-cut technique."

Mr. Leopold, who played with "comprehensive taste and skill," was applauded by an appreciative audience, according to the Times. The five Mozart sketches, said the World, were played with a "tender and solicitous concern for their revival that was thoroughly captivating." In Bach's Partita in B flat he "played crisply and with authority," wrote the Sun reviewer, who also felt that, as the evening progressed, his increasing confidence brought to his performance "some effective coloring and a commendable control of dynamics. His sense of shading and expression was applied to many of his offerings with much skill."

PERSIS COX
Pianist and Teacher
Address: Pierce Building
Copley Square, Boston, Mass.
and
Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass.
Baldwin Piano Welte-Mignon Records

Fisk Jubilee Singers

The Fisk University Jubilee Singers of Nashville gave a recital at Town Hall on October 31. The membership of the singers includes James A. Myers, leader and first tenor; Mrs. Myers, contralto; Carl Barbour, tenor; Horatio O'Bannon, baritone, and Ludie D. Collins, bass. The program, which was sung without accompaniment, numbered many well-known negro spirituals and arrangements of negro songs by Harry Burleigh and Frank La Forge.

A feature of this choir, composed of negro singers, was, according to F. D. Perkins of the Tribune, their "devotion and sincerity" and the lack of anything "stagey." Mr. Perkins also felt "a distinct and effective racial note" as well as the "unity, quality of tone and expressive shading" of the choir. The Sun reviewer wrote that the melodic appreciation of their songs was "exquisite" and that "the musical quality and unanimity of their voices in ensemble" challenged all criticism. The haunting beauty of the spirituals sung by the choir was especially commented on by the Times. Alison Smith of the World was delighted with the "spontaneous, instinctive delight in their song" which the singers brought into their interpretations.

James Myers gave some readings and made remarks on negro folk music.

Roland Hayes

A large audience attended the concert given by Roland Hayes, negro tenor, at Carnegie Hall October 27. Mr. Hayes sang a Mozart aria, Schubert, Schumann, Wolf, Whelpley and a group of negro spirituals. This program he interpreted, read the Telegram and Mail review, with "the refined and persuasive art for which he is already famous."

Olin Downes of the Times discovered that Mr. Hayes "achieved his ends by excellent diction as well as vocal control, and by imagination and the instinct for the subtler and finer sides of the art of interpretation." Ernest Newman of the Post was disappointed in the negro spirituals. "In their simple state," he wrote, "they have the charm of all natural things in music. But they are becoming more and more overloaded with concert room sophistications." Mr. Newman found that Mr. Hayes' voice, "a lyric tenor of exquisite quality," has lost some of its "warmth and roundness" possibly because it has been overworked "physically and artistically."

Second Piccadilly Concert

The second of the series of Sunday Concerts at the Piccadilly Theatre, New York, was given on November 9 at 12:30 p. m. The program was all Russian, and ended with the Finale of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. Mischa Guterson directed.

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Florence Mulford

Florence Mulford, contralto, who has sung with the Metropolitan Opera, was heard in a recital at Aeolian Hall, October 31. Her "admirably arranged" program was "admirably sung," wrote the reviewer in the Sun. Beethoven's Song of Penitence "fell with particular grace on the ear," according to the writer in the Times, and Mme. Mulford's Brahms "had much of beauty" and sincerity. The Tribune praised Mme. Mulford as an "intelligent singer of expressive capacity . . . with considerable richness in the lower notes called for by Rhene-Baton's Tendresse." Chausson, Saint-Saens and Debussy were also represented in the French group, while the American numbers were by Edward Horsman, John Alden Carpenter and Richard Hageman, who was the accompanist of the afternoon.

Eva Gauthier

Aeolian Hall was the scene on October 30 of a recital by Eva Gauthier in a program including thirty-three distinct offerings, sixteen of which were sung in New York for the first time. Mme. Gauthier was assisted by Louis Edlin, violin; M. Belfort, second violin; Saul Sharrow, viola; Lucien Kirsch, 'cello; Lamar Stringfield, flute; William J. Ritchener, guitar, and Gordon Hampson at the piano.

Mme. Gauthier "was in good voice and showed her usual interpretative skill" to the great delight of her large audience, wrote F. D. Perkins in the Tribune. Deems Taylor found her "always interesting," and the Sun commended her "fine full tone and dramatic expression." Pitts Sanborn said the program gave this "inimitable artist" an opportunity for "sustained and legitimate song."

Lynwood Farnam

The night of the opening of the Metropolitan Opera is a poor night for recitals, but that of Lynwood Farnam, organist, at Town Hall was attended by a good-sized audience who were extremely cordial in their reception. Of his program, the Sun noted that it was one of particular interest to young organists in search of novelties. It was played, according to this paper, with good taste, Mr. Farnam's interpretations "being marked by dignity rather than attempts at effects of virtuosity." He divided his program between Bach and modern composers, opening with the scherzo from Widor's eighth symphony, followed by Reger's fantasia on a chorale.

The Tribune complimented Mr. Farnam on the quality of his performance, "finished, exact and expressive," and the Sun was especially impressed by his expert knowledge in the employment of stops and combinations and felt that his technic on manuals was especially good.

Hyman Rovinsky

"A refreshing originality in program making," to quote the Tribune, was shown by Hyman Rovinsky, pianist, in his recital at Aeolian Hall, November 1. Scriabin's fifth sonata was offered here for the first time and the march from Prokofieff's once-heard opera, The Love of the Three Oranges, was also heard

Mr. Rovinsky's concert was not only characterized by an unconventional program, continued the Tribune review, but also by the fact that he is a good pianist. The Sun considered that he showed talent, "not always judiciously guided," and his "good piano tone, technic and sincere musical devotion contrasted with occasional "violent exaggerations."

ANNE ROSELLE
PRIMA DONNA SOPRANO
Exclusive Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall New York City

RAFAELO DIAZ
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Management: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
HARDMAN PIANO

FRANCES PERALTA
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
MANAGEMENT: NATIONAL CONCERTS, INC., 1451 Broadway, New York

BUZZI-PECCIA
FOUNDATION OF THE OLD ITALIAN METHOD
VOICE DICTION PERSONALITY
33 WEST 67TH STREET NEW YORK

FREEMANTEL

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Frederic Lamond

Frederick Lamond, Scotch pianist, has become known as an exponent of Beethoven. He gave another concert of music by that composer only last Wednesday evening in Aeolian Hall. His program included the Sonatas Op. 106, 26 and 57. The Times review struck the keynote among the reports of the concert: "It was a reading from Beethoven as if from classic poets, sincere and erudite, restrained and reverent, singularly happy in appealing to the highest interest in art against popular flaunting of interpreters." The Herald Tribune was astonished that when "Lamond plays familiar things, you find yourself hearing them for the first time." He praised the control of mood in Mr. Lamond's interpretation of the Appassionata.

The fact that the audience was not depressed by any "academic atmosphere" was taken by the reviewer in the World as an indication that Mr. Lamond is in touch with the "great heroic heart of Beethoven." The Sun reporter summed up his feelings in the remark, "It sounded Beethovenian," and said further, "Mr. Lamond's finger technic may not have been of the latest mode, nor his emotional warmth over dramatic in color; but he grasped the outlines of the work as a whole completely, he showed admirable regard for rhythm, accent and shading and his style had pure beauty."

The audience was large and appreciative.

Zlatko Balokovic

Zlatko Balokovic, young Croatian violinist, who is remembered as having given sixteen recitals within a month here last season, was heard in recital at Carnegie Hall last Tuesday. Commenting on the concert, the Tribune reviewer found in Mr. Balokovic certain "obvious merits—sincerity and warmth of feeling, a good tone, a musicianly and modest attitude toward the music that he interprets." This commentator was of the opinion that the artist is potentially a poet, although he has yet to learn repose of style and self-command.

The Sun found his tone especially "admirable" in passages of Mozart's Concerto in D and John Ireland's first sonata, which was given with Miriam Allen, pianist. His technic and phrasing was good, and his intonation "excellent." This paper also said, "the warmth and color Mr. Balokovic is able to impart to certain readings" is always attractive, as is his sincerity toward his art. The Times found evidence of his "romantic style and stirring tone" in Herbert Hughes' Irish Air and Manojlovic's The War Widow's Lament.

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

Clara Haskil

Technic was the outstanding feature of the piano recital of Clara Haskil in Aeolian Hall on the afternoon of Nov. 2, according to the reviews. The two numbers of which "her flying fingers" particularly impressed were the Bach-Busoni Toccata, Adagia and Fugue in C sharp and Schumann s Symphonic Etudes. Although the Bach was given a "forcible and vigorous performance" at what "seemed the highest possible" speed, said the Herald Tribune report, there was "ample delicacy when necessary." The Times writer believed that the "Schumann escaped Miss Haskil," but that on the other hand "her Chopin group was really captivating." The Sun found "impressive vitality" and a "wide range of dynamics" together with a tendency to overdo speed and vigor, but this reviewer was certain that Miss Haskil is an artist of talent.

Joyce Bannerman

The debut at Aeolian Hall on Nov. 1 of Joyce Bannerman, young American soprano who has sung in London, received favorable comment from the press. Miss Bannerman, according to the Sun, gave a "tasteful and interesting program" which showed to good advantage her voice, which is "well-placed" with a clear tone. This reviewer predicted a successful future for the singer after further study because of her "talent and charm." The Herald Tribune was pleased with her voice with its "pleasant freshness and, at its best, a clear tone of ample carrying power." The "scholarship" displayed by the unusual songs on her program was praised in the Times. This paper found Miss Bannerman's voice somewhat uneven, but her interpretation, as well as her "clear phrasing and diction," came in for laudatory comment.

Miss Bannerman, who was accompanied by Walter Golde, sang works by Donaudy, Mozart, Schumann, Bellini, and shorter modern music.

Jascha Fishberg

Jascha Fishberg, violinist, gave a recital in Town Hall, New York, on Nov. 2, and "proved himself an excellent player of the serious type, very simple and earnest, drawing a powerful tone in the Conus Concerto and the Sinding Suite," to quote the review of the Times. The writer in the Sun felt "authority and a generally good command of violin technic and style" in his playing, and said further that his pitch was admirable." The report of the Herald-Tribune agreed with the others in commendation of "the broad smooth tone and dexterous technic" of the violinist. Gregory Ashman was the accompanist.

Albert Spalding

In the recital given by Albert Spalding in Carnegie Hall November 2, the critical audience discovered, in the words of the Sun commentator, "the mature fruit of a slowly ripened and soundly founded art." Ranking him among the leading half-dozen violinists in "active service," F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune considered that Mr. Spalding had developed "a mellow tone of unusual breadth and volume." The Sun further praised "the warmth, the maturity, the broad-bowing and the full, sonorous tone which Mr. Spalding wrought in the Veracini and Brahms sonatas."

The novelty offered on the program was Notturno Adriatico by Mario Castlenuovo-Tedesco, "lyric, undulating, and a little long," said Mr. Perkins. The World asserted that the violinist's "variety and purity of tone and the grace of his phrasing" had never been more apparent than in this program which included the Brahms sonata in D minor, his own Polonaise in D, Debussy's Minstrels and Boulanger's Nocturne. The audience insisted on numerous encores to which Mr. Spalding generously responded.

The Post chronicler was surprised to find that not the least of the pleasure given by the violinist was due to his avoidance of theatrical methods.

Chaim Kotylansky Sings

A large audience was on hand for the program of Yiddish and Russian folksongs which Chaim Kotylansky presented on November 2 in Town Hall. Mr. Kotylansky sang a number of the hundreds of songs which he has collected in personal research. Mischa Mischakoff, concertmaster of the New York Symphony Orchestra, assisted, and the accompanist was Yascha Samnos.

Mischa-Leon

In a varied and unconventional program, Mischa-Leon, tenor of the Paris Opera, made his American debut at Aeolian Hall October 31 with Walter Golde at the piano. "A sure and sensitive instinct for the dramatic texture of a song," as the Herald-Tribune put it, was felt by the reviewers to be the outstanding characteristic of his art. He also has the power, said the Herald Tribune, to communicate this quality to his audience with warmth and imagination.

The Sun agreed that Mischa-Leon revealed "genuine dramatic instinct" and added that he proved himself an artist "who has carried delicacy of phrasing, clear diction, pianissimo and sensitive shading to a high point of development." The reviewer in the Times discovered him to be "an agreeable and persuasive young singer."

Open Herbert Concert Series

A concert by the Letz Quartet on Oct. 28 opened the series of eight programs being presented at the Greenwich Village Theatre on Sunday evening by Emile W. Herbert. The quartet, consisting of Hans Letz, Edwin Bachmann, Lilian Schubert, and Horace Britt, presented a program of Haydn, Brahms, and Ravel, and, according to the Times review, "played with smooth ensemble and accustomed ease."

The second concert of the series took place on Nov. 2, a program of spirituals being presented by the Elkins Negro Ensemble.

Hageman Engaged for Orchestras

Richard Hageman, conductor and vocal teacher, will be guest conductor with the Buffalo Symphony Orchestra on November 16. One week later he will conduct a concert of the Philharmonic Society Orchestra of Philadelphia.

RAYMOND HAVENS Pianist
Solist with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 8 performances
Soloist with CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 2 performances
Soloist with MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 3 performances
For Dates and Terms Address:
EVELYN LIGHT, Sec. 87 Pinckney St., Boston, Mass.

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones Aeolian Hall, New York
Aeolian-Vocalion Records

Anton BILOTTI Pianist
London Debut Recital, November 27th
Management: Lionel Powell & Holt, London, England
Steinway Piano Welte-Mignon Records Exclusively

ELSA ALSEN
Famous Wagnerian Dramatic Soprano
FIRST N. Y. RECITAL—Evening of November 25 at Aeolian Hall
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG 1425 Broadway, New York City

RUTH ST. DENIS with TED SHAWN and the Denishawn Dancers
Season 1924-1925 Now Booking
Pacific Coast Tour Nov. 24—Jan. 10 Already Booked
Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO

JEANNE GORDON

©Mishkin, N. Y.

"All the temperament and technique and voice that made her a Metropolitan favorite for six years."

—Omaha, Neb., News, April 13th, 1924.

"Jeanne Gordon received an amazing ovation from a packed house. Not since Galli Curci sang here has London heard a voice of such rare beauty, amazing in its purity of tone. . . . She moves her audience by its sheer loveliness, and sometimes by dramatic force. Her voice is God-given. . . . Her dramatic ability was proven. The audience became tense in its interest, and sat almost breathless until the final phrase was sung. The concert was one of the finest ever presented."—London, Ontario, Advertiser, October 3, 1924.

"She sang with immense enthusiasm and delight, with a versatility and ease that mastered many forms of composition. One cannot recall another contralto of such range that may boast so fragile, so elfin, so spirituelle a caliber. . . . 'My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice' was a glorious bit of singing, each throbbing note more telling. . . . Here were displayed alike dramatic brilliance, resonance of tone, amazing flexibility, an intelligence that lent dignity and restraint to every passage and a personality that made every climax a triumph."—The Free Press, London, Ontario, October 3, 1924.

"True musical feeling and fine intelligence at all times."—St. Paul, Minn., News, October 17, 1924.

"Rich vocal beauty . . . twin asset of thoroughly recognizable intelligence and dramatic understanding."—St. Paul, Minn., Press, October 17, 1924.

"She sang the seductive 'Habanera' and the 'Seguidilla' arias with a warmth of tone and beauty of diction that caused an immediate response in the audience. It had the effortless spontaneity and depth and breadth of tone that the part calls for and seldom gets. . . . The applause was quick and demonstrative and long continued."—New York Evening Post, January 21, 1924.

"Miss Gordon represents a certain type of American artist who is usurping the laurels of foreign-born singers at the Metropolitan. There is about her something which sets her apart from all other artists. Her voice is a rich contralto of unusual range and power. . . . Through her program she won her audience with much really extraordinary vocalism. Jeanne Gordon is an artist with a glorious organ."—Los Angeles, Cal., Times, April 23, 1924.

"JEANNE GORDON SUPERB ARTIST:—The real thing, the authentic artist is Jeanne Gordon. Whole hearted enthusiasm, verging on an ovation—last night's audience succumbed before the talents of a great artist. She sweeps her audience off its feet. She has that Godgiven, undefinable thing which is spirit. Nothing more beautiful was ever heard than her 'Plaisir d'Amour.' Miss Gordon's voice shows all its most wonderful qualities—fullness, roundness, resonance, rich power. 'Les Filles de Cadiz' brought the audience to her feet. There were 'Bravos,' a completely unrestrained enthusiasm in the applause."—Los Angeles Examiner, April 23, 1924.

"Jeanne Gordon, contralto, drew a packed Philharmonic auditorium. In 'Les Filles de Cadiz' there was a memory of her deep organ quality which won her instant recognition."—Los Angeles, Cal., Herald, April 23, 1924.

"Came nearest to perfection of music and perfection of singing. . . . There was a thrill."—El Paso Herald, April 18, 1924.

"Jeanne Gordon, a distinctly individual type, fascinated a large audience with a voice of velvety tones which she employed to the very best advantage. She is a thoroughly delightful, finished and polished artist. Her contralto voice is velvety, rich, flexible and expressive. . . . Kipling's 'The Looking Glass,' a vivid, colorful word and tone painting, Miss Gordon sang quite superbly."—El Paso, Tex., Times, April 18, 1924.

". . . Miss Gordon has the art of swaying her audience . . . in 'Home, Sweet Home,' she achieved a thing of beauty and joy forever."—Omaha, Neb., News, April 13, 1924.

CERTIFIED BY THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Management: National Concerts, Inc,, 1451 Broadway, New York
Samuel Geneen, President

VICTOR RECORDS KNABE PIANO

THE

Concert-Giving Industry

Article X.

CONCLUSION

THIS ARTICLE is the final one in the Concert-Giving Industry series which, with this its current issue, The Musical Digest has been pubpublishing for the last ten consecutive weeks. The data assembled and arrayed for the benefit of the readers of this journal was not meant to be exhaustive; to have gone into too minute details would have made needlessly fatiguing reading. But the substance of what most persons like to have spread before them has been incorporated in the ten articles; and this material therefore has covered what is vital, as well as what is of interest: to artist-attractions, wholesale music bureau managers, local managements, and that part of the public which is deeply concerned in concert activities.

From the first article to the last the prime endeavor has been to print the facts, and to refrain from making suggestions. What little of that nature which has appeared has really been of the "fact" classification, since it has emanated from those belonging to one of three foremost groups engaged in concerts given in this country, and almost invariably has reflected the outcome of effort and experience.

Articles Termed Comprehensive

The series, in its entirety, has been pronounced preeminently comprehensive by many discerning persons—persons competent to speak authoritatively. And they have all emphasized in particular the constructive character of what has been set forth.

So keen was the interest manifested in these articles that before the publication of the fourth one inquiries began coming into The Musical Digest . . . in which the definite question was asked: "Has The Musical Digest a solution for the problems now existing in the industry?"

There has at no time been any thought to that end by The Musical Digest. At the very outset the specific statement was made in these columns (the first in the foreword which preceded the introductory article, and thereafter in subsequent articles) that whatever remedies appeared to be needed would have to be worked out by those directly concerned; that it would in all probability require much time and conferring among those directly concerned, who might finally evolve a betterment of those conditions admitted by the majority of those directly concerned as requiring betterment.

If these articles have helped, or if they can help, in shedding a little more light generally through the assembling of invaluable data (which never before has been made available) then they will have served their purpose.

Several fundamental facts have been clearly shown in these articles, facts which none who are wise will pass over lightly. They are:

First: That despite excessive competition amongst artist-attractions; despite the annoyances and vexations and increased labors of wholesale bureau managers; despite the complaints of many local managements (individuals and organizations), the Concert-Giving Industry is fundamentally sound. It is unquestionably suffering, in certain respects, but it has not gone nor is it going "to the dogs."

Second: That changes in methods of operation are unquestionably in order—though precisely what they are all to be and how they are to be worked out is still problematic.

Additional Facts

Third: That amongst artist-attractions it is necessary for those who would succeed to possess abilities which are in widespread demand—whether the attraction be of the AAA-group or the C-group.

Fourth: That local managements (individuals and organizations) which are not utilizing their fullest possible resources in the conduct of their affairs cannot justifiably complain if they do not succeed.

Fifth: That most wholesale bureau managers are under heavy hardships because of the many peculiar conditions now surrounding their part of the industry, and also because of the excessive financial overhead they are compelled to carry.

Sixth: That the public is generally responsive to intelligently presented and persistent enlightenment as to the merit and entertainment appeal of artist-attractions of superior artistic character . . . despite the tendency of the public to patronize stars, or to go to hear and see something likely to impart a thrill or to provide something of a sensational nature.

Communications received lately by The Musical Digest state that some wholesale bureau managers have so "oversold" many communities that music attractions cannot hope to be "placed" in them for several years to come. Nor is that practise, according to the writers, of very recent origin.

Some Complaints

Statements of quite a different order have also been made: by word of mouth as well as in writing. Some of them come from the wholesale bureau managers, who point out treatment they receive—at the hands of both artist-attractions and local managements—which should not occur. And other statements emanate from artist-attractions, who have their objections to register.

The public—or those who form the real part of it—alone is silent in voicing complaint. The expressed opinions of a very small fractional portion of it have been conveyed, second-hand, to The Musical Digest; but those opinions are too few and too widely scattered to permit any conclusive deductions to be drawn from them.

And yet, in certain sections of the country, statistics disclose a waning interest on the part of the public in music attractions. It may be a temporary waning (it is to be hoped that this is so), but the fact in itself should prompt those chiefly concerned in that unfortunate turn of affairs to make a diagnosis of the causes . . . for their own best interests.

Changes in Musical Taste

There is enough evidence to lead to the belief that the public's demand for music, while still large and generously distributed geographically, has undergone something of a change . . . at least in certain localities. The recital is no longer as popular as it formerly was; and there is less opportunity for recitalists—excepting those artists of superlative powers or of unique popularity—than obtained up to about three years ago.

It is a fact, also, that miscellaneous concert offerings are commanding attention; and scenes from operas, and full performances of opera are now interesting the people as they have not in many years.

Recitals will always be in demand, and in large number. Concerts in which two or more artists participate must always be a staple. So too with the string quartets, and other chamber music groups. But for the moment a part of the public is in the mood for "something different;" at any rate, enough of it is so minded to have it make its effect in wholesale bureau offices which formerly had no such problem to meet.

There would be engagements enough for every artist-attraction if there were not so many now in this country. And business enough for the wholesale bureau managers, if competition weren't so keen. Likewise, in quite a number of communities one might find local managements better satisfied . . . if there were less opposition to face from competitors.

The Law of Demand and Supply

A very considerable part of the many difficulties simmer down to over-production. It is, all over again, the exercising of the fundamental economic law of supply and demand. That means that only the fittest can survive; those who have the courage and the resourcefulness and the talents to meet the situation. For the present, at least. In another year or two a different complexion may appear on the surface of the Concert-Giving Industry. Who can say that out of existing conditions some very great good may not come, to benefit the greatest number.

Just now we hear of the discontent because it is more general than it was during the period of years just preceding that which began some three seasons ago. Yet there are several millions of dollars paid into the wholesale bureau offices every twelve months. The business is huge; and it is certain to grow.

But the morrow always brings another day. It is right and proper to admit what is, for to try to cover up unpleasant facts is often dangerous to the safety of those who do so. Once a clear view is had of

(Continued on page 24)

EUROPEAN NEWS AND VIEWS

Rome to Hear Chamber Music

Operatic Activity in Italy Dulls as Companies Complete Season's Plans.

Milan.

In Rome, whence we had just returned, music has become silent for the moment, but the lull will shortly be followed by the November season at the Costanzi. The Augusteum, it appears, will be opened on November 21, and for its first presentation has been chosen the Verdi Requiem. At the same time with that of the Augusteum will proceed the season of chamber music at the Santa Cecilia. These concerts will be offered regularly every Friday, and will be elucidated by special lectures.

The regular concerts of the Regia Academia Filarmonica in Rome will be given weekly on Mondays. In all there will be twenty-two programs, the first to be given on November 10 by the Quartetto di Roma. This series will continue through until April 6, on which day Mozart's Requiem Mass, long unheard in Rome, will be sung. Next month a program of the Filarmonica will be devoted mostly to Mozart, and will include at least one string quartet and a quintet with clarinet. Other masterpieces already certain of performance are the first sextet of Brahms and Beethoven's quartet with two violas, both rarely played in Rome even at the Filarmonica concerts.

String Quartets to Play

In this series of concerts not only the Quartetto di Roma will take part, but also the Venetian Quartet and the Buxbaum Quartet. As for pianists, there will figure in the programs MM. Loyonnet and Gieseking, and, later, a youth by the name of Vito Volterra. Also the violoncellist, Foldesy, will give a concert, and one evening will be devoted to the appearance of the celebrated singer, Salomea Krusceni-sky.

In 1925 the centenaries of Palestrina and Scarlatti will take place, and it is the intention of musical Rome to celebrate these occasions with the greatest ceremony and solemnity. In Naples the celebration of Alessandro Scarlatti will most likely be emphasized. Considerable demand is already evident that the centenary of Scarlatti be marked by the revival of one of his operas, if possible a comedy. There is much regret among musicians in Italy that this composer is falling deeper and deeper into neglect as the years pass, and it is often pointed out that the most profound study of musical Italy of the seventeenth century is not being carried on by Italians at all, but by foreigners.

Gigli for Turandot

We hear from America that Giacomo Puccini has succeeded in getting Beniamino Gigli for the premiere of his Turandot this season at La Scala. Since Signor Gigli is tied up in the United States until the beginning of April, we may gather that the long awaited first performance of this Puccini work will probably be held off now until the latter part of April, if not the beginning of May.

The many opera companies in all part of Italy have by now pretty well established their plans for this season, and a number of them are already under way. In Milan the season of the Dal Verme is proceeding with a great deal of public favor, while in Bologna the repetitions of Nerone continue to be received enthusiastically. At the Regio in Parma this winter will be heard the following operas: Valkyries, the Damnation of Faust, Traviata, Aida, Piccolo Marat, and Massenet's Manon. Giuseppe Podesta will again be the chief conductor of this house. The Teatro Concordia of Cremona has on its lists Boris Godunoff, Loreley, Piccolo Marat, William Tell, and an opera of Verdi which is yet to be chosen. Franco Ghione will be the leading conductor there.

Other Cities

At the Politeama Rosetti in Trieste will be presented Aida, William Tell, Madam Butterfly, and Trovatore, all with Angelo Ferrari at the conductor's desk. In the same city the Verdi Theatre will offer both in a festival and in its regular season Dejanice, Tristan, Siegfried, Ernani, Herodiade, Tosca, Giocondo e il Suo Re, Gianni Schicchi, Traviata, Mignon, Adriana Lecouvreur, and Maria di Breval. The last named is an unpublished opera of the Trieste composer, Alberto Randegger. Another opera which is rather certain of presentation is Scampolo by Niccodeni, with music by Camussi. The conductor will be Gino Neri.

A new opera by Pasquale di Cagno, Frida, was given on October 18 at the Petruzzelli of Bari. The libretto to this piece is the work of Giuseppe Adami. The music was judged noteworthy for its expressive vigor and its striking lyric qualities, and the audience called out the artists and the conductor, Fortunato Russo, many times at the end of each of the three acts.

Rosa Raisa will sing next May in the Costanzi and not La Scala as has previously been reported. The opera chosen for her appearance is Norma.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

GEORGE MORGAN

Baritone

"Eagerly greeted by large audience"
—New York World

At Town Hall, October 28, 1924

PRESS COMMENTS:

Mr. Morgan sang with taste and intelligence showing himself able to effect deep moods and expression.—New York Herald Tribune.

His fine robust voice was revealed in German, French, Italian and English songs. He possesses quality and style and the knowledge that comes with sincere study and cultivation.—New York American.

He has an extraordinarily sensitive appreciation of the moods of his songs and the breadth of tone and authority to express it. And, above all the languors of these moods, his voice held the emotional certainty which brings out their true significance. He was eagerly greeted by a large audience.—New York World.

In the first Brahms song he displayed true musical dignity. Real dignity. In the last number of the group he touched the—shall I say—second theme, or second mood, with tones that were of very beautiful quality. The third song in this group had to be repeated and it was here, particularly, that this singer showed unmistakably vocal surety.—Theodore Stearns in the New York Telegraph.

Mr. Morgan in a flexible and cultivated baritone sang songs which elicited warm applause and encores.—New York Times.

His diction, the manner in which he pays respect to the words, as well as the music of a song, is a distinct pleasure. His voice is light, fluent, and yet possessed of dramatic quality and true emotional feeling.—New York Evening Bulletin.

He was effective in his French lyrics, singing with grace, tender accent and good diction. His breath control and portamento were admirable.—New York Sun.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Available for Recitals and Festivals

Exclusive Management: DANIEL MAYER Aeolian Hall, New York

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Gabriel Faure Dies in Paris

Paris.

The most important occurrence in the young music season took place this morning, Nov. 4. That was the death of Gabriel Faure, one of the leading contemporary French composers, who died in his home in Paris at the age of seventy-nine.

Gabriel Urbain Faure was born in Pamiers in 1845. He first studied music at the Niedermeyer School in Paris, and at the age of twenty-one became organist at Rennes. Four years later he was in Paris again, this time as assistant organist in Notre Dame. After a period of service in the army, Faure took up successively positions at St.-Honore, St.-Sulpice and the Madeleine. At the last named institution he was choirmaster from 1877 to 1896, and organist from then until 1905.

Meantime in 1896 he took the place of Massenet as professor at the Conservatory. In 1905 he became director, succeeding Dubois, and held this position until his resignation in 1919. He was elected to the Academy in 1909, and a year later was named Commander in the Legion of Honor. In recent years he has come to be regarded as one of the deans of French music, and his birthdays have been celebrated with great social and musical activity in Paris and other musical cities of France and Belgium.

Prolific Composer

Several operas are among the works of Gabriel Faure: L'Organiste, composed in 1877; Promethee, 1900; and Penelope, 1913. Besides he wrote incidental music to a number of plays, among them works of Maeterlinck, Dumas and Clemenceau. His compositions include, besides, a cantata, La Naissance de Venus (1895); the Choeur de Djinns; two requiems (1887 and 1917); a symphony (1885); a violin concerto, an orchestral suite, a piano quintet, two piano quartets, a violin sonata, other chamber music, and many songs, duets, and other shorter works.

With the orchestras well started by the last week in October the Paris music season is already in full swing. In their earliest concerts the orchestra leaders have tended to place more emphasis on the conservative composers than is customary in Paris. The Pasdeloup Orchestra, under M. Van Raalte, recently dedicated an entire program to works of Wagner, while the Societe des Concerts, under the direction of Philippe Gaubert presented in an early concert Schumann's Fourth Symphony, Beethoven's Coriolanus Overture, Wagner's Meistersinger Prelude, d'Indy's Isar Variations, and a Handel Concerto together with the Petroushka excerpts of Stravinsky.

The de Reszke Singers, who have appeared in many concerts in the British Isles and on the Continent, will make their New York debut at the first Plaza Musicale next Friday morning.

Several days later Paul Paray, leading the Lamoureux Orchestra, devoted a half day of his program to Wagner, although the C major Symphony of Dukas brought the thoughts of the audience closer to the present day in music.

Many Pianists

In that late week in October concert appearances of pianists were far from rare. M. Kartun appeared twice within a week. His first program included works of Mozart, Scarlatti, Schubert, Beethoven (the Sonata, Op. 31), Faure, Debussy, Liaponow, and Liszt. The second was made up entirely of a Bach Concerto, Ravel's Tombeau de Couperin, and the Preludes of Chopin.

Brailowsky, who is shortly to leave for the United States, appeared both in recital and with orchestra, and made his usual good impression. Two sonatas of Beethoven were on his recital program, the Op. 53 and 57, and Chopin pieces completed the evening, twelve etudes being included in the group. M. Brailowsky's orchestra appearance took place at one of the Concerts Colonne, the orchestra being directed by Gabriel Pierne. He played the Chopin Andante Polonaise and Liszt's Concerto in E flat, while the rest of the program was devoted by M. Pierne to Cesar Franck's Symphony, to Debussy's Nuages et Fetes, and to the overture to Lalo's Roi d'Ys.

The Sutro sisters, two piano recitalists, who also are shortly to leave for the United States, gave one of their recitals in Paris. Several "premieres auditions" were on the program, including an Etude, by Algernon Ashton, and Valse Paraphrase, by Ed. Schutt. Mozart, Bach, Hollander, Beach and Geroult were the other composers of whom the Sisters Sutro played compositions.

Leginska Conducts

At the beginning of this week a number of notable concerts took place. Perhaps foremost in interest was the concert at which Ethel Leginska played the piano and conducted an orchestra composed of musicians of the Societe des Concerts. Mme. Leginska led a composition of her own, and herself played the piano in another number. The former was her Pieces, after Gaugin, and the latter a Concerto of Bach.

While she was on the stand Mme. Leginska offered Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, the Oberon Overture of Weber, and the Meistersinger Prelude of Wagner.

Ernest Bloch's Suite for Viola and orchestra was featured at a concert of Gabriel Pierne with his Colonne Orchestra. M. Lefranc was the assisting artist.

London Philharmonic Plans

The London Philharmonic Society, now in its 113th year, has announced a series of seven concerts, to begin Nov. 20 and end April 27, under the direction of seven conductors. They are Furtwangler, Bruno Walter, Eugene Goossens, Ernest Ansermet, Weingartner, Paul Klenau and Hamilton Harty. At one of the concerts Stravinsky will play his own piano concerto. Among the new works there will be a piano concerto by Herbert Howells which Harold Samuel will play.

Palestine to Hear Aida.

Aida has been selected for the opening performance of the opera season in the Holy Land, according to a report received by the Palestine Foundation Fund from its Jerusalem headquarters. Verdi's masterpiece in this case will be given in Hebrew, the language in which all the world famous works in the repertoire of the Palestine Opera Company are sung.

Intermezzo Given in Dresden

Dresden has just heard the premiere of Strauss' opera, Intermezzo. Besides fourteen symphonic concerts under Fritz Busch there will be thirty people's symphony concerts given in that city this season under the leadership of Eduard Moricke. Isai Debrowen will conduct a number of Philharmonic concerts.

Strauss Writes Melodrama

Richard Strauss is reported to have written a melodrama to a text of von Hofmannsthal. The music, it is said, is based on a theme from the coda of the Finale of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and on a theme from the last movement of the Eroica.

Francis Rogers
Concert Baritone and Teacher of Singing
Member American Academy of Teachers of Singing
144 East 62d St., New York City

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

The Cleveland Institute of Music
A MODERN LABORATORY SCHOOL
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
The Institute carries pupils from the initial steps in musical training through the most advanced grades.
Rhythm, Ear-Training, Solfege, play an important part in the foundation lessons.
Orchestral Training, Composition, Pedagogy, Accompany ing, under master instruction, are offered advanced students.
Write for catalogue on regular instrumental and vocal courses
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

London Hears Many Concerts

Frieda Hempel Among Vocalists Who Appear; Jacques Thibaud Plays With Orchestra.

London.

The week of October 19-26 was for London a full week on the concert platform: such a full week as one expects in a great music capital in the first blossoming of its season. There was a major recital, supplied by Frieda Hempel, several first appearances which won more than ordinary commendation, two symphony concerts, three chamber-music events, and—almost every day—a meritorious program offered by some established, if not internationally well known musician. And there was in addition a revival of one of the hearty 18th century ballad operas which served as a reminder of the honorable history of the native love for music.

To take the last event first. Miss Hempel's concert took place yesterday, Sunday, October 26. "That her re-appearance was more than ordinarily welcome," says the Telegraph writer, "is to put the case very mildly indeed. Few, indeed, are the singers with such marvellous command of their voices, of their tone, who could, nay, who would dare to sing Brahms's tiny little Sandmannchen in the Albert Hall. To say that Miss Hempel's singing of it was supremely beautiful—it was sung in quite perfect mezza voce—is no exaggeration." And so with the rest of the singer's program. "All was as near perfection of vocalization, of beauty of tone, of phrasing as is humanly possible. It was, in a word, a crowded hour of glorious life that Mme. Hempel gave us—and such hours are all too rare today."

Reviewers Praise Hempel

And the Post: "The reappearance in England of this charming singer at the Albert Hall was hailed with delight. She sang her way into the esteem of her vast audience. In songs where individuality had its opportunity she achieved complete success, and [too] the appeal of her brilliant vocalization was complete. With every note of beautiful quality—save possibly in the highest range—and with a delivery that has the precious 'curve' of phrase, her singing was like a beautiful instrument, but, unlike an instrument, has a human quality all its own."

No less commendatory is the critic of the Times: "Mme. Hempel delighted a large audience with a voice of quite exceptional quality. She showed us in her first aria how lovely coloratura singing can be. Her voice is extraordinarily flexible and true, while its quality is warm and capable of great variety of color. She has the power of making the finest pianissimo clearly audible throughout the hall, and perhaps her most wonderful achievement was her singing of Brahms's Sandmannchen, an exquisite miniature that reduced the vast auditorium to an intimate drawing room. More obviously brilliant was her singing of Ernani, Involami, in which Mr. John Amadio vainly competed against her voice with a mere flute."

Other Vocalists

Two other vocalists won the critics in recitals which were further distinguished by being—for London, at least,—debuts. The first of these was Grace Stuckgold, who was heralded by reports of a continental reputation. Miss Stuckgold is a soprano, and impressed the Telegraph writer as having "first-rate qualifications," among which are ot be numbered "a voice of very pleasing quality and useful range, which lends itself well both to dramatic and lyrical expression." Further, "her most notable asset is a command of half-shades, the great variety of her soft tones, which enable her to give her songs the widest relief." The Sunday Times writer somewhat similarly remarks that Miss Stuckgold "proved herself a notable addition to the ranks of our liedersingers, for her voice is exceptionally warm in tone and her breath control is practically perfect." He takes exception only to a "shrillness" of her high tones and a tendency occasionally to "scoop." With this critique (including its adverse note) the Observer commentator is in agreement.

The second of the new vocal recitalists was John Payne, who sang spirituals and negro melodies. He has, I think, been heard in America. Although the press differed as to his voice (baritone in quality) all are at one with the Telegraph's "uncommonly attractive program," and registered their enjoyment of the recital as a whole.

Another debutante was Arno Segall, a violinist of American training received at the hands of Leopold Auer, Cesar Thomson, and Willy Hess. The Times expressed some doubts as to his performance but concludes that "from the way in which he finishes everything out, well in tune, and finely phrased, there is promise of better things when experience has had time to tell." The Telegraph speaks of "virile tone, clearness of passage playing, ease of bowing."

Thibaud With Orchestra

At the second Queen's Hall symphony concert, Jacques Thibaud was soloist, playing the Brahms violin concerto and the Bach chaconne. "Rarely have we heard either work more beautifully played," remarks the Times chronicler. "As one would naturally expect," states the Telegraph, "his playing was beautiful in its finish, poise, ease, and distinction of style; exquisite, too, the tone." The Post is sure that "He is a very great violinist."

At the first of the London Symphony Orchestra's concerts, there was nothing very startling in the program, and individual virtuosity was confined to obbligato piano playing, well carried off by Solito de Solis for Peck-Mangiagalli's Sortilegi. Chamber music was provided in the period under review by the Kendall and Backhouse String Quartets and in a violin-piano sonata recital by Sir Walford Davies, the composer and teacher, and Miss Sybil Eaton. Recitalists of marked local popularity who appeared during the week included Miss Adelina Delines and Messrs. Sumner Austin and Eric Marshall (vocalists), and the Countess Helena Morsztyn and Victor Schioler (pianists).

Of the revival of The Duenna, a comic opera by Sheridan to music by his father-in-law Thomas Linley more will be reported later on. Suffice it that it was hailed a success for the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, where Mr. Nigel Playfair has fathered so many similar productions, among them The Beggar's Opera and its sequel Polly.

P. L.

Musicians Arrive

Josef Hofmann, Bronislaw Huberman, and Moriz Rosenthal were passengers on the S. S. Majestic, which arrived from London last Tuesday. They gave a concert in the lounge of the ship while in passage for the benefit of the Seamen's Fund.

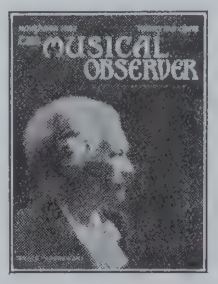
Richard Strauss Resigns From Vienna State Opera

THE resignation of Richard Strauss from the directorship of the State Opera in Vienna, which was reported in last week's issue of the Musical Digest, has officially been confirmed, according to a special cable to the New York Times dated November 3. The Minister of Public Instruction accepted the resignation immediately. It was due to the world-famous musician's disagreements of long standing with the other director, Franz Schalk.

It is obviously felt in certain circles that Strauss has become too expensive a luxury for Vienna. When his ballet Schlagobers was produced his friends guaranteed the expenses. The production cost $20,000, but the guarantees are unpaid to date, the report said.

Strauss will be succeeded by the well-known conductor, Leo Blech. The loss of the great conductor is deeply felt by the Viennese public, and it is reported that he will be offered a university chair to save him for Vienna.

It is also reported that Conductor Alwin will also resign out of sympathy with Strauss.



For a $2.00 bill attached to this coupon, we will enter your subscription for one year for the Musical Observer,—the up-to-date music magazine, which among other interesting features contains music for piano, violin and piano, piano and voice,—and send you one of the following premiums.

MINIATURE MASTERPIECES for Violin and Piano (Collection of 24 simplified arrangements of famous solos.)

MODERN PIANO ALBUM (a collection of 24 modern compositions.)

SELECT SONGS OF THE MASTERS (high or low voice), Vol. 1 (20 easy songs each a popular favorite).

FRANZ SCHUBERT ALBUM for High or Low Voice (a collection of 13 selected songs).

THE MUSICAL OBSERVER CO.
62 COOPER SQUARE, N. Y. CITY

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

Margaret MATZENAUER
PRIMA DONNA CONTRALTO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, Inc., Fisk Building, 250 West 57th Street New York City
STEINWAY PIANO VICTOR RECORDS

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1924-1925
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

EDITH MASON SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NE W YORK CITY

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Munich Honors Composers

Celebrates Pfitzner Week and Bruckner Centenary; Concert Season Starts Hopefully.

Munich.

Presumably to make up for the absence of any Pfitzner operas during this year's festival season, a regular Pfitzner week was arranged as an appendix to the season. The undertaking was praiseworthy as far as it was intended to do honor to a great composer. We doubt, however, if the time was well chosen. Pfitzner's music, unique in style and containing gems of great brilliancy, is, as a whole, far from refreshing and exhilarating, and the public had been fed too long on heavy Wagner scores to retain the elastic and receptive mind requisite for the Arme Heinrich, Palestrina, The Rose from Love's Garden, the cantata Von Deutscher Seele, and the musical setting for two dramas.

The performances, partly under the composer's, partly under Knappertsbusch's and Heger's direction, were uniformly good; so was the attendance; still, a full house does not necessarily mean satisfactory box office receipts. The press criticisms were favorable throughout, contrasting, of course, with the opinion of those—and they are not few in number nor lightly to be dismissed as insignificant—who cannot follow Pfitzner upon his path ad astra. Wagner had the same trouble at one time. From a musical viewpoint the Pfitzner week was an important event, and its success was largely due to the splendid work of the orchestra and the fine singing of Bender, Brodersen, Erb, and Mmes. Englerth and Linhard. The staging of The Rose from Love's Garden by Hofmiller was a miracle of modern technique.

Bruckner Anniversary

Close upon the Pfitzner festival followed a celebration in honor of the 100th anniversary of Bruckner's birth. Ferdinand Loewe, of Vienna, the pupil and life-long friend of the Austrian master and his youngest living interpreter, conducted the third, fifth and seventh symphonies. Loewe's art is above criticism; we imagine the angelic choirs themselves must have rejoiced as the monumental fifth grew under his magic wand into an overwhelming apotheosis.

Since a Bruckner fest would be incomplete without the production of some of his church music Professor Berberich presented the Mass in E minor with his famous cathedral choir, whilst Hans Rohr closed the festival with the large Mass in F minor. Both performances made a deep impression upon the thousands who filled every available space of the large St. Michael's Church, from the Minister President in his seat of honor to the poor charwoman who knelt in the confessional because she found no more standing room.

Concert Season Opening

The concert season has burst upon us with a wealth of good things—in fact there is such an abundance of them as to make a selection, when there are two or three concerts in one evening, a matter of serious deliberation. Mmes. Ivogun, Onegin, and Selma Kurz, of Vienna, Paul Bender, now in New York, Henry Schlusmus, the Berlin baritone, the Russian basso Basil Petrov, and others have given recitals to enthusiastic audiences; instrumental recitals are following in quick succession, chamber music has begun to cast its spell upon the musical gourmands, and orchestral concerts will be of special interest this year, judging from their select programs, which comprise a wide range of classical and modern works.

The academy concert season has been opened by Hans Knappertsbusch with a splendid production of Bruckner's titanic Eighth Symphony; the Konzert Verein under the leadership of Sigmund von Hausegger will follow suit with Bruckner's First and Ninth (this is a Bruckner year); the choral societies are preparing elite programs, Mr. Clement's concert bureau and Professor Fisher, president of the theatrical community, a most worthy organization, which enables its members to get the best in the musical line for a minimum outlay, have engaged a series of international star performances. Among them is the Sistine choir. The opera is contemplating quite a number of revivals and premieres. When we add to all this the lately constructed radio attachment to the opera for telephone subscribers there will be music galore.

Of late Russian music seems to catch the public interest to a marked degree. Besides Diaghileff's Russian Ballet, which gave two weeks of performances to crowded houses in the Deutsche Theatre, a refined vaudeville hall familiar to all Americans visiting Munich, we welcomed the return of the choir of the Don Cossacks, an aggregation of thirty-five artists who, when singing their lays of home and childhood days, of war and love, are no longer so many individuals but one perfect instrument, a mighty organ played by the hand of a masterful leader.

In this connection we may also mention a highly interesting program of Russian music by the Konzert Verein orchestra under Walter Beck, a shining light among the younger generation of conductors and the born interpreter of Slavonic music. The taste and liking for Russian music in its modern form as expressed by Stravinsky in his Petroushka, Moussorgsky's symphonic poem Night Upon a Barren Mountain, Scriabin's Prometheus Symphony, Glinkas's Russlau and Ludmilla overture, etc., have passed the stage of faddism and are rapidly becoming general among the concert-going public.

J. B. BAUER.

Mikhail Mordkin Coming

After an absence of thirteen years Mikhail Mordkin, Russian dancer, formerly of the Diaghileff troupe, will be seen again in New York on Nov. 24. Morris Gest, theatrical manager, has arranged to bring Mr. Mordkin to the United States. He will sail tomorrow with his company, and will make his American re-appearance a week from next Monday in the Greenwich Village Follies at the Schubert Theatre, New York.

Foreign Notes

Brussels heard a revival of Werther at the Theatre de la Monnaie not long ago. The presentation introduced a new Russian tenor, Ivan Rogatchewsky. There will be a number of new ballets presented in that city this winter, including Les Paravent Chinois, by Guido Sommi; Une Fete de Mme. Tallien, by M. Saeys, and others. Among the revivals planned for the season are L'Appel de la Mer by Rabaud; Le Foire de Soratchintsi, by Moussorgsky; Rhena, by Van den Eoden, and Francesca da Rimini, by Zandonai.

The Paris concert season has begun, but the plans of conductors have not yet been fully announced. Rhene Baton will direct orchestral concerts at the Theatre Mogador every Saturday and Sunday. Gabriel Pierne will include a number of comparatively rare or new works in his programs, Khamma (ballet), by Debussy; Suite Anglaise, by Rabaud; Tzigane, by Ravel; Legende et Scherzo, by Florent Schmitt; Oedipe Colonne, by Guy Ropartz; Dryade, by Louis Aubert; Padmavati (ballet), by Albert Roussel and works by Raoul Laparra, Pierre Kunc, Maingueneau, Le Borne, Richelet and others. Among the artists engaged are Enesco, Thibaut, Huberman, Szigei, Manen, Mme. Marguerite Long, Iturbi, Brailowsky and Ciampi.

Philippe Gaubert, conductor of the Societe des Concerts, will introduce Stravinsky to his public this season not with the Sacre du Printemps but with Petroushka. Other composers on his program will be Florent Schmitt, Roger Ducasse, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Andre Caplet, d'Indy and Phillippe Gaubert himself.

FLORENCE EASTON
SOPRANO, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
BRUNSWICK RECORDS EXCLUSIVELY
MANAGEMENT: HAENSEL AND JONES—AEOLIAN HALL, N. Y.

SAMOILOFF
BEL CANTO STUDIOS
309 W. 85th St. Tel.: Schuyler 6952 New York

FLORA
GREENFIELD
SOPRANO
Management ERNEST HENKEL, 1451 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Bryant 3352 KNABE PIANO

JANE CATHCART
Teacher of Piano
Elementary Harmony
Re-opened her Studio
AT
200 WEST 57th STREET, NEW YORK CITY
Telephone Circle 10117

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

AT the first concert of the eighth season of the Society of American Music Optimists on October 31, at the Waldorf Astoria, a drive for increase in membership was begun. The purpose of the drive is to raise sufficient money through additional members and patrons to give scholarships of from $500 to $1,000 to deserving young American musicians and also to provide funds to pay adequately the various artists who appear at the society's concerts.

The drive was launched by a short address by Irwin Cassel, husband of Mana-Zucca, the composer who is founder and president of the society. Mr. Cassel reminded the audience of the purpose of the organization—"good American music by good American artists for good American audiences." He said that in the past the society, in its general program of sponsoring native art and artists, had picked out one musician each year from among the soloists at its concerts and provided that person with a New York recital. Now the American Music Optimists hope to expand their work by providing scholarships and fees for appearance at their functions. The drive for members will be actively continued during the next two weeks. Questions or applications for membership should be addressed to Mrs. M. Gobert, 19 W. Sixty-ninth street, New York City.

The opening concert, which was attended by almost a thousand persons, had as its soloists Joan Ruth and Miriam Fine, sopranos; Devora Nadworthy, contralto; Jan van Bommel, baritone; Eleanor Altman, pianist, and Vladimir Graffman, violinist. The last named artist played a sonata in E flat for violin and piano by Harold Morris, the composer accompanying him.

The next concert of the society will be on the evening of December 9. The officers of the organization are Mana-Zucca, president; Andres de Segurola, first vice president; Alvin L. Schmoeger, second vice president; Mrs. George Bernard, treasurer; Mrs. M. Gobert, financial secretary; Mrs. Julius Levy, recording secretary, and Mrs. Dave Stern, corresponding secretary.

The biennial contest of the Connecticut Federation of Musical Clubs will be held on March 7 at Sprague Hall, Yale University. David Stanley Smith, dean of the Yale Music School; Frederick Weld, of the Connecticut College for Women, and Robert Prutting, of Hartford; together with four others to be named will serve as judges.

Winners of this contest will compete in the Plymouth District contest, embracing the New England states, successful contestants of which will be entered in the national contest to be held in Portland, Ore., in June.

Alberto Jonas, piano teacher and author of Master School of Modern Piano Playing and Virtuosity, will be the principal speaker at the piano conference of the Music Teachers' National Association in St. Louis, December 29-31. After the address, there will be the opportunity for free discussion from the floor.

The Rubinstein Club held its first afternoon musical at the Waldorf last Saturday. It has been announced that three evening choral concerts will be given on December 2, January 27 and April 14. The other two afternoon recitals will be held on March 14 and April 25. The twenty-second annual White Breakfast will be on May 9.

The movement for American music by Americans is being furthered at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music in an important manner and the training of future members of symphony orchestras, thus eliminating the necessity of importing these musicians from foreign lands, has begun under the auspices of this institution. Bertha Baur, director of the Cincinnati Conservatory, recognizing the needs of the future and wishing to aid the young musician of today to fit himself for any one of the various positions in a symphony orchestra, has made it possible, through the co-operation of some of her interested friends, for the Conservatory to offer a number of scholarships to students in Cincinnati high schools who may wish to become professional players in symphony orchestras. Miss Baur has the support of Fritz Reiner, director of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, in this undertaking.

JANE CATHCART
Teacher of Piano, and President of Washington Heights Musical Club.

The scholarships will grant high school boys, who are members of school orchestras, the privilege of receiving instruction in wind instruments in classes at the Conservatory of Music presided over by leading members of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

Ten boys will be chosen from the Cincinnati high school for each class in the following wind instruments taught by a member of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra: flute, Ary Van Leeuwen; oboe, Rene Corne; clarinet, Joseph Elliott; horn, Gustav Albrecht; bassoon, Hans Meuser; trumpet, August H. Schaefer; trombone, G. Warms.

The Cincinnati Superintendent of Schools, E. D. Roberts, the Director of Music, Walter H. Aiken, and the Board of Education, are enthusiastic over this rich opportunity afforded to seventy boys who otherwise would not be able to continue their musical education.

At a recent meeting, the board of directors of the National Association of Harpists, Inc., upon the suggestion of the president, created a vice-presidency for Salvatore de Stefano. The officers of the organization are Carlos Salzedo, president; van Veachton Rogers and Salvatore de Stefano, vice-presidents; Melville Clark, treasurer; Alice Hills, secretary.

Plans are being worked out at the national headquarters to distribute scholarships to the most gifted harp students throughout the country.

The Art Publication Society has started a thirty-week normal in Syracuse, N. Y., for piano students and teachers. The normal, which is under the direct supervision of J. S. Downey, New York state manager for the society, has as its principal teacher Arthur Van W. Eltinge. The sessions of the course will be held at the Hotel Mispah.

Lectures and class demonstrations are to be given by visiting authorities and there will be frequent rehearsals of the Rhythm Orchestra, in which all of the teachers will participate.

Many study circles have been formed in Cincinnati to increase the appreciation of symphony concerts. Last season the Hyde Park Symphony Circle was organized with fifty members under the leadership of Mrs. Blanche Greenland. The movement, which had its inception in this circle, has culminated this year in an extensive organization just formed by Mrs. John C. Gallagher of the Cincinnati Woman's Club. The first meeting drew an assemblage of several hundred women.

With a program devoted to compositions by Mana-Zucca, a concert will be given next Sunday by the artist-pupils of Emilio A. Roxas in his studio at 2231 Broadway, New York City.

At a recent recital by the faculty of the Northwestern University School of Music, Carl Beecher and Arne Oldberg, pianists, and Loyal Phillips Shawe, baritone, were heard.

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

EMILIO ROXAS VOCAL COACH
Studio: 2231 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Phone: Endicott 6306
Coach and Accompanist to MARTINELLI for six years

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

V. TREVISAN Chicago Civic Opera Association
VOCAL STUDIO 74 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

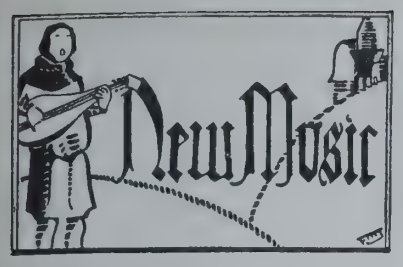
HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

ARTHUR J. HUBBARD — VINCENT V. HUBBARD
Teachers of Singing in All Its Branches
246 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON, MASS.

VOCAL ART-SCIENCE STUDIO ANITA MASON WOOLSON
125 East 37th Street
N. E. Corner Lexington Ave.
New York City
Endorsed by Dr. Frank E. Miller
Founder of Vocal Art-Science
Telephone Murray Hill 0991

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS



PROMINENT among the recent issues of the Oliver Ditson Company is an addition to the series of Russian Songs, A. Gretchaninoff's Snowflakes, which is published in two ranges. It is a simple, crisp composition in which the staccato accompaniment sets off the smooth Russian melody of the voice part. Vocal music seems to predominate in quantity in the new publications of Ditson. Cecil Forsyth's Homeward, for low voice, is an expressive song of sentiment, simple and conventional in style. Anita Gray Little's Cradle Song is published for both high and low voices; and Through Miles and Miles of Years, by Ernest Harry Adams, also in two ranges, is a ballad of the customary type.

Other new Ditson songs are Good Tidings of Great Joy, a Christmas piece by John H. Densmore, published for high and medium tessiture; The Lazy Dip of the Oar, by Ernest Harry Adams, for the same ranges; Werner Josten's The Timid Shepherd, also for high and medium voices; and The Human Touch, by George B. Nevin, which is issued in keys suited to medium and low voices.

A brand new arrangement of the celebrated Rimsky-Korsakoff Song of India also comes from the Ditson press. Charles Fanteyn Manney has put it up as duet for soprano and alto. It makes an effective number, as in fact any possible arrangement of this melody would do.

As the weather grows colder the music publishers begin to turn their thoughts to Christmas music. Oliver Ditson has already prepared a number of Christmas Anthems for chorus. Among them are The New Born King, by Charles Espoir, arranged by Hartley Moore for mixed voices; The People That Walked in Darkness, by J. Lamont Galbraith, for mixed voices; The Morning Has Come for Rejoicing, by Samuel Richards Gaines, for mixed voices with soprano solo; Good Tidings of Great Joy, by John H. Densmore, for mixed voices with tenor solo; and Christmas Bells, by Cecil Forsyth, for mixed voices.

A. Buzzi-Peccia is the author of the words and the composer of the music of Colombetta, a Venetian Serenade (G. Ricordi & Co.). It is a humorous song, some fourteen pages in length, and for its cleverness, the sweetness of its melody, the aptness of its humor, and the display of personality required to give it the light touch that is necessary for its best effectiveness, it is excellently adapted to the program of the singer who wishes to vary seriousness of programs with good humor.

Other recent Ricordi songs are The Rose and the Weed, for high and low voices, by Clement Flynn; and Spring Dropped a Song Into My Heart, a song by Beatrice Fenner which is frequently on the programs of Amelita Galli-Curci.

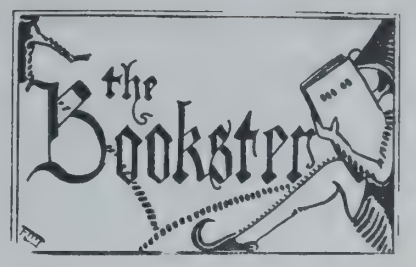
That favorite poem of song writers, A. E. Housman's When I Was One and Twenty, is the lyric of a composition for high or low voice by Arthur Bliss. It can hardly be said that the setting is exceptional, although it is very singable. The two verses are set to exactly the same music, which seems not perfectly fitting, since the color of the sentiment in the poem changes so greatly from the first verse to the second.

Another Ricordi publication is Matina, a morning serenade by G. Fatuo. It is a lively composition quite corresponding to the serenade of Buzzi-Peccia mentioned above, except that it is Italian in its melody and that it treats its material with less humor.

Boris Levenson is the composer of Dance Orientale, a piece for violin and piano, which is published by G. Schirmer. Several compositions for school choruses also are included among the latest issues of this house. Among them are Arbutus, by Eduardo Marzo; a unison song with an ad lib second part; and Water Lily, which is written for the same parts by the same composer.

Among the most recent Schirmer vocal pieces are Two Songs by Henry E. Sachs: The Three Riders, for medium voice, and Once in a While, for the same range; Footlights, a song of spring by Frederick Rocke, which is published for high voice and low; Love-Lit Shadows, a song for low voice by Frederick James Long; and My Dearest One, a ballad issued for two ranges, by Robert W. Wilkes.

Mischa Elman will appear in three concerts of chamber music in New York this winter. The members of the quartet, of which Mr. Elman will be first violin, are Edward Bachman, second violin; Nicholas Moldovan, viola; and Horace Britt, cello.



HANDBUCH DES DIRIGIERENS (Handbook to Conducting), by Rudolf Cahn-Speyer: Verlag Breitkopf and Hartel, Berlin.

This is an excellent book which all conductors ought to read, even those who do not "need" to. The advantage of this book over many others which deal with the craft of the conductor lies in the talent of the author to present his material without allowing the practical facts surrounding it to interfere with the aesthetic principles which he clearly sees to be involved.

The ground covered by the Handbook includes the field of opera and that of orchestral music, and it is covered so thoroughly that one can get the best of counsel from each of the five chapters of which the book is composed. It is plainly to be seen on every page that Herr Cahn-Speyer knows what he is speaking of because he has gone through the problems which he is elucidating time and time again in his experience as a conductor. Only such a man may speak on such a difficult subject as conducting.

An especially valuable part of the book is the last chapter, which treats the personality of the conductor, and draws the clear distinction between the leader's knowledge of music and the in-born qualities which make his training effective. There is a passage, quite original and undoubtedly accurate, which discusses the matter of the simple physical qualifications of the conductor, his size, his build, the length of his arms, and so on. To detail the other contents of the Cahn-Speyer work is to give reasons for the musician to go through the book himself. It should be in the possession of everyone who, in the words of Liszt, wishes to be not merely oarsman, but rather steersman in the vessel of music.—Siegfried Ochs in Pult und Taktstock.

First Stadium Prize Concert

The first of the recitals of the prize winners in the competition held by the Stadium Concerts Committee, New York. last summer will take place under the auspices of Stadium Concerts, Inc., at Aeolian Hall next Saturday afternoon, it has been announced by Mrs. Charles S. Guggenheimer, Chairman of the Committee. Miron Poliakin will appear in this recital. Ignace Hillsberg, pianist, who also was one of the prize winners in the contest for soloists at the summer concerts, will be presented on December 14.

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

SAMAROFF
NEW YORK RECITAL AEOLIAN HALL
Tuesday Afternoon, November 11th, at 3 o'Clock
Later New York appearances with:
FRIENDS OF MUSIC, Artur Bodanzky conducting,
and the
NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Fisk Bldg., New York Pennsylvania Bldg., Phila., Pa.
STEINWAY PIANO VICTOR RED SEAL RECORDS

J. HENRI BOVE
FLUTE SOLOIST
Recitals and Obligatos
191 Claremont Ave. New York
Phone—Morningside 4595

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. Telephone
New York City Circle 8815

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

Music Supervisors to Meet Next Week

Full Program Scheduled for Five Day Conference at Winston-Salem.

The conference of the Southern Music Supervisors' Association will begin on Nov. 17 at Winston-Salem, N. C. A full program of events has been arranged for the convention, which will close on the evening of Nov. 21.

After registration of the visiting supervisors at noon the activities will commence with a series of demonstrations by a chorus from the colored schools. That evening a dinner for officers of the conference will be followed by a choral concert. Tuesday will be devoted to a business meeting; elementary school demonstrations; discussion; addresses by H. W. Stopher, director of music in the State University of Louisiana, William Breach, president of the Music Supervisors' National Conference, and others; informal supper; and a concert by a children's chorus of 600 voices.

Further demonstration and discussion will take place early Wednesday. Music Appreciation and Instrumental Instruction will be the chief topics. A popular concert of selections from oratorio, grand opera, and light opera will be given in the evening.

The problems of high school teaching will be considered on Thursday, and on the last day of the conference there will be a series of addresses on appropriate topics by representatives of civic clubs, chambers of commerce, music clubs, women's clubs, civic music commissions, parent-teacher associations, and by John Withers, dean of the School of Education of New York University, Thomas Gibson, state director of music for Maryland, and others.

Managers Vote for Promptness.

At the last meeting of the National Musical Managers' Association of the United States the following resolution was adopted: "Be it resolved that the members of the National Musical Managers' Association hereby agree to do all in their power to begin concerts on time, or at least as close to the hour announced as it is possible to do, ignoring the late-comers."

Columbus Singer Wins Award.

Geraldine Riegger, Columbus contralto, has been awarded a Juilliard Foundation fellowship, which includes $1,000 to be applied to tuition. Miss Riegger will study with Marcella Sembrich.

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
BEGINNING SUNDAY
"He Who Gets Slapped"
Lon Chaney Norma Shearer
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Westchester Plans to Hold Big Music Festival

White Plains, Nov. 6.—The County Choral Society is planning a big musical festival to be held next May under the direction of Morris Gabriel Williams, local director, and C. Mortimer Wiske, director of the Newark, N. J., and Philadelphia Festival Associations.

Members of the Westchester County Society are E. F. Albee, Harry Harkness Flagler, Kurt Schindler, Clarence Woolley and Felix Warburg.

The plans, which are not as yet fully decided upon, embrace the organization of 2,000 voices and an orchestra of Westchester musicians. There will also be a competition for soloists.

The festival will last three days, with a performance each afternoon and evening. At the afternoon concerts the Board of Education will be invited to assist in providing children's choruses, school orchestras and folk dancers. At the evening performances some of the world's greatest soloists and the festival chorus and orchestra will appear.

Concert-Giving Industry

(Continued from page 17)

matters it is then possible to proceed accordingly; and that is what the far-sighted person who is engaged in the Concert-Giving Industry is striving to do.

The United States is highly prosperous. Its people are susceptible, more than ever before, to the touch of culture. They can be reached, and they can be interested in music to a greater extent than ever they have been. It is merely a question—plainly put—of utilizing ability, hustle and fair-dealing.

An era of prosperity surpassing any this country ever before has known is not far off. And, to use a school-primer expression, "early-birds" are going to get some of the nice fat worms.

[The End.]

Barrymore May Play Parsifal

Before sailing for London last Wednesday, John Barrymore, American actor, said that when he arrived in England he would confer with certain cinema and theatrical producers regarding the presentation of a spoken version of Wagner's Parsifal. Mr. Barrymore said he would like to play the role of the wandering knight, if such a production is feasible.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
GEO. BEBAN in
"THE GREATEST LOVE OF ALL"
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
"THE BELOVED BRUTE"
With an All Star Cast
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

Lines o' News AND Chatter

We met Clarence Whitehill the other day and the baritone paused for just one fleeting sentence: "Another role to learn and no time to talk."

* * *

It would seem that the respective members of the claque spent time enough during the summer to get their palms in applauding condition. Never before have they sounded more resonant.

* * *

Chicago got off well operatically and its patrons appear happy over the season's prospects.

* * *

Anna Case, Sophie Braslau, and Eddy Brown were the artists who opened the first 1924-1925 New York Biltmore Morning Musicales.

* * *

If Puccini and Toscanini decide to postpone the premiere of Turandot until next April there is a possibility that Beniamino Gigli may create the leading tenor role when that opera is produced at Milan's La Scala.

* * *

Fine weather on Saturdays is playing havoc with those artists who have been hoping that all the "first string" critics of the New York press might attend their recitals and (perhaps) write favorably about them.

* * *

And now Josef Stransky is truly famous.

* * *

The Musical Digest has moved its offices . . . the growing demand for more space made that necessary. The new address is near the former one; the next building west in Thirty-ninth street, the number being 243. As for the telephone: Longacre 3257 remains.

* * *

Mrs. John A. Drake writes from London to say that an interest obtains there in the coming debut of the pianist Anton Bilotti.

* * *

The role of Olympia, the doll, in the forthcoming revival of The Tales of Hoffman on Thursday evening at the Metropolitan will be sung by Nina Morgana.

* * *

If Marie Tiffany's friends are not able to find her "at home" in her New York apartment it is because the soprano is now concertizing.

* * *

Having finished his operatic work in San Francisco and Los Angeles—where he managed the recent seasons of the San Francisco Opera Association—Bradford Mills journeyed to New York. He is identified for the moment with the San Carlo company.

Baby Jacqueline Dorothy Ingram, daughter of Mrs. Ingram (widow of the late Enrico Caruso) was christened last Thursday at the New York residence of her mother in Park avenue.

* * *

William J. Guard, the Metropolitan Opera's watch guard of publicity matters, has a new domicile. It is 825 Seventh avenue, New York.

* * *

Philadelphia's Civic Opera Association started off well this season, and under Mrs. Tracey's presidential activities, and the conducting skill of Alexander Smallens, an achievement resulted.

* * *

The air and other helpful elements surrounding Atlantic City have lured Rosa Ponselle there. The Metropolitan soprano will spend several days at that resort in search of restored health. Then she will resume her operatic duties.

* * *

George Blumenthal seems to have a faculty for being in the midst of operatic difficulties. He had them when he was with the Wagnerian Opera Company, and now he keeps them by his side in his English Opera project.

* * *

Another bit of friction appears evident in the withdrawal of Snowbird from the Blumenthal Company's repertoire by the composer Theodore Stearns. Likewise has Marguerite Lamar (Mrs. Stearns) cancelled her proposed appearances with that organization.

* * *

Anton Bilotti will make his London debut on the 27th of this month when he is to give a pianoforte recital in Aeolian Hall, under the management of Lionel Powell and Holt.

* * *

The Alumni Association of the Guilmant Organ School will give a reception to its director, Dr. William C. Carl, in the chapel of New York's First Presbyterian Church on the evening of November 24 next.

* * *

Alma Beck entertained the Matinee Musicale, Mrs. Rosalie Heller Kleiu president, on Oct. 27 at her home on Park avenue, New York. A musical program was presented. This meeting was for active members of the Musicale, which is an organization intended to encourage and aid worthy young students.

* * *

Jascha Hiefetz commented the other day upon the pleasant coincidence that all his former teachers are now in New York! His father, Professor Auer and, but lately arrived from Russia, Elias Malkin, formerly of the music school in Vilna. The youthful virtuoso was under Prof. Malkin's eye for three years during which time he made his first public appearance at the ripe age of seven.

Violin Teacher Wanted

to act as head of the Department in a School on the Pacific Coast. Soloist and Pedagog. Not later than January first. State salary expected. Address Pacific Coast School, care of The Musical Digest, 239 West 39th St., New York City.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

The Room
Reflex
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 5 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

THE LIBRARY OF THE
NOV 22 1924
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Toti dal Monte in American Debut at Chicago Opera

Coloratura Soprano Makes First Appearance in Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor.

CORTIS AND STABILE IN CAST

Chicago, Nov. 11.—The debut of Toti dal Monte was the feature of the presentation last night by the Chicago Civic Opera Company of Lucia di Lammermoor. The satisfaction of the audience, Edward Moore wrote in the Tribune, was "intense and vociferous." The applause after Mme. dal Monte's singing of the mad scene held up the performance for some minutes.

Several of the reviewers professed to find in Mme. dal Monte many vocal characteristics reminiscent of Luisa Tetrazzini. Maurice Rosenfeld of the News sensed a resemblance in a "certain sharp brilliance in her upper tones . . . a vocal technic of the same kind of perfection." Edward Moore agreed with Mr. Rosenfeld. Her vocal equipment, "of paramount excellence," her purity of tone and artistic intelligence also came in for Mr. Rosenfeld's praise. Of equal enthusiasm was the tone of Mr. Moore's estimate of her voice: a true coloratura, "infallible in execution, warm in color." Mme. dal Monte, continued Mr. Moore, "warbled through the Donizetti melodies with complete certainty and great apparent ease."

The debutante's singing of the mad scene received special comment. Mr. Moore asserted that he had never heard the scene sung as she sang it. She did not overact, but "the contrasts, the timing, the way she spaced her vocal outlines was superb." In this scene, recorded Mr. Rosenfeld, Mme. dal Monte "caught the notice and appreciation of the audience by the facility of tone production, by the genuinely artistic conception of the music and by the flexibility of her voice."

This chronicler summed up the work of other members of the cast: Antonio Cortis as Edgardo acquitted himself with credit; Mariano Stabile sang the role of Sir Ashton effectively with a voice of "rich quality;" Virgilio Lazzari as Raymondo "added another most praiseworthy portrayal to the many that he has delighted us with;" Elizabeth Kerr sang Alice "capably;" and Jose Mojica as Arthur and Lodovico Oliviero as Norman completed the cast.

Giorgio Polacco, the conductor, according to Mr. Moore, put an unusual vitality into the score.

Charles Hackett, American tenor, who has brought distinction to himself and aided the cause of his compatriots through his achievements during the past several years. Mr. Hackett has just made his reappearance with the Chicago Civic Opera Company, in The Pearl Fishers, this time as a regular leading tenor of that organization.

Bulletins of News

The performances of the English Grand Opera Company announced for this week at Carnegie Hall, New York, have been cancelled, it was stated last Sunday afternoon. The repetition of Rheingold, first presented last Tuesday evening, and postponed until today from its scheduled time on Thursday afternoon, and the two performances of the Valkyries, planned for last night and Wednesday afternoon, are the presentations immediately affected by the announcement. Whether George Blumenthal, general manager of the company, has any plans for a future resumption of the activities of the company, could not be ascertained.

The company had originally planned to give Wagner's Ring in English, besides several other performances. Before the announcement of the cancellation of the above operas had been made on Sunday, it was reported in the New York Herald-Tribune that Samuel Ljungvist who was to sing Siegmund in the Valkyries, had refused to go on.

According to a report in the New York Times, the loss suffered by the State Opera House through the resignation of Richard Strauss began to materialize with the news from Dresden that the new Strauss opera, Intermezzo, recently produced there, will be produced by Max Reinhart at his Josefstaedter Theatre in Vienna, and not at the State Opera. It is said that Strauss himself will conduct the opera.

Milan, Nov. 16.—La Scala opened its season last night with a performance of Boito's Nerone. Arturo Toscanini was the conductor.

Digests of the reviews of the following week-end concerts will be published in the next issue of The Musical Digest: Ida Deck, Francis Moore and Hugo Kortschak, Philharmonic Society, The Marriage of Figaro, Ettore Carodin, Elshuco Trio and South Mountain Quartet, Paul Whiteman's Orchestra, Miron Poliakin, Gregory Matusewitch, Maximilian Kerbel, Sousa's Band, State Symphony, Edwin Hughes, Leff Pouishnoff and Herbert Dittler.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Tales of Hoffmann Revived at Met After Ten Years

Difference of Opinion Among Reviewers; Members of Cast Act in Mulitiple Roles.

HASSELMANS IS CONDUCTOR

After an interval of ten years Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann was presented again last Thursday evening at the New York Metropolitan Opera House. There was considerable difference of opinion among the reviewers as to the merits of the presentation and the work of the members of the cast. The differences began with the opinions of the opera itself, which Lawrence Gilman in the Herald Tribune said, "as light opera is dull, and as serious opera is insipid." Pitts Sanborn writing in the Telegram-Mail on the other hand said, "The score has wit and malice in abundance . . . And yet there are passages of unaffected tenderness, a spontaneous grace, that are all but Mozartean."

The reviewers were almost unanimous in praise of the setting, describing it as "sumptuous," "admirable," and (in the words of Mr. Henderson of the Sun) "gorgeous." Olin Downes in the Times alone thought that Mr. Urban had "fallen beneath his usual standard."

Lucrezia Bori took the double part of Antonia and Giulietta, and Mr. Downes preferred her as the latter. Mr. Taylor in the World agreed, while Mr. Sanborn considered her "Admirable, within the limits of her voice." The Times said also, "Miss Bori sang the sensuous and melancholy solo of Antonia in the last act with true feeling." The reviewers had praise for Nina Morgana in the part of Olympia. The comments ranged from the words "creditable" and "acceptable" used by Mr. Henderson and Mr. Gilman, to the remark of Mr. Sanborn that the choice of Mme. Morgana "could not have been bettered," and that of Mr. Taylor, "Nina Morgana made a charming looking Olympia." Mr. Newman said that she "sang her music with a pleasant tone and a good deal of fluency."

Miguel Fleta was Hoffmann, and the almost unanimous opinion was that he acted the role somewhat better than he sang. Mr. Newman in the Post felt that the unaccustomed "restraint" which changed his singing to "conversational style," as necessitated by the part, accounted for the vocal limitations, but he added, "This was more than made up for by the dramatic interest the part gained."

Of Mr. de Luca Mr. Gilman wrote, "He sang with taste and discretion," but this reviewer felt that much of the dramatic significance of his triple part of Coppelius, Dappertutto, and

(Continued on page 24)

Gigli Sings in Andrea Chenier

Easton and Danise Appear as Madeleine and Gerard at Metropolitan.

The production of Andrea Chenier at the Metropolitan last Wednesday was enthusiastically received by a large audience. Most of the critical audience seemed agreed with Ernest Newman of the Post in his opinion that musically, the opera "has not a single thing to recommend it." But all were warm in their praise of the singing. Tullio Serafin conducted and, as the Sun had it, "was indisputably commander in chief of the forces." In the cast were Beniamino Gigli, Giuseppe Danise, Florence Easton, Adamo Didur, Angelo Bada, Lawrence Tibbett, Giordano Paltrinieri, Vincenzo Reschiglian, Millo Picco, Paolo Ananian, Louis d'Angelo, Pompilio Malatesta, Kathleen Howard, Ellen Dalossy and Marion Telva.

Mr. Gigli, wrote Deems Taylor in the World, "gave a performance that for restraint, excellent phrasing and beautiful mezza-voce singing, was . . . . a hundred times better than the music deserved." The Sun predicted that "a tenor who has such a beautiful voice, who knows how to sing piano with such limpidity of tone and whose delivery is filled with warmth if not commanding dramatic power, will never fail to evoke plaudits when singing Andrea Chenier." Ernest Newman considered Mr. Gigli "better in the more energetic than in the suaver moments."

Mme. Easton, as the Sun expressed it, "sang with a fine appreciation of the character of Giordano's melody . . . the sheer quality of the tone was a delight in itself." The Herald Tribune asserted that she performed with "vocal and histrionic skill, dramatically effective, but not overdone." Mr. Danise has one of his best roles in Gerard, said Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail and Mr. Taylor lauded him as "fluent and melodious." Summing up the performances of others in the cast the Sun said: "Lawrence Tibbett distinguished himself by some artistic singing in the small role of Fleville. Angelo Bada as the spy and Adamo Didur as Mathieu were other conspicuous figures in the cast." This opinion was shared by other reviewers.

Milan Honors Toscanini

Arturo Toscanini, conductor of La Scala, formerly conductor at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, was honored by the municipality of Milan in the presentation last Friday of a gold medal, according to an Associated Press report. The medal was given in tribute to his work in organizing and directing the production of Boito's posthumous opera, Nerone, in Milan last May.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

Met Presents Its First Lohengrin

Jeritza, Matzenauer, Laubenthal, Whitehill and Bender in Cast; Bodanzky Conducts.

The second Wagnerian opera of the season was heard when the Metropolitan Opera Company presented Lohengrin, on November 10, with a cast which included Maria Jeritza, Margaret Matzenauer, Rudolf Laubenthal, Paul Bender, Clarence Whitehill, and Carl Schlegel. The cast, Artur Bodanzky, who conducted the orchestra, and the scenery received laudatory comment in the press.

The Post considered the charm of Mme. Jeritza's voice equalled only by "the grace and dignity of her wonderful stage presence." P. B. wrote in the Telegram-Mail: "Jeritza was in splendid voice. How well the simple purity of Wagner's heroines becomes her!" On the other hand, the Herald Tribune reviewer, although admitting that Mme. Jeritza's performance "had plenty of emotional vigor," did not think that her voice was in perfect form. Mme. Matzenauer was given ample opportunities in the role of Ortrud, wrote P. B., "for the display of her vocal and dramatic endowments." She was "in fine voice," according to the Post commentator, and the duet between Elsa and Ortrud was a "triumph of beauty . . . both Jeritza and Matzenauer lavished their vocal wealth upon the passage."

The representation as a whole, in the opinion of the Sun, was admirable, "the singers concerned in it showed artistic devotion." The Herald Tribune reviewer felt that Mr. Laubenthal's voice showed a considerable gain in strength and clearness, but the Post thought his performance "undistinguished." Agreed with the Herald Tribune was P. B., who said that "Lohengrin is, of course, one of Mr. Laubenthal's best roles." The Telramund of Mr. Whitehill received favorable comment. There is no part in his repertoire which he does better, P. B. wrote, and other reviewers were of the same opinion. Paul Bender, according to this critic, was "at his most imposing." The singing of the entire cast was showered with plaudits—"deservedly"—to quote the Post, and "too much praise cannot be bestowed upon the orchestra." Mr. Bodanzky conducted, as Deems Taylor of the World said, "with his wonted admirable detail and indignant energy."

The stage settings which "were as pleasing to the eye as the music was to the ear" were commendd by all the critics.

Piccadilly Sunday Concerts

Mischa Guterson, director of music at the Piccadilly Theatre, has announced a Wagner program for the next Sunday concert of his orchestra. Among the numbers scheduled are selections from Lohengrin, the Prize Song from Meistersinger, the Ride of the Walkure and The Rienzi Overture.

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Boris Godunoff—with Mmes. Dalossy, Bourskaya, Howard, and Delaunois; and Messrs. Chaliapin, Rothier, and Picco; Mr. Papi conducting.

THURSDAY

Aida (matinee)—with Mmes. Rethberg and Matzenauer; and Messrs. Martinelli, Danise, and Mardones; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Der Rosenkavalier (evening)—with Mmes. Jeritza, Roeseler, Easton, and Mario; and Messrs. Errolle, Schutzendorf, and Bender; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

FRIDAY

Tales of Hoffman—with Mmes. Bori, Morgana, Howard, and Alcock; and Messrs. Fleta and de Luca; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

SATURDAY

Faust—(matinee)—with Mmes. Alda and Dalossy; and Messrs. Chaliapin, Martinelli, and Ballester; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

Madame Butterfly (evening)—with Mmes. Rethberg and Telva; and Messrs. Gigli and Scotti; Mr. Serafin conducting.

MONDAY

Mefistofele—with Mmes. Alda and Peralta; and Messrs. Gigli and Chaliapin; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Ralph Errolle, American, In Metropolitan Debut

The debut of Ralph Errolle, young American tenor who has sung in light opera, as Romeo was the feature of the production of Romeo et Juliette at the Metropolitan November 8. Mr. Errolle made a "distinctly favorable impression," to quote the Herald Tribune. He used his voice, continued this review, with "intelligence and style . . . there was some tremolo, but he was able to produce a smooth, unforced tone and scored an ardent burst of applause after the balcony scene." The Post rated it a successful first appearance.

To this reviewer Lucrezia Bori as Juliette was "as winsome as ever, which is all that need be said." The Herald Tribune found her performance as effective as was expected of this competent singer. Mr. de Luca had his familiar role as Mercutio; Grace Anthony was Stephano and Henriette Wakefield, Gertrude, with Messrs. Bada, Paltrinieri, Picco, Ananian, Didur, Rothier, and Gustafson completing the list.

Louis Hasselmans conducted for the first time this season. The opera, which was the first of the season's popular Saturday night series, received lavish applause from the audience.

Grainger to Conduct in Detroit

When Percy Grainger appears as soloist with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra on November 27 and 28, Mr. Gabrilowitsch has invited him to conduct Colonial Song and Shepherd's Hey in addition to playing the Grieg Concerto.

Serafin Conducts First Met Tosca

Leader Impresses Reviewers in Puccini Opera; Jeritza, Fleta, Scotti Sing.

The first Tosca of the Metropolitan season drew a large audience November 7. Tullio Serafin conducted the familiar score in a way which, as W. J. Henderson said in the Sun, brought back to it some of "its original lucidity." Maria Jeritza as a vivid and intense Tosca and Antonio Scotti shared the honors with Mr. Serafin. Others in the cast were Miguel Fleta, Paolo Ananian, Pompilio Malatesta, Angelo Bada, Vincenzo Reschiglian, Millo Picco and Henriette Wakefield. Deems Taylor of the World was delighted with the "animation and dramatic intensity" which Mr. Serafin brought to the score, which "rekindled some forgotten fires." The Herald Tribune found his reading "electrically tense" and vital, "filled with emotional ardor and dramatic life."

This paper doubted if Mme. Jeritza had ever given a more moving Tosca. Her impersonation was called "incomparable" by Olin Downes in the Times who also thought that the part was "gloriously sung" and one to be remembered for many years. In the second act, Deems Taylor considered her "altogether superb." Mr. Scotti's performancee of Scarpia was characterized by Mr. Henderson as "a model of character composition, a brilliant example of a perfectly planned union of action, dress, pantomime, expression and vocal manner." Mr. Taylor found his playing of the role as "impressive" as ever, and the other papers added their words of praise to his work.

Of others in the cast Olin Downes wrote: "There was a full-throated tenor in the case of Mr. Fleta, who seems to have developed as a singer since last season and who filled his part with a reasonable consciousness of the theatrical fitness of things. Mr. Ananian was an excellent Angelotti, a highly realistic picture of the hunted fugitive. Minor roles were admirably taken." The Telegram-Mail said that Angelo Bada as Spoletta "proved once more that for a genuine artist there is no such thing as a small part."

Sues Metropolitan

Nicola Zerola, tenor, has just filed two suits for $150,000 and $100,000, respectively, against the Metropolitan Opera Company for breach of contract. Mr. Zerola asserts that he contracted to sing at the Metropolitan in opera, and was actually permitted to appear there only in concert.

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
Victor Records
Steinway Piano
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York

Stravinsky's Sacre Given in Chicago

Apollo Club in First Concert; Hansen, Lamond and Maier-Pattison in Recital.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—With a number of cards to help the audience to realize at every moment which of its parts was being played, Frederick Stock gave Chicago its first hearing of Igor Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps last Friday evening. Mme. Leschetizky made her American debut as soloist with the Chicago Orchestra in Liszt's E flat Concerto at this concert.

The reviewers hesitated to comment on the Rites of Spring after only a single hearing. They were agreed that by any traditional standard the composition could be regarded only as ugly, but nevertheless they did not dismiss the work for that reason. "It has force," said the reviewer of the Post, but the "force is not merely noise." This writer thought that there was charm in the brutality of the piece.

Edward Moore wrote in the Tribune, "For once modern music conquered on first hearing. Stravinsky's music works not at all upon the emotions; it is unbelievably stimulating to the nerves." He called the Sacre "one of the most exciting and most interesting pieces of music that the orchestra has ever played."

The appearance of Mme. Leschetizky was felt to have been made under something of a disadvantage because of the Stravinsky premiere. The reviewers reported that she was nervous and erratic in technique.

Besides making some explanatory remarks concerning the Sacre Mr. Stock conducted Beethoven's Second Symphony and Mozart's Magic Flute Overture.

The Apollo Club Concert was a memorial to Charles L. Hutchinson, one of the supporters of the organization. The first part of Haydn's Creations and Brahms' Requiem were sung. It was agreed in the reports of the concert that the Club sang with excellent spirit, although at times the sopranos were guilty of slips of intonation. Maurice Rosenfeld thought that "the fugal sections moved with impelling force and with clearly punctuated accents."

"One has the happy combination of frank enjoyment of the beauty of the music and admiration for their technical skill," was the verdict of Karleton Hackett in the Post concerning the playing of Guy Maier and Lee Pattison in their two-piano recital on election night, and Mr. Rosenfeld agreed.

Cecilia Hansen, violinist, and Frederic Lamond, pianist, have been among the recent recitalists in Chicago. Mr. Stock gave his first children's concert of the season on the afternoon of November 6.

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

In the revival of the Tales of Hoffmann last Thursday evening at the Metropolitan the role of Olympia, the doll, was sung by Nina Morgana (left); that of Giulietta by Lucrezia Eori (right); that of Doctor Miracle by Giuseppe de Luca (upper center); and that of Hoffmann by Miguel Fleta (lower center).

St. Louis Hears Recitals

St. Louis, Nov. 7.—After an absence of two years, Ernestine Schumann Heink returned to St. Louis in a song recital at the Odeon last Friday. Her large audience of new admirers and old friends were, to quote Richard Spamer in the Globe-Democrat, "astonished by her wondrous exhibition of vocalism" and "completely charmed by her consummate art."

Mme. Schumann Heink was, according to Blanche Furth Ulman of the Star, "inimitable, as always, in her favorite Schubert numbers." In the Times, the singer's performance was lauded for its excellence of interpretation, quality and diction. This review spoke of the "faultless accompaniments" of Katherine Huffman. Florence Hardeman played two violin solos. Before her last group of songs, Mme. Schumann Heink made a plea for funds for disabled soldiers in the drive that is to begin next Saturday.

A young Italian baritone, Eusebio Concialdi, will make his St. Louis debut next Thursday. He will offer an inclusive program of Italian, German, French and American songs.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Municipal Theatre Association yesterday, H. J. Pettingill was elected head of the Municipal Opera for the coming season.

Goossens Closes in Rochester

Eugene Goossens has just concluded his half of the season with the Rochester Orchestra, presenting in his closing concert Howard Hanson's Symphonic Poem, North and West, for orchestra and chorus. Albert Coates will come to Rochester from London early in January to lead the orchestra for three months. It will pay its annual visit to New York on March 23.

Celebrate Behymer Anniversary

Los Angeles, Nov. 6.—A triple celebration by the Gamut Club, to greet L. E. Behymer, its president, on his return home from Europe, and to honor him on his birthday and on the thirty-fifth anniversary of his career as a music manager, took place yesterday in the rooms of the club. Two hundred members and guests, many of them representatives of Western music organizations, were present at the banquet tables. Mr. Behymer was presented with a bound and tooled book with a gold name plate. After the banquet a short program was given in the auditorium, and this was followed by a dance.

Birmingham Concerts Arranged

Adrian Boult, musical director of the City of Birmingham Orchestra in England, has completed his plans for this season. There will be eight Thursday evening symphony concerts, beginning this month. Besides Mr. Boult, the conductors will be Bruno Walter, Eugene Goossens and Sir Landon Ronald. In addition to the symphony concerts, he will offer monthly Saturday evening, weekly Sunday evening and monthly children's concerts.

Mary Garden Back

Among the arrivals on the White Star liner, Olympic, on Armistice Day was Mary Garden, operatic soprano.

Nicholas Medtner

After his appearances as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra in Philadelphia and in New York, Nicholas Medtner, composer-pianist, made his American recital debut last Thursday evening in Town Hall. There was great difference of opinion expressed in the reviews concerning Mr. Medtner's playing.

The reviewer of the World felt that he repeated the impression that he is "a musician with fine sense of proportion, clarity, and scholarly understanding." His own compositions seemed to this writer "clear, rhythmic patterns, sturdy rather than elfin." The Post writer thought, too, that Mr. Medtner brought "full realization" of its implications to Beethoven's Appassionata, and the Sun report included the opinion that Mr. Medtner "had no little brilliancy, poetic taste, and fine understanding."

The Telegram-Mail review was particularly adverse. This writer found excessive haste and loudness in the recital, and believed that Mr. Medtner had not at his command "the touch which elicits the graces of tone and the beguilements of singing legato." To this writer Mr. Medtner's own compositions were "inconsequential," but the Times commentator said of them: "These applauded pieces delivered with racy feeling and rhythmic emphasis might have been a later Chopin."

The audience was enthusiastic from the beginning.

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

EDITH MASON
SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK CITY

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 5

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.; Canada, $6.00; Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Thanksgiving

Within a few days the nation will be celebrating Thanksgiving Day. Most of the one hundred fifteen millions of people resident here will have their turkey and cranberry sauce and mince pie. There will be outspoken prayers of gratitude, and silent prayers too; but in all probability not as many such as there should be, nor as deeply expressive of the blessings which have been lavished upon the majority of us.

For in spite of the hardships the world has been experiencing during the past ten years—the frightfulness of the great war, and its attendant consequences after its close—the United States really has suffered very little.

The depressions in the varied lines of work in which the people of this country have been engaged were few and of no serious or prolonged character. Some suffered, of course, yet it was not a great nor a long maintained suffering. Work of one kind or another has been open to the large portion of those who really sought it. Food and shelter and clothing have been obtained without marked hardships to the many who found themselves temporarily at a disadvantage.

Thus, in a material sense, the United States has been fortunate—marvelously more so than the people as a whole seem able to appreciate. For most of them have not only had all the necessities of life but many of the luxuries also.

The country appears to be entering upon an era of prosperity regarded by far-sighted persons as likely to be of considerable duration. Crops are good, manufacturing industries (excepting the textiles, which will assuredly come back before long) face an increase in business, labor conditions are on the upgrade, money is cheap, railroad car-loadings are large, and the entire commercial situation is rosy.

Europe has begun its process of rehabilitation, radicalism has been pushed far back (in both England and this country), and the evidence is positive that the world is on its way to a kindlier and more sensible way of living.

All these are matters to be grateful for in the uppermost degree; to prompt every thinking person to utter a prayer of deepest thanksgiving.

Music and musicians, and those engaged in its professional activities, have not all found the road an easy one to travel during the past few years. While many have been plentifully provided for, a far greater number have endured disappointment and heartaches and diminished incomes.

By degrees these burdens are to be lifted—not for all, perhaps, but for most of those who by their own efforts deserve to have them lifted.

A cheerful and hopeful state of mind can help in this material betterment; and it can be made to help in those ways which, after all, are conducive to the best and most enduring form of happiness.

The time has come to take an optimistic view of the future, and of the opportunities which are not far off for those equal to those opportunities, and who will not falter or whimper while turning them to fullest account.

Communication

Editor Musical Digest:

My attention has just been directed to a letter in The Digest of August 19, by Maurice Frank, anent his connections with the Civic Opera Association's productions at the Polo Grounds.

Though it is rather late, there has been so much interest manifested by music lovers generally and by readers of The Digest in particular that I feel warranted in asking space in your valuable columns for recording the why and wherefore of the full term birth, but premature death, of the Civic Opera Association of New York, Inc. Perhaps this record in black on white may save some other misguided, but too trustful, music lover both money and heartache.

I have been the president of the Civic Opera Association since its very inception, hence speak with authority and with knowledge of facts in matters pertaining to that organization since its incorporation early in January to the present time, and am fully responsible for every statement I make.

Mr. Frank is not stating all the facts when he says that he was only the artistic director and had no other interest in the organization except in its "possible future profits."

At Mr. Frank's pleading solicitation and earnest promise to conduct the business in an honest, open and above board manner I agreed to incorporate and defray the initial expenses of the Civic Opera Association, including his salary, office rental, etc., till more capital could be interested. Mr. Frank promised to interest financially his "very delightful music loving friends," which, somehow, never materialized. He was the only one in the organization who was supposed to know something about grand opera, in the open air or elsewhere.

The other officers and stockholders were laymen who knew nothing about professional grand opera. I had absolute faith that grand opera in the open air could be produced successfully and that the proposition would prove a paying one after the first season. There was a musical psychology in New York last summer that argued well for open air opera. I still have that faith, provided the proposition is handled honestly by competent men. I also had faith in Maurice Frank. Open air grand opera was his hobby, and he claimed pre-eminent superiority in its production. He was—and he admits it himself—the father of open air grand opera in New York.

Despite his previous mistakes and failures I felt, and his presentation of the subject strengthened my feeling so that never before did he have the opportunity of presenting grand opera in the open air on so elaborate a scale, with so splendid a cast, orchestra and conductor. Both Mr. Frank and I realized that his success as an impresario would rise or fall with the success or failure of the Civic Opera Association.

Mr. Frank was the general manager and artistic director of the organization and was drawing a weekly salary for his work—he was to give us all his time—from January till the end of July. None of us have seen him or heard of him since.

Maurice Frank was a director in the association and had a voice and vote in its affairs. No meeting was held and nothing was done without his knowledge. Had he extended the same courtesy to us the Civic Opera Association would be ranking high in the operatic world.

Without investing one cent or interesting any of the capital he promised, Mr. Frank owned 30 per cent of the interests of the Civic Opera Association, the rights to which he vested in me because, for reasons of his own, he did not want his name to appear on the books of the company.

The Civic Opera Association was well organized and amply financed. Its ambition was to remain in the operatic field as a permanent organization and its future looked bright. But we did not figure on, could not even conceive, of non-support from within by the very person who stood to gain most from success, and certain pitfalls from without; all beyond the knowledge and control of myself and associates. The Civic Opera Association failed—not solely because of the financial loss (over $22,000)—part of which we might have made up by giving the other two performances and then going to Philadelphia, where $15,000 expenses was to be guaranteed for the performance of Aida—we failed to continue because we did not know, could not know, what trickery was in store for us from day to day.

The following recital of facts will suffice to make clear what I mean by trickery and pitfalls:

At the last business meeting of the association, about a week before Carmen, Mr. Frank assured us that the stage would cost about $3,000. This was in keeping with his plans and the verbal agreement with the designers, who were also supposed to supervise the construction. We were compelled to pay over $11,000, most of it to the Allied Studios, for the stage and scenery and that 48 hours before the performance, when it was too late to investigate and make changes.

Following the performance of Carmen we called upon the National Exhibition Company, owners of the Polo Grounds, for the gate receipts, only to learn that Mr. Bondy, attorney for Mr. Stoneham, held an agreement from Mr. Frank giving him 5 per cent of the gross gate receipts from each performance. Neither I nor any of my associates knew of the existence of this agreement, and to this day we do not know why Mr. Frank entered into such an agreement with Mr. Bondy. The amount involved was too small to warrant legal action.

Also, to the performance of Aida, according to most conservative estimates of the press and of those accustomed to judge crowds, there were present between 7,500 and 8,000 people. According to our own records and those of the turnstiles at the Polo Grounds, only 3,180 paid admissions, and 400 free admissions, passed through the gates that evening.

How did the other 4,000 get in? Perhaps Mr. Frank, who was on the grounds all afternoon and evening, can answer that. We cannot.

The day following Aida Mr. Frank could not be located anywhere, and, realizing that the situation, because of the suspicions and uncertain elements involved were beyond our control, the Civic Opera Association decided to take the loss and quit.

SAMUEL A. LEWIN.

The Room Reflex

Half an Interview With Ernest Hutcheson's Studio, and Half With Himself

by EDWINA DAVIS

THE room reflex—why not? It won't be long before soul complexes are out of date, and psychoanalysis a proletarian pastime, like mah-jong, —and you know how that game first started out? But analyzing people by their rooms can be just as revealing, and is heaps more get-atable than their souls.

This thought came to me while I sat waiting for an interview with Ernest Hutcheson in the music-room of his apartment, high up above the taxi-turmoil of Central Park West. Mr. Hutcheson, poor soul, was no doubt hovering on the other side of the closed door leading to his study, putting off the moment when he would have to face the inquisitorial pencil. I felt almost like telling him not to come in at all; I could interview the music-room in his stead.

"Here," I said to me, "is a man who doesn't think that just because he is an artist he can yell anathema at the cook when she brings him a three-minute instead of a four-minute egg; and he certainly doesn't spend his waking hours in worrying about whether or not he is wearing a suit of exact shade which the Prince of Wales affects. He hasn't a kitchenette mind, either, (you know the kind, all cluttered-up when one tries to give a seven course dinner on two gas-burners). On the contrary, he is a reader and a thinker. No, he is no moss-backed conventionalist, and wouldn't join any Ku Klux Klan to put the parallel fifths back into bondage. At the same time he is no believer in the promiscuity of chords, either, and, although I haven't asked him, I shouldn't wonder if Schonberg makes him positively ill.

Now, how could I tell all this? Simply by glancing at the room. The warm buff walls with their straightforward gaze, gave not a sign of a picture anywhere. Think of it—no Baby Stuart, no Saint Cecilia gazing up at the right-hand north corner of the frame, no Balestrieri Beethoven, no Chopin's Last Hour. I looked under the piano and in all the corners for a trace of the Nike of Samothrace. In vain. As for the autographed photographs and wobbly tables covered with Chinese ivory elephants, Sevres statuettes and Malay papercutters, etc., etc., they were not.

But everything in the room had its use. There were two grand pianos in the middle of the floor, a music cabinet filled with piano scores and other music, shelves overflowing with books; divans, deep, d e m u l c e n t, wherein one could reach the depths of contentment and a c h i e v e the heights of conversational ease. I forgot—there was one thing of decorative value in the room—a bowl of orange-toned chrysanthemums. But it hadn't the static monotony of never being anything else from one end of the year to the other, like a picture. One could imagine June roses supplanting the chrysanthemums, or cheery crocuses nodding a bright reminder that winter flannels are of the past.

ERNEST HUTCHESON

Then, too, a subtle atmosphere of peace pervaded the room, as if the person who lived his days within these four walls had the habit of quiet, connected thinking. The serried ranks of books bespoke silent, delightful hours spent in communion with the great and enduring minds of the past and present.

Right in the midst of my thoughts the door opened and the friendly face of Ernest Hutcheson beamed at me. We were to have tea, immediately, it seemed.

"And please smoke," I added, for I caught the faint odor of a cigar abandoned in its prime, and I well knew that you never get a man's undivided attention so long as he is secretly longing for you to be gone so that he can return to his smoke. "Now, Mr. Hutcheson," I began briskly, "I have been delegated by twenty-two piano teachers and one hundred and two piano students to ask you why you are leaving out the Moonlight Sonata in your program of November 22."

"Dear me, dear me! Is it as bad as all that? I suppose tomorrow there will be other delegations to ask why I omitted Pathetique and the Apassionata. But what was I to do? I had just so much time at my disposal, and there were Haydn and Mozart to consider. The problem of choice was a difficult one. Perhaps I have let my personal preferences interfere to some extent in my decision, but I chose Waldstein and the Opus 111 as the two outstanding—to my mind—expressions of Beethoven in his moods of sunshine and shadow. But this isn't disposing of the hundred and twenty-four delegates of the Moonlight, as people will persist in misnaming that helpless sonata. What are they going to do about the matter? You'll have to give answer that I cannot please them, much to my regret.

"I can see what is going to happen to me after these programs devoted to the modern composers," Hutcheson sighed, taking up an announcement of his Survey of Piano Literature from the 16th Century to Our Day. "Life won't be worth an ice cream soda when I start on these."

"I should say it won't," I gasped, glancing at the program. "Why, you've omitted Grieg and Moszkowsky."

"Yes, and quite a few others. But I couldn't help it. It is extremely hard for any one to view his own time dispassionately. Like Southey's old gentleman who used a magnifying glass when he ate his cherries, so that they would appear larger, we unconsciously magnify the virtues and defects of our day. It is next to impossible to get the correct focus. I willingly admit my own fallibility in the matter, and must let my choice of the twenty-six modern composers who make up the last two programs be ascribed to the limitations of my own knowledge and taste."

Certainly a fair enough statement of opinion. It gives an index to the understanding spirit of Mr. Hutcheson, who does not believe in setting himself up as the dogmatic arbiter of another man's taste, be it in music, religion, or neckties.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

JESSIE CHRISTIAN
SOPRANO
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger 1322 Kimball Building Chicago, Ill.

INA BOURSKAYA
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Metropolitan Opera Company—Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management: S. HUROK, INC. Aeolian Hall, New York City

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

CHARLES MARSHALL
TENOR CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Ernest Hutcheson

Ernest Hutcheson, at Aeolian Hall, on November 8, devoted the first of his seven historical recitals, intended to outline four centuries of piano music, to the clavier composers of the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries. His opening group of English numbers, including the Sellinger's Round of William Byrd, John Blow's C major Prelude, two pieces by Orlando Gibbons, and a Prelude, Cebell, Minuet and Rigaudoon by Henry Purcell, was the least familiar of his offerings. In the French group were Daquin, Couperin, Rameau, and Loeillet and Paradies, Leonardo Leo, and Scarlatti were in the Italian. The program closed with the German group of Johann Graun, Mattheson, Handel, and Bach.

The reviewers found Mr. Hutcheson in fine form. The Herald Tribune commentator thought that the "smoothness and finish of his playing, the fluent dexterity and high speed of his fingers were ideal for his early music." Although the Sun reviewer considered that his "scholarly attainments" needed no recapitulation, he allowed himself a few words of praise for Mr. Hutcheson's "delightful" playing which showed "evident joy" in his offerings; his "exceptional technic;" the "intellectual purity" of his style; his clarity of melodic outline and "crispness" of legato.

The large audience was warmly appreciative and called for several encores.

Charles Naegele

A young American pianist who has been heard abroad, Charles Naegele, was heard in his first local recital at Aeolian Hall, November 10. The Bach-Busoni Prelude and Fugue which opened the program was, according to the Times, "played in a firm manner with a due regard to clearness." Chopin B minor Sonata and Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques completed the entertainment, which, the World felt, was a "taxing one" in which he acquitted himself "more than creditably." This paper dwelt on the fact that he distinguished himself as a professional artist not only in his technique and tone, but by his "sense of style and grasp of musical structure." The Herald Tribune was of the opinion that Mr. Naegele was strongest in technical equipment. The Sun went further and called the recital a distinctly promising one of "an interesting and promising young artist who deserves to be heard again." His touch, this paper said, was "impressive in vitality and dynamic control," and the outstanding characteristic of his playing was "a splendid control of rhythm."

Sascha Jacobsen

A string orchestra, conducted by Franz Kneisel, assisted Sascha Jacobsen, violinist, in his concert at Aeolian Hall November 7. Mr. Jacobsen, who was called by the Times "a player of poise and brilliant clarity," opened his program with the Vivaldi-Nachez concerto accompanied by Mr. Kneisel and the orchestra. In his second number, the Sarabande, Double and Bourree from Bach's B minor Sonata, he was unaccompanied, and in the rest of the program he had Emanuel Balaban at the piano.

Mr. Jacobsen's playing was spoken of in the World as displaying "admirable spirit and enthusiasm and the steadfast tone control which brings such assurance to his style." The orchestra, according to this paper, played with an infectious earnestness and delight. The Herald Tribune said that the "high quality" of his playing is well known in New York and that he was in "excellent form" at this recital. "The lyric passages of Cyril Scott's Tallahassee Suite served well to bring out warmth and fullness of tone, and his technique throughout was marked by masterful dexterity." There was a large and enthusiastic audience.

Shura Cherkassy

A boy of twelve, Shura Cherkassy, made his recital debut as a pianist in Aeolian Hall last Wednesday evening. He played Handel's Theme and Variations in D minor, Godowsky's arrangements of Rameau's Tambourin, and the Mendelssohn Rondo Capriccioso, followed by a Chopin group, and by small pieces of Mana-Zucca and himself.

Although he was a lad in knickerbockers, Master Cherkassy showed "no uncertainty or sign of nervousness," according to the Herald Tribune report. His playing, this writer said, "was clear-cut and fluent," with "well defined contrast of staccato and legato." At times the lad "overdid his fortissimos," this reporter continued, but also he showed some delicacy of shading. The Times also found that he played "with real beauty." The World writer admitted his finger dexterity, but found understanding lacking. Both the Telegram-Mail and the Sun agreed to the technical skill of the youthful player, while the latter found also "subtle qualities of musical temperament."

Frances Nash

With a program made up for the most part of modern composers, Ravel, Poulenc and Kodaly, Frances Nash, pianist, gave her first New York recital of the season Nov. 7 in Aeolian Hall. Miss Nash, wrote the Times reviewer, showed a "fine intellectual grip of her material" and played with "insight, conviction and enthusiasm." This writer, who acknowledged the pianist as an artist who has shown "unmistakable talent," was pleased with her "virility of thinking," and "firm drawing of melodic lines."

The Tribune observer considered that Miss Nash had advanced considerably since last year and that she brought "color and intelligence" to her performance. The artist is characterized as having "a good piano tone, much spirit and commendable finger technique," in the Sun. Alison Smith wrote in the World that Miss Nash showed "a deft understanding of the bitter-sweet themes" on her "unusually interesting and provocative" program.

Harriet Eells

In her Aeolian Hall recital last Wednesday afternoon Harriet Eells, mezzo-soprano, received "genuine and enthusiastic applause from the audience," to quote the Times, and her singing had its effect on the reviewers too. "She has not rushed upon the stage before she had something to offer the public. The voice, which has marked character, is richest and warmest in the lower registers. The upper tones, properly attacked, have 'ping' and brilliancy, and become a suitable vehicle for dramatic or lyrical expression," said Olin Downes in the Times, and "This voice has not only individual color, but the quality of intelligence." This reviewer held out the highest expectations of the career of Miss Eells.

W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun, "Her voice was generally free, warm in tone, and touched with subtle lights and shading." He thought, however, that "her technical equipment is not yet complete, and for this reason she failed to accomplish her own obvious purposes in some songs." Pitts Sanborn said in the Telegram-Mail, "She sang with the assurance of a veteran," with "an unusual understanding of style and no little ability as an interpreter." Mr. Sanborn also did not consider Miss Eells a finished artiste as yet.

The World reviewer thought that nervousness kept some of her singing from exhibiting Miss Eells' best talents, and the Herald Tribune found a "vocal and temperamental equipment indicating potential excellence as a singer."

Friends of Music

Mahler's Fourth Symphony was the main piece on the program of the Friends of Music at their second subscription concert in Town Hall on November 9. Artur Bodanzky was the conductor, and Marcella Roeseler, soprano, was soloist in the last movement of the Symphony. Cherubini's Overture to Lodoiska opened the concert.

The reviewers were more cordial in their reception of the Fourth than they have been in the past when the Friends of Music or other organizations have played symphonies of Mahler. Lawrence Gilman in the Herald Tribune wrote, "Tunefulness and a certain naivete seemed to characterize the symphony . . . The first movement fell most pleasantly on the ear, and the slow movement had its lyric charm." This reviewer said further, "The symphony was very well performed," Mr. Bodanzky "gave a skillful and zestful reading. Mme. Roeseler sang with understanding."

Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail found "pages of momentarily agreeable music," but insisted that "they contributed to nothing," and that Mahler was uncertain of just what he wanted to say. Ernest Newman also was lukewarm toward the symphony. It left him "in doubt." "It is all excellent," summed up Mr. Newman, "but hardly any of it is first rate, and it betrays its composite origin in a lack of any style of its own."

Mr. Henderson, in the Sun found fault with Mahler's orchestration and technique, which seemed to him labored and "crude," while Olin Downes writing in the Times felt that the "symphony gives the impression of a big attempt with hopelessly small elements." Many details in the work were pleasing to these reviewers too, nevertheless. The latter thought the performance "eloquent."

Harry Anik

MacDowell's Sonata Tragica and Jongen's Suite Op. 60 were played by Harry Anik in his piano recital in Town Hall last Wednesday. The Sun said, "Mr. Anik possessed many agreeable qualities, a good touch, an adequate technic, and an ability to present his program in an interesting manner," but this writer believed that there was a lack of distinction in the performance. The Telegram-Mail saw Mr. Anik as a "serious and well-equipped, if scarcely distinguished player." The Herald Tribune report said in part, "Mr. Anik had a well developed and polished technic, marked by neatness and ability for speed."

The Jongen was a first performance. Alison Smith in the World spoke of the composition as "an agreeable, pensive work of grace and fluency."

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

MARIE
BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

MME. ETHEL PARKS
Lyric-Coloratura Soprano
MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Alexandre de Bruille

After an absence of some years, Alexandre de Bruille, French violinist, played at Aeolian Hall, November 6. Frank Bibb was the accompanying pianist. Mr. de Bruille is "without doubt," asserted the Sun reviewer, "a talented player, sincere in his methods and bound to interest." This reviewer liked his playing of Mozart and Mendelssohn because he showed "admirable knowledge of style . . . . and imparted warmth to his work."

The Herald Tribune report was similar to this and considered that his rendition of the Mozart number, particularly, showed "marked technical competence and plenty of zest." Both papers were agreed that there were slight defects of tone that were due, most probably, to his violin. Other than this occasional "wiry" moment, his tone, to quote the Herald Tribune, "had an agreeable fullness and warmth."

Bronislaw Huberman

Bronislaw Huberman gave a violin recital in Carnegie Hall last Tuesday. In Schumann's Sonata for violin and piano he was assisted by Siegfried Schultze, pianist. The two artists played the music with "appreciation" and gave cause for wonder that it appears so infrequently in recital lists, the Sun reviewer wrote. He felt that the program served well to display Mr. Huberman's "accurate finger work, incisive rhythmic sense and fine musical appreciation." The writer in the Herald Tribune discovered in his playing his "characteristic vigor." The World thought his tone "steadier" in the Goldmark Concerto than in the Schumann Sonata, although the interpretation of the former was often of "poetic brilliance."

Elena Barberi

The first of three Sunday evening recitals by Elena Barberi, young Italian-American pianist, was heard November 9 in Aeolian Hall. This ambitious cycle, according to the Times, was "largely justified at the outset by some uncommonly vigorous piano playing and command of classic and modern periods." The Sun discovered in her "an artist of strictly feminine type, sensitive in her appreciation of color and tone and making no virile claims to an impressive style, in fact . . . her style was singularly her own." This reviewer admired Miss Barberi's "pleasing" stage presence. Her program included Bach, Rameau, Scarlatti, Beethoven, Chopin and Liszt, followed by a group of "moderns"—a Danza Mistica by Gilda Ruta, a Musette by Westerhout and the concert etude of MacDowell.

Gilbert Ross

Making his third appearance here, Gilbert Ross in Town Hall, November 7, "showed continued development and progress in a talent that was marked in his debut," said the Herald Tribune reviewer. This reviewer saw the progress of the young violinist in his "technical skill and sureness and a tone of considerably augmented volume and richness, plus temperament."

The Times agreed that "Mr. Ross confirmed an impression of ripening musicianship" made at his debut. The World thought that the violinist played with "obvious sympathy and sincerity" the Ascension by Cecil Burleigh, "a touching and simple study . . .brief and expressive."

State Symphony Orchestra

Two symphonies, Brahms' Fourth and Tschaikowsky's Pathetique, made up the program offered by the State Symphony Orchestra, Josef Stransky conducting, at their concert in Carnegie Hall a week ago today. The Brahms was conducted, read the review in the Post, with "all the necessary vigor and feeling." The reading and rendition of the second of the symphonies was the "satisfactory performance" expected. The Sun thought the final movements of this number "were played with smoothness and a dramatic effect of undeniable force and power. It was a vigorous reading carefully and skillfully conducted." The reading of the Fourth Symphony was thought "expressive" by the Times and applauded by the large audience, which, however, "turned with enthusiasm" to Tschaikowsky. The Pathetique was played in a darkened hall as an Armistice Day tribute.

Grace Leslie

In a program which included a group of sixteenth-century English songs and two manuscript numbers by Housman and Stringfield, Grace Leslie,. contralto, was heard at Town Hall last Tuesday. Conal Quirke assisted at the piano and Lamar Stringfield played a flute accompaniment for Ravel's La Flute Enchantee. The Sun discovered "undoubted talent" in Miss Leslie's performance as well as a voice of "excellent quality." In spite of a "narrow range of expression in the art of tone color," her voice revealed to this reviewer "plenty of volume," and her head tones were "free and sonorous." He predicted that with more flexibility and a greater range of expression, Miss Leslie "will be heard to still greater advantage." Notwithstanding a "rather limited range," the Herald Tribune thought her tone "unusually pleasing."

Virginia C. Thomas

The first woman to give a recital on the new Speyer memorial organ in Town Hall was Virginia Carrington Thomas, who was heard there November 10. Mrs. Thomas offered a program of Bach, Cesar Franck, Georges Jacob, Charles M. Widor, and a canon of her own composition.

Her "serious, scholarly performance" convinced the Herald Tribune of her "technical capacity, knowledge of the organ . . . and digital and pedal dexterity." The Sun observer regretted that her occasional use of the printed notes in the more difficult numbers "did not help her freedom and breadth of style" although this defect was more than balanced by her "conscientious musicianship."

The young organist has received many honors in her field, including Yale and Fontainebleau prizes. She was warmly greeted by a capacity audience.

Reinald Werrenrath

Reinald Werrenrath had his customary audience at his recital in Carnegie Hall, November 9. In spite of three orchestra concerts scheduled for the same hour, Mr. Werrenrath's stage was crowded. He was assisted in two of his numbers by The Symphony Players, and Herbert Carrick played the other accompaniments. In addition to Grieg, Mozart, Henry Purcell; lighter lyrics by Eric Cundell, Martin Shaw, Roger Quilter, and H. F. Gilbert, the baritone sang five songs by Finnish composers. Three compositions by Jan Sibelius, one by Ilmari Hannikainen and another by Yrjo Kilpinen made up the group. One section of the program contained four poems of John Masefield set to music by Easthope Martin.

The reviewers showed their usual enthusiasm for a Werrenrath performance. He has, said the writer in the Post, a voice which is "an exceptionally fine baritone instrument, which he uses with intelligence, ease and grace." In spite of the attractive program, this reviewer regretted a certain "sameness" which kept him hoping that Mr. Werrenrath "would burst into a song that would release the full power and beauty of his voice."

Mr. Werrenrath was generous in his response to the numerous demands for encores.

Clara Clemens in Third Recital

In the third recital of her historical series Clara Clemens devoted her program last Tuesday evening in Town Hall to the romantic German composers, Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Liszt, Cornelius and Franz.

Olga Samaroff

Olga Samaroff gave a piano recital last Tuesday afternoon in Aeolian Hall. The intelligence of Mme. Samaroff's art "commands constant admiration" from the Sun commentator. This artist, who played with "beauty of tone and with great refinement of style," has made progress, he said, "in penetrative insight and in nice adjustment of details to serious aims." Olin Downes commented in the Times on her "brilliant technic" in spite of a tone which "is light rather than deep and singing." Mr. Downes thought that Mme. Samaroff played best in music that demanded "dexterity and fleetness of style." In Mary Howe's Nocturne she played "with sparkle and elegance, in consonance with the nature of the compositions."

The Herald Tribure found in the performance, "ample illustration of the high quality of her playing, capable of distinct vigor when necessary, but not cultivating extremes, subtly and judiciously shaded. Brahms' E flat Rhapsody was the best example of this neatly applied force."

Jean Knowlton

A recital of Songs of Many Periods was given by Jean Knowlton in Aeolian Hall, November 5. Miss Knowlton was assisted by Frank Bibb at the piano and Edwin Ideler, violinist. The periods represented stretched from old England to modern Spain, and were sung, Alison Smith wrote in the World, "with evident devotion to their themes."

Miss Knowlton, in a variety of appropriate costumes, gave an "admirably arranged" program, according to the Sun. Her voice, this reviewer said, was "one well adapted to lyric compositions of a simple nature." The Herald Tribune commentator was of the opinion that Miss Knowlton showed a voice of "good volume, able to soar in the higher altitudes, often smoothly." The review in the Times emphasized the fact that the Elizabethan and modern composers were "very well sung" by Miss Knowlton, who had to repeat several of them. H F. P. of the Telegram-Mail was disappointed that the singer failed to bring to this "interesting effort" the "vocal or interpretive elements it demanded."

McCormack Sings Again

John McCormack gave his second New York recital of the season in Carnegie Hall on November 9. In honor of Mrs. McCormack's birthday he added to the program, as one of his encores, Frank Bridge's Oh, That It Were So, which is one of her favorite songs.

GIGLI

KOLITSCH

Management: Antonia Sawyer, Inc,. Aeolian Hall, New York

G I G L I

"Greeted with cheers"
in the Metropolitan Revival of "La Gioconda"

Olin Downes in The New York Times:

"Gigli's Enzo was one of the most notable features of the occasion—his tone in sustained passages was of spun silk. The smallest vocal ornament had a significant beauty, and what a relief to hear a tenor who did not bawl the first strophe of 'Cielo e Mar' at the top of his lungs! Mr. Gigli's singing at certain moments wove a spell. He could have been the tenor extolled by Balzac in 'Venetian Nights'."

Deems Taylor in The New York World:

"Mr. Gigli's beautiful voice was at its best, and he sang exquisitely throughout the afternoon. His rendering of 'Cielo e Mar' was extraordinarily fine, and the cheers with which his auditors greeted it were emphatically deserved."

W. J. Henderson in The New York Sun:

"Mr. Gigli was in his element as Enzo. His voice was in its best condition and he had full command of that mezza voice which contributes so much to the charm of his singing. His 'Cielo e Mar' sustained the best traditions of the Metropolitan stage."

Pitts Sanborn in the New York Telegram and Mail:

"The mantle of Caruso for this Ponchielli revival has fallen on Beniamino Gigli, and right royally he wears it. * * * In the main he can be freely praised for the authentic and engrossing artistry of his singing."

Lawrence Gilman in The New York Herald Tribune:

"What would La Gioconda be without 'Cielo e Mar' and a singer like Mr. Gigli? * * * Mr. Gigli is the right sort of tenor for Enzo."

Leonard Liebling in The New York American:

"It was a delight to welcome back to the scene of his previous triumphs that fine and finished tenor Beniamino Gigli. He returns in perfect voice and with his polished art undiminished. He gave such pleasure yesterday that it took the form of prolonged before-the-curtain ovations."

Frank H. Warren in The Evening World:

"Mr. Gigli came off with first vocal honors. He sang with great beauty of tone and with a style that was a joy to behold."

Edward Cushing in The Brooklyn Eagle:

"The 'Cielo e Mar' of Gigli was beautifully sung and the entire role excellently handled."

Ernest Newman in The Evening Post:

"Mr. Gigli's singing was an especial pleasure. He is that rare exception, an Italian or Italianized singer who does not labor under the delusion that the one thing he has to do is to behave like the solo cornet in a brass band. He can modulate his tones, and he has a sense of style that keeps the musical hearer interested in him."

Management:

R. E. JOHNSTON

1451 Broadway New York City

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

VICTOR RED SEAL RECORDS

Chicago Opera Continues

Pecheurs de Perles, Prophete, Aida, and Tosca Presented; Moranzoni Makes Debut.

Chicago, Nov. 10.—Following the opening of the Chicago Civic Opera last Wednesday night with the presentation of Gioconda, four more performances have already been given, which the reviewers of the newspapers and the audiences received as heartily as the first. Yesterday Les Pecheurs de Perles and Aida were sung in the afternoon and evening, Le Prophete was given on Thursday, and Tosca on Friday.

Claudia Muzio in the title role of Tosca received unstinted praise from the reviewers. Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner lauded her as "a great actress . . . and a greater artiste." Edwin Moore promised in the Tribune that whenever Mme. Muzio was billed as Tosca he would make a considerable effort to be present. Karleton Hackett in the Post admired the "dramatic touches" of her playing of the role, as well as "the delightful little touches which kept it human."

Mme. Muzio, wrote Mr. Moore, "had some highly talented co-operation in Charles Hackett as Mario, Mariano Stabile, a newcomer, who played the part of Scarpia, and Roberto Moranzoni, another newcomer, who appeared for the first time on the conductor's stand. Mr. Moranzoni had his orchestra well in hand and they responded readily to his baton." Mr. Gunn praised Mr. Hackett as a "fine artist . . . greatly endowed with voice and intelligence," and Mr. Stabile as a "gifted actor . . . a resourceful vocal artist." The other reviewers agreed with Mr. Gunn.

According to Edward Moore, two persons justified the revival of Le Prophete—Charles Marshall as Jean and Louise Homer in the role of Fides. Mr. Marshall he congratulated for "a fine voice, and fine singing," while Mme. Homer was a "superb contralto." There were two debuts, those of Olga Forrai as Bertha and of Ivan Dneproff. Mme. Forrai's voice was "a little uneven," wrote Karleton Hackett in the Post, but she played the part with dramatic force. Other members of the cast were Edouard Cotreuil, Alexander Kipnis, Antonio Nicholich and Jose Mojica. Mr. Hackett said that Mr. Moranzoni gave an "interesting" reading of the score.

Bizet's Les Pecheurs de Perles was the matinee attraction yesterday afternoon. Graziella Pareto as the priestess sang "with more than her usual charm of manner and with extraordinary beauty of voice," wrote Maurice Rosenfeld in the News, and Mr. Hackett as Nadir, one of the lovers, sang "with refinement as well as brilliance." Giacomo Rimini as Zurga evidenced musicianship. Edouard Cotreuil's "resonant tone and authority of style" helped to make the role of the high priest dignified. Considerable interest in the performance centered in the scenery and costumes. The score, under Mr. Polacco's baton, thought Mr. Rosenfeld, "proved to be of symphonic bigness."

Last night's performance of Aida was, to quote Mr. Hackett, "brilliantly given and received with enthusiasm by the public." Rosa Raisa, Mr. Marshall, Mr. Formichi, Virgilio Lazzari and Mr. Kipnis made an admirable cast "and sang in the manner to bring out the full quality of the music." Augusta Lenska made her reappearance with the company, after an absence of some years, with a voice which was "rich in quality." Mr. Rosenfeld marveled at Mme. Raisa's voice, which "poured forth a tone that was always vibrant and rich in quality." The ballet was excellent and Mr. Moranzoni again received commendation for his directing.

New York Symphony

Mischa Mischakoff, concertmaster, was soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch conducting, at its concert in Aeolian Hall on November 9. He played the Tschaikowsky Concerto, and Mr. Damrosch led, besides, several pieces of Charpentier, Schumann, and Mozart, and Tschaikowsky's Nutcracker Suite.

The Times writer said that Mr. Mischakoff "renewed the impression of his artistic worth," and according to the reviewer of the World he "brought to it the clearness of tone and color which have distinguished his brief and happy career." The Post report echoed this praise, but the Herald Tribune and the Sun writers thought that Mr. Mischakoff has played better in the past. Both commented on the apparent difficulty he had at times in keeping in time with the orchestra, or it with him, and the former found his intonation not always perfect. The latter commentator said, however, that his "able technic and good tone" made the latter part of his reading "warm and convincing."

On the afternoon before in Carnegie Hall Mr. Damrosch and his players gave the first of their series of concerts for young people. Ossip Gabrilowitsch was soloist with the orchestra on November 7. He played the Schumann Concerto, and the Post report said of his performance, "The piano said things sweetly and touchingly, with grace and limpid beauty."

ALEXANDER SMALLENS
Conductor and Director of the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company, Which Has Just Opened Its Current Season.

Elshuco Trio Gives First Concert of Brahms Cycle

Starting its series of eight Brahms concerts of chamber music the Elshuco Trio played two quartets and a trio of that composer in Aeolian Hall last Friday evening. A complete digest of the reviews of that concert will be published in next week's Musical Digest. The Festival Quartet of South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass., will co-operate with the Elshuco Trio in their series.

The programs of the eight Friday evening concerts will include practically all the chamber music of Brahms. The concerts to come are scheduled for November 28, December 12, January 9, January 30, February 13, March 6, and April 3.

The Trio consists of Aurelio Giorni, piano; William Kroll, violin, and Willem Willeke, cello. Other artists taking part in the series are Messrs. Kortschak, Krauter, Langenus, Moldavan, and Stoeber.

Name Opera Cast

The performance of La Cena delle Beffe at La Scala will have in its cast Lazaro, Melis, and Franci. The premiere is set for the first part of December.

Ganz Conducts in St. Louis Opening

Orchestra Starts Forty-fifth Season; Plans for Summer Municipal Opera Season Discussed.

St. Louis, Nov. 8.—The forty-fifth season of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra was opened yesterday afternoon with a concert, Rudolph Ganz conducting at the Odeon. Honoring the memory of the late John Fowler, for six years president of the Symphony Society, Mr. Ganz opened the program with Egon Kornauth's Elegie On the Death of a Friend. The orchestra also played Weber's Overture to Oberon, Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony in E minor, Debussy's two Nocturnes, Nuages and Fetes, and for the first time in St. Louis, Borodin's Dances from Prince Igor.

The playing of the symphony received special comment in the press, and the Times thought that these last two numbers were given "excellent readings and showed the results of intensive rehearsals." The performance of the symphony, to quote Blanche Furth Ullman in the Star, was "lucid and vigorous, if not very emotional." Richard L. Stokes wrote in the Post-Dispatch that passages of the Tschaikowsky work were "chiseled and polished like precious stones, or carved to the rounded grace of sculptural contours." Mr. Stokes praised the "adept mechanical skill" displayed in the opening concert and Richard Spamer said in the Globe-Democrat that Mr. Ganz demonstrated "adeptness for ultramodern music" in the performance.

The program is to be repeated tonight and the first "Pop" concert of the season takes place next Sunday afternoon. Clara Shevill, soprano, will be the soloist.

Preliminary plans for the next summer's Municipal Opera season are being discussed. It is planned to expand the scope of the association's chorus training school to include a course of study in the rudiments of stage work for prospective candidates.

Lamoureux Concerts Begin

The Concerts Lamoureux, under Paul Paray, opened their season October 19. Povla Frijsch and Marcel Dupre were the assisting artists.

ALMA BECK
CONTRALTO
For Bookings of Season 1924-1925 address
Alma Beck, Concert Management Arthur Judson, Fisk Bldg., N. Y. C. — or — Lucy N. Shiels, 1049 Park Avenue, New York City

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway, New York City — Telephone Endicott 6074

FORREST LAMONT
TENOR, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson — 4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill. — Aeolian Hall, New York

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

Margaret MATZENAUER
PRIMA DONNA CONTRALTO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, Inc., Fisk Building, 250 West 57th Street, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO — VICTOR RECORDS

JULIA GLASS, young American pianist, will give her first recital of the year at Aeolian Hall next Friday.

A program of Bach, Schumann, Chopin and Liszt will be heard at the recital of George Liebling, pianist and composer, tomorrow afternoon at Town Hall.

The Pennsylvania recitals are booked for John Barclay in the near future —one in Danville and one in Milton, on November 24 and 25.

The Roman Choir, comprising singers of the Patriarchal Roman Basilicas and the Sistine Chapel of the Vatican at Rome, are due to arrive in New York on the Giuseppe Verdi. Their first American concert will be at Town Hall on Thanksgiving night, November 27. They will also be heard on the 28th and 29th. Frank W. Healy of San Francisco, who last season brought over from Rome the Sistine Chapel Choir, has booked a coast to coast tour with side trips to Mexico and Cuba.

The programs will include classical sacred music, grand opera selections and Neopolitan folk-songs. There will be specially arranged choruses with piano and organ accompaniment.

Included in the choir are Commendatore Tischi Rubini, basso; Giuseppe Giorgi, dramatic tenor; Eugenie Andriselli, soprano; the Reverend Antonio Grimaldi, basso; Clementi, lyric tenor. The maestro is Cavaliere Angelo Negri, pianist, organist and composer.

Katharine Metcalf has been engaged at a benefit concert for the New Jersey Hospital on December 10 in West Hoboken.

Next Saturday Ernest Hutcheson will give his second New York recital of the season at Aeolian Hall, with a program devoted to Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven. The compositions played will give a survey, step by step, of the development of the sonata from the early period when Haydn took the dance suite and transformed it into the sonata, to Beethoven, who represents, in Mr. Hutcheson's analysis, the final step in the emancipation of its form and substance.

Clement Haile, pianist, will give his debut recital at Aeolian Hall tomorrow afternoon.

The New York String Quartet will be heard in recital next Tuesday in Richmond and two days later in Staunton, Va. The only New York concert of this ensemble is announced for December 9 in Aeolian Hall.

Another New York debut of the current week is that of Stefi Geyer, Hungarian violinist, which takes place today at Town Hall. Miss Geyer is to be assisted at the piano by the Swiss composer, Walter Schulthess. Her program includes Nardini's Concerto in E minor, the Introduction and Fugue in G minor by Bach, and Hubay's Hejre Kati.

At the opening of the People's Symphony Series of chamber music in Washington Irving High School, New York city, on November 8, the Hans Letz Quartet, with Frieda Siemens at the piano, gave the recently finished Clavier Quintet by Frederick Albert Hoschke, director of the Springfield National Institute of Musical Art, Inc.

Irene Peckham, twelve-year-old pianist, was heard in recital last Tuesday at the Ampico Studios, New York city.

After her joint recital with Beniamino Gigli, Metropolitan Opera tenor, at the Biltmore Morning Musicale today, May Korb, soprano, will be heard with Norman Jolliffe, baritone, tomorrow evening at Columbia University; on November 28 at Easton, Pa., and on December 3 at Newark, N. J.

Ethyl Hayden, soprano, was heard at a recent concert of the Mundell Choral Club of Brooklyn.

There will be a joint recital next Tuesday in the Wanamaker Auditorium, New York city, by Ernest MacMillan, Canadian organist, and Claude Biggs, English pianist, who makes his New York debut, in a program including a Bach Concerto for piano and organ. The concert is the third of a series in celebration of the third anniversary of the inauguration of the new concert organ in the Auditorium.

Cecil Arden of the Metropolitan Opera Company gave a recital in Brookhaven, Miss., on November 10 and in Marion, Ala., November 11.

The American debut of Walter McNally, Irish baritone, took place at the Longacre Theatre, New York city, last Sunday. Mr. McNally, under the management of Pat Casey, has started on a tour of the larger cities of the United States.

Announcement has been made that Marcel Dupre, French organist, has been engaged by Fritz Reiner, conductor of the Cincinnati Orchestra, to play with the orchestra on February 1. It is believed that the Cincinnati Orchestra will present Dupre's Organ and Orchestra composition, Cortege and Litany, which has been heard but once in America.

Daisy Jean, cellist, was recently heard in recital at DeWitt Clinton Hall, New York city, under the auspices of the Board of Education Bureau of Lectures. She appeared not only as cellist, but as soprano with her own harp accompaniments. Jean Riswell assisted Miss Jean at the piano.

Among other engagements which Jerome Swinford will fill on his mid-Western tour is one as soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra next Sunday. Mr. Swinford has been booked by the University Glee Club of New York as soloist for their concert in the Metropolitan Opera House on April 23.

Fraser Gange is to appear with the Mendelssohn Choir of Pittsburgh on November 21.

The special attraction for the concerts of the New York Symphony Orchestra concerts this Thursday and Friday will be the Bach Concerto for two violins played by Paul Kochanski and Albert Spalding.

Another soloist who has been engaged to appear with the Minneapolis Symphony this season is Jeannette Vreeland, soprano.

Bruce Simonds has just been booked by Western College, Oxford, O., for December 13 and with the Woman's Musical Club of Quebec for January 14.

Maria Carreras, Italian pianist, gave a piano recital at Keuka College, Keuka Park, New York, on November 8. She was re-engaged immediately for an appearance at the college next season. Mme. Carreras went from there directly to St. Louis, where she commenced a master class in piano last Wednesday, and where she will appear in recital next Friday.

Richard Keyes Biggs, American organist, who has not been heard in solo recital since his return from France immediately following the war, will give a New York recital at Town Hall November 25.

Arno Segall, young violinist, who has been recently heard in London, will make his American debut on January 14.

At Christmas time Mabel Garrison, soprano, will appear with the New York Oratorio Society in the presentation of Handel's Messiah.

Fred Patton will be heard as soloist with several choral organizations in and around New York this season. The baritone has been engaged to appear with the Orpheus Club of Ridgewood, N. J.

Among Olga Samaroff's activities of the season are included lectures to be given for the Woman's Board of the Academy of Music in Philadelphia.

Elena Gerhardt will give a second New York recital on November 30 at Aeolian Hall. This will be the singer's twenty-ninth New York appearance since she first came to this country.

An unusual group starts the program of Gitta Gradova, young Russian pianist, when she gives her New York recital November 26. It consists of the concerto in Italian style of Bach, and the Fourth Sonata of Scriabin. In addition are Moussorgsky, Chopin, Medtner, Albeniz and Liszt.

An opportunity to stop off at his home at Dallas, Tex., and see his new daughter will be afforded Allen McQuhae on his way from his concert in San Antonio on November 25 to Pine Bluff, Ark., for a recital on Thanksgiving day.

Ernest Schelling, who will conduct his second season of concerts for children with the Philharmonic Orchestra in New York, has been engaged to direct a similar series in Boston. He will also be heard as soloist with orchestras and in recital and expects to produce several new compositions, among them a piano quintet, which he will play with the Flonzaley Quartet.

It was mentioned erroneously in Highway last week that Horace Britt, cellist, is a member of the State Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Britt is connected with no orchestra, but is appearing this season as solo cellist, as a member of the Letz Quartet, and as teacher of his instrument and of chamber music in the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

Recent arrivals at the Great Northern Hotel indicate that this hotel will again be one of the important New York centers of musicians' and artists' activity. Among those who have lately made their homes in the Great Northern are Mme. Leschetizky, pianist, and widow of the teacher; Cecilia Hansen, violinist, and her husband, Boris Sakharoff, pianist; Thamar Karsavina, dancer; M. Vladimiroff, her partner; Elsa Alsen, prima donna of the Wagnerian Opera Company; Jean Nolan, Laura Evan-Williams, Mrs. F. Arnold, and Miss Maude Elliott, all concert artists.

The second New York recital of Elena Barberi, pianist, will be held on November 23.

Sigmund Stojowski was soloist with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, Willem van Hoogstraten conducting, at Carnegie Hall, last Sunday afternoon. He played his own piano concerto.

Kenneth Thomson, son of Mrs. Edith Taylor-Thomson, the Pittsburgh concert manager, has been engaged to play Captain Jack Absolute in Tyler and Ford's all-star revival of Sheridan's comedy, The Rivals, with Mrs. Fiske, Chauncey Olcott, James T. Powers, and other notables. Mr. Thomson has already played in support of Ethel Barrymore, Margaret Anglin and Thomas A. Wise.

The second Biltmore Musicale will be held in the ballroom of the Biltmore Hotel next Friday morning. Beniamino Gigli, Magdeleine Brard, and May Korb will be the artists who will take part.

Mme. Anne Roselle, who made seven appearances during the New York season of the San Carlo Opera Company and subsequently toured the South with this organization, is now singing with it at the Boston Opera House in Boston, her repertoire of principal roles including Tosca, Mimi, Nedda, Marguerite, Butterfly, Aida and others.

The Flonzaley Quartet, which opened its twenty-first season with a short tour of New England and made its first New York appearance of the season last Tuesday evening, is now on its first Western tour, which includes appearances in Chicago, Madison, Minneapolis (both with the Minneapolis Orchestra and at the University of Minnesota), Fargo, Rock Island, Kansas City, St. Louis, Fort Wayne, Indianapolis, Buffalo, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and such educational institutions as Wells College, Miami University, Illinois State Normal School, University of Illinois and Marietta College. The quartet will return to New York some time after Christmas.

What Civic Opera Means to America

Its Influence Upon the People and Giving Opportunity to Young Singers Are Outstanding Benefits.

By G. E. BOLTWOOD

IT was some few months ago, when the weather was warm and the thought of a long automobile journey not in the least unpleasant, that Arthur Lawrason started southward, bound for Chattanooga, Tennessee.

With him the New York teacher of singing carried an idea. He had had it for a long time. It had been turning over in his mind; and his objective centered about endeavoring to put that idea (civic opera-giving) into practicable form.

There were certain conditions in Chattannooga which appeared to make that progressive southern city peculiarly suited to a plan Mr. Lawrason had prepared. Se he pointed his motor car in the desired direction and in due course found himself facing a large gathering of people willing to listen to what he had to say.

Convinced that civic opera need not be limited solely to the serious works, Mr. Lawrason emphasized the opportunities available to those communities which have sufficient resident music talent to justify presenting works by Gilbert and Sullivan, Herbert, Strauss, Friml, and other composers who have set excellent music to librettos above the ordinary in quality.

"With the exception of Atlanta," said Mr. Lawrason, "no city in the south is giving what we know as civic opera; and that is a pity. For one sees evidences in all parts of the country of the growth of this movement. It has assumed gratifying proportions, and there is little doubt that within the next few years we are to see genuine progress made in this highly important branch of music—which can do so much for every community wherein it operates.

"There is so much singing talent in the United States, and so keen a desire on the part of young men and women to appear in opera—to gain the experience on the stage which thus far this country has not been in a position to supply—that whatever can be done to advance the civic opera projects must react to the benefit of these young people . . . as well as the public at large.

"Every such project which is carried forward to practicable ends must give impetus to the movement across the continent—to the endeavor as a whole.

"I sought to point out to Chattanooga the specific advantages that city would derive from entering upon a civic opera undertaking, and there was a responsive interest of very definite character. In time that progressive city will pledge itself to the cause, and when it does we may look for accomplishments. For the people there have a way of doing things to which they set their hands.

"At the outset there is some hesitancy on the part of cautious souls towards starting what they fear may not be satisfactorily finished, and such precaution is wise. One should always take stock of any probable outcome; and yet Chattanooga will eventually do what St. Louis and other cities devoted to lighter forms of civic opera have done.

"The perfecting of an operating organization is naturally the first procedure in any such project as is under discussion. First, a working committee, consisting of the proper members (persons who have a sufficient understanding of what opera means and how it should be approached).

"Once this is done the preliminary steps are not difficult. Systematic effort and the arousing of civic interest should then be approached. And when the preliminaries reach a certain point it is time to think of the actual plans leading up to the selection of the operas to be performed, choosing the principals, the members eligible for the chorus, and all else which is part of opera-giving.

"There can be little doubt that the two outstanding benefits which arise from civic opera are the helpful influence upon the people, and the giving of opportunities to young singers. Each is an important factor, and the development of music appreciation can be aided through such endeavors.

"This coming year will witness more civic opera performances than did last year; and the year after next should witness a further advance. Yes—civic opera in the United States is on its upward climb. And it is time it was."

Lucchese in Cincinnati

Cincinnati, Nov. 10. — Josephine Lucchese appeared here in song recital last Monday at the Woman's Club Auditorium under the auspices of the Clifton Music Club.

Admiration of the Lucchese voice, of her "graciousness and poise," of the manner in which she expressed the "soul of music in her singing," were the gist of the comment voiced by the reviewers of her recital. Mr. Wilson of the Commercial mentioned her "nicety of phrasing, thrilling coloratura passages," and "familiar loveliness of voice."

Mrs. Plogstedt of the Post found "that rare type of voice, a coloratura with a warm and even middle register." The approval of Mrs. Smith of the Times-Star was won by the singer's "individual personality and marked graciousness of manner."

ARTHUR LAWRASON

Oratorio Society to Sing Holst's Hymn of Jesus

Gustave Holst's Hymn of Jesus will have its American premiere at the first concert of the fifty-first season of the New York Oratorio Society, under Albert Stoessel at Carnegie Hall tomorrow evening. Besides the English composition, the program will include Brahms' Requiem. The soloists of the evening will be Ethyl Hayden, soprano, and Boris Saslawsky, baritone.

The Hymn of Jesus, to which the composer has made his own text, is adapted from the Apocryphal Acts of St. John. The composition is written for two choruses, semi-chorus, and orchestra.

Other concerts which the Oratorio Society will give this season will include in their programs Handel's Messiah, on December 25 and 27 at Carnegie Hall, and Cesar Franck's Beatitudes, which will be sung on April 8.

First Metropolitan Concert

In its first Sunday night concert held on November 10 the Metropolitan Opera Company presented an Italian opera program of ensembles from Forza del Destino, Cavalleria, Iris, Butterfly, and Mefistofele. Singing with the chorus and orchestra under the direction of Mr. Bamboschek were Mmes. Peralta, Roeseler, and Dalossy, and Messrs. Chamlee, Malatesta, and Mardones.

Landowska Again Plays Harpsichord

Plays Piano Also in First Recital; Program Devoted to Old Composers.

Wanda Landowska, pianist and harpsichord player, gave the first of her series of three recitals of seventeenth and eighteenth century music at Aeolian Hall November 10. The program was devoted to compositions by Bach and his contemporaries, including Johann Pachelbel, Vivaldi, George Telemann, Rameau, Frohberger and Francois Couperin the elder. The audience, which was large, evidenced keen interest in the music and persisted in demands for encores. The only numbers played on the piano were the C minor Partita of Bach, and the Prelude in C sharp from the first book of the Well-Tempered Clavichord.

The reviewers were unanimous in praise of both the program and Mme. Landowska's playing. In her performance, Richard Aldrich of the Times, found again "exquisite perfection of articulation, unfailing sense of rhythm and prodigious skill in registration." Mme. Landowska has again demonstrated, he said, the great interest and importance to the public of her "renewal and revitalization of the music of the elder masters." The Sun hesitated to repeat its lengthy review of last year in praise of the artist, but did add that her "rare talents" were backed by a profound scholarship and that she played "exquisitely." This paper asserted that "her sensitive and penetrative insight into the music of Bach . . . insure Mme. Landowska a position of supremacy in her chosen field."

F. D. Perkins wrote in the Herald Tribune that her piano playing "was something to invite the most enthusiastic adjectives, polished, transparent, and carefully vigorous." But the World liked the harpsichord playing better because of its "distant, elusive charm. . . . There are many pianists, but there is only one Landowska to evoke magic from those plucked and tinkling strings.."

Wagner Season in Paris

The Hague Opera Company gave a short Wagner season at the Theatre des Champs Elysees October 7-16.

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND
Tenor
CONCERT—RECITAL—ORATORIO
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

CYRENA VAN GORDON
Prima Donna Mezzo Contralto Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management:
For the East: R. E. Johnston, 1451 Broadway, New York City
For the West: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1924-1925
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

THE FLONZALEY QUARTET

Founded by E. J. de Coppet

The Premier Chamber Music Organization of the World

ADOLFO BETTI.....First Violin
ALFRED POCHON.....Second Violin
FELICIEN d'ARCHAMBEAU.....Viola
IWAN d'ARCHAMBEAU.....Violoncello

During the past fifteen years out of the Twenty-one years of its existence, the Flonzaley Quartet has made

23 appearances in London
15 appearances in Berlin
8 appearances in Leipzig
5 appearances each in Dresden, Frankfort, Cologne, Bonn, Strasbourg, Calmar and Mulhouse and from 1 to 4 appearances each in Manchester, New Castle, Cardiff, Bradford, Sheffield, Huddersfield, Liverpool, Glasgow, Edinboro, Aberdeen, Dundee, Dunfermlin, Helensboro, St. Andrew, Wiesbaden, Mannheim, Mayence, Munich, Stuttgart, Coblenz, Hildesheim, Dusseldorf, Konitz, Koenigsberg, Posen, Danzig, Karlsruhe, Bochum, Weimar, Jena, Berne, Zurich, Bale, Lausanne, Winterthur, Montreux, Vevey, Geneva, Neuchatel, Yverdon, Paris, Vienna, Neunkirchen, Rome, Milan and Venice.

In America the quartet has, in addition to its regular permanent series in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Chicago, Indianapolis, and Smith College, Northampton, made during the past FIFTEEN SEASONS

15 Appearances in
Aurora, N. Y. (Wells College)

14 Appearances in
Middlebury, Conn. (Westover School)

13 Appearances in
Baltimore, Md. (Peabody Conservatory)
Williamstown, Mass. (Williams College)

12 Appearances in Minneapolis, Minn. (4 times with University of Minnesota)

11 Appearances in
Buffalo, N. Y.
Cleveland, Ohio
Pittsburgh, Pa.

10 Appearances in
Dobbs Ferry, N. Y. (The Misses Masters School)
Detroit, Mich.
Milwaukee, Wis.
Providence, R. I.

9 Appearances in
Princeton, N. J. (Princeton University)
Cincinnati, Ohio
Montreal, Can.
Orange, N. J.
St. Louis, Mo.

8 Appearances in
Brooklyn, N. Y. (Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences)

7 Appearances in
Oberlin, Ohio (Oberlin College)
Atlanta, Ga.

6 Appearances in
Farmington, Conn. (Miss Porter's School)
Millbrook, N. Y. (Bennett School)
Northampton, Mass. (Smith College)
Hartford, Conn.
Rochester, N. Y.
Toronto, Can.

5 Appearances in
Ann Arbor, Mich. (University of Michigan)
Cambridge, Mass. (Harvard University)
Ithaca, N. Y. (Cornell University)
Madison, Wis. (University of Wisconsin)
Duluth, Minn.
Louisville, Ky.
Syracuse, N. Y.

4 Appearances in
Des Moines, Iowa
Flushing, N. Y.
Jacksonville, Fla.
Kenosha, Wis.
Lincoln, Neb.
New Bedford, Mass.
New Orleans, La.
Norwich, Conn.
Omaha, Neb.
Quebec, Can.
Richmond, Va.
St. Paul, Minn. (once with St. Catharine College)
Bradford, Mass. (Bradford Academy)
Grinnell, Iowa (Grinnell School of Music)
New Haven, Conn. (Yale University)
Urbana, Ill. (University of Illinois)

3 Appearances in Boulder, Colo.
Charleston, S. C.
Columbus, Ohio
Denver, Colo.
Greenfield, Mass.
Joplin, Mo.
Kansas City, Mo.
Milton, Mass.
Montclair, N. J.
Norfolk, Va.
Plainfield, N. J.
Springfield, Mass.
Troy, N. Y.
West Newton, Mass.
York, Pa.
Appleton, Wis. (Lawrence Conservatory)
Briarcliff, N. Y. (Mrs. Dow's School)
Chicago, Ill. (Chicago University)
Columbia, Mo. (University of Missouri)
Lawrence, Kan. (University of Kansas)
Schenectady, N. Y. (Richmond College and Conservatory of Music)
Wellesley, Mass. (Wellesley College)

2 Appearances in
Akron, Ohio
Albany, N. Y.
Austin, Texas
Birmingham, Ala.
Dallas, Texas
Dayton, Ohio
Erie, Pa.
Fall River, Mass.
Gettysburg, Pa.
Glens Falls, N. Y.
Grand Rapids, Mich.
Knoxville, Tenn.
Lawrence, Mass.
Lowell, Mass.
Lynchburg, Va.
Manchester, N. H.
Mankato, Minn.
New London, Conn.
Oshkosh, Wis.
Ottawa, Can.
Portland, Me.
Reading, Pa.
Roselle Park, N. J.
Sioux City, Ia.
Springfield, Ill.
Stamford, Conn.
Summit, N. J.
Terre Haute, Ind.
Three Rivers, Can.
Toledo, Ohio
Topeka, Kan.
Westfield, N. J.
Wilmington, Del.
Worcester, Mass.
New Britain, Conn.
Beaver Falls, Pa. (Geneva College)
Cedar Falls, Iowa (Iowa State Teachers College)
Chambersburg, Pa. (Wilson College)
Charleston, Ill. (Eastern Illinois State Normal School)
Charlottesville, Va. (University of Virginia)
Cooperstown, N. Y. (Knox School)
Delaware, Ohio (Wesleyan College)
Faribault, Minn. (St. Mary's School)
Geneseo, N. Y. (Geneseo State Normal School)
Georgetown, Texas (Southwestern University)
Godfrey, Ill. (Monticello Seminary)
Grand Forks, N. D. (Wesley College)
Holyoke, Mass. (Holyoke College)
Huntington, W. Va. (Marshall College)
La Crosse, Wis. (State Normal School)
Lake Forest, Ill. (University School of Music)
Middlebury, Vt. (Middlebury College)
Northfield, Minn (Carleton College)
Quincy, Ill. (Quincy College)
Willimantic, Conn. (State Normal Training School)

1 Appearance in
Altoona, Pa.
Auburn, Maine
Beaumont, Texas
Belton, Texas
Bridgeport, Conn.
Charleston, W. Va.
Chatham, Can.
Chattanooga, Tenn.
Chillicothe, Ohio
Clarksburg, W. Va.
Colorado Springs, Colo.
Columbia, S. C.
Columbus, Ga.
Concord, N. H.
Council Bluffs, Iowa
Danbury, Conn.
Danville, Ill.
Dubuque, Iowa
Elmira, N. Y.
El Paso, Texas
Evanston, Ill.
Fairfield, Iowa
Fairmont, W. Va.
Fort Dodge, Iowa
Fort Worth, Texas
Galesburg, Ill.
Galveston, Texas
Glen Ridge, N. J.
Greeley, Colo.
Green Bay, Wis.
Greensburg, Pa.
Greenville, Ohio
Greenville, S. C.
Hamilton, Can.
Hamilton, Ohio
Harrisburg, Pa.
Haverhill, Mass.
Houston, Texas
Jamestown, N. Y.
Jersey City, N. J.
Keokuk, Iowa
Kingston, Can.
Lakeland, Fla.
Lancaster, Pa.
Leavenworth, Kan.
Lexington, Ky.
Long Branch, N. J.
Marietta, Ohio
Marshalltown, Iowa
Memphis, Tenn.
Miami, Fla.
Middletown, Conn.
Montgomery, Ala.
Mt. Vernon, Ohio
New Castle, Pa.
Newport News, Va.
Norfolk, Conn.
Oklahoma City, Okla.
Orlando, Fla.
Ossining, N. Y.
Parsons, Kan.
Paterson, N. J.
Peoria, Ill.
Pittsfield, Mass.
Port Huron, Mich.
Pottsville, Pa.
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
Red Wing, Minn.
Ripon, Wis.
Rochester, Minn.
Rockford, Ill.
Salem, Mass.
Sandusky, Ohio
Savannah, Ga.
Selma, Ala.
Sewickley, Pa.
Sheboygan, Wis.
Sheridan, Wyo.
Sioux Falls, S. D.
South Bend, Ind.
Springfield, Mo.
St. Petersburg, Fla.
Sunbury, Pa.
Torrington, Conn.
Tulsa, Okla.
Utica, N. Y.
Uniontown, Pa.
Washington, Pa.
Webster City, Iowa
Wheeling, W. Va.
Wichita, Kan.
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.
Winfield, Kan.
Winnipeg, Can.
Youngstown, Ohio
Athens, Ohio (Ohio University)
Bloomington, Ind. (Indiana University)
Bristol, Tenn. (Virginia Intermont College)
Brookhaven, Miss. (Whitworth Female College)
Bryn Mawr, Pa. (Bryn Mawr College)
Cedar Rapids, Iowa (Coe College)
Columbus, Miss. (Mississippi State College for Women)
Danville, Ky. (Kentucky College for Women)
Decatur, Ill. (James Milliken University)
Denton, Texas (College of Industrial Arts)
Emporia, Kan. (Kansas State Normal School)
Frederick, Md. (Hood College)
Greenwich, Conn. (Rosemary Hall)
Hackettstown, N. J. (Centenary Collegiate Institute)
Hamilton, N. Y. (Colgate College)
Hollidaysburg, Pa. (Mrs. Cowles School)
Indiana, Pa. (State Normal School)
Marion, Ala. (Judson Institute)
Mount Vernon, Iowa (Cornell College)
Natchitoches, La. (State Normal School)
New Brunswick, N. J. (Rutgers College)
New Ulm, Minn. (Dr. Martin Luther College)
Norman, Okla. (University of Oklahoma)
Rock Island, Ill. (Augustana College)
Spartanburg, S. C. (Converse College)
State College, Pa. (Pennsylvania State College)
Waterloo, Iowa (Waterloo Conservatory)
Winona, Minn. (Winona State Teachers College)

Pacific Coast Tours

During the fifteen year period the Quartet has made six transcontinental tours to the Pacific Coast, in which territory they have made:

16 appearances in San Francisco.
7 " in Portland, Oregon.
6 " each in Los Angeles and Berkeley.
5 " each in Seattle and Tacoma.
3 " in San Diego.
2 appearances each in Bisbee, Corvalis, Fresno, Pasadena, Sacramento, Salt Lake City, Spokane, Tucson, Victoria.
1 appearance each in Phoenix, Ariz.; Bakersfield, Merced, Oakland, Palo Alto, Porterville, Riverside, San Jose, Santa Ana, Santa Rosa, and Stockton, Cal.; Reno, Nev.; Bellingham, Pullman, Yakima, Wash.; Butte, Mont.; Astoria and Eugene, Oregon; Vancouver, B. C.

Management: LOUDON CHARLTON, Carnegie Hall, New York

VICTOR RECORDS

Boston Symphony Plays Mozart

San Carlo Opera Company in Second Week; Josef Hofmann Among Recitalists.

Boston, Nov. 10.—The reviewers no less than the audience were severely jolted Friday afternoon at the fifth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when Serge Koussevitzky offered a "conventional" program which, as the Transcript reviewer, H. T. P., said, "contained not one piece to be questioned by the most irritable of censors." The commentator in the Christian Science Monitor was disconcerted by the sudden change from "a highly spiced musical diet" to a Mozart symphony played "in the most conventional of conventional manners."

In spite of their surprise, the critics were enthusiastic in their praise of the rendition of Debussy's Nocturnes, Nuages and Fetes, and Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition, arranged by Ravel. Other numbers played were Beethoven's Egmont Overture and Mozart's Symphony in G minor. Philip Hale of the Herald considered the performance of the overture "uncommonly dramatic," while the playing of the symphony "was conspicuous for its clearness, its happy choice of tempi, its euphony." The Debussy Nocturnes were, to Mr. Hale, the feature of the program. Warren Storey Smith wrote in the Post that the nocturnes were played as Debussy meant them to be played and that the performance of the Mozart Symphony was "exquisitely proportioned, rarely euphonious and subtly rhythmed."

At the first of its Young People's Concerts last Tuesday the orchestra played Stravinsky's arrangement of the Song of the Volga Boatmen for the first time here. The program opened with Mendelssohn's Overture, Scherzo and March from the music to Midsummer Night's Dream. Other numbers were Tschaikowsky's Canzonetta from his violin concerto, Rimsky-Korsakoff's The Flight of the Bumble Bee, d'Indy's Minuet from Suite in D, and Strauss' Blue Danube. The children seemed to enjoy the concert immensely.

Among those who gave concerts in Boston recently was Josef Hofmann, pianist. His playing of Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and some modern composers showed his "command of tone and range of color," according to H. T. P. in the Transcript. This reviewer asserted that in his tone he was unsurpassed by any pianist of our time, and that in his technique he has passed the point of criticism and attained a "many sided perfection of tone in this day incomparable." R. R. G. said in the Herald that Mr. Hofmann played the shorter pieces, notably the two waltzes, better than longer compositions. This chronicler called his performance "entrancing."

Ruth Breton made her debut here November 6. She played a Chaconne by Vitali, Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole and short pieces by other composers. "Seldom does a newcomer make so favorable an impression as did Miss Breton yesterday at her first recital here," wrote the Monitor reviewer. The qualities which he most admired in Miss Breton were her obvious feeling in her music and the originality which tinges her work with her "individuality." Philip Hale also liked her sense of rhythm, her spontaneity and her "musical" phrasing.

Other recent recitalists were: Katharine Metcalf, mezzo-soprano, who proved herself, to quote the Monitor, "a singer of wide range of musical and emotional expression . . . a singer of understanding;" Charles Naegele, pianist "of rich and ample tone," according to the Transcript; Betty Gray, contralto, who was characterized by the Monitor as a singer of "wide capabilities," and Abbie Conley Rice, also a contralto with a true, flexible voice, well spoken of by Philip Hale.

Aida was sung by the San Carlo Opera last Tuesday in what the Herald reporter called "an unusually good" performance. Mary Kent and Mario Valle received particular notice in the review in this paper of the performance of Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann at a matinee the next afternoon. Wednesday night Andrea Chenier was heard with Bianca Saroya singing Madeleine with "considerable skill," Gaetano Tommasini excellent as Andrea, and Mario Basiola as Gerard. The production of Lucia di Lammermoor the following night was hailed as "far ahead" of the others, and La Boheme on Friday was well sung in the opinion of the writer in the Monitor.

Indianapolis Children's Concert

Indianapolis, Nov. 10.—The first orchestral concert for children here was given when the Cleveland Orchestra, led by Arthur Shepherd, its assistant conductor, played before 7,000 school children in Cadle Tabernacle.

Lectures in preparation had been given by Mrs. Leonora Coffin, and during the concert Mr. Shepherd made explanatory remarks.

Miss Emily McAdams, president of the Federation of Indianapolis Public School Teachers, and Ernest G. Hesser, superintendent of music in the public schools, were responsible for bringing the orchestra to Indianapolis.

Rheingold Given by English Opera

Ernest Knoch Conducts First Performance of Company's Wagner Series.

Despite a number of difficulties and last-minute setbacks, the English Grand Opera Company got under way as scheduled with a performance of Wagner's Das Rheingold at Carnegie Hall November 10. The conductor, Ernest Knoch, was under the great disadvantage of having to undertake the presentation within only one rehearsal after the last-minute resignation of Ignatz Waghalter. The reviewers were at some pains to excuse the faults of the performance, but they could not overlook its crudity. The limitations of the hall were to some extent responsible for some of the mechanical defects of the production.

In spite of "palpable deficiencies" Olin Downes of the Times discovered certain "unexpected qualities." The voices were good, many of them fresh, and the interpretation in some cases showed "marked talent." After an inauspicious beginning, the orchestra, Mr. Downes wrote, gave an effective performance, "to be explained partly by the substantial abilities of Mr. Knoch." W. J. Henderson of the Sun, like the other commentators, noted particularly the poor diction which made the English practically unintelligible.

Among those in the cast were William Tucker, Fred Patton, George Gordon, Louis Dornay, Frank Dobert, Oliver Stewart, Dudley Marwick, Augusto Ottone and Devora Nadworney.

Mr. Downes spoke of Mr. Marwick as one of the exceptions in the uniformly poor diction, as he was "unfailingly clear and dramatic in his treatment of text." Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail thought that in addition to Mr. Marwick, Mr. Tucker, Mr. Patton and Mme. Aldrich "coped successfully with the difficulties of the text, and in general theirs were the best individual performances of the evening, although all the singers were very much in earnest and there was no lack of good voices."

The second performance of Rheingold, scheduled for last Thursday, has been postponed until today.

Guiomar Novaes Returns to U. S.

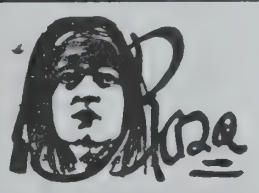
Brazilian Pianist Plays With Philharmonic Orchestra After Year's Absence.

Guiomar Novaes, Brazilian pianist, returned to the American concert stage after an absence of over a year in two performances with the Philharmonic Orchestra, Willem Van Hoogstraten conducting, on November 8 and 9 at Carnegie Hall and at the Metropolitan Opera House respectively. Her playing of the Saint-Saens' Fourth Concerto in C minor was hailed as "brilliant" by the Herald Tribune.

Mme. Novaes' style has matured, according to the Times report. Her playing is "broader and more composed, less nervous and more forceful . . . the same velvety touch, a little heavier in its application . . . while the glow of imagination was more impassioned." In the finale her "brilliant, flashing technical display" brought down the house. The Sun did not consider the choice of Saint-Saens' Concerto a fortunate one in that it did not give Mme. Novaes adequate opportunity for a display of her "exceptional talents in the domain of tone color and eloquent warmth." However this writer lauded the pianist for her "admirable touch, her technic and the astonishing range of her sense of shading and dynamics" which raised many of her passages to "a height of eloquence." Lawrence Gilman, writing in the Herald Tribune agreed that the choice of the concerto was a poor one.

Mr. Van Hoogstraten offered a conservative program at both performances. On Saturday he opened with the Overture to Smetana's The Bartered Bride and continued with Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks by Strauss, and Tschaikowsky's 1812 Overture. He played Wagner's Lohengrin Overture and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony on Sunday.

The second of the Philharmonic's Student concerts was held last Wednesday evening at Carnegie Hall. Mr. Van Hoogstraten conducted Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik and Wagner's Tannhauser Overture.



Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

MAY PETERSON
VOCALION RECORDS
SOPRANO Formerly Opera Comique and Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: HAENSEL & JONES, AEOLIAN HALL
NEW YORK CITY

ARMAND TOKATYAN TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York City
Season 1924-1925 Now Being Booked

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

ALESSANDRO

BONCI

Voice Diagnostician

and

Master of Bel Canto

Studios Now Open

HOTEL MAJESTIC

New York City

Management: ROGER de BRUYN — EUGENE BOUCHER
1540 Broadway - - - - New York City

Telephone: 3787 Bryant

Hertz Opens Year In San Francisco

Conducts Taylor Suite; Chamber Music Society Starts Eighth Season.

San Francisco, Nov. 2.—Two very important opening concerts took place here during the past week; both the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra and the Chamber Music Society gave their first programs of the season. The latter organization, conducted by Alfred Hertz, played on October 31 at the Curran Theatre, and the former three days earlier in Scottish Rite Hall. Thalia Sabanieva was recitalist here on October 30.

The San Francisco Orchestra program included Tschaikowsky's Fifth Symphony, Guillaume Lekeu's Adagio for Strings, and the Looking-Glass Suite of Deems Taylor.

Mr. Swensen, writing in the Bulletin, thought that "the orchestra played in excellent accord, and Mr. Hertz was in fine form." Charles Woodman wrote in the Call that the conductor "thrilled the big audience."

Mr. Hertz deserved his ovation, was the opinion of Ray Brown, reviewer of the Chronicle, "if for nothing else, for his splendid reading of Tschaikowsky's E minor Symphony." This writer found Deems Taylor's Suite "most enjoyable."

The San Francisco Chamber Music Society opened its eighth season with its concert last Tuesday evening. The outstanding feature of the evening was the new quartet of Frederick Jacobi, a composition dedicated to the society, which was played for the first time. The Mozart F major Quartet preceded the Jacobi work.

The reviewers were of one accord concerning the interest of the program. The Chronicle commentator felt that more time was required for accurate judgment concerning the Jacobi Quartet, but said, "The Mozart number sparkled and the Taneieff Quartet was lovely." "The evening was a distinct triumph for the moderns," in the opinion of the Herald reporter, who called the Jacobi work "most interesting," and found in the delicacy and precision of the performance of Mozart the intellectual charm which is characteristic of that composer.

Thalia Sabanieva's recital attracted a great many persons from the Greek and Russian colonies here. The reviewers mostly spoke well of her work as a recitalist. The Examiner said, "She is a mistress of song craft, and she triumphed in the folk songs." The writers in the Chronicle and Herald also had praise for Mme. Sabanieva's art, although the latter preferred to hear her on the operatic stage.

Louis Graveure, baritone, gave another, his last, San Francisco concert, last Sunday afternoon.

M. J. C.

Little Symphony in First Concert

Barrere Conducts Mozart Symphony; Indian Singer Soloist in Native Songs.

"Under the shrewd direction of George Barrere, with a typically delightful program," the Little Symphony opened its season with a concert at the Henry Miller Theatre November 9. This statement in the Telegram-Mail is typical of the reaction of the critical audience to the concert. The World reviewer was charmed by the "gay, persuasive atmosphere" of the miniature performance which seemed to "permeate the performers and audience alike." Without Mr. Barrere, this writer continued, you felt as if the entire performance "might have vanished into thin air." The soloist was Ratan Devi, who presented a group of East Indian and Kashmiri folk songs.

The program included Mozart's A major Symphony, Florent Schmitt's Pupazzi, Howard Brockway's Andante and Humoresque, Adriana Mikishina's Le Temps Passee, and Hiugoli-Chisarn's From the Life of an Ant. The music, according to the report in the Sun, was "all pleasing, characteristic and not too serious." The Times reviewer was of the opinion that the production of the symphony alone entitled Mr. Barrere to thanks. "As clear and beautiful as sunlight on running waters . . . it served to display the excellent capacities of Mr. Barrere's small band."

The Indian songs sung by Miss Devi interested the audience, as did her explanation which preceded them. It was evident to the Times that she was "learned and accomplished" in the interpretation of these songs.

Ruth Kemper Makes Debut

Ruth Kemper, violinist, made her New York debut at Aeolian Hall on November 8 in a recital under the auspices of the Washington Heights Musical Club. The reviewer of the Herald Tribune wrote, "Miss Kemper showed adequate technical skill and a tone generally of clear and fluent quality," although this writer said that also there were some "cloudier periods." Arthur Loesser was at the piano.

SASCHA JACOBSEN
Was Assisted by String Orchestra in His New York Recital Last Week.

Announce Koussevitsky's First New York Programs

The programs of the first New York concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky have just been announced. These concerts, on November 27 and 29 in Carnegie Hall will mark the new Boston leader's debut in New York. On the Thursday night he will play Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor, for orchestra; Weber's Oberon Overture, Debussy's Nocturnes, Scriabine's Poem of Ecstasy, and Honegger's Pacific 231.

At the Saturday afternoon concerts Brahms' Fourth Symphony will share the program with Russian compositions, including Glinka's Overture to Ruslan and Ludmilla, Moussorgsky's Prelude to Kovantchina, Prokofieff's Scythian Suite (first New York performance), and Rimsky's Flight of a Bumble Bee, from Tsar Saltan.

Prague Organist Plays

Frederick Wiedermann, municipal organist of Prague, made his first appearance in the United States on November 10 in the Wanamaker Auditorium, New York. The writer of the Times said that Mr. Wiedermann showed "perfect control of the technic and mechanics of the instrument."

Flonzaleys Start Twenty-first Year

Quartet Plays Spalding Work in First Concert; New Violist Makes Bow.

Returning from its summer abroad, the Flonzaley Quartet gave its first American concert of its twenty-first season last Tuesday evening in Aeolian Hall. Felicien d'Archambeau, new violist of the quartet, made his New York bow at this concert. The concert included a manuscript performance of a string quartet of Albert Spalding, violinist, Beethoven's Quartet Op. 18 No. 6, and Schubert's D minor.

The reviewers were almost unanimous in declaring that the Flonzaleys were at their best. Lawrence Gilman said in the Herald Tribune, "The gentlemen of the quartet—which now comprises a new viola, Mr. Felicien d'Archambeau, a modest and excellent artist—played with their customary sensitiveness and finesse, and were rewarded by the approval of their assembled admirers." Mr. Henderson in the Sun spoke of the players' "customary warmth, precision and balance," and the writer of the Times paid tribute to their "clarity" and "eloquent revelation" of each composer's thought. The reviewer of the Post and Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail were both agreed on the excellence of the performance, although Deems Taylor wrote in the World, "The quartet has played better. Their tone was a little dry at times, and, heresy though it be to say it, one thought to detect an occasional lapse in intonation."

The Times reviewer felt varied influences, modern French, Italian, in the Spalding composition. "His idiom is less personal than sophisticated," wrote this commentator, who preferred the andante, among the four movements. The other writers agreed in the detection of influences, but Mr. Henderson nevertheless called the quartet "the creation of a musician of ability and sincerity." The free and fitting use of the instruments came in for praise.

Mr. Taylor again was inclined to disagree, believing that on the whole the quartet avoided the influence of others. He felt that the thematic material was not quite as interesting as the rhythms of the work, in which opinion the Post reviewer shared. Messrs. Gilman and Sanborn emphasized the eclecticism of the music, but professed to find the piece "skillful" and "ingenious."

Rhys Morgan Sings in Erie

A telegram from E. H. Haesener, Erie, Pa., reports that Rhys Morgan, tenor, was soloist there with the Musical Art Society. The concert was attended by a capacity audience which was demonstrative in its approval of Mr. Morgan's singing.

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Maron & Hamlin Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE.
NEW YORK

FRANCES PERALTA
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
MANAGEMENT: NATIONAL CONCERTS, INC., 1451 Broadway, New York

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

Philadelphia Opera Gives Boheme

Metropolitan Visits Quaker City; Stokowski Plays Edgar Varese's Hyperprisms.

Philadelphia, Nov. 12.—Last Thursday the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company inaugurated its season at the Metropolitan Opera House with Puccini's La Boheme. They "achieved a notable success," said the North American and the reviewers divided the honors between Alexander Smallens and the orchestra, and the cast. Mrs. Henry M. Tracy, president and general manager of the company, was congratulated by Stanley Muschamp in the Inquirer for her "tireless energy" in working for the success of the company.

"Much of the credit of the splendid performance," wrote the reviewer in the Public Ledger, "must go to Alexander Smallens, the musical director. Not only did he cope successfully with some very difficult operatic situations, but he read the opulent score of Puccini with the utmost poetry and feeling as well as with great technical skill." The familiar melodies of the opera were in the hands of such trained singers as Anna Fitziu as Mimi; Romeo Boscacci as Rodolfo; Alfredo Gandolfi as Marcello; Alfredo Valenti as Colline; Valentine Figaniak as Schaunard, and Emily Stokes Hagar as Musetta.

Mme. Fitziu portrayed the role, said the North American, with a "sympathetic understanding" that brought forth much applause. The Record spoke of the "fluency and ease" with which she sang the difficult songs. Mr. Boscacci, replacing Tom Burke who was taken ill, had "an unusually fine voice and a dramatic ability that gave importance to every scene of which he was a part," according to the review in the Record. The North American considered that he gave an "excellent performance." The supporting cast were well spoken of.

Another opera premiere was that of the Metropolitan Opera Company, which opened its Philadelphia season with Gounod's Faust, conducted by Louis Hasselmans. It was the "finest performance heard in many years" said Stanley Muschamp. To him the Mephisto of Feodor Chaliapin was the most remarkable feature of the evening. His pleasure in the entertainment was added to by the acting and voice of Frances Alda, "ever a fine artist." The Record lauded the "brilliance and clarity" which Giovanni Martinelli brought to the role of Faust. Much interest was taken by the Public Ledger reviewer, S. L. L., in the debut of Vincente Ballester as Valentine who displayed a voice of "beautiful quality," taking the high notes "with the aplomb of a tenor." Mr. Muschamp asserted that the baritone had a "pure tone" and a voice of "delightful quality."

The rest of the cast, Linton Martin of the North American said, "contributed materially to the genuine pleasure the evening afforded." He discovered "something of a novelty" in the performance in the "vivifying presence" of Chaliapin as a "tradition shattering, unconventional devil." The Public Ledger marveled at his "superb blending of the outward polish and suavity of the role with its inward malevolence."

The novelty of the concert on November 7 of the Philadelphia Orchestra concert was, contrary to custom, placed at the end of the program in order to give the conservatives an opportunity to leave if they wished not to hear it. Before Leopold Stokowski played Edgar Varese's Hyperprisms some members of the audience took advantage of the opportunity thus offered. The Public Ledger reviewer considered it "delightful" in the best style of this "highly cultured and refined musician." Charles Martin Loeffler's orchestral Poem was written with "admirable facility, fine feeling of harmonization and an instinct for dramatic effect," according to the reviewer in the Record. The program opened with Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn and the other number was the New World Symphony of Dvorak, both of which, said the Public Ledger, "were splendidly played and cordially received."

Josephine Lucchese, coloratura soprano, was heard in a recital at the Academy of Music last Friday for the benefit of St. Rita's parish. Mme. Lucchese, according to the Public Ledger, "was in splendid voice and with her charming stage presence and gracious manner scored a great success." The Record thought her voice "rich and beautiful." Mme. Lucchese was assisted on her program by Clemente Barone, flute; Ermelindo Scarpia, clarinet; Henry Nosco, violin; and Clarence Furham, Bernardo Cortese and Florence Wightman at the piano.

Two other concerts were the Armistice Day concert of the Philadelphia Music Club, with a chorus of a hundred voices, and that of the Victor Artists.

VLADIMIR SHAVITCH
Is Leading the Symphonic Forces of Syracuse, N. Y.

Virgil Holmes

Virgil Holmes, basso cantante, gave his first recital here, November 6, at Town Hall. He sang songs by Harry Rowe Shelley who was at the piano, a Creole lyric, Russian songs and other numbers including Loewe's Edward ballad and the Don Juan serenade by Tschaikowsky.

"One of the few genuine bass voices heard here in some time," was the reaction of the Sun chronicler to Mr. Holmes' voice. In spite of certain defects of tone, this reviewer found his delivery "had intelligence and appreciation and gave promise of gain through further study." The Times said that the singer had "many gifts" although some of them were of the "rough diamond order." In the Herald Tribune his voice was characterized as a "true basso, very effective at its best, with clear and ringing notes."

Philip Morrell Gives Concert

The recital of Philip Morrell, violinist, in Rumford Hall, New York, on November 9 was his New York debut. The reviewer of the Sun called Mr. Morrell "well schooled," and believed that any defects seemed largely due to youth and inexperience. This writer said further, "His tone, large, full, and accurate in pitch, and his style, well formed and intelligent, could have been guided by greater deftness of touch and more subtlety of emotion." He played, according to this report, with "assurance."

Johnson Sings in Sokoloff Concert

Cleveland Orchestra Plays Schmitt Novelty; Paul Whiteman and Roland Hayes Appear.

Cleveland, Nov. 10.—Edward Johnson, tenor, was soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra in the third pair of concerts by Nikolai Sokoloff's players last Thursday and Friday. Concerts by Paul Whiteman's Orchestra and by Roland Hayes, negro tenor, were also features of the past music week in this city.

Mr. Johnson sang two arias with the accompaniment of the orchestra, one from Andrea Chenier, the other from Franck's Beatitudes. "He was in excellent voice," wrote Wilson G. Smith in the Press, "and the climaxes involving his upper register were delivered with telling and thrilling effect." This writer found Mr. Johnson's use of his voice "artistic in the highest degree," and had praise for the perfection of his diction and intonation. Archie Bell in the Leader greeted him as an old friend once more returned and welcome, and James H. Rogers in the Plain Dealer said that Mr. Johnson was "once again at the top of his voice."

The reviewers were inclined to be reserved in their judgment of Schmitt's Camp of Pompey which also was on Mr. Sokoloff's program, although Mr. Rogers thought there were "life, fire and vigor" within the modernism of the score. The same writers, however, were quite unrestrained in their praise of Mr. Sokoloff's reading of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which Mr. Wilson found "imbued with a reading that was fraught with emotion and deep sentiment."

Paul Whiteman's Orchestra again impressed the music writers with its unusual virtuosity, although Mr. Rogers liked best the pieces which had the least jazz in them, and Mr. Bell found a strain after effect which after a time became monotonous. Mr. Smith agreed both to the virtuosity and the monotony, but the audience was stormy with cheers and applause.

In Roland Hayes' singing of negro spirituals Mr. Smith found much artistry and not enough simplicity, although the tenor's art was to him superb in the classical songs of his program. Mr. Bell thought that Mr. Hayes' voice was richer in "lyric beauty" than in "dramatic depth."

Goossens to Lecture

Eugene Goossens, English composer and conductor, has been engaged for a series of lectures in various cities in the United States following the close of his engagement as first conductor of the Rochester Symphony Orchestra, at which post he will be succeeded for the rest of the season by Albert Coates. The lectures will be on the subject of Contemporary Music and Musicians.

FLORA
GREENFIELD
SOPRANO
Management ERNEST HENKEL, 1451 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Bryant 3352 KNABE PIANO

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
First appearance with N. Y. Symphony Orchestra Nov. 30, 1924
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals, After January, 1925
Brunswick Records Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

ERNEST NEWMAN, guest critic for the New York Evening Post, must have sharpened his pencil before crossing the pond. He was severe in London; over here he has the musicians casting backward glances and the managers all up in the air. They don't know what next to expect from Bre'r Newman. He's as likely to write a column of praise when it is least expected, and generally about what odds-layers would wager he would roast.

The Metropolitan Opera has not escaped the Ernest Newman pencil . . . or pen, or typewriter, whichever of the three he uses. Having been fed up for the past ten years on fifth-rate opera at Covent Garden, he lands in New York, listens to the Met's Boheme on election night and pronounces it second-rate.

And Bre'r Newman prefers the English oboeists to those of the French school, which most of us have all along felt to be the best in the world. For example: Newman doesn't care at all for the great Tabitoe, of the Philadelphia Orchestra, who has sort of held a very special place in the opinions of conductors and other musicians.

Well, perhaps we are all wrong and Newman quite right. And yet we have a notion that perhaps the difficulties of getting settled may have upset the English reviewer's tummy and caused him to hear and see things differently than he will later on.

UP IN BOSTON, where Serge Koussevitsky has symphony subscribers hanging over the rails and applauding in the most un-Bostonian fashion, is a young pianist who has the courage to play to empty seats rather than to have his management resort to the time-honored but questionable practice of papering the house.

H. T. Parker got quite worked up about the advance news that this young man had decided to snub what H. T. P. dubs "The Ancient and Honorable Order of Deadheads." So he gave him about a third of a column of very excellent advertising, all boxed, in the upper right hand corner of The Transcript's Saturday music page, and then proceeded to write—a few days later when Mr. Havens gave his recital—in terms of honest admiration about this young musician whom he terms "a ripening pianist."

Warren Storey Smith, in the Boston Post, dwelt upon the empty seats and also upon Mr. Havens' being a pianist of "passion, poetry and power." Then along came P. R. in the Boston Globe, averring that Mr. Havens "is now an artist whose mature and individual interpretations give the hearer pleasure."

New York managers got together a year or so ago and decided to abolish (within reason, you understand) the chronic deadhead. They argued that only the debutants deserved to have audiences of the pay-nothing-and-look-solemn sort. But they overlooked the fact that once a deadhead always a deadhead, and ways have been found to reduce prices to so low a level that some of these tightwads do get in for little more than the price of two pins.

JUST WHEN the Wagnerian Opera in English company will emerge from its venture no one can foretell, but it is pretty certain HOW it will emerge . . . and that is in some kind of trouble. Trust Manager George Blumenthal for that. He has it stirring up wherever he happens to cast his music hat into a ring—the ring on this occasion being that known as the Nibelungen.

That first performance last Monday week of The Rhinegold, sung in unintelligible English by some excellent-voiced singers, most of whom were Americans, left a bad sound in the ears and some ghastly visual recollections.

The awkwardest member of the company, as we saw it, was the stage director—none other than our old mezzo-soprano friend of Oscar Hammerstein days, to-wit: Mariska Aldrich. Apparently not much benefited by her experiences in The Miracle, Mme. Aldrich trod the Carnegie boards with long strides, flung her arms in the most individualistic fashion, alternately cooing and storming vocally.

Fred Patton gave us some idea of what a fine baritone voice sounds like, and a young basso-cantante named William Tucker attracted attention because of his truly beautiful tones and the excellent use he made of them. Still, he was far too nice in appearance to give any semblance of Wotan. He looked more like Little Lord Fauntleroy.

We shall doubtless be criticised for not praising Americans. Well, then, so be it. When they deserve praise they are entitled to it. But such opera as this hurts the cause, and if George Blumenthal and others don't know it the public will teach them by remaining away from efforts which are as half-baked as this one was.

DENNIS McSWEENEY writes us about his side-partner, John McCormack, who, as most people know, is a promising young tenor who has a way with him. It seems, according to Mac, that John got a message aboard ship on his way across from Europe informing him that he had been decorated with the cross of the Chevalier de la Legion d'Honneur. The recognition came as a consequence of the singer's activities, early in 1915, in behalf of the French, when he gave a benefit concert arranged by the Duc de Richelieu in the New York Hippodrome for the French soldiers' tubercular relief fund. Some $8,000 was realized, and France seemingly has not forgot.

A SUBSCRIBER writes in protest to the space given foreign musicians in this journal, when, according to his notion, many of them cannot make a living in their own countries. He asks why we do not cater more to the music news of the various sections of this country with the ultimate aim of stimulating and encouraging American musicians.

In so far as following that course with the express purpose in mind of encouraging exceptional American musicians, Harold Compton is right. But if he has traveled as widely as we he must have discovered that most of the "local talent" should not be further deluded than it already is in holding to false and vain hopes.

For it is a fact that the town soprano or pianist or violinist is generally little more than an amateur, and all too frequently incapable of performing creditably in public. Should these young people be stimulated into believing they are not what they think they are? That is the trouble. Local music critics write fulsomely about mediocrity just because it happens to be home-bred.

The columns of The Musical Digest are pretty liberally filled with the activities of American musicians, and some of them, making debuts in New York or appearing elsewhere, are treated more than fairly in the allotment of space to their efforts.

It would seem that there are just two points which an editor of this journal is compelled to consider: First, downright ability, regardless of nationality, and, second, the interest an artist has for the average reader.

PAUL WHITEMAN'S concertizing experiences appear to have brought about some good, for that discerning purveyor of jazz and better music has reorganized his orchestra. He asserts it is a far better one than he offered New Yorkers last season, and his manager, F. C. Coppicus, is equally positive in the matter.

THE SESSIONS of the Southern Music Supervisors' Association, now holding forth in Winston-Salem, N. C., should be reminders that music has a firm grip in our public schools. Also that there must be a deal of downright sense in it, else the hard-headed educators would be raising ructions. More than one famous person has expounded at length on the benefits of good habits which were formed early in life. What could be better than making the children of our citizens acquainted with something that is sure to give them pleasure and profit in their lives?

THE STOCK MARKET is up, business is beginning to take on an increased acceleration, and the goose has every appearance (before long) of hanging high. In the meantime more people are going to music performances (and paying money for their tickets, incidentally) than history has recorded in this town of ours in many a blue moon. We haven't had rain in more than thirty-odd successive days, but it is bound to come. By that same token the dry spell for some musicians is sure to give way, in time, to some moistening of a kind that will saturate their pocketbooks and turn them from kicking about the music game into shouting from the metaphorical housetops praises that no lane is so long it hasn't a turning.

WE JOURNEYED down to Dayton, Ohio, last week to hear the much-talked-about Westminster Choir. Mrs. H. E. Talbott, who is an enthusiast and most tenacious in bringing about what she has in mind, is responsible. Since the choir wasn't quite ready to come to New York, we determined to go to Dayton, and thence to the adjacent town of Hamilton, where a concert was to be given. The time is rather short to write for this issue about this organization and its conductor and trainer, Dr. Williamson, so we will reserve it for the issue to come.

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer
Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO
Victor Records

ANNE ROSELLE
PRIMA DONNA SOPRANO
Exclusive Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall New York City

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

THE

International Lyric Bureau

JOHN BELLUCCI, Director

Cable Address : Interlyric, New York - Telephone : Wisconsin 2836

Announces the following Artists for Concerts and Grand Opera Season 1924-1925

Giacomo LAURI-VOLPI

TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY—Concert dates available only for early part of season and Spring 1925.

Caterina GOBBI

SOPRANO—Appeared with Gigli and Danise of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Ralph ERROLLE

TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY.

Mme. Elsa MARIANI (Murray-Aynsley)

LYRIC SOPRANO—Formerly with Comunale Theatre, Bologna.

Alfredo GANDOLFI

BARITONE—Formerly with La Scala, Milan; Scotti Grand Opera Company and Chicago Civic Opera Association—Guest Artist Maine Festival.

Genia ZIELINSKA

POLISH-AMERICAN COLORATURA SOPRANO—Specializing in Folk-song recitals.

Ivan IVANTZOFF

DISTINGUISHED RUSSIAN BARITONE—From Moscow Imperial Opera House and L'Opera, Paris.

Henrietta WAKEFIELD

MEZZO SOPRANO—Metropolitan Opera Company.

Greek EVANS

One of America's Favorite CONCERT AND OPERATIC BARITONES.

Burton LESLIE

AMERICAN MEZZO SOPRANO.

The International Lyric Bureau is prepared to serve musical organizations (large and small) and Civic bodies planning a season of Grand Opera. The International Lyric Bureau is in a position to furnish artists and conductors of international reputation who have appeared in celebrated opera houses of Europe and America. The Bureau also has available opera scores and scenery and can supply an orchestra and technical crews for the stage.

For terms, dates and other information apply to

The International Lyric Bureau

1452 Broadway, Room 702, New York City

In Continental Capitals

Halle Orchestra Visits London

Rubinstein, Dohnanyi and Sammons Among Recitalists; Aged Singer Appears Again.

London.

One of the features of the musical week here was the visit, after an absence of some years, of the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, under Hamilton Harty. There were also a number of recitals. The three oustanding concert-givers here during this period happen all of them to be known to American audiences, albeit of various nationalities themselves: Arthur Rubinstein, Erno Dohnanyi, and Albert Sammons—two pianists and a violinist.

Mr. Rubinstein played on the first of the new month. The Observer comments on "his true sense of balance" and the manner in which he "maintains the rhythmic life of everything he plays." In a Chopin group, this writer thought the pianist "at his best": "His powerful massing of tone, that was always pure, his architectural instinct, his clear line drawing, and a certain nobility of feeling gave abundant life to the music, and confirmed Mr. Rubinstein in our esteem as a pianist of force and feeling." "He was in complete command of an uncommon virtuosity," remarks the Sunday Times. Similarly the daily Times: "He has the difficulties so far behind him that he can turn his attention to the playing, and he gave a finely musical account" of his program. "A memorable recital," in the view of the Post; the Telegraph thinks "The steady, forceful rise of this pianist into the front rank of public performers has incidentally brought the development of his artistic powers to a critical stage;" the critic thinks Mr. Rubinstein will hereafter play the part of "a fine showman."

Dohnanyi Plays

There was differing opinion over Mr. Dohnanyi's performance, on October 29. The Sunday Times for example says: "I suppose one must give the term 'imagination' to the indefinable but priceless quality that colors the art of all such as Mr. Dohnanyi. Regarded as sheer technique, his readings were masterly, but illuminated, too, with quick flashes of thought and feeling that engendered a sober exhilaration, most refreshing to experience." This critic spoke very favorably, too, of a suite Ruralia Hungarica of the artist's own composition which figured on the program, but in both these respects the Telegraph writer disagreed, complaining of "rubato bordering on sentimentality," and a lack of inventiveness in the suite. The balance, however, was in favor of the pianist.

The Telegraph commences its notice of Albert Sammons's violin recital (October 28) thus: "A recital by Mr. Albert Sammons does not call for extended comment, for the only reason that his style and his abilities are now as well known as they deserve to be." To the same effect runs a brief critique in the Sunday Times, and this is one of the best evidences that critics can give of the respect they bear any artist. So we, too, will let his recital rest there.

The Halle Orchestra

Passing on now to concerts of music in the larger forms, it must be noted that the symphonic program presented by the Halle Orchestra on the 27th at the Queen's Hall, under Hamilton Harty, won extended and congratulatory notices from all the critics, and a very large audience turned out for this first return concert in London of the Manchester band for several years. The next evening, the Lener Quartet drew a surprisingly full house for election night to hear a concert of chamber music which again won handsome tributes from the press. A new work, played from manuscript, was on the program: a quartet in Doric style by Ottorino Respighi.

Several items of news deserve some attention in this report. At a pupils' recital on November 1, Mr. Albert Garcia, the teacher concerned, came forward to announce that in response to many requests, he had succeeded in persuading his father to sing once more in public. His father is no other than Manuel Garcia, singer of honored memory, now 88 years of age. "There must have been many in the audience who doubted the wisdom of this decision," reports the Telegraph, but "The strength of his voice and the ease with which it was controlled were little short of amazing, and what had seemed at first sight a doubtful experiment became in the result as notable an experience as the concert room has given us for many a long day."

Two other events of the week were the reopening of the Old Vic opera season with Carmen; and the conclusion of the centenary Norwich festival, at which some notable music was given. including the Bach St. John Passion, Vaughan Williams's Sea Symphony, and Elijah. Sir Henry Wood was the principal conductor, and the chief soloists the cellist Suggia and Florence Austral.

Artists to win marked approval at repeat appearances were Evelyn Scotney, William Bachaus, and Joseph Hislop at an Albert Hall "pop," and Samuel Dushkin, Grete Stuckgold, and Leo Sirota in individual recitals. Haig Gudenian devoted an evening to violin arrangements of Oriental music, but, it seems, with no startling results.

P. L.

The Question Box

1. What opera recently composed includes the scene of a prize fight?
2. What does Ballabile mean?
3. What well known French pianist was a propagandist and conductor of Wagner in Paris at the beginning of this century?
4. What is a bagatelle?

Last Week's Answers

1. Dvorak's New World Symphoney is numbered his fifth.
2. Anna Case appeared in the Metropolitan Opera premiere of Boris Godunoff in 1912.
3. Theobald Bohm (1793-1881) was a Bavarian flutist. Besides being a virtuoso of the instrument he was the inventor of new methods of its construction and of new fingering for accuracy of tone and facility of performance. Besides, he composed for the flute.
4. Hugo Wolf was born in 1860 and died in 1905.

Paris Stops Concert

The second Paris recital of Fritz Kreisler, scheduled for the evening of Armistice Day at the Opera House, was cancelled on account of patriotic objection to Mr. Kreisler's appearing on that day. Two days previously the violinist gave a recital at which he was cordially received.

Siegfried Wagner Writing Opera

Siegfried Wagner, son of Richard Wagner, is reported to be at work on a new opera and a new symphony, says a cable to the New York Times. The opera will be called Wahnopfer. Its scene is laid in Spain.

Intensive Opera Season Scheduled for Genoa

Genoa.

The season commencing this month at the Politeama Genovese in Genoa will include, it has been announced, the following performances: Fedora, with Maria Llacer, the tenor Alabiso, and the baritone Mario Gubiani; William Tell, with the tenor Sullivan, the soprano Mina Spani, the baritone Parvis, and the basso Zaccarini; Lorelei, with Signora Spani and the baritone Carlo Tagliabue; Manon Lescaut, with Luigi Lupato, Mario Gubiani, and the basso comico Alessio Solei; Lucia, with Mercedes Capsir, the tenor Alessandro Rota, and Carlo Tagliabue. These presentations will be directed by Pasquale La Rotella.

Later Genoa will have its usual operatic season at the Carlo Felice, at which the following operas will be given: Valkyries, Falstaff, Boris Godunoff, Wally, Sonnambula, Germania (of Franchetti), Damnation of Faust, Salome, Cena delle Beffe (of Giordano), I Quattro Rustegli (of Wolf-Ferrari).

These operas will be directed by Sergio Failoni. Among the artists who have already been engaged for the various presentations are: Sopranos—Signore Dalla Rizza, Cannetti, Rinolfi, Cesar, Burchi, Roggero, De Giovanni, Baldassari-Tedeschi, Supervia, Cervi-Caroli, and Gramegua; tenors—Signori Gaviria, Govoni, Cecil, Caceffo, Maestri, Calleja, Lazaro, and Marini; baritones—Montesanto, Viglione-Borghese, Zalewski, Rossi Morelli, and Stracciari; bassi—Manfrini, Pistoiesi, Bettoni, Masini-Pieralli, De Vecchi, and Azzolini.

For the performance of Salome Giulia Tess has already been chosen. Among the other names mentioned in connection with this opera is that of the tenor Lazaro, although it is doubtful if he will be able actually to appear because of other engagements in theatres in Italy.

F. C.

Hold Ravel Festival

A Ravel festival was given by the Independent Musical Society of Paris October 15. Maurice Ravel, Robert Casadesus and Samuel Dushkin took part. Ravel's Tzigane was played for the first time.

The Center for Modern Music
J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1924
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

RHYS MORGAN
THE WELSH TENOR
Management: ROGER DE BRUYN, 1540 Broadway, N. Y. C.
DR. J. O. HOWELLS, Associate

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Berlin Managers Fight High Fees

Meet to Consider Problem of Reducing Expense in German Musical Ventures.

Berlin.

A very important meeting of the Union of Berlin Concert Managers was called a short time ago to consider the problem of reducing the fees of concert artists as a measure toward protecting the managers against financial losses. Whether the managers will succeed in this intention is an open question, but it seems certain at present that they have overreached themselves.

During the time of inflation and in the first months of the stabilization they did not recognize the true value of money. They forgot, after figuring with millions and billions, how to figure with hundreds, and are now paying fees which are nearly equal, if not quite equal to those paid in America. They are doing this despite the fact that it is perfectly clear that the concert managements of Europe are not able financially to compete with those in the United States. Even before the war they could not do it.

For example, an accompanist of a vocal or instrumental artist used to receive before the war about fifty marks for a Berlin engagement. At the same time in New York musicians were receiving fifty dollars for the same work. At present it is not at all uncommon for an accompanist to be paid between 150 and 200 marks, and a few like Raucheisen and Conrad V. Bos get as much as 300 marks, that is to say, seventy-five dollars.

Other Fees Higher

The other scales of fees have risen proportionately. A quartet of moderate quality can hardly be secured for less than 2,000 marks. Soloists of very little European reputation receive something like 1,000 marks per recital. Artists whose value is recognized all over the Continent, like the old pianist Emil von Sauer, can be engaged only at 2,000 or 3,000 marks. Fritz Kreisler receives even more than that, quite as much as he can command in America. Conductors of the first class are paid some 1,500 or 2,000 marks for symphonic or accompaniment concerts.

All this, too, in spite of the fact that there are few gigantic concert halls in Germany of the sort which are quite common on the other side of the water. The comparatively large auditorium of the Berlin Philharmonic can seat only about 1,600 persons, although it can accommodate about 600 standees besides.

At that, little would be gained by having larger halls, for then the problem would be to find the public to fill them. Only a few artists of the top rank would be able to do this consistently. When any other sort of artist is engaged to appear in Philharmonic Hall the gaps in all parts of the building are plain to be seen, and the gaps in the managers' pocket books are equally great.

Other Expenses

Besides the artists' fees there are other important items on the debit side of the musical enterpriser. The rent of the Berlin concert halls varies between 800 marks and 200. The former is the price of Philharmonic Hall, which sells 2,200 tickets; the latter is the rate of Beckstein Hall, which has a capacity of 500.

Advertisements are a big expense. For a single concert they are likely to run between 300 and 1,000 marks. A few hundred posters in the advertising columns for two days cost 220 marks. And what are 250 posters in a city like Berlin, with its millions of inhabitants?

To these must be added various smaller expenses, totalling at least another 250 marks, and if the concert is arranged for symphonic accompaniment another great problem enters. For each concert, exclusive of two rehearsals the Philharmonic Orchestra receives about 2,000 marks. The concert must not last longer than two hours, and the rehearsals may be only a half hour longer than that. If either concert or rehearsal should run over their prescribed time, there is immediately a charge of 500 marks for every half hour that is commenced.

Often one has to consider many times whether to perform a work with the regular orchestra or with a strengthened one. The above fee for the Philharmonic is paid for only sixty musicians, and an increase in numbers can be had only at an expense of forty marks per man.

Managers Growing Shy

It is no wonder that with these expenses the inclination of the concert managers to take any risks is daily growing less and less, for very often the box office receipts of a well presented and prominent artist may run as low as 1,000 marks.

An unknown artist has not the least chance of an engagement, not even if he brings a thousand proofs of his ability. A thousand tickets sold will avail him more. To the unknown artist no other way is open but to give his concert at his own risk, and to pay his manager all expenses in advance and a fee of 150 marks besides.

New Krenek Opera

Nevertheless musical activity continues unabated in Berlin. A new type of opera—so far as subject matter is concerned—was recently produced at the State Opera. The problem of capitalism and the struggling people is set to music in the new opera by Ernest Krenek, Zwingburg, which was conducted by Erich Kleiber. The tension between slavery and freedom is represented in a new costume. No more knightly cuirass, lance, and dragons,—in their place a choir of factory hands and the barrel organ of a life of misery.

The opera of the youthful composer—he is only twenty-five—had a complete first night success, but it remains to be seen whether this success will be won with the public as well. On the first night there were present only experts, reviewers, musicians, authors, professors, and a goodly number of hopeful and eager students of music. The public at large stayed away, and the impression is yet to be seen which the latest creation of the Bohemian atonalist will make upon the great mass of followers of music.

Varied Opinions

The reviewers were of different opinions regarding the quality of the Krenek opera. Dr. Leopold Schmidt took up the sword against, and Sigmund Pisling was just as unreservedly in favor of the piece. The former wrote, "With Krenek it is system above everything. And so his music does not characterize at all, either persons or conditions or events. Either it is commonplace and banal, or it is obscure and difficult, and seems puzzled out with a cold mind from the first to the last bar. But natural feeling is not to be suppressed, nor can it long be disregarded. Today a clique with a formula may triumph, frighten those who have no judgment, and bring them into confusion, but much quicker than we think the strength of such movements will dwindle."

Herr Pisling's judgment in the Abendblatt is much different: "We believe in this composer. Here a heart is beating, a heart lovable for its youth. What do we care about the chaos which the unpracticed ear makes out of that which is unfamiliar. The rhythm of the work rages through the score. The great example of Stravinsky is revealed. The music of the Zwingburg can show its teeth like the mouths of the rabble."

Strangely enough the reviewer of the workmen's newspaper was not moved by sympathy with the political principles which Krenek exalted in his opera. Dr. Kurt Singer first of all wrote about the Second Symphony of the composer, which was performed as a sort of curtain raiser: "This monstrous piece shows all in one the urge of a great talent, technical facility, and artistic failure."

A Rhythmic Music

Continuing to a discussion of the opera the same writer added, "It is a music thoroughly hateful to the ear, bare of all lyric qualities, although rich in fanatic rhythm. It is not a music of the heart, but of the nerves. The instruments do not sing, but beat all the way through. Perhaps Krenek is the most talented among the living young composers, but his art does not seem to grow out of the experience of a matured being. Wherever it shows scene, theatrical movement, and dramatic action, the Zwingburg is catching, but it tends to come to a dead stop where it ought to become songful and melodic."

Professor Weissman, always favorable toward what is modern in music, greeted the Krenek opera with great cheerfulness, writing: "This work is the strongest composition which Krenek has yet produced, because in it he reaches the highest degree of conso-

(Continued on page 21)

Composer Wins in Suit Against Berlin Critic

EUGENE D'ALBERT, composer and pianist, whose opera Tiefland was once performed at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, has just won a case in Berlin, the New York Times reports, against the publisher of a musical journal who declared that d'Albert had descended from composition of opera to the composition of operetta. M. d'Albert sued for libel, and as a result of the decision the defendant was given a choice between a fine of 500 marks and a fifty days' stay in jail.

The defendant's counsel upheld his client's right to criticise a composer's work, but the court decided that in this particular case the statements of the writer were not straight criticism, but were inspired by animosity and an intention to insult M. d'Albert.

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

CLAUDIA MUZIO
SOPRANO, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: HARRISON & HARSHBARGER,
1322 Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: O. SCOTTO, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Announce Augusteum Plans

Stravinsky Will Appear in Two of Scheduled Thirty-five Concerts; Beethoven Cycle.

Rome.

Igor Stravinsky, Russian composer, will take part in a performance of his new piano concerto at one of the Augusteum Concerts in Rome during the coming season, it has been announced. The conductor of this concert will be Bernardino Molinari. This will be the first hearing of Stravinsky's piano work anywhere in Italy.

The pretentious Augusteum symphonic schedule includes the performance of all the symphonies of Beethoven. At the same time the Busch Quartet will be giving a cycle of the quartets of the same composer in the academic hall of Santa Cecilia. At the symphonic concerts Bernardino Molinari will conduct the First, Third, Fifth, Seventh, and Ninth, and the other symphonies of Beethoven will be conducted by several other leaders.

Another feature of the coming season will be the celebration of the centenary of Scarlatti, at which a number of his compositions in varied forms will be revived.

Since it is a Holy Year, the season which runs into 1925 promises exceptional activity in choral music. The first big venture is due to start shortly, when Verdi's Requiem, under the leadership of Bernardino Molinari, will start the Augusteum season on November 21. A concert of the choral music of Palestrina, which the Societa Polifonica will give under the direction of Maestro Casimiri, is scheduled for the coming February.

Will Sing Perosi's Works

A number of compositions of Don Lorenzo Perosi, including his Transitus Animae and several Psalms, will be given in April. At a later concert will be presented some of this composer's greatest oratorios, perhaps his Moses, or Natale, or La Strage degli Innocenti.

The season will be terminated with the performance of Beethoven's Ninth and the Jefte of Carissimi. One of these concerts will be dedicated to the late Ferruccio Busoni. Among the conductors who have been announced are, besides Molinari, Raffaele Casimiri, Sergio Failoni, Alfredo Morelli, Michael Balling, Georg Schneevoight, Wolf, and Alexander von Zemlinsky, who was the teacher of Schonberg and Korngold.

Among the soloists there can be named already such violinists as Adolf Busch, Paul Kochanski, Remy Principe, and Josef Szigeti; pianists: Leopold Godowsky, Jose Iturbi, and Adriano Ariani; cellists: Arturo Bonucci and Gaspar Cassado; organists: Luigi Ferrari Trecate and Raffaele Manari; and the soprano, Vera Janacopulos.

The entire cycle of these performances will last from November 21 to May 3. There will be thirty-five concerts in all. The hall of the Santa Cecilia will be the scene of the chamber music concerts, which are scheduled to commence on December 5. They will be divided into two series, the first of which will last until January 9, the second to last from March 6 to April 24.

The first of these series will include appearances of the double quartet of Turin (consisting of winds and strings), the Busch Quartet, pianists Marcella Lautenay and Jose Iturbi, and the violinist, Joseph Szigeti.

The artists in the second series will include Paul Kochanski, the singers Mignon Nevada, Cecilia Cao-Pinna, and Vera Janacopulos, the pianist Arthur Rubinstein, the Zimmer Quartet of Brussels, and the pianist Guido Agosti.

Stravinsky Program

Igor Stravinsky will take part in the concert for chamber orchestra and wind instruments scheduled for April 24. His own compositions will make up the entire program, and practically all of them will be new to Rome, if not to Italy.

Palestrina will be remembered at the Santa Cecilia also. Domenica Alaleona and Alberto Cametti will direct each a concert of works of the choral master, and at each concert there will be explanatory and historical remarks made. During the season, between the successive concerts, there will be a number of lectures on composers and musical topics designed to clarify the works presented in the programs.

Considerable interest attended the performance of Arrigo Pedrollo's L'Uomo Che Ride at the Dal Verme in Milan during the latter part of October. It was not a novelty, not even in Milan, for this piece was presented there three years ago at the Teatro Carcano. L'Uomo Che Ride makes no new demands for opinion upon the critics, after five years of a happy career in Italy. It is a piece of music which has been judged a credit to Italian art, not only for its sweetness of melody, but also for the supreme qualities of its drama and passion. As far as form goes, too, it is well up to the standard of the best symphonic composers.

The Dal Verme audience, just as that of the Carcano, greeted enthusiastically this splendid masterpiece. Maestro Benvenuti directed the orchestra and the spectacle with real mastery and with the very best results, both on the whole and in particular effects. The singers who took part were Angela d'Urbino-Poloni (Dea), Signora Serena (Giosiana), the tenor Chiaja (Gwynplaine), and the baritone Rossi-Morelli. There were seven curtain calls after the first act, and six after each of the two following. The librettist, Antonio Lega, had to share the applause with the artists, conductor, and composer.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

OLGA SAMAROFF
Gave a Piano Recital in New York Last Tuesday Afternoon at Aeolian Hall.

Favor Italian Tongue

Il Teatro of Milan objects to Pelleas et Melisande being sung in French at La Scala. It is said in a recent issue: "La Scala must not be an international theatre, like the New York Metropolitan. Foreign works when accepted should be sung only in Italian; it would be even better to accept no alien operas and to keep La Scala exclusively a national institution."

Many Violinists Heard Among Berlin Recitalists

(Continued from page 20)

nance between music and poetry." Max Marschalk is neither for or against Krenek. In his opinion "the problem of Krenek is not going to be solved either easily or quickly. We cannot but count him the most talented amongst the youngest of our composers, and I should like to say that his fruitfulness alone, the astonishing ease of his productive powers and his will to accomplish great things, distinguish him from the others. At present too often we are forced to take the will for the deed."

Other Concerts

Composition always arouses discussion, but virtuosity is frequently beyond it. Several of the recitalists who have appeared in Berlin during the last few days illustrated this maxim perfectly. At his most recent concert here Fritz Kreisler played the Franck Sonata for violin and piano (with Michael Raucheisen), a Mozart Concerto, and smaller pieces of Mendelssohn, Schumann, Schubert, Kreisler, and Paganini.

Two other violinists in the recent recital calendar were Vecsey and Bronislaw Huberman, the latter who has by now departed for the United States. Mr. Huberman especially was praised in the press for his continued improvement at a time when it was thought generally that his development was quite complete.

Alma Moodie, Australian violinist, played in Furtwangler's second Philharmonic concert. She offered the new violin concerto of Hans Pfitzner. The reviewers were inclined to pronounce it not always pleasing, and it proved a difficult composition for the soloist to handle. The hero of the evening was the conductor.

ARTHUR KURSCHNER.

Paris Philharmonic Plans

The Philharmonic Society of Paris will give twelve concerts during the season with the following artists: Jose Iturbi, November 4; Pablo Casals, November 15; Jacques Thibaud, November 20; Capet Quartet, December 2; Jouatte and Toscha Seidel, December 9; a concert of works by Arthur Honegger, with assistance of Mlle. Madeleine Grey and Segovia, December 16; Capet Quartet, January 27, 1925; Helge Lindberg, MM. Delporte and Tony Close, February 3; Festival of Greek Music, Mme. Speranza-Calo and Tomas Terasi, February 17; Mme. Frosier-Marrot and Arthur Rubinstein, March 10; Ninon-Vallin, March 24; Georges Enesco, April 28.

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

SAMOILOFF
BEL CANTO STUDIOS
309 W. 85th St. Tel.: Schuyler 6952 New York

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

DAVID MANNES and Sandor Harmati have resumed the rehearsals of the three string orchestras at the David Mannes Music School. In each of the groups, elementary, junior and senior, there are about thirty players. The elementary group is composed of children from five to ten years of age and is directed, as is the junior group, by Mr. Mannes. Mr. Harmati is in charge of the senior group.

N. Lindsay Norden, director of the Mendelssohn Club of Philadelphia and the Reading Choral Society of Reading, Pa., has been added to the staff of the Curtis Institute of Music. Mr. Norden, who is also organist and director of the Second Presbyterian Church, and was for many years founder and director of the Aeolian Choir of Brooklyn, is known for his studies of Russian music and adaptations from both sacred and secular music. He is a graduate of Columbia University from which he received his degrees of Bachelor of Science, Bachelor of Music and Master of Arts.

Mr. Norden will be associated with George A. Wedge, who has charge of the harmony and ear training classes at the Curtis Institute. Others assisting Mr. Wedge will be W. Beatrice Haines and Else West Rulon.

Arnold Volpe, director of the violin department of the Kansas City Conservatory of Music, has been giving a series of sonata recitals recently. In his recital on October 30, in which he was assisted by Pearl Roemer, pianist, and John Wahlstedt, tenor, he played the Cesar Franck A major Sonata and Beethoven's Kreutzer Sonata.

Mr. Volpe, who was organizer and first conductor of the famous Stadium Concerts in New York, was graduated from the Imperial Conservatory at St. Petersburg.

The Washington Heights Musical Club, of which Jane R. Cathcart is the founder-president, announces a series of concerts and recitals on December 2, January 6, January 27, March 10 and April 14. One-sixth of all subscriptions and the proceeds of the concert of April 14 will be given to the MacDowell Colony at Peterboro, N. H. Among the artists included in the series are: Michael Anselmo, violinist; Ethel Grow, contralto, with Charles Albert Baker at the piano, and Ruth Kemper, violinist, with Arthur Loesser at the piano.

Intimate recitals by members of the club will be given in studio 7a, 200 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York City, on November 18, February 24, April 7, April 28 and May 12.

The new building for the Pius X School of Liturgical Music on the grounds of the Manhattanville Convent of the Sacred Heart, New York City, was dedicated by Cardinal Hayes on November 6.

The Cardinal made an address praising the school and what it has come to stand for since it was founded seven years ago.

The new building was designed by Delano & Aldrich. Besides the hall it contains a library and offices. Fragments of old French Gothic sculpture are built into the walls as decorations.

The hall is to be used for the teaching of the Gregorian Chant according to the method developed by Mrs. Ward, who is a daughter of the late W. Bayard Cutting.

There are about 100 pupils in the School of Liturgical Music.

Two hundred boys from twenty parochial schools where the Justine Ward method of teaching music is in use were on the stage, and one hundred girls from the parochial school of the Church of the Annunciation were in the galleries. The boys and girls sang alternately.

The first of this season's class evenings which are a bi-weekly event at the studio of Edwin Hughes, 340 West 89th Street, New York, took place on October 29. A number of Mr. Hughes' artist-pupils were heard, several of them newcomers.

Members of the Letz Quartet are among the new faculty members of the Springfield National Institute of Musical Art, Inc., of which Frederick Albert Hoschke is director. Hans Letz, former concertmaster of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and pupil of Joachim, will instruct in violin playing. Horace Britt, who studied at the Paris Conservatoire Nationale under Jules Delsart and Albert Lavignac, will teach violoncello playing, instrumental accompanying, chamber-music ensemble and orchestral classes.

The Bradley Conservatory of Music at Peoria, Illinois, offered a piano recital by E. Robert Schmitz at the third of their World Famous Artists' Recitals on October 30. Mr. Schmitz gave a generous and well-balanced program which included numbers by Liszt, Scarlatti, Couperin, Chopin, Debussy and Ravel.

In the afternoon the pianist gave a lecture on the Inter-Relationship of the Fine Arts with illustrations of classic and modern compositions.

JOHN DOANE

Again Active as Organist and Vocal Coach in New York After a Busy Summer on the Coast.

Classes in esthetic dancing have been opened recently at the Park Lane Hotel by Mrs. Henry A. Bishop, formerly Gloria Gould. Both the sessions for children and for girls and young matrons have been well attended.

Mrs. Bishop believes that married women should earn their own living and is carrying out her ideas in teaching dancing classes. Miss Ada Barker is associated with her in the enterprise. Mrs. Bishop is the daughter of the late George J. Gould and Edith Kingdon Gould.

John Doane returned recently from a three months' stay on the Pacific Coast, during which he was occupied with teaching and with appearances in several concerts in San Diego and Los Angeles. Mr. Doane's New York studio is now located at 7 East 44th Street, a new address. He has resumed his vocal coaching and teaching of the art of accompanying, and also his work as organist and choirmaster of the Church of the Incarnation.

Mrs. Anna A. Redlack, director of the Progressive Music School in St. Paul, Minn., has been engaged to organize a Ladies' Band for the Business and Professional Women's Club. Their first rehearsal was held November 7.

The La Forge-Berumen Noonday Musicales, which are held the last Friday of each month, were opened with a concert on October 3 by Grace Divine, contralto, Mary Frances Wood, pianist, Valeriano Gil, tenor, Alice Vaiden Williams and George Vause, accompanists.

Program talks on the music to be played by visiting orchestras will be given in the recital room of the Pittsburgh Musical Institute the day preceding the orchestra concerts. The speaker will be Mr. Boyd. Illustrations will be played on two pianos by Messrs. Russell and Oetting.

The first public students' recital of the Boston Conservatory of Music was held yesterday. The guest of the evening was Marquis Agostino Ferrante de Ruffano, the Italian consul in Boston.

The Juilliard Musical Foundation will award a few additional Fellowships to American music students. These Fellowships will be awarded by competitive examinations and will be in the departments of singing, violin and violoncello.

Examinations will be held in New York City, December 15 to 20, 1924. The appointments will be for the remainder of the school year.

To be admitted to examinations, students must be over sixteen and under thirty years of age; they must present credits in general education equivalent to a four-year High School course; and they must demonstrate exceptional training and capacity in the chosen division of music study.

Students residing at a distance from New York may have their traveling expenses paid if they are awarded a Fellowship.

Applications for admission to examinations must be made on forms which will be furnished on request made to the Juilliard Musical Foundation, 49 East 52nd street, New York City.

Students awarded Fellowships will have the opportunity to study under distinguished teachers employed by the Foundation. No students will be sent abroad or to teachers other than those employed for the Juilliard studios.

Requests for blanks must reach the office of the Foundation by December 10, 1924.

The Lash Studio at 2160 Giddings street, Chicago, has arranged ensemble classes for children. Private instruction can also be had in voice and piano. DeWitt Durgin Lash is director and Esther Walrath Lash is assisting director.

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
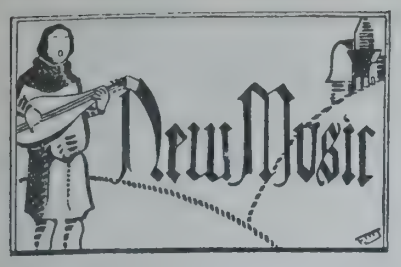
471 West End Avenue, New York City
Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director
120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application
Address Dept. V

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117



SEVERAL piano pieces of interest have been published lately by G. Schirmer. The Valse de Concert of Mischa Levitski, his Op. 1, has been off the presses for some time. It is a composition well adapted to the concert program, as Mr. Levitski has proved time and again in presenting it. The technic of composition is in no sense modern. Rather Mr. Levitski has taken a leaf from the book of Chopin. The melodies are pleasing, and the rhythm not too complicated, but far from banal.

A fifth number has been added by G. Schirmer to the series of Tunes From the Eighteenth Century which Harold Bauer has been arranging for piano. This new item is called Dolce Far Niente. It is an arrangement of a number of Gondolier songs of old Venice. As in the other numbers of the group Mr. Bauer has avoided overlaying his simple material with too much sophistication of technic. The Italian songs are displayed to their best advantage, and their improvisational quality is enhanced by a metrical freedom which shifts accents and rhythmic groupings effectively.

G. Schirmer is also the publisher of L. Leslie Loth's Concert Paraphrase for piano on Emil Waldteufel's waltz, Les Patineurs. Mr. Loth has pursued the customary plan in such arrangements, substituting whole scales and arpeggios for single notes, improvising swift, delicate, and complex rhythms on the simple waltz swing, and so on. The result is that the piece is very difficult to play well, but once played well has the charm of falling waters and tinkling bells.

E.. J. Moeran is the composer of two new piano pieces just issued by J. and W. Chester, London. His Toccata is a brilliant number which only the concert pianist or the very advanced student can hope to handle. It is very much in the style of a study, with a swift even running right hand part. Stalham River is more descriptive than its companion piece. Its rubato opening aims for special color, but the work grows more brilliant as it proceeds.

From abroad also come Acht Oud Hollandsche Liedern, arranged by Willem Pijper, the Dutch composer (J. A. H. Wagenaar: Utrecht). These eight old songs have the simplicity and lovely melodiousness which one would expect in folk songs of old rural Holland. Here would be a good group for the recitalist who wishes to get the personal touch into a program.

Four Hebraic Songs by A. W. Binder are published by Jos. P. Katz, New York. They are entitled In the Land of Israel; Chant of the Berditshever Rabbi; A Prayer; and Sing, O Sing, My Soul.

See America First, a musical comedy, is published by the Lorenz Publishing Company, Dayton, Ohio. The same house issues considerable choral music. Quite in season is its new edition of standard Christmas Carols. The Childhood of Hiawatha, by Ira B. Wilson, is a two part cantata. It fits the repertory of the elementary school.

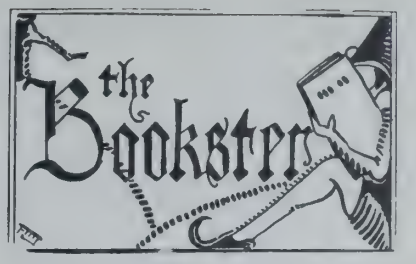
Boosey & Co., New York, continue the issue of new vocal music by composers both new to their lists and well known in their past publications. Among the latest pieces which this house has to offer are: Shut Not So Soon, for two ranges, by Ethel Angless; Give a Man a Horse He Can Ride, a ballad for low or medium tessitura, by Michael Head; Time, You Old Gipsy Man, a song published for three ranges, by Maurice Besly; Mountain Voices, for medium and high voices, by Bryceson Treharne; A Caution, for low and medium voices, by Barbara Melville Hope; The Challenge of Spring, in three keys, by Samuel Liddle; Sea Fog, for low and high tessitura, by Peggy Cochrane; and Once in a Dreamland Garden, which is issued in four different keys, by Kennedy Russell.

Puppet Dance, by Robert Braine, is a piano composition published by Hinds, Hayden, and Eldredge. It is a lively, good humored piece which supplies excellent study in the swift staccato touch to the young pupil of medium attainments. Roughly speaking it belongs to the family of the Golliwogs.

Reinald Werrenrath, American baritone, gave his first recital of the season in New York a week ago last Sunday.

Olin Downes Gives Lecture

Olin Downes, music reviewer of the New York Times, was speaker at a lecture-recital which took place last Sunday afternoon at the Anderson Galleries. This event marked the beginning of the activities of the League of Composers for the season of 1924-1925. Mr. Downes' subject was The Younger Generation in Music. Inez Barbour, Esther Streicher, and a trio consisting of Alfrida Boos, Jacob Mestechkin, and Leroy Shield, presented a program of songs and chamber music of Migot, Castelnuovo-Tedesco, Copland, Rogers, Krenek, Steinert and others. The first regular concert of the League will take place on November 30.



THE THIRD number of the League of Composers' Review has just been issued by the League. It includes four articles: Who Is Next? by Edwin Evans; Schonberg in Italy, by Alfredo Casella; The Downfall of Strauss, by Lazare Saminsky, and Scriabine, by Boris de Schloezer.

It is very fitting that exponents of modernism should be somewhat futuristic in their outlook. Two of the articles at least seem many years ahead of themselves. Mr. Saminsky, writing the obituary of a very live composer, says, for example, "The brilliant inventions of Stravinsky, the great musical engineer of our time, and Schonberg's aloof and violent utterances seem swiftly to have eclipsed the glory that was Richard Strauss."

There can be little question that Strauss' most recent work is not held in great popular esteem, although the passing of his best work is far in the future, but there can be much more question whether Schonberg is yet an accepted figure in music. Even Stravinsky is regarded with considerable more curiosity than understanding. Their suns are not high in the heavens yet.

It is a mistake to regard Strauss as dead or dying. The unattractiveness of much of his later work cannot be denied, but the strength of his best compositions is lasting. And these best works are known only in part. There have been comparatively few performances of Don Quixote, Domestic Symphony, and the Alpine Symphony since they first appeared—their length and difficulty have prevented—and these compositions contain much music which is as fine as Strauss has ever written. They are yet to be heard and well known.

Mr. Evans also seems a little premature in his query, Who is next? The question, Who is now? requires not a little consideration too.

The Review is an excellent music periodical. Its articles are timely, well written, and pleasingly brief. There is besides surprisingly little preciosity in them. The third issue of the Review measures up to its predecessors. An excellent charcoal drawing of Francesco Malipiero, by Maurice Sterne is frontispiece.

The reader is inclined to look forward to the next issue, which will include, it is announced, articles by Roland Manuel, Leigh Henry, Darius Milhaud, Adolph Weissman, and others.

Delius Sonata Premiere

The first performance of Frederick Delius' new sonata for violin and piano was given at the first meeting of the Music Society, Oct. 7, at St. John's Institute, Westminster, London.

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

EVERY READER OF "THE MUSICAL DIGEST"
SHOULD READ
"Music & Letters"
The British Musical Quarterly
"Those who give thought to the vital and intimate problems of music can always find a budget of good matter in Music & Letters."
—London Morning Post.
100 pages; 20s per annum post free.
LONDON: 22 ESSEX STREET, W. C. 2.

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

Los Angeles Hears Popular Concert

Toska Tolces Plays Schumann Piano Concerto Before Capacity Audience.

Los Angeles, Nov. 3.—The second popular concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra drew a capacity house. The orchestra, under the baton of Walter Rothwell, played an international program which included the March Militaire Francaise from Saint-Saens' Suite Algerienne; the tone poem Finlandia of Sibelius; selections from Rimsky-Korsakoff's Le Coq d'Or, played for the first time in Los Angeles; Elgar's Serenade Lyric; and Liszt's Les Preludes. The soloists were Ettore Campana, baritone, and Toska Tolces, pianist. Miss Tolces in the Schumann Concerto in A minor, according to Francis Kendig in the Times, "gave a grateful rendition to this time-honored work." Mr. Campana, said the Examiner, gave his "usual pleasing rendition" of the Prologue from Il Pagliacci.

Carl Bronson wrote in the Herald that Director Rothwell "led his musicians through the thin places of the lighter vein in the lyric scores with considerable triumph. Especially in the Sibelius Finlandia . . . an intensely colorful reading." This reviewer felt that the triumph of the day was the Liszt symphonic poem. The performance of this work was a "challenge by Rothwell" to any other orchestra to give a more impressive interpretation, Mr. Bronson thought. The soloists, as well as Mr. Rothwell and his men, were praised by the writer in the Express, who considered that Mr. Campana's voice "revealed dramatic singing qualities." Miss Tolces' playing he called "uncommonly good," possessing ample technic, poetic feeling.

Among the recent recitalists were Mario Chamlee, Metropolitan tenor, and his wife, Ruth Miller, soprano; Ruth Linrud, harpist; Gregor and Alex Cherniavsky; John Claire Montieth, and Ina Bourskaya.

Violin Teacher Wanted

to act as head of the Department in a School on the Pacific Coast. Soloist and Pedagog. Not later than January first. State salary expected. Address Pacific Coast School, care of The Musical Digest,

WANTED — Buyer and manager for Piano and Talking Machine Departments for large Eastern Department Store doing $200,000 in these departments. A real sales promoter, who is successful in his present position is wanted only. Apply in strict confidence. Write "Buyer-Manager 33," Musical Digest, 243 West Thirty-ninth street, New York City.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld

RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street

POLA NEGRI

IN

FORBIDDEN PARADISE

RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA

RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street

MARRIED FLIRTS

WITH PAULINE FREDERICK AND CONRAD NAGEL

FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA

Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

Figures Show Number of Women Musicians Smaller

THERE were 11,800 fewer women musicians and teachers of music in 1920 than in 1910, according to a recent announcement based on study of the figures gathered in the last national census, and it is believed that this trend is continuing. According to the same figures, the number of men in this country interested in music was increased during the same decade by 2,755. In 1910 there were a total of 139,310 musicians and teachers in the United States. Of these 54,832 were men, and 84,478 were women. Ten years later the total had decreased to 130,265, of which the number of men was 57,587, and of women, 72,678.

It is believed that the increase of men in the profession indicates that music has passed the stage in the United States where it was not considered a worth while or promising profession for a man.

Composers' Guild Moves Concerts to Aeolian Hall

The three concerts of new and advanced music to be given this season by the International Composers' Guild on Sunday evenings will be presented in Aeolian Hall instead of in the Vanderbilt Theatre, where they have been given in the past. Increased patronage and interest in the Guild programs are responsible for this change.

In the first concert on December 7 Eugene Goossens, English composer and conductor, and leader of the Rochester Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a new orchestral work of his own composition. Members of the New York Symphony Orchestra will participate. Mr. Goossens will conduct also one of Maurice Ravel's newest works, Tzigana, which has recently been heard abroad for the first time

Second Met Revival

(Continued from page 1)

Miracle was beyond this singer. Mr. Newman thought the third impersonation much the best. Mr. Henderson said that Mr. de Luca acted his three parts "with interesting versatility of make-up, voice, and style."

Kathleen Howard, Paolo Ananian, Lawrence Tibbett, and the other members of the cast won praise. The reviewers were agreed that the French enunciation was not of the best, although Mr. Ananian shone here.

There was difference of opinion concerning Mr. Hasselmans' conducting. Mr. Gilman, for example, thought it had "more rough spots and frayed edges than necessary," while Mr. Sanborn had "cordial praise" for his "care and sympathy."

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door

World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre

Edward Bowes, Managing Director

BEGINNING SUNDAY

"He Who Gets Slapped"

With Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer

PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL

Capitol Grand Orchestra

Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

Only a few days now before Koussevitsky brings down the Boston Symphony to show New Yorkers precisely how he stood 'em up in the home town and caused frubjous times.

* * *

Another orchestra which is prompting its clientele to enthusiasm is the Los Angeles Philharmonic, where Walter Rothwell waves the baton.

* * *

And—speaking of orchestras—the Cincinnati Symphony has just finished a bit of a tour. Fritz Reiner is making headway in more ways than one.

* * *

That formerly active citizen, Calvin Child of the Victor, missed the recent Metropolitan Opera premiere . . . the first one in twenty-odd years, according to Cal's own confession.

* * *

But Brother Beuer was on hand, and with a top hat too.

* * *

Chicagoans are sure there is no company operatically equal to its own, one of their number being President Sam Insull, who is a great public utilities magnate.

* * *

Lines-O'-Newser bumped into Louis Eckstein one evening during the Metropolitan's opening week. Now there is a Chicagoan who isn't so well informed about opera giving as to be above looking in on New York to see what he may pick up by seeing the wheels go round.

* * *

At his recent song recital Reinald Werrenrath selected carefully some compositions, expecting, quite naturally, that the daily newspaper critics would be interested. They were . . . in the Society of the Friends of Music concert, which got in motion about the time Werry was delivering himself in Carnegie Hall of his most precious numbers.

* * *

In his review of the first Mefistofele of the season Lawrence Gilman warns Gatti-Casazza about Nerone. "Boito was particularly sterile," is the Gilmanian opinion, "and his Mefistofele is a disturbing index of what we should probably have to endure in his Nero if Mr. G. C. should be so imprudent as to tempt fortune by importing that expensive and prodigiously advertised luxury."

And we are inclined to agree with Brother Gilman.

* * *

Richard Aldrich came out of retirement the other day to write a column of type about Wanda Landowska. Her harpsichord virtuosity seems to have woven a spell about Dick.

* * *

The facility of Toscha Seidel is astonishing. We noticed an advertisement in which (aided by a futuristic linotype compositor, and abetted by the proofreader) he played the Saint-Saens concerto in "H" minor. That ought to interest both Lawrence Gilman of the New York Herald-Tribune and Loudon Charlton, manager of Guiomar Novaes.

* * *

Speaking of American musicians who receive no encouragement and get no chances, we feel sorry for Clarence Whitehill, Ralph Errolle, Edith Mason, Jeanne Gordon, Albert Spalding, Rosa Ponselle, Charles Hackett, Mario Chamlee, Sophie Braslau, Mabel Garrison, Louise Homer, Merle Alcock, Henry Hadley, Walter Golde, Anna Case, Reinald Werrenrath, Arthur Middleton, Paul Althouse. Queena Mario, Edward Johnson, Thomas Chalmers, Charles Marshall, Arthur Shattuck, Frances Peralta, Nina Morgana, Anna Fitziu, Forrest Lamont, John Charles Thomas, Lucy Gates, Dusolina Giannini, Guy Maier, Lee Pattison, Edwin Hughes, Marion Telva, Eddy Brown, Clara Clemens, Rudolph Polk, Rafaelo Diaz, May Peterson, Sylvia Lent, Richard Hageman, Geraldine Farrar, Ernest Schelling, John Powell, Olga Samaroff.

* * *

Nobody ever hears about them. Their names never get into the papers. They have no income taxes to pay. They deserve our sympathy.

* * *

And about 'steen thousand other Americans, of whom most people really never hear, are happy in their practice of various branches of the music profession and earning substantial livings . . . in scores of cities throughout the country.

* * *

Facts sometimes escape the quick speaking persons who do their thinking afterwards.

* * *

Guy Golterman, who gave some opera in St. Louis last summer which got the citizens of that town all stirred up, is walking about with a determined sort of expression which predicates some other enterprising opera project. Guy strikes, now and again, when one least expects him to.

* * *

Yes, Tullio Serafin is a real conductor. In addition to commendation such as no other opera baton wielder save Toscanini has received in many years, he has the respect of artists who rarely express themselves as frankly as they recently have.

* * *

Ernest Newman, visiting English music writer, and Mrs. Newman were given a reception on the afternoon of November 9 by the music department of the New York Public Library branch at 151 East Fifty-eighth street.

* * *

We hear that George Liebling is to make a couple of New York appearances this month. Tomorrow afternoon will be the time of his piano recital in Town Hall, and later he will be soloist at one of the Metropolitan Opera Sunday concerts.

* * *

Ernest Davis has been referred to in recent notices as an English tenor. Mr. Davis has sent in diagrams of his family tree which prove that although its roots are in Wales, his branch is native in the State of Kansas. Mr. Davis says further that his entire musical training and general education were received in the United States, although recently his concert activities carried him to England.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

On Being an Impresario
See Page 5

VOL. VII NO. 6 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc. 15 CENTS A COPY

New Conductor Makes Chicago Opera Debut With Tannhauser

Chicagoan Praised in First Appearance; Forrai Ill, Raisa Sings Elizabeth.

LAMONT IN TITLE ROLE

Chicago, Nov. 12.—A new conductor made his appearance at the performance of Tannhauser by the Chicago Civic Opera Company last evening. He is Henry G. Weber, a young Chicagoan, and, according to the newspapers, the success of the performance was largely due to him. Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner exemplified the critical comment in this statement: "I am going to give the honors to Mr. Weber, who is a most talented youngster with an uncanny knowledge of his score, a splendid understanding of tempi as related to the spirit of the times, courage to cast traditions overboard, and possessed of a vast amount of enthusiasm, certainty and authority."

Equally enthusiastic was Edward Moore of the Tribune, who prophesied that the new conductor would be talked about. "It did not take many measures of his overture to know that here was a conductor who knew his business . . . he had pace, he had spirit, sense of contrast and complete knowledge of how to make his forces interpret his desires."

Rosa Raisa sang Elizabeth, due to the sudden illness of Olga Forrai. "She played the role with dignity," said Karleton Hackett of the Post, "and sang beautifully." Equally pleased with her performance at such short notice was Edward Moore of the Tribune who wrote that she gave a "dignified, mannerly, and, completely certain" performance. Mr. Gunn thought Mme. Raisa sang "gloriously." The singing of Forrest Lamont as Tannhauser received unanimous praise from the commentators in the papers. He sang his solos, wrote Maurice Rosenfeld in the News, "with full-throated tones and with artistic taste." Mr. Hackett felt the tenor's voice "suited the music admirably and came out with sustained power."

Another member of the cast who received many commendatory notices was Cyrena van Gordon in the part of Venus. "Quite in addition to her good looks . . . I have never heard her voice sound so smooth and lovely . . ." wrote Mr. Moore. Others in the performance were: Joseph Schwarz, whose Wolfram was "especially fine in its vocal representation," according to Mr. Rosenfeld; Alexander Kipnis as Hermann, "impressive in action and artistic musically;" Dneproff; Beck; Mojica; Nicolich, and Gladys Swarthout.

Rosa Ponselle is shown above in the character of Maddelena in Andrea Chenier. It is in this role that the soprano will make her reappearance for the first time this season at the Metropolitan Opera House next Saturday afternoon.

Bulletins of News

The American premiere of Leo Janacek's Jenufa will take place on the afternoon of December 6 at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Giulio Gatti-Casazza announced last Sunday. The opera will be conducted by Artur Bodanzky, who has prepared the score for presentation. The chorus has been trained by Giulio Setti, the mise en scene arranged by Wilhelm Von Wymetal, the dances arranged by Ottokar Bartik. Josef Novak painted the scenery from designs of Hans Puehringer, and the costumes were made by Mme. Castelbert.

The cast will include Mmes. Kathleen Howard, Margaret Matzenauer, Maria Jeritza, Laura Robertson, Ellen Dalossy, Grace Anthony, Charlotte Ryan, and Marie Mattfeld; and Messrs. Martin Oehman, Rudolf Laubenthal, Gustav Schutzendorf, and James Wolfe.

THE LIBRARY OF THE DEC 1 1924 UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

The operation which Giacomo Puccini, Italian composer, was reported to be about to undergo in Brussels for laryngeal trouble, has been avoided. He is being given radio treatment instead.

Beniamino Gigli, Metropolitan Opera tenor, was severely shaken up and his right arm slightly injured in an automobile collision in Mount Vernon, N. Y., last Sunday. Mr. Gigli refused medical attention, considering his injuries trivial. Mrs. Gigli and the two children were also in the car, but were uninjured.

Mme. Sabanieva sang the role of Cio-Cio San in Madama Butterfly at the Metropolitan on Saturday evening instead of Mme. Rethberg, who was indisposed.

Jeritza and Easton In Rosenkavalier At Metropolitan

Performance of Strauss Opera Well Received by the Reviewers.

BODANZKY CONDUCTS

With a cast almost identical with that of last year, Der Rosenkavalier was presented at the Metropolitan last Thursday evening for the first time this season. In the more important roles were: Florence Easton, Maria Jeritza, Paul Bender, Gustav Schutzendorf, Queena Mario, Marcella Roeseler, Angelo Bada, Kathleen Howard, and Ralph Errolle.

With one exception, the reviewers were agreed as to the success of the performance. The exception was Ernest Newman of the Post. The Telegram and Mail gave the essence of the critical comment in this assertion: "The performance as a whole was conspicuous for the excellence of team work and musical finish. Mr. Bodanzky conducted with zeal." Deems Taylor, in the World, added that he conducted "a sometimes overemphatic but always vital and colorful orchestral performance!"

In this reviewer's opinion the opera was equally good on the vocal side. "Most of the individual performances were good and Mme. Jeritza and Mme. Easton were extraordinarily fine." Mr. Taylor was especially pleased to note that the casting was "faithful to the theatrical tradition of selecting actresses who looked their parts as well as acted them."

The Telegram and Mail observer also found the Octavian of Mme. Jeritza "one of her most carefully wrought and finished achievements" and that Mme. Easton's impersonation "was carried out with a rare sense of the psychology of the role." Of the acting, Lawrence Gilman wrote in the Herald Tribune that Mme. Easton gave a "finely conceived" performance of the Princess, and that Mme. Jeritza showed "flexibility and resourcefulness" in her comedy. Paul Bender's Baron Ochs was thought amusing by most of the commentators. His farce was amusing to Olin Downes of the Times without "distasteful horseplay and the voice would be capital for any part."

Mr. Bender's work was characterized as shrewd and humorous by the Telegram and Mail reviewer, who also considered that Miss Mario handled the "voice wrecking" part of Sophie "most adroitly." Of the other writers the only one to agree with him was Deems Taylor who thought her "more nearly human than most." W. J. Henderson of the Sun said that she disposed of the role with "much skill and no little charm."

(Continued on page 24)

Chaliapin Sings in Mefistofele at Met

Frances Alda Makes Season Debut; Serafin as Conductor Again Praised.

With Feodor Chaliapin in the title role of the opera, Frances Alda made her first appearance at the Metropolitan this season as Margherita in Boito's Mefistofele on November 14. An unusually large and demonstrative audience applauded the performance, especially the lively Brocken scene. Mme. Alda received an enthusiastic welcome. Tullio Serafin conducted, to quote Deems Taylor of the World, "with admirable spirit and colorfulness." Olin Downes wrote in the Times that he directed "with that rare sense of tonal balance between orchestra and stage which has repeatedly been shown to be his."

Mr. Taylor asserted that Feodor Chaliapin's performance of Mefistofele was one that every aspiring young operatic singer should be compelled to see because "its effortless and magnificent perfection" should discourage any but the most talented and because it would be, to a serious student, a "priceless object lesson." To this reviewer Mr. Chaliapin's performance was a "revelation." Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune considered Mr. Chaliapin's achievement unforgettable and "even more remarkable when one realizes that it is in no wise assisted by the music."

Although Beniamino Gigli did not look the part of Faust, he triumphed, according to Mr. Gilman, "wholly through his beautiful voice and his admirable use of that voice." Agreed with this assertion was Mr. Downes, who wrote, "Mr. Gigli sang Faust's music with his wonted beauty of tone."

This writer considered Mme. Alda's singing of the great air of the prison scene performed with "true pathos and with vocal breadth and authority." Mr. Taylor found her "her wonted successful Margherita;" the Sun said it was one of her most successful roles and won her much applause; and Mr. Gilman found her voice and art in "their customary estate." Among other members of the cast, the only newcomer was Mary Bonetti, who, wrote Mr. Gilman, acquitted herself creditably. Angelo Bada's Wagner was "appropriate" said Mr. Downes; Frances Peralta and Kathleen Howard as Elena and Marta respectively received laudatory comment; and Giordano Paltrinieri completed the ensemble of familiar and capable singers.

Ernest Newman of the Post confined his comment to the mediocrity of Boito's score and the beauty of the settings. "The setting and staging were superb enough to carry off even a worse opera than Boito's." Practically all of the reviewers remarked on the Brocken scene, which, as the Sun said, "made its usual magnificent effect."

Rosa Raisa Praised In Role of Santuzza

Twin Opera Presented in Chicago; Cimini Makes Debut as Conductor.

Chicago, Nov. 17. — The twin operas, Cavalleria Rusticana and I Pagliacci, were presented by the Chicago Civic Opera Company in the Auditorium yesterday afternoon. They were conducted respectively by Pietro Cimini, who made his season's debut, and Roberto Moranzoni.

There were no newcomers in the cast of the first. Rosa Raisa as Santuzza "did some admirable singing, though it took her some little time to get under way," Maurice Rosenfeld wrote in the News, and Edward Moore of the Tribune agreed. More emphatic in his praise was Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner: "Vocally there will be nothing better during the whole season than Mme. Raisa's singing of Santuzza."

It had been announced that Alfred Piccaver would sing Turiddu, but Forrest Lamont sang the part instead. He was credited with an excellent performance by the observers, especially as he had sung in Tosca the night before. Mr. Rosenfeld expressed the opinion of the other reviewers when he said that Mr. Lamont "sang with his accustomed readiness and scored with the audience." Of other singers this reviewer wrote: "Desire Defrere as Alfio was peppery in action and satisfactory vocally and Flora Perini made a good impression as Lola." Maria Claessens completed the cast. Mr. Moore reported that Mr. Cimini "conducted at a brisk and efficient pace." His work, according to Karleton Hackett of the Post, was "vigorous."

The second opera, Pagliacci, was featured by the first appearance this season of Fernand Ansseau and the debut of Douglas Stanbury. Mr. Ansseau gave a "commendable performance" as well as "temperamental delineation" as Canio, asserted Mr. Rosenfeld. Mr. Gunn admired him for bringing to the part "more art and less hysteria than tradition prescribes." Delighted to hear Mr. Ansseau's "glorious voice again," Mr. Moore nevertheless felt that sections of the performance were too slow.

This writer was convinced that Mary McCormic as Neddo "made by all odds the best showing of her operatic experience here." Mr. Rosenfeld was annoyed to find in her voice the same tendency to sharp in pitch, but when she overcomes this fault, he wrote, "she will find a place among our leading lyric sopranos."

Of the commentators Mr. Moore was the most enthusiastic over the new baritone. He found that Mr. Stanbury possessed "a fine voice, resonant, round and ardent. It would seem that more extensive roles were his due." Mr. Rosenfeld did not consider his voice a powerful one although he displayed "musical style and artistic taste." Cesare Formichi as Tonio carried away the audience. Mr. Gunn discovered that he was singing "better than ever," and that, dramatically, "he achieved a vivid delineation of the cruel, stupid half-wit." The other member of the cast, Lodovico Oliviero "did the part of Beppo excellently," said Mr. Moore.

With the opera at his finger-tips, Mr. Moranzoni, to quote Mr. Rosenfeld, "gets the limit in volume and tone color from both the chorus and orchestra."

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Carmen—with Mmes. Easton, Mario, Wakefield, and Ruth (debut); and Messrs. Fleta, Mardones, and Martimo; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

THURSDAY

Parsifal (matinee)—with Mmes. Matzenauer, Telva, and Dalossy; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Whitehill, Schutzendorf, and Bender; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Barber of Seville (evening)—with Mme. de Hidalgo; and Messrs Chaliapin Chamlee, and de Luca; Mr. Papi conducting.

FRIDAY

Der Rosenkavalier—with Mmes. Easton, Jeritza, and Mario; and Messrs. Bender, Errolle, and Schutzendorf; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

SATURDAY

Andrea Chenier (matinee)—with Mmes. Ponselle, Telva, and Dalossy; and Messrs. Gigli, Danise, and Didur; Mr. Serafin conducting.

La Boheme—with Mmes. Bori and Hunter; and Messrs. Martinelli, Scotti, and Rothier; Mr. Bamboschek conducting.

MONDAY

Meistersinger—With familiar cast.

Boris Repeated at Metropolitan

Moussorgsky's Boris Godunoff was repeated at the Metropolitan Wednesday with the same cast as that which presented it earlier in the season, except that Ina Bourskaya sang the role of Marina. The Times said, "Miss Bourskaya fitted into the picture of the Russian romance." The Herald Tribune writer said that she was "resplendent" in her part, although he mentioned "a persistent tremolo" in her singing.

Samson and Dalila Given in Chicago

Homer, Marshall, Formichi, and Cotreuil in Cast; Polacco Conducts.

Chicago, Nov. 13.—The first performance this season by the Chicago Civic Opera of Saint-Saens' Samson and Dalila was, in the opinion of the reviewers, one of the most successful of the company's offerings thus far. Edward Moore of the Tribune spoke of it as a great success from the musical standpoint. The conductor was Giorgio Polacco and, as Karleton Hackett in the Post said, he gave to the orchestration "a more mellow quality" than he ever has before, with "a richer body to the tone, yet with finer shadings."

Louise Homer's Dalila was the object of laudatory comment. Glenn Dillard Gunn said in the Herald and Examiner that Mme. Homer still has "the warm, smooth and utterly lovely voice that has held the admiration of the public for twenty-five years." Maurice Rosenfeld, the News observer, found in her voice a "wistful, almost plaintive quality in the earlier part of the opera, and later it took on warmth and dramatic power." As for Charles Marshall, "he never sang this music so well before. There was a fuller and a freer note in his voice, and it seemed to flow forth more spontaneously." This assertion by Mr. Hackett was typical of the critical opinion. Cesare Formichi as the high priest was, in the opinion of Mr. Rosenfeld, "a tower of strength both in his acting and singing and made a most creditable showing." Other commentators agreed.

All the writers made special mention of the excellent work of Edward Cotreuil as the old Hebrew. He had, wrote Mr. Rosenfeld, "the dignified bearing of the character and his voice came forth with sonority and with rich timbre." Another thing upon which the reviewers were unanimous in their praise was the ballet. Of it Mr. Hackett wrote: "The ballet in the last act was a picture of brilliant colors and graceful movement. It had the triumphant bacchanalian character befitting the temple of Dagon and was carried out with spirit."

In the cast were also Desire Defrere, Jose Mojica, Lodovico Oliviero and Antonio Nicolich.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

MARIE
BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

CYRENA VAN GORDON
Prima Donna Mezzo Contralto Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management:
For the East: R. E. Johnston, 1451 Broadway, New York City
For the West: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill

FORREST
LAMONT
TENOR, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson
4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Aeolian Hall, New York

QUEENA MARIO
Soprano, Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: Metropolitan Musical Bureau, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Bender Sings Sachs In Meistersinger

Takes Place of Whitehill, Indisposed, on Short Notice; Bodanzky Is Conductor.

The first Meistersinger of the season attracted a large audience to the Metropolitan Opera House on November 15. At the last moment Paul Bender sang Hans Sachs in place of Clarence Whitehill, who was indisposed, and Leon Rothier replaced Mr. Bender as Pogner. Others in the cast were: Elizabeth Rethberg, Marion Telva, Rudolf Laubenthal, Gustav Schutzendorf, Carl Schlegel, Max Bloch, Angelo Bada, Max Altglass, Giordano Paltrinieri, Louis d'Angelo, Paolo Ananian, James Wolfe, William Gustafson, George Meader and Arnold Gabor. Artur Bodanzky conducted "with the vigor and command and the close sense of tonal balance between the orchestra and the stage which makes this opera one of his greatest achievements," according to the World.

In spite of the upset in the cast just preceding the performance, Mr. Bender's Sachs was, as W. J. Henderson in the Sun said, "consistently executed. . . . It was a very human interpretation and textually most admirable." Miss Rethberg as Eva was complimented in nearly all the reviews. Olin Downes of the Times enthused over the "freshness and lyrical beauty" of her voice, and Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune wrote that she sang "exquisitely." Mr. Downes considered Mr. Meader's impersonation one of the best he had seen—"it was splendidly sung and had true folk feeling." It was this commentator who remarked that the chorus was one of the best features of the occasion. "Seldom is the opening choral sung with so much feeling and such fine tonal gradations. The last scene was not less admirable."

Ernest Newman thought that the performance of Mr. Laubenthal, in spite of a certain stiffness in his singing and acting, "had veracity and charm." Mr. Schuetzendorf's Beckmesser, said this writer, "was a carefully studied piece of work." The Magdalene of Miss Telva was one of the best that Olin Downes had ever seen. Her interpretation showed intelligence and discrimination. Mr. Rothier sang well as Pogner, Mr. Taylor thought.

Karsavina Dances Again

Thamar Karsavina, Russian dancer, made her second New York appearance of the season at the Manhattan Opera House on November 17 evening. She was assisted by Messrs. Vladimiroff and Gavrilov, and the accompanying orchestra was conducted by Alexander Smallens.

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

First Boheme Heard At Chicago Opera

Mary McCormic Rejoins Company; Giacomo Rimini and Antonio Cortis Sing.

Chicago, Nov. 14.—The critical audience was particularly impressed, in the performance last evening of La Boheme by the Chicago Civic Opera Company, with the work of Mary McCormic who has rejoined the company after a year's absence. The prevailing opinion seemed to be that Miss McCormic showed a great advancement after her year's study in Italy.

In spite of this, three writers, Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner, Maurice Rosenfeld of the News, and Edward Moore of the Tribune, admitted that she still showed a tendency to sing sharp which told against the beauty of her voice.

She was, however, complimented by Karleton Hackett of the Post and by Edward Moore of the Tribune for the sincerity she displayed. There were moments, Mr. Moore said, "of fine intimate sincerity." Mr. Hackett also admired the simplicity with which she played the role and found her voice at times clear and resonant. The rendition of the role by Miss McCormic, "both as to its dramatic portrayal and its vocal presentment," were praised by Mr. Rosenfeld.

Louise Taylor made her debut as Musette. The statement by Mr. Hackett that "she has a voice of pleasing quality with good range and carrying power, but has not quite the stage routine for so sprightly a role" was echoed to some degree by the other observers. Mr. Rosenfeld found her voice "powerful, if not always mellow," with a clear register. Antonio Cortis as Rudolph "sang well," according to Mr. Hacket who thought that although his voice is rather light for the Auditorium, it is of true tenor quality and with the range required by the music. Mr. Gunn's impression that Mr. Cortis was a "real find" was confirmed by his performance last night. Of others in the cast Mr. Hackett wrote: "Mr. Rimini played his part well. Mr. Lazzari was good and sang his little aria with feeling. Mr. Defrere did his share vigorously. Mr. Trevisan added two character sketches with his customary art." Lodovico Oliviero, Max Toft and Gildo Morelato completed the cast.

With the exception of Mr. Hackett, who found the chorus and orchestra dull, the chroniclers were in accord in their commendation of Mr. Moranzoni, the orchestra and chorus. They agreed, however, that the performance was not a brilliant one.

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

Alessandro Bonci, tenor, who is conducting master classes in bel canto in New York, will appear in recital on December 7.

English Opera in Rochester.

Rochester, Nov. 20.—A grand opera company composed exclusively of American singers, made its debut at the Eastman Theatre here this afternoon when the Rochester American Opera Company sang Pagliacci and two acts of Boris Godunoff at its premiere performance. The new company will present all of its opera in English. Its members were gathered from all parts of the country on competitive operatic scholarships and have been preparing at the Eastman Theatre and the Eastman School of Music for the past year.

It is the hope of the new company to give opera a wider appeal for the American people. Eugene Goossens, the English composer and conductor, who has just finished a season with the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted Boris.

Sousa Fetes Birthday

Completing a ten-day celebration of his seventieth birthday John Philip Sousa led his band in two concerts in New York on November 16. In the afternoon he played at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, and in the evening at the Manhattan Opera House. Besides his traditional march numbers, which he has been playing for thirty-two years, Mr. Sousa included in his program Litolf's Robespierre Overture, and a version for wind instruments of Strauss' Don Juan. His men played also Music of the Minute, a tribute to modern jazz. Nora Fairchild sang soprano airs, and three bandsmen added solos for cornet, saxophone, and xylophone. After the concert there was a presentation of a birthday cake from Sir Thomas Lipton.

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian Hall, New York
Aeolian-Vocalion Records

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
Victor Records
Steinway Piano
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 6

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Tullio Serafin

Whenever and wherever a master craftsman appears there attends always deep gratification. In the sciences no less than in the fine arts such a person is instantly welcomed. A place invariably awaits him in any other form of human endeavor. It is quite in the natural order of things for exceptional ability to make itself felt.

New York's Metropolitan Opera Company has in Tullio Serafin a great conductor. His special field is the Italian school of opera. Within the brief space of a few weeks this newcomer to the United States has carved for himself an exclusive niche—a niche so distinctive that it reminds the discerning opera patron of the one created in the same institution by Arturo Toscanini, generally regarded as the peer of all conductors of the theatre.

For the first time since Toscanini withdrew from the Metropolitan its clientele has had the good fortune of listening to Italian operas controlled by a leader capable enough to arouse memories of that departed leader whose influence upon New York still clings.

Serafin is younger than his predecessor (whom he has followed, by the way, in opera houses in Italy). And some of the Serafin procedure, when he is presiding over the music destinies of a performance at the Metropolitan, is not widely dissimilar from the procedure of Toscanini himself—so much so that it is quite evident Serafin has been wise enough and broad enough to profit by noteworthy opportunities which have come his way.

In each of the ten performances Serafin has led since he entered the Metropolitan's orchestra pit he has disclosed qualities of a unique order. His understanding of the instrumental and vocal details of every score has been an understanding such as only a distinguished musician possesses. Together with that evidence this quiet-mannered man has demonstrated his possession of the leadership gift; a gift developed to a degree which has enabled the attaining of artistic accomplishments long absent in the Metropolitan's presentation of works in the Italian repertoire.

Authoritativeness is one of the outstanding elements in the resources of Tullio Serafin. It is clear to the listener, when this man conducts, that he knows thoroughly what he wishes to do and that he has the capacity to bring it to pass.

He is establishing again in the representations of Italian operas that high order of discipline in the ranks of the orchestra men which is essential to notable achievement. The Serafin methods are not harsh. He does not rave or scold. But he secures from his players precisely what he desires, and perhaps he may yet extend that influence across the footlights to certain Metropolitan principals who so sorely need it.

The Serafin beginnings have proved a high light in the noteworthy achievements of these first weeks of opera at the Metropolitan. They have only to be maintained to insure for that organization a degree of musical security which has for some time been wanting.

Communication

Editor of The Musical Digest:

As a manager of concert artists your editorial anent the tardy starting of concerts interests me, though I must take exception to the line "For years the custom has prevailed of beginning a concert whenever the artist, or the management was ready to begin."

In general I feel that you are far from right in this statement, and with more than ten years experience, I would frankly say that the greatest fault lies with the audience.

I have tried many times to begin at the advertised time, yet how begin when crowds of people are surging through the doors at the last moment? I remember one particular occasion when Mr. Josef Hofmann began his concert absolutely on time, that people came to the box office and demanded their money back, refusing to wait until the first rather lengthy number was played. Symphony orchestras and grand opera companies are big enough to do almost anything, but a local manager handling artists ever so great, has a public which she may not offend. And unfortunately the late comers are usually the wealthiest citizens. So the problem is as difficult for the manager as it is for those who are considerate enough to come early.

EDITH TAYLOR THOMSON,
Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 10.

The Rhapsody in Blue Abroad

R. H. Legge, critic of the London Daily Telegraph, wrote in a review of new "gramophone" records:

"I do not hesitate to say that the new record that has struck me most during the past month is Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue. It is said to be the first piece for solo piano and 'American Orchestra,' otherwise the jazz band. The Rhapsody is here played, as to the piano, by the composer, who has written much music for the Winter Garden Theatre, and, as to the orchestra, by Paul Whiteman's Band. I have played it many times, and the more I play it the more I like it, for it has form and balance and a real method.

" 'Modern' of course it is in a somewhat freakish way, with a late Stravinsky freakishness, superficially. But it is most effective both as to the orchestra and as to the piano-forte obligato, which, indeed, is brilliant in itself and brilliantly played. So far as I am aware, it is quite a new idea, this—a small concerto for solo instrument and a jazz band properly appointed and treated seriously

"At any rate, I derived more pleasure from this than from numerous equally serious works recently heard, which had little beyond their seriousness to recommend them, and none of the newness. It is published by the H. M. V. Company (the English Victor subsidiary) who are to be congratulated on producing a work that is so skilful throughout that the Prokofieffs and Arthur Blisses and Honeggers of the less frivolous world will, in good sooth, have to look to their laurels!"

VLADO KOLITSCH

Another rare old violin has crossed the Atlantic. It is the one Vlado Kolitsch brought with him to play on his American tour.

This instrument bears an inscribed label testifying to its having been made by Jacob Stainer in 1657, and its pedigree states that it was used by Mozart during his sojourn in Prague. It is from the famous Lobkowitz collection housed in Roundice Castle just outside of Prague, and has been loaned to Mr. Kolitsch by the present Prince Lobkowitz for his American concerts.

When the jealousies of Haydn and his followers obliged Mozart to leave Vienna, it was Prince Leopold Lobkowitz who invited him to Prague. This Stainer violin was loaned to Mozart during his stay in Prague. The Stainer violin in the Mozart museum at Salzberg is one that Prince Leopold later gave Mozart.

Mr. Kolitsch will play this instrument at his New York recital at Carnegie Hall, January 27. That day will also be the anniversary of Mozart's birth, and Mr. Kolitsch will include on his program the Mozart Violin Concerto to be accompanied by harpsichord.

Chattanooga Hears Much Music

Chattanooga, Nov. 17.—A heavy schedule of varied music attractions has been arranged for the music lovers of this city by the Chattanooga Music Club. Maria Jeritza in a song recital, assisted by the violinist, Maximilian Rose, opened the season in October. Besides eight local recitals, the Music Club is bringing to Chattanooga Vladimir de Pachmann, Louis Graveure, Pablo Casals, the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, the New York String Quartette, Sousa's Band, the Hinshaw Opera Company, and the Chicago Civic Opera Company. The latter organization will present Thais, Boris, and Tannhauser, with Mary Garden, Feodor Chaliapin, and Rosa Raisa in the respective leading roles.

On Being an Impresario

It's Like Falling in Love, Says Andres de Segurola, a Joy—But So Very Disturbing!

by DORLE JARMEL

HIS mother, the Countess of Alza, trained him for the diplomatic service, saw him as Spanish ambassador to the Court of St. James. His first love, a well known prima donna, discovered his voice and started him on an operatic career which lasted twenty-five years. But the boy's dream went one step further. He understood men and he understood music. And he lived for that day when he would read in big white lights: "Andres de Segurola presents . . ."

"The time came when I was only twenty-four, when, for better or for worse, I became an impresario. And the fever has never left me. Once an impresario, always an impresario—and the good Lord help you! It's like being in love. A joy, yes. But very disturbing. Look at the result of my latest venture." Throwing his hands high in mock despair Mr. de Segurola indicated his desk, piled high with programs, tickets, and letters connected with the series of Artistic Mornings at the Hotel Plaza which he had undertaken.

"You ask why I did not remain at the Metropolitan, why I burden myself with this? Then you must hear the whole story. Being a man of orderly habits I must begin at the beginning. Very well . . . The curtain rises in Valencia, a Spanish city famous not only for my humble self but as the birthplace of Sorolla, the painter, Ibanez, the writer, and my charming colleague, Lucrezia Bori. My family was of the nobility and never dreamed that I was to become a musician. In fact, I was educated at the University of Barcelona, in order that I might have a diplomatic career.

"But the best laid plans of mothers of men . . . Well, I was young—only twenty-one—and inclined to be sentimental, which is not very strange, and—the usual story—I fell in love. The lady of my heart was a prima donna of reputation. I was an ardent youth, with no approach to her except a good amateur voice. And so, to be near her, to hear her talk, to breathe the air she breathed, I became her pupil. I took lessons, worked hard, to win a word of praise. And one day she told me that I had a real voice and was destined to be an opera singer. . . .

"Later, in France, I continued my studies under the basso, David. Soon after I made my debut in my native country, in Les Huguenots. Nervous? Not I. I remember very distinctly the afternoon before my first appearance. I spent it at a bull fight and was almost late for the performance! That was the beginning, followed by engagements in every country in Europe until in 1909 I came to the Metropolitan Opera House where I remained until 1920. That year I resigned from the company.

ANDRES DE SEGUROLA

"You say—'Why? When you were still young!' Exactly. Just that—still young! The cruelest words in the world. Ancora giovane—it is just as pathetic in Italian. It means the end of youth—but for me, I hope, the beginning of wisdom. I was forty-five years old that year—in the prime of life and at the height of my singing career, as the phrases go. That was the moment to make my exit.

"I have seen, you see, so many artists, fighting, fighting, against the inevitable approach of age, working with a voice which no longer obeyed their wishes. And I was too proud to let an audience watch the struggle. If I were a woman, that would sound typically feminine. The coquette! But remember, every artist, man or woman, is a coquette with the public. The artist plays with his audience just as a woman does with a man. And like a woman, he must know the psychological moment to retreat.

"Of course, I must admit it was not a hardship for me to give up my singing career. Because it gave me opportunity to indulge my impresario-urge. My first managerial chance, as I told you, occurred when I was twenty-four. At that time, I took an opera company along the Pacific Coast and to South America, introducing such works as Boito's Mefistofele and presenting novelties of the day like La Boheme. Later, during various intervals in my singing career, I managed companies in Spain, Cuba, South America, and Mexico. Last winter, you may remember, I took a company on tour through Mexico and Havana. This year, I am trying something new—my series of Artistic Mornings at the Plaza. . . . Yes, I am very busy but happy though the last few days I have eaten and slept less than I had ever thought possible.

"But I do not compla'n. My life has been a busy and rich one—particularly in my friends." Mr. de Segurola's eyes turned reminiscently along his walls where autographed pictures from famous persons whom he had known were hung. A photograph of d'Annunzio stirred him out of his meditative silence. "An interesting man. We spent several weeks together in Paris in 1913-14. He liked to hear me sing and would accompany me at the piano. That picture was given me one day after I had sung Grieg's Le Jeune Princesse, a particular favorite of his. Incidentally, he was not a good pianist. But we had a wonderful time together. There was a countess and a duchess—and the four of us enjoyed to the full the gayety and life that was Paris before the war.

"I see you glancing at the picture of King Edward of England. He was a personal friend of mine and I was often invited to his yacht, the Victoria and Albert, when it was anchored at Nice. I have met many of the royalty in the course of my career.

"Among my pupils were the Archduke Eugene of Austria and Don Carlos of Portugal who was later assassinated. I met the former when I was singing under Karl Muck at the Mozart Festival in Salzburg. How well I recall one Don Giovanni at that time, with Scotti, Farrar, Gadski, and Lehman in the cast!

Readjusting his famous monocle, Andres de Segurola turned to the papers on his desk: "I really must go back to work now," he apologized, "though it is pleasant to talk over old times. Besides, the impresario must live in the future, not in the past. He has a vision. He trades immediate disturbance for future satisfaction. But there is always the comfort, when one is frightfully busy and tired and upset, of saying with Virgil: 'Some day this, too, will be a joy to remember.'"

GRADOVA
Concert Pianist
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Duo Art Records Steinway Piano Fisk Building New York

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Mason & Hamlin Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

Detroit Symphony Plays Tschaikowsky

Cecilia Hansen Is Soloist With Gabrilowitsch's Orchestra; Children's Concert.

Detroit, Nov. 16.—Two compositions, the Pathetique Symphony and the Concerto for violin, made up the all-Tschaikowsky program of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Ossip Gabrilowitsch conducting, at its third pair of subscription concerts last Thursday night and yesterday evening. Cecilia Hansen was soloist.

The reviewers were unanimous in praise of the assisting artist, of the conductor, and the orchestra. Of Miss Hansen, Charlotte M. Tarsney in the Free Press wrote: "The clarity of her cantilena, the finish of her style, all made a firm impression on her audience. Her interpretation of the concerto had nothing of the sentiment so often read into it." Miss Tarsney was of the opinion that Miss Hansen made a better impression in Detroit on this appearance than she had last season in her recital.

The observer of the Times tempered his praise with the single qualification that in the first movement Miss Hansen's pitch was occasionally not quite perfect. He said: "With tone of astonishing virility and lovely texture Miss Hansen wooed her hearers and then captured them completely with the imposing scale upon which she conceived her interpretation of the work." In the News R. J. McLauchlin, who like the other reviewers was quite as much taken by Miss Hansen's appearance as by her playing, joined the laudatory chorus with the remark: "It would be difficult to imagine a more satisfactory soloist than Miss Hansen, for she has a colossal technic, a strong vital sort of inspiration in her playing, and she is a creature of superlative blond loveliness."

Of the performance of the Pathetique the commentators were equally enthused. Mr. McLauchlin went so far as to say that it was the best performance of anything that Mr. Gabrilowitsch has offered this season.

The first of the series of ten junior concerts by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra under the conductorship of Victor Kolar took place on the afternoon of November 3 before an audience of 2,000 Detroit children chosen from the public and parochial schools of the city. Selections from the compositions of Beethoven, Wagner, Weber, Johann Strauss, and Moskowski were on the program.

Gordon Sings in Gioconda

La Gioconda was repeated at the Metropolitan on the evening of November 17. Mme. Jeanne Gordon was the only newcomer. She sang the role of Laura, and, according to Mr. Henderson of the Sun, "acquitted herself with distinction." The World said that she sang the part with good effect.

The Question Box

1. Where was Hans Pfitzner born?
2. What composer crippled his right hand in an effort to make it more flexible for piano playing?
3. What career did Modeste Moussorgsky enter before he became a musician?
4. In what American orchestras did Anton Hekking, Dutch cellist, play?

Last Week's Answers

1. Hugh the Drover, an opera by Vaughan Williams, includes the scene of a prize fight.
2. Alfred Cortot was active in promoting the popularity of Wagner's music in France. From 1902 to 1904 he conducted much of that composer's works in Paris.
3. A bagatelle is a short, bright piece for piano or other instrument—a trifle. Beethoven first used the term.
4. Ballabile is a term for any piece of dance music, especially when inserted in an opera.

Give Rigoletto at Met

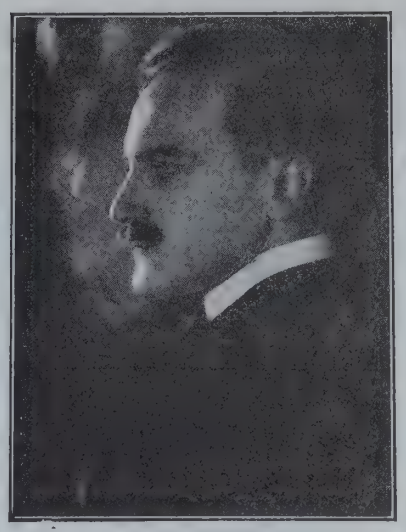
Rigoletto was the Saturday night popular opera at the Metropolitan on November 15. Queena Mario made her season debut as Gilda, and was described as "delightful" by the Post reviewer, who said that Mr. Fleta's singing and that of Mr. de Luca, also in the cast, left little to be desired. Jeanne Gordon was Maddalena, and Mr. Serafin conducted.

Sing Samson in Concert.

The second Sunday night concert of the Metropolitan on November 16 consisted of a concert performance of Samson and Dalila. Mr. Bamboschek conducted and the cast included Mme. Matzenauer and Messrs. Ohman, Schlegel, and Rothier.

Irish Baritone Sings

Walter McNally, Irish baritone, was heard at the Longacre Theatre, New York, on the evening of November 16. He was assisted by Madeleine MacGuigan, violinist. The reviewer of the Times reported that Mr. MacNally got along best with his audience in Irish songs, which he sang with a "racy diction and loverlike fervor."



EDWIN HUGHES
Pianist and Teacher, Who Gave His Annual New York Recital a Short Time Ago.

George Liebling

George Liebling, pianist and composer, who gave his first New York recital in Town Hall last Wednesday afternoon "is a pianist of mature and powerful style," according to the opinion of the reviewer of the Herald Tribune. Mr. Liebling has taught and appeared in concert in Germany and England.

The same observer thought that at times Mr. Liebling's strength made his fortissimos "a trifle explosive, though not ineffective," but that softer passages were played with fluency and a singing quality of tone." Technical skill seemed to this reviewer a marked feature of Mr. Liebling's playing. In the Times it was reported, "The pianist captured the imagination and won his hearers completely." The Times said also, "Mr. Liebling evidently felt his composers deeply and played them with all the sincerity and passion there was in him," and congratulated him on the nearness of his approach to the genuine spirit of each composer.

"All his readings were marked by penetrating insight, poetic depth, and originality of conception," summed up the Sun, which said, "There was no moment during which he lost the deep attention of his enthusiastic audience."

Philadelphians Play Hindemith Dances

Stokowski Conducts Version of Bach Chorale in New York Visit.

The only novelty on the program of the Philadelphia Orchestra on its third visit to Carnegie Hall, New York, last Tuesday evening, was a composition by the young German composer, Paul Hindemith, his Nusch-Nuschi Dances. The reviewers were rather cool toward the new piece. Mr. Henderson wrote in the Sun, "Any orchestral composer who knows all the modern tricks of instrumentation and has a taste for exciting violins and trumpets to insult each other from different planes might fashion a piece of this sort."

Mr. Newman expressed the opinion in the Post that if these dances are representative of Hindemith's writing he must be an over-rated composer, writing, "Certain it is that the Hindemith of the Nusch-Nuschi Dances is merely a mediocrity with moments of mild talent."

On the other hand Deems Taylor said in the World that the composition "is deftly scored, successful, without being imitative, in establishing its Oriental mood, and built to an exciting climax." Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail was aligned with Mr. Henderson and Mr. Newman, for he found the dances "so mild as to be hardly interesting." To F. D. Perkins, commentator of the Herald Tribune, the Hindemith composition suggested "a phantasmagoria of pale, shifting tints."

The most favorable of the reviews was that of Olin Downes in the Times. He wrote, "Apart from their ultimate value as sheer music, these ballet pieces are extremely effective. The harmonic scheme, the instrumentation and rhythms show a young composer who is utilizing the complex polytonal technic of modern Europe for purposes that at least hit the mark."

All the reviewers had nothing but praise for the performance of the dances as well as for the manner in which were presented the other numbers on the program, a Bach chorale, Wir Glauben Alle in Einem Gott, the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven, and Strauss' Death and Transfiguration. Deems Taylor opened his review with the statement that the performance of the Strauss was the best that he had ever heard, and Mr. Downes spoke the thoughts of all the observers when he said, "The performance of Beethoven's symphony stands out because of its fineness of proportion, depth of understanding, and wondrous beauty of tone and phrase." The Bach was praised in similar terms. Mr. Downes was left with the single regret that it was so short.

Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

RAYMOND HAVENS Pianist
Solist with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 8 performances
Soloist with CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 2 performances
Soloist with MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 3 performances
For Dates and Terms Address:
EVELYN LIGHT, Sec. 87 Pinckney St., Boston, Mass.

JESSIE CHRISTIAN
SOPRANO
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger
1322 Kimball Building
Chicago, Ill.

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

DAYTON, OHIO, has no intention of being pushed off the map. It is a community seemingly not content to confine its activities to science, invention, and business. Up to the very recent present Dayton has acquired fame through the exploitation of a certain cash register concern, and a little later for its contribution to the discovery and development of the aeroplane.

That community is now interested in promotion of an a capella choir. It is an organization numbering some fifty-five men and women singers and known as the Dayton Westminster Presbyterian Choir. John Finley Williamson is its trainer and conductor.

If this choir were merely a body of moderately fine singers there would be no occasion for these comments. It happens to be rather more than that, so much so—in potentialities quite as much as in accomplishments—that observant musicians are beginning to take notice of what this choir is doing and the plans it is preparing to carry out.

WE were prevailed on to go to Dayton a few days ago to hear the Westminster Choir sing and to form an estimate as to its qualifications to be accepted as a choral unit entitled to one of the high places in this sphere of music effort.

Unless our judgment is widely at fault this organization may be expected to achieve many of the things its sponsors and admirers believe is probable. Even now it is an admirable group of singers; young people, all, who are employed during the day in their vocations. They assemble four nights each week to rehearse . . . for the church services in which they participate, and the occasional public concert given in Dayton and elsewhere.

Listening to this Westminster Choir on two occasions brought evidence enough to permit hopes being entertained for a future exceedingly bright. The soprano and baritone and basso sections are splendid in natural vocal material. Amongst the tenors and mezzo-sopranos and contraltos (although some of the voices are excellent chorus voices) there is perhaps room for improvement.

WHAT impresses the exacting auditor so favorably is the high degree of skill which prevails in the interpretation of the music sung. Conductor Williamson is young. He is certain to grow in efficiency. But his present equipment compels admiration because of the results he has obtained.

He is a sensitive and sympathetic musician, and he is blessed with the rare trait of sincerity. Reflecting (as does every member of the Westminster Choir) the spiritual quality, one is impressed in hearing this organization with its Christian-like attitude. For that element pervades every selection offered. One feels it to such an extent that it becomes by degrees, as the singing progresses, the dominating quality in a complete program.

Cleanness of attacks and releases, and smooth phrasing, are also apparent. So are the lights and shades of expressiveness which Conductor Williamson asks and receives. Yet above all this is that dominating quality just mentioned. And so definite is it that the listener receives messages which other choirs fail to convey.

THERE WERE MOMENTS during the concert given by the Dayton Westminster Choir in Hamilton, O., last Friday week when some of the soft-voiced singing touched a lofty plane. At those times there was a smooth blending of the various sections which captivated the ear. The tone floated, too, with a kind of resonance seldom supplied by any organization of similar make-up of which we know.

Since the season is early, and rehearsals have not yet been sufficient to admit of that character of achievement which may be anticipated shortly, it is only fair to venture the belief that this organization will be more finished when next we hear it.

The plans which the backers of this Choir have in mind include a gradually increasing service for other communities than its immediate own. Brief tours to nearby cities and towns are to be followed by more extended journeys; and New York will doubtless hear the Westminster singers within the next year or so and—later on—perhaps Europe will too.

IMPRESSED by the fundamental sincerity of the choir and its conductor, a group of representative Daytonians are preparing to secure finances from their public at large sufficient to permit the Westminster singers to carry out the program for their development. That program touches a contributory effort to bettering the music now in general use in the churches of this country, and finally in establishing a school in which the training and conducting of choruses shall be adequately taught.

Here is a unique organization which is identified with a correspondingly unique project. It is considerable of a project, and to carry it through successfully will require patient and unremitting work, highly intelligent administration of the various fundamentals involved, and time.

The outcome means much to both the music and the human welfare of many communities in this country. For if it be carried through to that high point of success which Conductor Williamson and his supporters desire it can be an influence of incalculable good.

A LEAN young man with long hair that half hid his face as he leaned over the keyboard of his pianoforte held the attention of a discriminating audience in New York's Aeolian Hall a few evenings ago. He played a program grateful to a virtuoso and in a manner that evoked a deal of enthusiasm from persons who do not ordinarily become much fussed up over pianists of the present day. Not that there aren't fine pianists; the plain truth is there are so many of them that one must do something pianistically out of the commonplace rut in order to attract much attention.

Having done that Brailowsky now becomes somewhat of a personality. Just how high an estimate will be placed on his art can be the better determined when he offers selections differing from most of those heard the other evening. We shall all be interested in hearing him interpret certain "test" pieces that will plumb him to the depths. In the meantime the alert music folk of New York are keenly attuned to the second Brailowsky recital, which is to take place early next month.

LET conductors who must keep hard at it learn a lesson from the experience of Artur Bodanzky, who pilots the Metropolitan's German opera affairs (and the undertakings of Mrs. Lanier's Society of the Friends of Music).

Bodanzky has some affection in his right wrist which makes it not alone painful to use but—according to his physician—inimical to the absorption of the fluid which has formed there.

Left-handed conducting by right-handed baton wielders requires ambidexterousness. Just how many possess that quality we do not know. There seem to be no available statistics. In the meantime Bodanzky is complaining loudly . . . in spite of his good fortune in having met with no illness serious enough to have interfered with his professional activities in New York during his ten years of residence here.

SPEAKING of the Society of the Friends of Music the interchange of correspondence between Mrs. Lanier and Ernest Newman makes illuminative reading. Few New York newspaper reviewers have not fallen under the displeasure of the founder and chief backer of this organization. Perhaps the sole chronicler of the daily press who will be made welcome at these Friends of Music Concerts is to be Olin Downes, of the Times. The burning issue now is: How long will Olin last?

The letter and the comments of Mr. Newman which appeared in the Post of November 18, are as follows:

When Critics Disagree

In view of the fact that both criticisms of the Friends of Music concerts had the proper signature, the following is interesting:

"Dear Mr. Newman:

"As you are a stranger in New York, may I draw your attention to the fact that you and Mr. Downes are the only musical critics invited to the Friends of Music concerts and that these invitation tickets are sent out by my order alone? I regret that you have not been able to come to the two concerts we have given thus far this season. I know you have not been there because you could not have written of our Bach concert that the orchestra and the chorus frequently had ragged edges, nor of the concert of Sunday last that the orchestra should have had more rehearsals. Our concerts are unique, as there is only one Bodanzky and only one Friends of Music chorus and the work is finely prepared. I say this advisedly as it is the opinion of artists—great artists. In pre-war times such concerts were heard in Germany and Austria only. Now, they no longer exist in those countries.

"It will give us the greatest pleasure to have you at the concerts; but I must beg of you not to allow the office boy to replace you, for we have not invited him. One may like, or not, the work given, but I am sure you will understand that such criticism, utterly without musical understanding, is detrimental to any organization, and when it is, as in this case, not true, it is quite out of order. Had you heard these concerts I am confident that you would be greatly mortified to have your signature attached to such critiques.

"Yours sincerely,
"HARRIET LANIER.

"P. S. Perhaps I had better tell you that I am the president of the Society of the Friends of Music."

It is a pleasure to me to hear from Mrs. Lanier at last. Weeks ago,—almost as soon as I had set foot in New York—my colleagues informed me that I would have that honor as soon as I had criticized the first concert of the Society of the Friends of Music. I have had to wait till after the second concert, but the pleasure of hearing from Mrs. Lanier is only the greater for having been deferred.

ERNEST NEWMAN.

SMALL TALK so often is wide of the mark that one wonders just how the filterings from it get so far and become eventually so twisted. Take, for example, the chatter recently heard in certain quarters that Rosa Ponselle is not well enough to resume her place among the principals of the Metropolitan Opera.

On the contrary, this vocally gifted dramatic soprano will be heard next Saturday afternoon in the representation of Andrea Chenier, and she is cast to appear in the Metropolitan's performance to be given one week from today in Philadelphia.

Miss Ponselle has had a fine rest and she reports that her voice is in excellent condition. It doubtless is, otherwise she would not want to reappear before the public . . . nor would Don Giulio Gatti-Casazza feel it wise to have her do so.

ATTENTION! Nikolai Sokoloff is now combing his hair straight back, having forsaken his long established habit of parting it on the left side. We have this information on the indisputable authority of Adella Prentiss Hughes, manager of the Cleveland Orchestra (which Mr. Sokoloff conducts) and generalissimo in chief of that organization.

Mrs. Hughes stopped off in New York for a few days last week, happy in the recent tour of the Cleveland Orchestra, which she informed us had played to something like twenty-five thousand paid admissions during eight days, one of them devoted to a concert given at home.

It isn't so very long ago that Cleveland satisfied its appetite for symphony music at programs given by visiting orchestras. Then Mrs. Hughes decided that the Lake Erie city ought to have its own band, and she proceeded straightway to make that possible. The Clevelanders' last New York effort is still well remembered. Next month they will appear here again.

ARNO SEGALL

"has a technique of astonishing perfection," wrote the London Morning Post after his debut there on October 24th.

"He is of the order of violinists who exercise their influence by charm."

"He has a technique of astonishing perfection."

"He played a group of short pieces with all the Kreisler charm and with beauty of tone and expressiveness that was always personal and always musical."

"He is a violinist of more than common gift which includes the power to delight his hearers—the secret of success." —London Morning Post.

The Unanimous Consent of the Press

"There is no trace of modern striving after effect and strenuous passion in Mr. Segall's playing. It is as clear as daylight, honest, straightforward, first-class violin-playing, and it suited Handel admirably."

"His performance took us back to the age of the great classical players culminating in Joachim."—London Daily Telegraph.

"An exceptionally fine fiddler made his debut at the Queen's Hall last night. Everything Mr. Segall does is clean cut. There is no finicking and it is not an exaggeration to say that he is already quite a virtuoso."—Manchester News.

"His really strong point is his Latin rhythm—that art of being there exactly at the moment without fuss."—The London Times.

"He is certainly a most brilliant player with a fine tone and a refined, artistic style. Of the Glazounov concerto Mr. Segall gave a remarkable performance."—London Daily Chronicle.

Second London Recital — November Seventeenth

American Debut — Carnegie Hall, New York — January Fourteenth

Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Play Carpenter Suite

Los Angeles Hears Adventures in a Perambulator Under Rothwell Baton; Chamber Music.

Los Angeles, Nov. 12.—The audience at the third pair of concerts of the Philharmonic Orchestra was entertained by John Alden Carpenter's Suite, Adventures in a Perambulator, which Edwin Schallert of the Times called "one of the most novel and naive bits of whimsy ever scored to an orchestra." Not so long ago Tschaikowsky was considered modern, but yesterday Walter Henry Rothwell offered his Pathetique Symphony as a contrast to the moderism of Carpenter and Enesco.

The Perambulator suite was called delightful and "subtly humorous" by Bruno David Ussher in the Express. With the other reviewers Mr. Ussher found added interest in the program readings before each movement by George McClellan. He considered the music modern, but "not too much, and illustrative in both a realistic and impressionistic way, thus describing and suggesting." Agreed was H. V. of the News that the music was "skillfully descriptive and frequently full of humor." Of the six movements, the one "particularly effective" to this writer was the Hurdy-Gurdy adventure. This admiration for the descriptive qualities of the work was shared by Edwin Schallert. "The work is descriptive," he wrote, "but never to the degree unmusical. It is all subjective to its impressionism . . . Carpenter has done something really adroit in conjuring forth a type of fantasy . . ." The music, written some ten years ago by the Chicago composer, was heard in Los Angeles for the first time.

In the Tschaikowsky Symphony, Director Rothwell and his men were in a "virile mood," according to Mr. Ussher, and played in a "remarkably precise" manner. Bertha McCord Knisely felt that "it never before had such a colorful reading by this orchestra." The rendition of the Enesco composition, Rhapsodie Roumaine, was acclaimed by the press. "In the Enesco selection the orchestra evoked a breadth of tone, and a dominant swing which made the work one to command attention," said Florence Lawrence in the Examiner. Mr. Rothwell was complimented by Mr. Schallert for "outdoing himself in the novelty of his program selections."

The first of the series of six chamber music evenings by the Zoellner Quartet was well-attended. "The program was one of even more than usual merit and interest," wrote Francis Kendig, "containing as it did a premiere hearing of a Quartet in D by Gustave Samazeuilh, and that rich work . . . Piano Quintet in C minor by Dohnanyi." Alice Coleman Batchelder was the assisting pianist in this number. The reviewers found the Quartet up to their usual high standard.

The Civic Music and Art Association here is organizing an Eisteddfod movement which aims to develop the appreciation of art throughout the country.

Fedora Sung for Benefit

Under the auspices of the Social Service Auxiliary to the Metropolitan Hospital Giordano's Fedora was sung at the Metropolitan Opera House on the afternoon of November 14. The cast included Maria Jeritza, Giovanni Martinelli, and Antonio Scotti, and Mr. Papi conducted.

ETHYL HAYDEN
Soloist With the Oratorio Society in Its First Concert Last Wednesday.

Celebrate Anniversary

In celebration of its twenty-sixth anniversary the Tuesday Musical Club of Canandaigua Lake, Naples, New York, held a dinner on November 4. Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Rochester Symphony Orchestra, was guest, and gave a short address on The New Music. Mrs. Elihu Morse, first president of the club, was the guest of honor.

Downes Lectures on Younger Musicians

Music of Moderns Given at Anderson Galleries by League of Composers.

A lecture recital consisting of the presentation of varied music by young composers of the present day, and an address by Olin Downes, music reviewer of the New York Times, on The Younger Generation in Music, marked the commencement of the activities for this season of the League of Composers on the afternoon of November 16 at the Anderson Galleries.

Mr. Downes spoke of his experiences among modern musicians during the past summer, which he spent in Europe, and made a plea for greater co-operation among the various factors in American musical life, for a freer exchange of ideas, which might result in a more potent American music.

Mr. Downes, reviewing the concert in the Times, was forced to the opinion that "the program was too long and it did not reveal any commanding figure among the young generation." He wrote besides that the Georges Migot Trio, which opened the musical program, needed "a second hearing, which would determine better than a first whether a monotony of color and dynamics and a rather loose form do or do not justify themselves by the value of the music and the fulfillment of the composer's intentions." Mr. Downes found the Two Faery Pieces of Eric Fogg "disappointing," pieces "in the pretty-pretty vein of mincing Celticism affected by some British composers of this day."

George Antheil's Jazz Sonata was described by Lawrence Gilman, reviewer of the Herald Tribune, as "a few dozen measures of sentimentalized jazz." Mr. Gilman considered Mr. Aaron Copland's Passacaglia and The Cat and the Mouse "a good deal more competent and amusing—sinewy and well contrived pieces making expert use of the natural sonorities of the piano."

"Forthright and muscular" were the words used by the same reviewer to describe the Fantasy of Daniel Lazarus, and the Two Grotesque Pieces of Alois Haba, and Krenek's Dance Study he considered the best work presented in the whole program. Mr. Gilman was impressed by the color of the songs by three American composers, Alexander Steinert, Richard Hamond and Bernard Rogers, which Inez Barbour sang.

Madame Olga Samaroff

SEASON 1924 - 25

SOLOIST with

New York Philharmonic
New York Friends of Music
Artur Bodanzky, conducting
Philadelphia Orchestra
Chicago Orchestra
Cincinnati Orchestra
Cleveland Orchestra

and Recitals in many cities.

IN EUROPE after March 15, 1925

Master Classes at Juilliard Foundation from October 20, 1924, to February 3, 1925

A few available remaining dates the last week in January and the last week in February.

Concert Management Arthur Judson
Fisk Bldg., New York — Pennsylvania Bldg., Phila., Pa.
STEINWAY PIANO — VICTOR RED SEAL RECORDS

JOYCE BANNERMAN IN SUCCESSFUL NEW YORK DEBUT

N. Y. Herald-Tribune

. . . "Joyce Bannerman, a young American soprano, made her first appearance here yesterday afternoon, singing a program of the usual four languages with satisfactory results.

. . . "Miss Bannerman has a voice of good size, a pleasant freshness and a clear tone of ample carrying power. In regard to expression, her interpretation was creditable, especially in some of the German numbers."

N. Y. Times

"Joyce Bannerman, a young Cleveland soprano, of Scotch-Canadian descent, made her first New York appearance at Aeolian Hall yesterday . . . Despite operatic leaning in light airs of Mozart and Bellini, her program displayed scholarship in its search of unusual songs.

. . . "Possession of silvery topnotes metallic in the lower scale. She gave two Schumann classics archly and gayly as their mood demanded, and with clear phrasing and diction."

N. Y. Evening Sun

. . . "Miss Bannerman's voice proved a pleasant one, limited in range, but capable of considerable development. It was well placed and her tone clear. . . . She has talent and much charm."

N. Y. Journal

"Joyce Bannerman has a fresh voice of excellent range. On the interpretative side she was best and very good, too, in songs of lighter mood."

N. Y. Staatszeitung

"The young American soprano, Joyce Bannerman, gave pleasure at her debut in Aeolian Hall through a sympathetic and well schooled voice. She has splendid diction and phrasing and her interpretation is artistically finished and of a personal charm. This was mostly noticeable in songs by Schumann and Erich Wolff and also in a group of French songs which gave evidence of musical intelligence and style."

Miss Bannerman Will Be Available for Concerts, Recitals and Oratorios

Season 1924-25 Bookings Through

Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG — 1425 Broadway, New York City

On The Music Highway

GITTA GRADOVA, young Russian-American pianist, will play an unusual program at her Aeolian Hall recital tomorrow evening. Opening with Bach's Concerto in the Italian style, Mme. Gradova will continue with several Scriabin compositions. Moussorgsky, Chopin, Medtner and Liszt will make up the final group of her program. Mme. Gradova will give her first Boston recital at Jordan Hall December 6.

Ethel Parks, lyric coloratura soprano, who formerly was a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will sing at Town Hall on the evening of December 8.

With the assistance of Sophie Merkel, soprano, Peter Merenblum will give a violin recital at the Majestic Hotel, New York City, on December 6. The accompanist will be Max Rabinowitz.

The Norfleet Trio has just returned from a five week tour of Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Oklahoma. Many colleges and universities were visited during the trip as one of the aims of the trio has been to familiarize student audiences with chamber music. Among the concerts given was one with the Women's Club of Richmond, Virginia, before a large audience.

The members of the Norfleet Trio will be in New York filling Eastern engagements until January 20. During February they will be in Texas and March will find them touring the northwest.

At one of the Sunday concerts given at the Metropolitan Opera House this season, Ethel Leginska will be the soloist. She will also be heard in New York on two other occasions during her American season which will last from December to May.

Guiomar Novaes, who has just begun her seventh American season in appearances with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, is now on a Western tour which includes appearances in Toronto, Hamilton, Milwaukee and Chicago, and at educational institutions in Oberlin and Cedar Falls. The next appearance of Mme. Novaes in New York is with the State Symphony Orchestra at the Metropolitan Opera House on Sunday afternoon, November 30, on which occasion she will play the Grieg Concerto.

May Peterson, soprano, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, was heard this fall at the Northwestern College Auditorium, Watertown, Wisconsin.

Among recent contracts signed for Elizabeth Gutman, is one to appear in recital in Greensboro, N. C., in January.

Gaylord Yost, violinist, and T. Carl Whitmer, pianist, gave a program devoted to the ultra-moderns, November 17, before the members of the Woman's City Club in the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh. Sonatas for violin and piano by Ernest Bloch, Bela Bartok and Arthur Honegger were played. Mr. Whitmer gave a short talk concerning modern music in general and these composers in particular. He stated that this was the first performance of the Bartok and Honegger works in America.

Cecile de Horvath gave a piano recital at Manhattan, Kansas, on November 13. Yesterday she appeared at Fort Collins, Colorado.

On Nov. 18 Messrs. Hutcheson and Kindler will give a program of piano and cello music with the Chamber Music Association of Cleveland. The next day Mr. Hutcheson is appearing in Wooster, Ohio, under the auspices of the University of Wooster.

Ruth Rodgers will be heard in Bridgewater, Virginia, today and in Staunton, Virginia, on Thanksgiving Day.

Thamar Karsavina will appear in Chicago with Adolph Bolm's Ballet Intime Thanksgiving afternoon, and again on next Sunday. With her will appear her dancing partner, Pierre Vladimiroff.

Following her appearance with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra early in November, Cecilia Hansen started West, with appearances at Detroit, Chicago, Denver and a number of other places on her way to her first visit to California. Miss Hansen will return to New York in January to go to Havana for three concerts in Cuba soon after the first of the year.

Sophie Braslau, who has not appeared in New York since her recital at the Biltmore Morning Musical on November 7, is now touring many Western cities, including Denver, Pueblo, Colorado and Globe and Phoenix, Arizona. Her annual New York recital will take place February 3 at Carnegie Hall.

The first concert appearance in Boston of Rudolf Laubenthal, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will take place December 14 under the auspices of the Athletic Association.

Samuel Dushkin, now filling engagements abroad prior to his tour of this country beginning next January, recently played Ravel's new Rhapsodie de Concert Tzigane with the Concertgebouw Orchestra under Mengelberg. The work received its world premiere on this occasion. On November 9 Dushkin played the Mozart double concerto for violin and viola with Lionel Tertis at Queens Hall, London.

Henry Hadley will conduct Saturday evening's concert by the Philharmonic in Carnegie Hall, with Leo Schulz, now in his twenty-sixth season as solo 'cellist of the orchestra, as soloist. Brahms' First Symphony, Victor Herbert's Irish Rhapsody and the Schumann Cello Concerto make up the program. Mr. Hadley will also conduct the concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra in Brooklyn on Sunday, November 30, on which occasion Mr. Schulz will again appear as soloist.

Before returning to the Metropolitan Opera Company early in December, Edward Johnson will give a recital in Dallas, Texas, on December 3.

Alessandro Bonci will make his only concert appearance in New York at the Manhattan Opera House on Sunday afternoon, December 7. His first concert of the season will be in Detroit on Saturday evening, November 29.

In order not to interfere with the Thanksgiving dinners of the subscribers to his Artistic Mornings at the Hotel Plaza, Andres de Segurola announces that the date of the second concert of the series has been changed from Thursday, November 27, to Wednesday, November 26.

The soloists of the morning are Lucrezia Bori and Ralph Errolle, both of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Mr. Errolle's appearance is in accordance with Mr. de Segurola's policy of aiding and encouraging young American artists. The musical program, consisting of operatic arias and groups of shorter classic and modern songs, will be supplemented by the appearance of Lowell Sherman, the actor now starring in High Stakes, in an intimate talk, "Fifteen Minutes of Causerie."

The concert course of the Unity Church of Montclair, which is being managed by Edgar Swan Wiers, minister of that church, includes concerts not only by Vladimir de Pachmann, E. Robert Schmitz, Harold Bauer, Lionel Tertis, Alberto Salvi, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York Symphony Orchestra and the Miniature Philharmonic Orchestra, all of which were mentioned in the forecast issue of the Musical Digest, but also recitals by Feodor Chaliapin, Maria Jeritza, Queena Mario and Louis Graveure.

John Charles Thomas opened his recital tour November 6 at Rochester, N. Y., where he shared a program with Mabel Garrison. His November itinerary included Bayonne, N. J., with Margaret D'Alvarez; Mount Vernon, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Tulsa, Okla.; Muskogee, Okla.; Oklahoma City and Evansville, Ind.

The International Lyric Bureau, of which John Bellucci is director, has announced that opportunities for talented young American singers to make opera appearances in Milan and other music centers of Europe can be arranged through the bureau. Mr. Bellucci, who has been connected with the Metropolitan Opera for the past fifteen years, is prepared to negotiate with the proper persons abroad to place young singers in touch with them, with the view of arranging for their subsequent opera debuts abroad. Young singers who have progressed to a certain point in vocal technic, who have learned several operas and have the gift for stage routine, are offered an audition with Mr. Bellucci. Mr. Ivo Meluzzo, impresario from Milan, will be present at the auditions and will direct and advise the applicant as to the maestro needed to further his education or as to the repertoire for which the singer is best suited.

New York will have ample opportunity this season to make up for the lack of opportunity to hear Nina Tarasova during the past two years. In addition to four recitals at Aeolian Hall, the Musical Art Society of Brooklyn is presenting the balladist in two concerts there.

After his recent Australian tour Mieczyslaw Munz went to Poland to visit relatives. He is now returning to America, but will remain in New York only a short time, as his season begins on the Pacific coast on December 1. A New York recital is scheduled later in the season.

Herma Menth, pianist, is playing this week at the Strand Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y.

MAY PETERSON
VOCALION RECORDS
SOPRANO
Formerly Opera Comique and Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: HAENSEL & JONES, AEOLIAN HALL
NEW YORK CITY

RAFAELO DIAZ
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Management: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
HARDMAN PIANO

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
First appearance with N. Y. Symphony Orchestra Nov. 30, 1924
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

CLAUDIA MUZIO
SOPRANO, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: HARRISON & HARSHBARGER,
1322 Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: O. SCOTTO, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

Whose Pupil? Whose Teacher?

A Discussion of the Perpetual Problem of Placing Credit Where Credit Is Due.

by ROMUALDÓ SAPIO

ADVERTISING is an art, truth is a virtue; and on the degree of cleverness in blending these two essentials depends largely the success of those who seek the favor of the public.

But truth, like gold, is of different grades — there is truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. The amount of alloy varies ad infinitum, and, like gold, it is impossible to judge of its fineness without the acid test. The acid test for truth, however, is not always available. One may be deceived by too much confidence or by excessive distrust.

The best way to ascertain how much truth is revealed in an advertisement is, in my opinion, to accept it as basically true. Then in proportion to your personal interest in the case, try to find out the facts, and with clear, unprejudiced mind weigh the amount of alloy. Confidence at the outset, on prima facie evidence, can be safely recommended, for few advertisers are so unwise as to impose deliberately falsehood on the public.

Hardly a week passes without seeing the old controversy of who's whose in the realm of music teachers and pupils bubble up as a gentle brook, or burst out like a geyser. The occurrence inevitably is frequent.

In the struggle for recognition the teacher is perfectly justified in putting before the public his achievements, viz: the results obtained with those who have studied with him. The higher his subjects ascend the better for him. . . . If he can justly couple his name with that of any one who has become a celebrity why should he not avail himself of the privilege and reap accruing benefits? All this is perfectly legitimate and honest, as well as good business. Similarly, and prompted by the same ambition, the painter, the sculptor and the writer exhibit their works to gain recognition and advertise themselves in every other possible manner.

But here the similarity between the teacher and those other artists ends. The achievements of the painter and the sculptor are entirely their own, while those of the teacher are rarely so. In almost every case he has to share the credit with other teachers who have given instruction to the same person before him, simultaneously with him, or after him. Even supposing that these different teachers are all equally excellent, it is difficult to ascertain their respective influences on the student. How often is each inclined to claim for himself the largest part of the credit, if not the whole of it. As for the student, he is not always the best judge. Inexperience, prejudice, imagination and often suggestion may play havoc in his mind, and his judgment is affected accordingly.

It is, however, fair to assume that when a new artist makes a success his various capable teachers have all contributed to it in a measure determined by the time of study and the importance of the instruction imparted. All of them have an undisputed right to say, "I am teacher of So and So." But none should say, "I am THE teacher of So and So," or make any confused representation tending to create that impression, unless the fact can be clearly established. . . . And here rests the whole question.

There are students who go through periods of conscientious work under capable teachers without making much apparent headway, and without much satisfaction on either side. The cause is often a lack of understanding between master and pupil. Eventually the student comes under the guidance of a teacher who by accident, instinct or superior capacity ascertains what is best in his subject and develops those qualities which are latent in the individual. Success follows, and the last master often thinks he alone is entitled to the credit for the results obtained. He proclaims himself the teacher of So and So, and the statement is most likely to be accepted as fact.

All this seems at first quite reasonable. Certainly the last teacher who was instrumental in bringing the student final success deserves full credit for his part. But the fact that he benefited by the previous work of others is generally overlooked. Was the previous instruction worthless or wasted? Did it not develop the raw material and train the student, technically at least, up to that point where the latter teacher commenced? Without the previous good teaching could he have done so readily what he did accomplish? The former teachers are rightly entitled to a fair measure of recognition for the preparatory work and they should receive it.

Instances in which a successful artist is the pupil of a single master are said to exist. Looking from a broad point of view, I am inclined to believe that this seldom occurs. Even if a student from beginning to end, has had only one teacher, he has, without realizing it, absorbed much instruction from sources other than his regular lessons, and outside the studio. The performances of great artists in concert or opera are factors which have also contributed in no small measure to his success.

As a rule, I believe, students fare better by putting themselves under different specialists for the different branches of the art. One may excel in elementary work or technic while another may be a master of style and interpretation. If this plan were generally adopted the teachers would also greatly benefit; then each one could receive his full quota of credit for the work accomplished.

FRANCIS MACMILLEN
Violinist, Appearing in Recital in Carnegie Hall, New York, Tonight.

Music of the Movies

An unusually full musical program is being given this week at the various moving picture theatres because of the Thanksgiving holiday. Besides a group of divertissements, one of them to the accompaniment of the Tschaikowsky Valse des Fleurs, the Capitol Theatre is presenting daily the same composer's Capriccio Italien, and a number of solo selections by William Robyn, tenor.

At the Rivoli Rimsky's Capriccio Espagnol is the main orchestral number, with a prologue by soloists and ensemble. The third and fourth movements of Tschaikowsky's Pathetique Symphony are serving as overture at the Rialto, and Pawlowsky's Ukrainian Ensemble is singing Russian songs.

In support of its Spanish feature picture the Piccadilly Theatre is offering this week an all-Spanish music program. The overture consists of an arrangement of selections from Carmen, and Spanish dances and songs are on the bill.

Stojowski Plays His Own Concerto

Pianist Appears With Philharmonic; Play Tschaikowsky and Brahms.

Sigismund Stojowski, pianist, was soloist with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra at its afternoon concert on November 16. He played his own second concerto, and Mr. Van Hoogstraten conducted. The work was composed in 1909 and had its first American performance six years later.

The Herald Tribune observer believed that the concerto "seemed to have considerable merit and effectiveness, if not without dun-colored periods." Much "lyric charm" and "skillfully wrought variation" were also descriptive terms called forth by the music. The World writer used the words "resourceful and imaginative" in describing the composition.

The reviewers of the Times and the Telegram-Mail were reminded of Grieg by the melodiousness of Mr. Stojowski's composition. The former wrote, "He is original in his ideas," and "incurably melodious." The scherzo, according to this report, "was truly sparkling." The Telegram-Mail writer was of the opinion that the last movement was too long, and that the composition did not show too great originality, but said nevertheless, "It is agreeably fluent and melodious."

Of the composer's playing the writer of the Telegram-Mail said, "Mr. Stojowski's performance once more made it seem regrettable that his public appearances are so few and far between." The Herald Tribune reported that he "gave a fluent, expressive and well blended performance," and of Mr. Van Hoogstraten's conducting the World writer said that "Mr. Van Hoogstraten conducted a discreetly modulated and polished accompaniment."

Tschaikowsky's Sixth Symphony, and Beethoven's Lenore Overture, No. 3 were also on the program, which was heard by a full house.

At the Thursday and Friday concerts preceding Mr. Van Hoogstraten led a program which had as its feature Brahms' First Symphony, and included also Strauss' Don Juan, Debussy's Rondes de Printemps, and Beethoven's Egmont Overture.

STELLA de METTE
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Formerly with Metropolitan Opera
Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.
Exclusive Management of
ANTHONY BAGAROZY
Aeolian Hall New York

Ethyl HAYDEN
Lyric Soprano
Management: Loudon Charlton—Carnegie Hall, New York

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1924
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

RUDOLPH POLK
AMERICAN VIOLINIST
Exclusive Management: S. HUROK, INC., Aeolian Hall, New York.

PAUL WHITEMAN

AND HIS CONCERT ORCHESTRA

Presenting "An Entertainment in American Music"

¶ Chicago Debut Sold Out—
Hundreds Turned Away
Critics on Rampage of Praise

¶ Transcontinental Tour of 300 Concerts Now in Progress

¶ Season 1925-1926 Now
Booking

Personal and Exclusive Direction of
F. C. COPPICUS

Aeolian Hall New York City

Chickering Pianos Victor Records Buescher Instruments

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Clipped from the Chicago Tribune October 20, 1924

"LIGHT MUSIC AT ITS BEST GIVEN BY WHITEMAN"

"His Orchestra Even Better Than Expected"

By EDWARD MOORE

"Paul Whiteman and his orchestra finally reached the Studebaker yesterday afternoon, and went ahead of what had been expected even in the light of comment from Manhattan, where they usually do not become enthusiastic. Here was light music at its best, light footed, light handed, light hearted, giving an exhilarating tug to the nerves of the toes and the nerves of the ears—altogether a fascinating observance.

"They say that too much music of that sort becomes boring. Perhaps it does. Too much of anything, too much Beethoven, for instance, might become boring. Certainly the point of boredom was a long way from being reached yesterday by Mr. Whiteman and his men. They are deft musicians and expert showmen."

"Rhythm is a high art with them, and there are more kinds of color in their music than one would suppose possible in an orchestra of twenty-five. And the swift, effortless dexterity of their efforts is past belief.

"They are coming back, though not till April, and one of their hearers has already registered a determination to be present. He will be particularly firm in the intention if they play 'What'll I Do?' again, or if Michael Pingatore does his incredible banjo act in 'Linger Awhile.' Also, the 'Rhapsody in Blue' is something to hear, though it has not quite the fascinating thrill of some of the other pieces, Victor Herbert's 'Spanish Serenade' or the 'Russian Rose.' These were high spots and I looked in vain for any trace of the famous vulgarity of jazz."

Clipped from the Chicago Daily News October 20, 1924

"JAZZ MUSIC PLAYED TO PLEASE EXPERTS!"

"Paul Whiteman and Orchestra Amaze 'Highbrows' With Their Program"

By MAURICE ROSENFELD

"We have discovered the genuine American music. It is the infectious rhythm of 'jazz' and it is the ingenious and original combination of the symphony orchestra instruments in conjunction with such instruments as the banjo, the saxophone, the piano, the Hungarian cemballo, the mouth harmonica and the stopped and muted brasses and reeds.

"These instrumental elements entered into the scorings of the music that was presented yesterday afternoon by Paul Whiteman and his orchestra at the Studebaker theatre and it is not exaggerating when we record here that he and his men made a sensation which took the prominent musicians of the city off their feet and showed us what American music is and what might be developed in the future.

HICAGO NOTICES

as been played by indifferent orchestral blatant instruments and their somewhat es is not really artistic. But just as a played with artistry can be made a thing ce of 'jazz' when colorfully scored and per-instrumental quirks and rhythmic sharpreciated by the musical as well as by the n, who conducted the orchestra, does not ter of symphonic directing, but he has a good taste in music and a sense of humor, ly into the music that he offered at this is not a large one, but all the players are ir special instruments, and several of the yers are exceptionally gifted. The banjoist e singled out, and the pianist has a fleet

c. His solo performance of the 'Rhapsody and orchestra, by George Gershwin, was ch enthusiasm, many encores and there er of floral tokens to show the audience's e concert."

Chicago Evening Post October 20, 1924

TICKETS THE WHITEMAN CONCERT IN JAZZ"

KARLETON HACKETT

le fighting for tickets for the concert of nd his orchestra at the Studebaker on a
, as though it were the Harvard-Yale
d ones were offering as high as $25, and nd who were these people crowding the he musicians in town, who awoke in time, omising classicists down through the list.
a fair taste of modern 'jazz' in Mr. White-they politely stifle a yawn and wander of that lovely Indian summer day? They ayed right in their seats, and when the ad been finished, nobody made a move.
nt that they had not had anything like eman gave an additional concert of half a d then the curtain was drawn in sign that rwise we should have been there yet.

and his band have been so tremendously han one individual was present in a most me' attitude of mind. As far as one indi-
s concerned he was completely shown."

---

one something to think about; in fact, so it will take some time to get them any-ned out. A few salient points, however, ably.

solidly founded on the everlasting fact hectic tone colors and wildly pulsating ecorative designs embroidered about this basis of sane and of inescapable appeal.
at they have not yet created the melodic been obliged to take what other men
ded. According to all past experience, into a great art form until composers
th the creative energy to bring forth their must be said, however, that by the time reshaped a melody for his purposes its hardly recognize it. But since very likely rowed the germ of it this sends the question back into infinity, like most of the other problems of life.

"Once he has decided on a tune, however, the manner in which Mr. Whiteman and his players can dress it up is marvelous in its fascinating variety. You may have the notion that 'jazz' is a misbegotten child of the African jungle let loose in a lower east side hooch parlor to grow up; a compound of primordial lust and wornout decadence. If so you are simply behind the times. With all its complexities it really represents a reversion to a more vigorous life and clearer mode of utterance.

"The music is many sided. There is intense life in its rhythms with a throbbing pulsebeat expressive of our mode of thought and action. But it has its tender, almost wistful note as well, and at times a something almost calmly contemplative.

"Above all it harks back to the individual. Everything is not swallowed up in great waves of sonority with each individual and indistinguishable atom in the mass. There are places where they all rush along together with a verve that sets your blood atingling. But the most striking moments are where all is softened down to a delicate tonal structure in which each instrument becomes absolutely essential."

"There are some twenty-five players in the band, and each one is a master-craftsman. First of all he must be able to bring a tone of beauty from his instrument. None of the funny business until this point has been fully settled. There were so many of them who proved their virtuosity that it is hardly fair to pick out any one. Yet there was a surprise when one of the horn players sang a ballad in a style that would have carried him in any company. A tenor of lovely quality, with a manner of singing which at first made a vocal pedant blink and then grin all over with sheer delight.

"Well, it is not permitted to keep on writing without limit about this concert though the temptation is great. It would require columns to give anything at all adequate and there simply is not the space. The band is to return later in the season to the Auditorium. If you wish to spend one of the most enjoyable afternoons of your musical life, don't get left this next time."

From the Chicago Evening American, October 20, 1924

"WHITEMAN MORE THAN KING OF JAZZ MUSIC"

By HERMAN DEVRIES

"Something like one thousand persons were turned away from the box office at the Studebaker yesterday. In the face of such overwhelming proof of interest, strengthened by abundant added demonstration of passionate approval, Paul Whiteman and his astonishing orchestra will return in early April at the Auditorium Theater.

"But what a long time that is for the one thousand to wait—also for the other thousands who may be assured that they have missed one of the delightful experiences of their life.

"Whiteman is not to be categorized. Although he set out to show what could be done with the mooted 'jazz' music, we do not believe that his hold upon the connoisseur is based upon this treatment of the popular music forms of the day.

Whiteman Is Virtuoso

"It is not so much what the men play as how they play. First of all, Whiteman is a virtuoso conductor. And secondly, the men are virtuoso performers, each section realizing the maximum power, the individual resources in timbre and dynamics, in every scale of finesse and expressiveness.

"The orchestra creates rare unique color, always rich, full, never blaring or blatant—the 'saxos' are particularly eloquent—they speak at times as with the human voice—equally creative of extreme comedy as of emotion that can scarcely be classified, for it seems sometimes the primitive cry of primitive men—weird, haunting—distinctly anti-Aryan.

"But the music is vastly entertaining at all times—you follow it with fascinated ears, no matter where it leads.

"And this is the greatest 'apologia' of any art, I think."

Clipped from The Herald and Examiner, October 20, 1924

"WHITEMAN MAKES CONVERTS TO JAZZ MUSIC"

"Orchestra Leader's Artists Have Lifted Typically American Idiom to a Point Where It Is Beautiful, Critic Says"

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

"Paul Whiteman at the Studebaker yesterday afternoon made good his claim that 'jazz' has created a new orchestral art. What he calls 'the American orchestra' is distinctive, full of new colors and effects, technically as expert in its specialty as any symphony orchestra, Mr. Stock's perfect band not excepted.

"All the musical highbrows of Chicago and as many of the lowbrows as could find a place in the theater seemed to be agreed on this point: Whiteman unquestionably directs a band of virtuosi who have refined and perfected the musical idiom to which they have devoted themselves until they have developed a new style in music suited primarily to the dance.

"The harshness, blatancy and vulgarity of early 'jazz' have disappeared. In their place are heard suavity, an astonishing refinement of dynamic contrasts, warm, rich and many-colored tones and rhythms that are insistent and varied. Mr. Whiteman's men can produce a tone of almost impalpable softness and though they blare occasionally their tone is strident only for comic effects.

"An astonishing manifestation is 'jazz.' In twelve short years it has risen from ugliness to beauty. It is a beauty quite devoid of nobility. One should, perhaps, call it prettiness. It can achieve dainty sentiment, as when Mr. Whiteman's tenor—and he is surely the best tenor among French horn players—sang 'June Night' with baffling and unique portamento and a trill better far than Galli-Curci.

"I believe, too, that the famous 'Rhapsody in Blue,' by Gershwin, for piano solo and orchestra, is most interesting when it touches the risibilities. It has a certain neat brilliancy also that is typically American, and as played it not only displays a new school of piano virtuosity but accomplishes a finished expression of that entirely self-conscious elegance and refinement which is just now the most pronounced reaction of 'jazz' upon its executants.

"The public manifested its interest, not by tumultuous applause, but by remaining seated for half an hour after the printed program was finished, while Mr. Whiteman and his band played encores. They will return for a concert in the Auditorium in April. By all means, hear them."

New Musical Numbers for Paul Whiteman and his Orchestra by the following American composers are now in preparation:

Charles Wakefield Cadman
George Gershwin
Leopold Godowsky
Percy Grainger
Leo Sowerby
Deems Taylor

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Francis Rogers

Francis Rogers, baritone, assisted by Isidore Luckstone, accompanist gave his annual recital in Town Hall on the evening of November 16. "As is customary at this singer's recitals," reported the Sun, "the large audience included many appreciative music lovers and vocal students."

This reviewer said of Mr. Rogers' singing, "Mr. Rogers sang throughout with his usual insight, polished diction, skillful use of his good voice and complete mastery of different styles, and thereby emphasized again his position long sustained among singers for being one of the excellent song interpreters of his time." The Herald Tribune report was equally laudatory: "As before, the baritone, making the fullest possible use of his vocal and expressive resources, gave an artistic and delightful performance, notable in its finely phrased expressive variety and nuance and clearness of diction."

The Times referred to Mr. Rogers as "a well-seasoned and cultivated singer" of "fastidious taste." Many of the numbers on the program were repeated. "Mr. Luckstone's accompaniments were admirable," wrote the reviewer of the Sun.

Leff Pouishnoff

After a number of appearances in various European countries, Leff Pouishnoff, Russian pianist, made his American debut in Aeolian Hall on the afternoon of November 17, and prompted the reviewer of the Sun to say of him, "He is one of the finest new pianists heard in New York City in a long time." Beethoven's Thirty-two Variations, continued the reviewer, "he played with poetic insight, intellectual power, good piano tone, and much admirable finger technic," and the writer summed up his impression with the words: "a widely varied and fine demonstration of rare musical talent admirably developed."

The Herald Tribune review praised Mr. Pouishnoff, but in somewhat more reserved terms: "He is a good pianist. His style has the fluency of complete assurance; he is resourceful too." The reviewer thought also that as a musician Mr. Pouishnoff is "rather pedestrian and inclined to err on the side of correctness."

The judgment of Deems Taylor in the World was, "Mr. Pouishnoff is a well equipped pianist with a good tone, a fluent and powerful digital command, and a markedly sensitive control of dynamic gradations."

Illness Stops Recital.

Owing to an attack of influenza Emilio de Gogorza's Aeolian Hall recital scheduled for the afternoon of November 16 was indefinitely postponed.

PERSIS COX
Pianist and Teacher
Address: Pierce Building
Copley Square, Boston, Mass.
and
Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass.
Baldwin Piano Welte-Mignon Records

Little Symphony

At the second concert of George Barrere's Little Symphony Orchestra at the Henry Miller Theatre on the evening of November 16 Lewis Richards, harpsichordist, was soloist. The program of the concert comprised Schubert's Symphony in B flat, Two Miniatures of A. Walter Kramer, Bruneau's Chansons a Danser, Haydn's Harpsichord Concerto in D, and a Bach Concerto for flute and harpsichord in E flat.

The reviewer of the World spoke of the Haydn concerto as bringing "to these always fresh and stimulating concerts a haunting note of remote and old world charm." According to the Post, the Schubert Symphony "was played with precision and feeling," and "the contrasts in Bach's Sonata for flute and harpsichord were beautifully given by Messrs. Barrere and Richards."

The Times report called the program "unusually interesting," and included the opinion that of the symphony "all the movements (except the last) expressed the characteristics of precision, suavity, grace, and vivacity." The reviewer in this paper voted the Bruneau pieces "charming," found Mr. Richards in full command of his instrument, and added that in the Bach Sonata Mr. Richards' wiry precision agreed "admirably with the silvery tone of Mr. Barrere."

Miron Poliakin

Under the auspices of Stadium Concerts, Inc., Miron Poliakin, Russian violinist, one of the Stadium Audition winners of last summer, gave in Aeolian Hall on the afternoon of November 15 the recital which was part of the award offered to winners of the competitions for appearances at the Stadium concerts in New York. The Sun reports said that Mr. Poliakin "made a favorable impression upon his audience."

The Herald Tribune said that Mr. Poliakin's playing "was that of a sound, experienced musician, with a full degree of competence and agility, and a tone generally of excellent quality, although sometimes subject to thickening, and satisfactory volume and warmth." "Confidence and resource" were words used in the Times to describe Mr. Poliakin's playing, and the commentator said besides that the violinist played the Handel Sonata "with mastery and breadth, making a still greater impression of technical facility and interpretative power in the Bruch Concerto in G minor." The Sun writer found "confidence and authority" and "technical ability," but also a tone that was not always at its best in quality.

Harry Kaufman was the accompanist.

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Herbert Dittler

Herbert Dittler, member of the musical faculty of Columbia University, gave a violin recital in Aeolian Hall on the evening of November 17. In the opinion of the reviewer of the Sun, although Mr. Dittler "did not always probe the depths, he showed very clearly that he could do so in the Bach Concerto in E major, which received a reading of breadth and understanding." This observer commented on Mr. Dittler's "simple, unaffected style, which brought out most effectively the lyric character and poetic qualities of most of his offerings." Good tone, able technic, and excellent legato were also observed in this review.

The World writer called the violinist's technical command "capable," and "his style, although uneventful, decidedly pleasant." In the Herald Tribune it was reported that Mr. Dittler's playing "was that of a thorough artist, with a clear and pure tone and a technic not aiming at display, but none the less skillful."

Marie Elise Dittler was the accompanist.

Ida Deck

"A notable degree of fluent pianistic skill was exhibited" on the evening of November 13 at the Aeolian Hall recital of Ida Deck, according to the reviewer of the Herald Tribune. This was the pianist's New York debut. "As a Bach player she played with ample clarity and speed, while Beethoven's Sonata Op. 31, No. 3, showed a very well developed technique, with brilliance provoking long applause," said this writer further.

This reviewer believed that Miss Deck's playing showed "more skill than temperament," and the report in the Sun was in accord with this opinion. The Sun commentator said, "Her reading of Bach was facile, superficial and untouched by any intellectual depth or penetration. But in compositions of less exacting nature her art revealed commendable charm and a sensitive appreciation of phrasing which colored an able technique with attractive hues."

Plays Concertina in Concert

Gregory Matusewitch, player of the English concertina, gave a recital of music arranged for his instrument on the evening of November 16. He was assisted by Lillith Gorsey, soprano, and V. Samoos, accompanist. Mr. Matusewitch played on instruments of several ranges with "notable skill," according to the Times.

Dextra Male Chorus

An organization of colored vocalists, the Dextra Male Singers, conducted by William C. Elkins, appeared in concert in Town Hall on the evening of November 17. The two assisting soloists were Abbie Mitchell, soprano, and Edward Steele, blind pianist. The Sun review said, "The chorus showed the results of careful training in phrasing, shading and diction. The tone quality was characteristic and the intonation generally creditable." This writer was of the opinion that the chorus sang best in the negro spirituals.

A lack of sufficiently strong tenor quality was observed by the reviewer of the World, who added that the singers showed "good tonal quality, enthusiasm, and considerable expressiveness." The Herald Tribune report similarly commented on the "rich and sonorous volume of tone, distinct diction, and ability to bring out a cheerful or a plaintive mood." The World writer found "technical skill and finish" in the playing of Mr. Steele.

Maximilian Kerbel

Maximilian Kerbel, tenor, gave a debut recital in Town Hall on the evening of November 16. "He has a light voice of good quality, and, save some throatiness of production, used it with ease and taste in difficult airs and songs from many standard composers," said the observer of the Sun. The Times report said that Mr. Kerbel showed a high voice with the "merit of natural ease, rather than of stage cultivation or varied expression." In the Herald Tribune it was said that Mr. Kerbel's voice proved "of soft and pleasing quality, if not entirely divorced from slight tremolo." This writer also spoke of "considerable style and expressive capacity" in the singing. Isabel Sprigg was the accompanist of the recital.

Ettore Cadorin Sings

Although troubled with a bad cold, Ettore Cadorin, contralto, gave the impression of having an excellent voice, according to the reviewer of the New York Times. This writer said that there could be discerned despite the singer's indisposition "a contralto of fine color in the lower register, and, when used softly, agreeable in all its range." The reviewer continued, "Mme. Cadorin is yet to be discovered; but of her intelligent treatment of the old Italian songs and German lieder there could be no question."

FRANCES PERALTA
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
MANAGEMENT: NATIONAL CONCERTS, INC., 1451 Broadway, New York

BUZZI-PECCIA
FOUNDATION OF THE OLD ITALIAN METHOD
VOICE DICTION PERSONALITY
33 WEST 67TH STREET NEW YORK

FREEMANTEL

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Mischa Elman Quartet

Mischa Elman led his newly formed string quartet in the first of its three subscription concerts in Town Hall last Wednesday evening. Mr. Elman's associates are Edward Bachman, second violin; Nicholas Moldavan, viola; and Horace Britt, cello. Alison Smith, writing in the World, said, "They achieved a unity of expression which suggested a much more seasoned organization." The Sun also commented on the "sparkle, spirit, nuance, and finish, with good tone."

The Herald Tribune reported that Mr. Elman's playing stood out, his tone being particularly brilliant, but that nevertheless the pieces presented did not assume the air of violin solos with string accompaniment. The Times reviewer shared the enthusiasm which the concert aroused among audience and writers alike: "Under the brilliant leadership of Mr. Elman, whose all-compelling tone never lost its distinction, the Mozart Quartet in B flat received a reading that for fine nuances, exceptional charm, and melting tenderness it would be hard to equal. The minuetto and adagio were exceptionally beautiful and complete." The Post chronicler also found the Mozart "particularly charming."

Marcel Dupre

Opening his third tour in the United States, Marcel Dupre, French organist, gave a recital in the Wanamaker Auditorium, New York, last Tuesday afternoon. Two new compositions of the organist himself were on the program, his Suite Bretonne and Symphony Passion. The Sun reviewer was of the opinion that Mr. Dupre showed "his mastery of the organ" in these two compositions, and that "by his performance throughout he again proved himself an artist of rare taste and a master in the use of stops, manuals, and pedals." In the Herald Tribune Mr. Dupre's compositions were referred to as "music of a fairly modern flavor, skillfully and effectively written."

Ernest Davis

"An amiable program sung with sensitive appreciation of its mild and persuasive moods," were the words used by the World reviewer to describe the recital of Ernest Davis, tenor, in Aeolian Hall last Tuesday evening. The Herald Tribune writer said, "He had a tenor voice of notable ease and smoothness and adequate volume and expressive capacity in sustained numbers," but added that Mr. Davis had a tendency to become more forced in agitated passages. The Times report agreed with this opinion, although including the information at the same time that Mr. Davis used "a robust voice freely."

Walter Golde assisted at the piano.

Edwin Hughes

American composers were featured on the program of Edwin Hughes, pianist, in his recital at Aeolian Hall on the evening of November 16. After preliminary compositions by Beethoven and Chopin, Mr. Hughes devoted himself to works by Charles Repper, Parr Gere, Henry Cowell, Rubin Goldmark, Eugene Putnam, Homer Grunn and David Zuni. Mr. Cowell and Mr. Goldmark were present and shared the hearty applause of the audience.

The reviewers found his work up to his usual high standard and he was complimented by several of them for his novel program. The World wrote that "to the classics, as much as to these experiments, Mr. Hughes brought his accustomed portion of extreme intelligence and sensitive musicianship." He played, according to the writer in the Sun, "with his accustomed technical facility and incisive style."

Paul Whiteman's Orchestra

Attended by an audience which filled Carnegie Hall, an audience consisting of lovers of jazz, regular concert-goers, and musicians prominent in the world of composition and performance, another concert of Paul Whiteman's Orchestra took place in Carnegie Hall on the evening of November 15. The audience was demonstrative throughout.

The reviewers again commented on the skill and precision of the orchestra, which Mr. Newman in the Post called "unique in its finish." Their opinions concerning the musical significance of what the orchestra played differed, as they did after Mr. Whiteman's experimental appearances last season. Mr. Newman confessed that he is weary of jazz, but admitted that its success as music must depend upon individual composers, and not upon a system or a theory. Of George Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue, which the composer again played accompanied by the orchestra, this reviewer, said, "It is by far the most interesting thing of its kind that I have ever met with; it really has ideas."

That this work held its position "as the most interesting and promising piece of serious composition yet made in the jazz vein," was the opinion of Mr. Henderson of the Sun also. This reviewer expressed the hope that American musicians might work out the technic and destiny of jazz themselves.

The writers of the Times and Herald Tribune agreed that the Rhapsody in Blue remained the outstanding achievement of a jazz composer, and all the reviewers believed that little of importance was to be heard in the several novelties which Mr. Whiteman included in his program: Three American Musical Pieces by Eastwood Lane, two compositions by Mana Zucca, and Broadway at Night, a tone poem by Ferdie Grofe.

Geraldine Leo

Comment was unanimous among the reviewers that although she is only seventeen years old, Geraldine Leo, violinist, who made her New York debut in Town Hall last Tuesday evening, is an artist of mature temperament. The Herald Tribune report said, "She was youthful in appearance but less so in performance, which also showed a tone of commendable quality, marked, as a rule, by firmness and smoothness and a determined manner of playing." Sometimes, in the opinion of this writer, Miss Leo's tone suffered in the intricacies of Tartini's Devil's Trill Sonata, but he liked her double stops throughout the evening.

The Sun observer agreed that the violinist "disclosed a good amount of violin technic, dash, and spirit; also temperament well controlled," but felt that her harmonics could be improved, and that her "rapid passage work lacked elegance and finish." The report commented on Miss Leo's "rich ingratiating tone, and much nuance" in the slower parts of what she played, and on her "sympathy with each composer."

The World report stressed Miss Leo's "unbounded vigor and enthusiasm," and in the Times it was said, "She performed the Tartini and the Vivaldi Concerto not only with remarkable command of technic, but with an artistic appreciation of their contents, which drew continuous applause from the listeners."

Camille and Paulo Gruppe

Assisted by his wife, Camille Plasschaert Gruppe, who played the violin, Paulo Gruppe, cellist, gave a matinee recital last Tuesday in Aeolian Hall. "Both performers are of the same school in style and interpretation," said the observer of the World, and "fortunately it is a mellow and sympathetic school of careful phrasing and scrupulous regard for the shades of meaning" of the music they play. The Herald Tribune report described Mr. Gruppe's tone as "sonorous, except for some wiriness in the higher notes." This reviewer found Mrs. Gruppe's playing pleasing at best, although from time to time uncertain as to quality of tone and as to pitch. The Sun writer was of the same opinion, and considered Mr. Gruppe's playing "generally commendable."

Stefi Geyer

Stefi Geyer, violinist from Switzerland, made her New York debut in Town Hall last Tuesday afternoon, and, according to the report of the Herald Tribune, "disclosed a firm, generally smooth tone, a confident vigorous style with emphatic bowing, and a well developed, thoroughly competent technic." Walter Schulthess was Miss Geyer's accompanist.

The Times writer agreed largely with the opinion above, using the remarks "firmness and roundness of tone," "seriousness of purpose," and "high artistic aim" to describe his impression. The Sun reviewer conceded Miss Geyer's "ability and talent," although he construed her seriousness as revealing the attitude that her playing was to her "a determined duty." Aside from a technic at times "marred by coarse bowing" and harshness of attack, the Sun report concluded that her playing "was vigorous and firm, and revealed qualities worthy of praise."

To the observer of the World Miss Geyer seemed "more concerned with technical precision than with emotional content," and Mr. Peyser wrote in the Telegram-Mail that for him there was missing "the element of persuasive and distinguishing charm." The audience, judging by its response to Miss Geyer's playing, did not agree with these opinions.

Clement Haile

An American pianist, Clement Haile, who has played in the smaller cities, made his New York first appearance in Aeolian Hall last Wednesday evening. Certain qualities in his playing seemed to the observer of the Sun unusual, "his sensitive appreciation of color, his understanding of effective phrasing, and a nice regard for the significance of detail." In respect to "range and breadth of its musicianly qualities and poetic content" Mr. Haile's playing was less distinguished, the reviewer thought, and the Times reviewer spoke of his "unassuming delicacy and grace." The Herald Tribune said that Mr. Haile gave the impression of "agile technic," although the reviewer found the color of the playing sometimes "unvaried." "He played with great clarity and vigor, though with a tendency to overemphasize," said the World.

Anton BILOTTI Pianist
London Debut Recital, November 27th
Management: Lionel Powell & Holt, London, England
Steinway Piano Welte-Mignon Records Exclusively

ELSA ALSEN
Famous Wagnerian Dramatic Soprano
FIRST N. Y. RECITAL—Evening of November 25 at Aeolian Hall
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG 1425 Broadway, New York City

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

RUTH ST. DENIS with TED SHAWN and the Denishawn Dancers
Season 1924-1925 Now Booking
Pacific Coast Tour Nov. 24—Jan. 10 Already Booked
Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

"Your heart is warm and your soul mellow as you listen to his marvelous voice."—Editorial in the Oregon Journal, October 1, 1924.

CHAMLEE TRUE TENOR ARTIST—

"Chamlee may be honestly acclaimed a genuine artist and one of the great tenors of the present day."—The Portland News, September 30, 1924.

"Chamlee's art is seemingly without effort and he carries the velvet quality of his voice into his highest notes."—Portland Telegram, September 30, 1924.

"Mario Chamlee's fervent singing cast a lyric spell over last night's audience. The great tenor is a stylist and his voice, vibrant, velvety, p e r f e c t l y placed, is invariably used with the musical insight and interpretative grace of a true artist. Everything Chamlee sang was interesting." — Seattle Post-Intelligencer, October 2, 1924.

"Mario Chamlee charmed the audience with the magic of his voice, vibrant, tender, velvety-toned, the voice of a master combining in perfect accord dramatic and emotional intensity with lyric loveliness."—Seattle Times, October 2, 1924.

"Chamlee given Stockton's most rousing ovation." — Stockton Daily Record, October 9, 1924.

" 'Local boy comes home to triumph" might have been the appropriate slogan genially associated with the concert of Mario Chamlee."—Los Angeles Daily Times, October 20, 1924.

"Mario Chamlee, our own great tenor and Ruth Miller kept their audience constantly applauding at Philharmonic auditorium. Indeed there was scarcely a quiet moment between songs when hands were not in action. It was a thrilling tribute to the singers and one honestly deserved."—Carl Bronson in the Los Angeles Evening Herald, October 20, 1924.

"That Mario Chamlee has a voice of gold was decided unanimously by the audience which filled Bridges Hall of Music. Chamlee has versatility and depth of emotional interpretation."—Claremont Bulletin, October 11, 1924.

"MARIO CHAMLEE

WINS OVATION."—Los Angeles Times, October 17, 1924.

"Chamlee Wins Ovation at Bovard Recital—Mr. Chamlee is one of the finest of American singers. . . . The glorious richness of his voice, the strength and mellowness of his tones, and the wholesome sentiment of the numbers which he selects make him one of the most gratifying artists before the public today."—Los Angeles Times, October 17, 1924.

"He was received from the first with rapture that mounted with every additional number. The peculiar alternation of tumultuous applause and intense stillness which tells, as nothing else, that the singer has touched the hearts of his audience was in evidence all through."—C. Hilton-Turvey in The Morning Oregonian, Portland, Oregon, September 30, 1924.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Management:

WOLFSON MUSICAL BUREAU, INC.

250 West 57th Street, New York City

BRUNSWICK RECORDS

Philadelphia Hears Second Opera

Smallens Conducts Rigoletto; San Carlo and New York Symphony Appear.

Philadelphia, Nov. 18.—Rigoletto was the opera chosen by the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company for its second performance of the season, last Thursday. The Inquirer reviewer wrote that "the smooth performance of last evening again demonstrated the wisdom shown by the company in choosing Alexander Smallens for musical director. Not only had the cast been selected with exceptional care, but the chorus was carefully drilled, and the orchestra directed with all the fine discrimination expected from such a director." Other writers were of the same opinion.

In the North American was the assertion: "To Ivan Ivantzoff go the laurels for a splendid performance, histrionically and musically." The Record thought Tina Paggi "sang her difficult role with surprising beauty." Tom Burke was commended for his performance. The Philadelphians in the cast were the Misses Eaton, Marsh, Botwright, and Hutchinson, and the Messrs. Mason, Figaniak, Mahler, Zulinsky, Bayer, and Shay.

Last night in the same auditorium, the San Carlo Opera Company started its Philadelphia season with La Gioconda. "The principal roles," wrote the Inquirer observer, "were in the hands of experienced singers, who gave good interpretation of their respective parts." The North American found the performance characterized by "excellent singing, splendid chorus work, orchestration of a high type, artistic settings and beautiful ballets . . . combined to make a performance which promises well for the excellence of the ensuing numbers." This paper thought that "the most satisfying" work of the evening was done by Gaetano Tommasini as Enzo. The Public Ledger agreed that his work was splendid. Marie Rappold, as Gioconda, proved herself as always to the Record writer "an artist always interesting and enjoyable." Others in the cast whose work was well spoken of were: Stella de Mette, Mary Kent, Mario Basiola, and Pietro de Biasi. The Record said that the opera was conducted with fine ensemble effects and good command of his orchestra by Mr. Guerrieri.

Walter Damrosch conducting the New York Symphony Orchestra here last Thursday repeated Honegger's Pacific 231 and Debussy's L'Isle Joyeuse. Tito Schipa, as soloist, was enthusiastically applauded. The Public Ledger considered that he "has a magnificent voice and he uses it superbly . . ." Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer called his singing the "real sensation" of the program.

The critical audience was as one in admitting the interest of the Honegger work. Not all of them, however, like it. Mr. Damrosch's reading of the Franck Symphony at the opening of the program was particularly well spoken of. "An excellent reading" the Public Ledger called it, and the North American said it was "beautifully given" by the orchestra.

On the afternoon of the 14th, the Philadelphia Orchestra was heard in a program of Bach, Beethoven, Hindemith, and Strauss. Linton Martin in the North American thought that the Nusch-Nuschi dances of Hindemith suffered from being placed next to Strauss, but other writers thought better of the young German's work. The Public Ledger found in the composition "intense vigor and a very keen sense of rhythm."

Heard in recital here recently were Wanda Landowska, pianist and player of the harpsichord, who gave what was generally considered her usual brilliant performance, and Robert Imandt, young French violinist, who made an excellent impression.

Alexander Brailowsky

A series of violent contrasts on the program of Alexander Brailowsky, who made his American debut here last Wednesday, served to prove the versatility of this young Russian pianist. Liszt, Stravinsky, Moussorgsky, Schumann, and Chopin made up the varied fare he offered his warmly appreciative audience.

There was a "gripping vitality," as the Times said, in the playing of Mr. Brailowsky. He displayed, wrote the Sun reporter, "above all a brilliant touch of great magnetism which cut to the core of his offerings, revealing polyphonic patterns and musical mosaics in exquisite relief." There was enthusiasm expressed in this review also for his disclosure "of superb technic, hands and forearms of great power, and an understanding of unusual delicacy . . ." The World agreed that he had a "brilliant dextrous style" and, in spite of the fact that he seemed to miss the spirit of the Liszt, "the Chopin was sheer joy." Mr. Brailowsky's brilliant virtuosity was conceded by the Herald Tribune, but this writer said that he would have liked to have heard the pianist play something "of a profounder and more intimate sort." Of the same opinion was the Sun reviewer.

Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail thought that the pianist's "sheer power and accuracy are astonishing: and in his phrasing there speaks convincingly of his musical instincts." In spite of his brilliancy, however, Mr. Sanborn found a certain coldness which "projects nothing in the way of poetic revelation."

ALEXANDER BRAILOWSKY
Russian Pianist, Who Made His American Debut in New York Last Wednesday.

Morning Musicales

Lucrezia Bori and Ralph Errolle of the Metropolitan will be the artists appearing at the next de Segurola Musical at the Hotel Plaza tomorrow morning.

At the second of the Biltmore Morning Musicales last Friday the artists appearing were Beniamino Gigli, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera, May Korb, soprano, and Magdeleine Brard, French pianist.

To Repeat Bayreuth Repertory

Bayreuth, Nov. 16.—Next year's Wagnerian Festival will take place from July 22 to August 20. As this year, Meistersinger, Parsifal, and the Ring will again alternate. The Festival House has been undergoing alterations to perfect facilities for stage mechanism.

Celebrate Hobo Day

Sioux Falls, Nov. 10.—On the musical program of the celebration of the traditional "hobo day" at Brookins, South Dakota, on November 2, were recital appearances of Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Mabel Garrison, soprano.

Paderewski Plans Abroad

Only three concerts will be given by Ignaz Paderewski in Europe this season. They will take place after the first of the year, and will be at Geneva, Lausanne, and the Santa Cecilia in Rome.

Goossens Conducts New Hanson Work

Leads Last Rochester Concert; Coates to Resume Season in January.

Rochester, November 14.—Eugene Goossens concluded his second season with the Rochester Symphony Orchestra last night in a concert in the Eastman Theatre. The feature of his last program was Howard Hanson's poem, North and West, for chorus of sixteen voices with orchestra, heard in Rochester for the first time.

Of the Hanson composition A. J. Warner wrote in the Times, "This is a piece of music that definitely creates a mood; it is atmospheric, provocative, keenly imaginative, and has moments of rare beauty." This reviewer believed that the work is predominantly cerebral, and "ingeniously original." Harvey W. Southgate, writing in the Herald, agreed to the originality of the score which to him disclosed "freshness of thought and exalted imagination." Mr. Southgate said besides, "The music is scored with masterly detail and despite its essentially intellectual appeal, has moments of charming sentiment and real authentic athmosphere." The weirdness of the effect of the sixteen voices without words appealed to Mr. Southgate and to Mr. Warner also.

William P. Costello predicted in the Journal that the Poem has a career before it, calling it a "buoyant music, that carries along with a great sweep all the various influences the composer finds in North and West." Delius' Dance Rhapsody, Mozart's E flat Symphony and compositions by Tschaikowsky, Wagner and Berlioz completed the program.

The reviewers had only praise for the work of Mr. Goossens, whom each expressed the hope to see again next season leading the Rochester players. The grace and delicacy which he secured from the orchestra in the Mozart were praised particularly.

Albert Coates, who will conduct the orchestra during the balance of its season will arrive to commence his work in January.

Gales to Lead State Orchestra

Weston Gales, newly appointed Associate Conductor of the State Symphony Orchestra, will be conductor at the second Sunday concert on November 30.

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

EDITH MASON SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NE W YORK CITY

KOLITSCH
Management: Antonia Sawyer, Inc,. Aeolian Hall, New York

Boston Hears Recitalists

Thamar Karsavina Makes First Appearance; People's Symphony Plays Again.

Boston, Nov. 17.—An audience which made up by its enthusiasm whatever it may have lacked in size, attended the Boston debut of Thamar Karsavina, Russian dancer. In both the first performance on the 14th and the one last night, Karsavina was assisted by her dancing partner, Pierre Vladimiroff, and a small symphony orchestra conducted by Sepp Morscher. Other musical events of the week were recitals by Parish Williams, baritone, the de Reszke singers, Kathleen McAlister, Dorothy Fairbanks, and Caroline Hudson-Alexander; a concert by the People's Symphony Orchestra; and performances by the San Carlo Opera Company.

The writer in the Christian Science Monitor, L. A. S., discovered that Karsavina possessed, not only the "finished technique that was to be expected," but also "beauty of face and form, grace of movement and joyousness of expression." In her acting, he continued, "she conveyed great charm, if not deep emotional power." Philip Hale of the Herald also was particularly impressed with the dancer's beauty. In his opinion she showed herself "extremely well trained in the Russian school, not too academic, not too naturalistic." Mr. Hale thought her "especially attractive in Kreisler's waltz, in the old-fashioned Schoenbrunner waltz of Lanner's and, with her partner, in Caucasian dances and the Adagio from Sylvia."

The work of Mr. Vladimiroff was commended by most of the commentators. Mr. Hale was pleased to find him "virile, surprisingly agile for so strongly built a man, graceful, accomplished . . ." H. T. P. wrote in the Transcript that the orchestra, although small, was adequate, an opinion with which most of the other writers were in accord. The Globe reviewer reacted favorably to the "appeal to grace and movement, color and rhythm" throughout the evening's dancing.

A recital which was applauded enthusiastically was that of Parish Williams. His program, A. H. M. wrote in the Transcript, consisted of numbers "not too well known." He steered the middle and difficult course between too-familiar and too-obscure songs with remarkable success, according to the opinion shared by most of the reviewers. Secchi, Scarlatti, Donaudy, Schubert, Brahms, Richard Trunk, Duparc, Samuel-Rousseau, Debussy, Ernest Moret, Grechaninov, Dent Mowry and Malcolm Davidson made up the program. The Transcript writer characterized his voice as "rich, round and full in quality, of considerable range and power, and capable alike of dramatic intensities and lyrical smoothness . . . his diction is well above the average." His singing of Duparc's Elegy "deserved special commendation" for the "considerable warmth of long sustained tone" which the baritone brought to it. The Herald reviewer, H. H. G., said he was deserving of warm praise for his performance. "Mr. Williams has achieved his greatest triumph," wrote the chronicler, "in acquiring a distinctness of enunciation, in four languages, that can be equalled by very few singers . . . He enunciates, furthermore, in just the right way, that which makes for tonal resonance and color."

The reviews of the Christian Science Monitor and the Post agreed in substance with those quoted.

The de Reszke singers, Hardesty Johnston, Erwin Mutch, Floyd Townsley, and Sigurd Nelson, were heard in recital yesterday afternoon assisted by Mildred Dilling, harpist. Their songs revealed to Z. B. F. of the Monitor "notable purity of tone, lovely quality, excellent rhythm and ensemble that is rare enough."

The local debut of Kathleen McAlister, coloratura soprano, received numerous excellent notices in the press. According to C. S. S. of the Transcript, her lower notes "are superb, rich, full. The upper notes ring out clear and resonant . . . phrasing, diction, crescendi and decrescendi, she masters well." Mrs. McAlister's good musical style, technical facility and command of vocal color were lauded in the Monitor. The Globe considered that she sang "feelingly with unusually beautiful coloring." R. R. G. was of the opinion that the singer's personality was as charming as her voice was lovely.

Dorothy Fairbanks, soprano, drew an enthusiastic response from a large audience at her concert. The qualities particularly noted by the Transcript were "soft, clear beauty of tone, neither tense nor forced, a delicacy of interpretation," and clever shading of emotions. Mme. Hudson-Alexander, soprano, sang with "all the flexibility, the warmth of tone, the effective phrasing and shading" that the Monitor writer expected of her.

The third concert of the People's Symphony Orchestra, Stuart Mason conducting, took place yesterday afternoon. Bizet, Haydn, Converse, Boellmann and Mendelssohn made up the program. Georges Miquelle, violoncellist, was soloist, and, to quote the Monitor, "played with his customary skill and finish." The Herald said: "Under the baton of Mr. Mason, a conductor of authority and precision, the orchestra played with admirable spirit, and even a certain finesse."

The San Carlo Opera Company continued its season here with Carmen on November 10, Butterfly on the 13th, and Tosca on the 14th. The press comment has been almost uniformly laudatory of the San Carlo performances.

Chicago Opera Bill

TONIGHT

Cavalleria Rusticana—with Mmes. Raisa and Perini; and Messrs. Piccaver and Defrere; Mr. Cimini conducting.
Pagliacci—with Mme. McCormick; and Messrs. Ansseau, Formichi, and Stanbury; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

TOMORROW

Pearl Fishers—with Mme. Pareto; and Messrs. Hackett, Rimini, and Cotreuil; Mr. Polacco conducting.

THURSDAY

Tannhauser—with Mmes. Forrai and Van Gordon; and Messrs. Lamont, Schwarz, and Kipnis; Mr. Weber conducting.

FRIDAY

Werther (revival)—with Mmes. Garden and Freund (debut); and Messrs. Ansseau and Kipnis; Mr. Polacco conducting.

SATURDAY

Tosca (matinee)—with Mme. Muzio; and Messrs. Piccaver and Stabile; with Mr. Moranzoni conducting.
Rigoletto (evening)—with Mmes. Macbeth; and Messrs. Hackett and Schwarz; Mr. Polacco conducting.

Heifetz in First New York Recital

Violinist Forced to Add More Encores Than Scheduled Numbers.

Jascha Heifetz gave his first recital of the season at Carnegie Hall on November 15. The audience that greeted him was large and extremely cordial. Mr. Heifetz was compelled to play more encores than there were numbers scheduled on his program. With his "familiar facile brilliance of style and his smooth and pellucid tone," as the World phrased it, the violinist played a program which included Saint-Saens, Paganini, Dont-Achron, Cyril Scott and Sarasate. The accompanist was Isidor Achron.

The Herald Tribune thought the performance "of his normal remarkable standard, with a tone and ability for dazzling fireworks of a deceptively apparent ease that has been often and enthusiastically noted before." Equally enthusiastic was the Sun reviewer who wrote: "Mr. Heifetz played with all his accustomed polish and style . . . the purity of his style, his very great technical powers, and all the familiar assets of his art were presented in their usual excellence and vigor." This same quality of apparently effortless technical perfection was the subject of comment in other reviews. The Times considered "the perfect poise of his playing—a breathless calm it seemed at times—again gave pleasure to admirers of highest technical beauty."

MARIE TIFFANY

SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON

Fisk Building, New York — Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia

Brunswick Records

LOUIS GRAVEURE

Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

The Washington Heights Musical Club

JANE R. CATHCART, Founder President

AEOLIAN HALL, Tuesday Evening, Dec. 2, '24, at 8.15 o'clock

Concert by

MICHAEL ANSELMO, Violinist

REGINA KAHL, Dramatic Soprano

VIRGINIA RUGGIERO, Pianist

Accompanist for Mr. Anselmo and Miss Kahl: Evelyn Crawford

Programme

1. Rondo Capriccioso, Opus 14 ..... Mendelssohn
2. May Night ..... Palmgren
3. Valse, "A la Bien Aimee" ..... Schutt

VIRGINIA RUGGIERO

II.

1. Notte ..... Ottorino Respighi
2. Nebbie ..... Ottorino Respighi
3. Poesie persiane ..... Francesco Santoliquido
4. "Ninna Nanna" ..... Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco
5. Bozzetti lirici ..... Giulia Reci
   a. Canta il viandante nella notte
   b. Notte di neve
   c. Calma di mare
   d. Canto di mare

REGINA KAHL

III.

1. Nocturne, E flat ..... Chopin-Sarasate
2. Spanish Dance ..... Granados-Kreisler
3. Tarantelle ..... Wieniawski

MICHAEL ANSELMO

IV.

1. Nocturne, F sharp major ..... Chopin
2. Waltz, C sharp minor ..... Chopin
3. Scherzo, B flat minor ..... Chopin

VIRGINIA RUGGIERO

V

1. Honeysuckle ..... Elizabeth Harbinson David
2. Hesperus ..... Alma Goatley
3. A Benediction ..... Alma Goatley
4. Dawn Song ..... Elliott Griffis
5. Heart'sease ..... John Powell
6. Resurrection ..... David Guion
7. Song of the Open ..... Frank LaForge
8. The Poet Sings ..... Wintter Watts

REGINA KAHL

Mr. Anselmo and Miss Ruggiero use Steinway Piano
Miss Kahl uses Mason and Hamlin Piano

Toti dal Monte in Second Appearance

Sings Gilda in Rigoletto; Josef Schwarz Takes Title Role.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—There was some difference of opinion as to the effect of Toti dal Monte's second appearance of the season in Rigoletto last evening. Edward Moore of the Tribune was of the opinion that Mme. dal Monte repeated her triumph as Lucia. In her second role as Gilda she "aroused high admiration for her clean, finished workmanship in the manufacture of trills and high notes. . . ." On the other hand, Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner found the art of Mme. dal Monte "disclosed in a less favorable light. . . . this voice, with its perfect agility and its delightfully fresh and youthful quality, becomes a bit hard and over-brilliant when the dramatic interest of the moment demands that she exert its full power."

Joseph Schwarz was a "superb Rigoletto," wrote Mr. Gunn; "considered as song alone, his art is always satisfying." Mr. Moore was pleased with the versatility and ability he displayed in the role. The writer thought Charles Hackett "vocally and personally decorative."

Both Mr. Moore and Mr. Hackett felt that Mr. Polacco conducted with his usual excellence. "Like the expert man of the theatre that he is," wrote Mr. Moore, "he did wonders in brightening faded orchestrations and restoring antique tunes."

State Symphony Orchestra

In commemoration of the birthday of Friederich Smetana, an all-Bohemian program was played by the State Symphony Orchestra at their concert, conducted by Josef Stransky, at the Metropolitan Opera House, November 16. The consensus of critical opinion was, as the Post expressed it, that Mr. Stransky "was evidently happy with Czech music under his baton and the orchestra caught the inspiration." To the Smetana compositions, the conductor "added the sentimental values of his own that seemed indicated by the occasion," wrote the World observer. The writer in the Herald Tribune considered that Dvorak's New World Symphony "had an expressive, generally well played performance." Even more laudatory was the Sun: "Their (the orchestra) unity and tonal brillance were praiseworthy, and Mr. Stransky, quite at home in congenial surroundings, conducted convincing and admirably well wrought readings of Smetana's poems."

This was the first concert of the series of eight Sunday matinees, and an unusually large audience attended.

Francis Rogers
Concert Baritone and Teacher of Singing
Member American Academy of Teachers of Singing
144 East 62d St., New York City

Hinshaw Presents Figaro in New York

Mozart Opera Sung in English Under Music School Settlement Auspices.

Under the auspices of the Music School Settlement William Wade Hinshaw presented at Carnegie Hall on November 14 Mozart's Marriage of Figaro in an English version by H. O. Osgood. Ernest Knoch conducted, and gave, according to the World, "a skillful and polished performance." In the cast were Paval Ludikar, Clytie Hine, Editha Fleischer, Alfredo Valenti, Ralph Brainerd and Celia Turrill.

After some trouble in getting started, wrote the Herald Tribune chronicler, "it was a distinctly successful performance." Except in the occasional dialogues, the Post reviewer did not find the English particularly intelligible, "but the opera was well sung and acted with delicacy and charm." The members of the cast were lauded for their contributions to the success of the evening. Mr. Valenti was given the "palm" for his distinct enunciation by the Herald Tribune writer; Paval Ludikar was a "zestful" Figaro; Celia Turrill, "a properly youthful Cherubino, did very well with the aria, Voi che sapete, and doubled her success as the much older Marcelline;" and Editha Fleischer displayed "agreeable vivacity." The Times considered Clytie Hine a "distinguished" Countess Rosina.

The costuming and stage settings were applauded by all the reviewers. "Simply but effectively staged," commented the Sun, "with admirable costumes by Ethel Fox, Mr. Hinshaw's new production deserves success." The Times asserted that the opera "was brilliantly costumed," while the Herald Tribune found the settings and costumes "excellent." Mr. Osgood's translation also came in for a large share of commendation. The World called his translation "deft and imaginative," and the Herald Tribune said that "his words were happily wedded to the music."

Mme. Clemens in Fourth Recital

A program of Scandinavian and Finnish Songs together with two Brahms groups was presented by Clara Clemens, soprano, in the fourth recital of her historical series in Town Hall on the afternoon of November 17.

STEFI GEYER
Swiss Violinist, Who Made Her New York Debut Last Tuesday in Town Hall.

Another Opera Box in Sale

Following the purchase of the Henry Clay Frick box in the parterre row at the Metropolitan Opera House by Judge Elbert H. Gary, has come the announcement that Henry Walters, chairman of the board of the Atlantic Coast Line and interested in many other corporations, has bought a half interest in the box owned by the Luther Kountze estate. The price was not revealed.

New Composition Prize Offered

A number of new prizes for original compositions by American citizens resident in Ohio have just been announced by the Ohio Federation of Music Clubs. The four awards will be given for a violin solo, and a capella anthem for chorus of mixed voices, a song, and a piece for piano. Mrs. Walter D. Crebs, Dayton, O., is in charge of the contest, which will close on March 1, 1925.

Elshuco Players Open Brahms Cycle

Members of the South Mountain Festival Quartet Assist in Chamber Music Concert.

The first of a series of eight concerts which will present the twenty-four chamber compositions of Johannes Brahms was given by the Elshuco Trio on the evening of November 14 in Aeolian Hall, New York. The members of the Trio are being assisted in their cycle by the players of the South Moutain Festival Quartet. Those who took part in the first concert were William Kroll and Karl Kraueter, violinists; Hugo Kortschak, violist; William Willeke, cellist, and Aurelio Giorni, pianist. The program consisted of the Piano Quartet in C minor, Op. 60; the String Quartet in B flat major, Op. 67; and the Piano Trio in C major, Op. 87.

"The playing of all the numbers," wrote W. J. Henderson in the Sun, "was marked by feeling and sound musicianship, and the audience signified its pleasure by plentiful applause." The Times writer agreed that the "performances gave more than ordinary pleasure because of their zest and intelligence." The commentators of the Herald Tribune and of the Telegram-Mail were inclined to qualify their approval. The latter said, "The Elshuco Trio we all know as an admirable association of ensemble players. But the amalgamated quartet, though delightful in its enthusiasm and energy, was not conspicuous for the finer virtues of instrumental team work." The former reviewer found "plenty of life, but not complete smoothness" in the playing of the piano quartet, but commented on the "smoother, more fused" treatment of the string quartet.

The reviewers were agreed that a cycle of eight concerts of Brahms chamber music was a hazardous undertaking, but there was a considerable audience.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

ABBY MORRISON
SOPRANO SAN CARLO GRAND OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON, 1451 Broadway, New York City

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

The Cleveland Institute of Music
A MODERN LABORATORY SCHOOL
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
The Institute carries pupils from the initial steps in musical training through the most advanced grades.
Rhythm, Ear-Training, Solfege, play an important part in the foundation lessons.
Orchestral Training, Composition, Pedagogy, Accompany ing, under master instruction, are offered advanced students.
Write for catalogue on regular instrumental and vocal courses
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

ALBERT SPALDING Celebrated Violinist

TAKES HIS PLACE AS COMPOSER

"Mr. Spalding has admirably avoided the influence of others. His quartet is written with great sincerity and, of course, complete command of the resources of stringed instruments."

—Deems Taylor in the World, New York, Nov. 12, 1924.

"The Spalding piece offered an interesting departure now and then in rhythmic invectiveness."

—The New York Evening Post, Nov. 12, 1924.

"Mr. Spalding is no 'prenticed hand at composition."

"His manner of speech has certain traits that one might almost identify—a delicate pungency, a rich and quiet humor. There are passages in the second movement and in the final Allegro of his quartet that were imagined and shaped by his own spirit and his own wit. There are some iridescent effects of color, melting and glamorous, in his slow movement, that suggest an individual palette."

—Lawrence Gilman, in the New York Tribune, Nov. 12, 1924.

"Albert Spalding's quartet in E minor opus 10 in manuscript was on the program the Flonzaley Quartet gave at Aeolian Hall on the evening of November 11. The work seemed to be composed in the very mood of seriousness in which Spalding's violin playing is conceived. It discloses individuality of purpose from the first note sounded and yet it did not completely reveal its purpose until the close. Not that the writer's intentions, at the beginning, lacked clearness or decision, they simply demanded the entire scope of the four movement form to declare themselves. Or, to put the idea in an another way, the quartet, as played, grew in interest as it proceeded. Although the first three movements had strength and warmth in fair measure, the final movement possessed the greatest energy and the deepest feeling of all. Spalding in this work gives a hint of a fresh harmonic atmosphere. Look out for the composer who does that. He may turn out to be the kind that says original things."

—The Christian Science Monitor, Nov. 13, 1924.

"Albert Spalding's New Work in E Minor Is Heard by Large Audience"

"The Flonzaley Quartet's first concert which took place last evening in Aeolian Hall invited the attention of a large audience to a new composition by a resident of this city. The work was Albert Spalding's quartet in E minor, opus 10, not yet published. It was the second number on the program, placed between Beethoven's quartet in B flat, opus 18, No. 6, and Schubert's D minor quartet. Among such high gods may mere mortals move on art's Olympus."

"Mr. Spalding is orthodox in form in his new work. There is an allegro, a scherzando (further defined as "burlesca") and andante con moto, and a final allegro with an introduction. The first movement is in the time honored first movement form of the classics, albeit the working out is very concise and the extensions of the two principal themes effected chiefly by melodic means. There is a coda which is a very important feature of the movement."

"In this section of the quartet the composer has proclaimed himself a conservative modern. He utilizes harmonies of the latest mode, but without dispensing with fundamental key relationship and logical harmonic progressions. He does not venture into the hazardous realm of polytonality or that of atonality. But he contrives to sound very like a Frenchman. The scherzando is most ingenious in instrumental solo device and in its employment of piquant figures calling for rapid staccato bowing."

"The andante proceeds along the variation path, which Mr. Spalding treads with confidence and technical skill. The finale is the least easily digested of the four movements at a first hearing. As a whole the Quartet made a favorable impression. It is first of all things a work to command serious consideration. It is the creation of a musician of ability and sincerity. It gives plentiful opportunity to all the instruments to say something. Even the second violin has an important and admirable solo, under which the first violin supplies an arpeggiated figure."

"There are suggestions of Russian origin in some of the themes, but the general character of the work is affected by the present trend of musical art in France. There is no small measure of originality in the developments of the thematic matter, and above all, the quartet is musical even in that part of it which makes one thing that the composer desired to transfer to strings, the private stopped trumpet of the incomparable Petruckka."

"Mr. Spalding's Quartet will, of course, have to battle for recognition. It is American and it cannot summon reclame to its aid. The members of the Flonzaley Quartet deserved the thanks of music lovers for producing the work. A dignified piece of chamber music is an honorable addition to the native repertory and Mr. Spalding has increased his artistic stature by this composition. It was played with the Flonzaley Quartet's customary warmth, precision and balance, and more than that, with every evidence of enthusiasm. It was well received by —W. J. Henderson in The New York Sun, November 12, 1924.

"Mr. Spalding's composition, very seriously written, and in a manner generally idiomatic for the instruments, betrays modern influences. Debussy is present, also harmonic elements of Italy and France of to-day. The best of the four movements seemed to be the andante. Upon this theme, Mr. Spalding weaves free and colorful variations. His finale is lively. His idiom is less personal than sophiticated. The writing is ingeniously effective for the strings."

—Olin Downes in the New York Times, November 12, 1924.

"This quartet of his shows that we have all been underestimating him; perhaps excusably but none the less too airily. For this new music is of an amazingly solid facture, full of purpose, and it moves with a certainty that almost convinces you he must have been writing quartets all his life. There is thought and feeling in the music, and both fancy and imagination. The slow movement held genuine beauty, not only of workmanship but of feeling."

—Irving Weil in the New York Evening Journal, November 12, 1924.

"The scherzo is delightful. It has humor, a rather aristocratic and restrained wit, but typical of the composer, and, I like to believe, of his race."

—Glenn Dillard Gunn in the Chicago Herald and Examiner, Nov. 17, 1924.

"I was glad to be there for their performance of a composition by a compatriot of whom I have always been an admirer, our own Albert Spalding. It is a quartette in E minor, opus 10, in manuscript, and wears all the traits that characterize Spalding's own art—refinement, grace, elegance. The Scherzando is touched with hints of American humor, but for the most part the quartet reflects the atmosphere of the French school, which is not depreciative comment."

—Herman Devries in the Chicago American, November 17, 1924.

Management

WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU

250 West 57th Street New York City

STEINWAY PIANO EDISON RECORDS

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Leginska Leads London Symphony

Introduces Own Compositions; Cortot Is Soloist With Queen's Hall Orchestra.

London.

Ethel Leginska's debut as a conductor in Germany was recently reported, and now her first appearance leading an orchestra in London has taken place. This concert (November 5) was notable too for bringing here for the first time two of the pianist's orchestral compositions—Poems after Tagore.

The verdicts were not wholly favorable. The Observer critic writes: "A doubt that now arises is as to whether Leginska wishes us to look upon her as a pianist who composes and conducts, a composer who conducts and plays the piano, or a conductor who plays the piano and composes. I am inclined to class her as a pianist who conducts and composes. The playing is musicianly, the conducting is on the way to become competent, and the composition, though technically accomplished, will never, according to my expectations, become much more than that." He compares her "freedom" and "aptness" of movement favorably with the usual "angularity" of women conductors, and concludes that "she wants only a more ample experience to do well at the job."

The Telegraph, too, commended Miss Leginska's "freedom" of gesture. Although the Post concedes "that her style has been formed on a very good model," the Times says flatly that "her conducting is that of an amateur." A large audience, however, was moved to warm applause at the close of each number on the program. The orchestra Miss Leginska chose for her appearance was the London Symphony.

Cortot With Orchestra

At the weekly Queen's Hall Symphony concert, Alfred Cortot was soloist. "His gentlemanly dealings with the Liszt E flat Concerto relieved us of some anxiety," records the Observer writer. "This work, meretricious in itself, so often is a cause of meretriciousness in its players: it generally brings out the worst that is in them. Upon M. Cortot its wiles were spent in vain; he was urbane, firm, conscientious, entirely unoffensive, and all the more effective because of these restraints—brilliant, even, as far as his dull-natured piano would allow."

The third symphonic event of the week was the last appearance of Albert Coates before his forthcoming visits to Spain and the United States at a regular concert of the London Symphony Orchestra, which he led through an all-Wagner program, with the assistance of Florence Austral and Tudor Davies, much to the satisfaction of critics and audience.

In chamber music, the most notable event of the week probably was the opening for this season of the Gerald Cooper Chamber Concerts at the Aeolian Hall on November 7. The Sunday Times critic reminds us that "Mr. Cooper has taught us to look for an excellent discretion in the selection of material and the highest standard of execution at musical enterprises connected with his name." And the Observer remarks that this series is "one of the most genuinely interesting for the present season." The Times continues that "At the first of his chamber concerts, when Schubert was honored (Der Tod und das Maedchen quartet, the Quintet in C, Op. 163, and songs), all hopes were again fulfilled." The tenor John Goss and the Catterall String Quartet shared equally in the commendation bestowed on the program.

A Delius Program

Another important event was an afternoon devoted entirely to the work of Frederick Delius—chamber music and songs—which is supposed to be the first all-Delius program offered in London. It is taken as evidence of a growing interest in a composer whom many critics are inclined to rank with the greatest of living English musicians. Guilhermina Suggia, whose name occurs so often as a symphonic or festival soloist, began a series of three cello and pianoforte recitals with the assistance of a new pianist, Senor Vianna da Motta, who will himself give a recital later on in the months. A favorable opinion has already been passed concerning his musicianship.

Four repeat recitals were of sufficient importance to merit mention in closing: Messrs. Dohnanyi and Rummel gave pianoforte programs which—to go by the consensus of critics—revealed both the virtues and their defects of the artists concerned, but were none the less interesting for that; Dame Clara Butt filled the Albert Hall for a Sunday "pop"; and the Lener Quartet, in a second concert, this time devoted to two posthumous Beethoven works increased the esteem in which they are held here. "Ensemble playing withholds few secrets from these sensitive players," said Mr. Scholes in his critique.

Finally, the second week of the Old Vic's opera season brought forth Faust for the enjoyment of a large Saturday evening audience of working people on the South Side.

P. L.

ETHEL LEGINSKA
Pianist and Composer, Appeared as Conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra Early This Month.

Italian Notes

Milan.

The many rumors concerning the program of La Scala for this season were well founded, for the official announcement by that organization of its intentions for the year bear out the advance reports. All Milan is posted now with the information that the following new operas will be presented at La Scala: La Cena delle Beffe, of Giordano; I Cavalieri di Ekebu, of Zandonai; Turandot, of Puccini; Il Diavolo nel Campanile, of Lualdi.

Another smaller novelty certain to be given is Alfredo Casella's Il Convento Veneziano, a ballet composed to the book of Vandoyer.

Besides the novelties about eighteen operas will be chosen for performance this season again from the fixed La Scala repertory. They will be chosen from the following: Nerone, Falstaff, Mefistofele, Rigoletto, Aida, Traviata, Lohengrin, Tristano e Isotta, Meistersinger, Manon Lescaut, Boheme, Gianni Schichi, Boris Godunoff, Salome, Orfeo, Iris, Louise, Andrea Chenier, Wally, Lucia, Sonnambula, Barbiere di Siviglia, I Quattro Rustegli, Carmen, Debora and Jaele, L'Oro del Reno, Valkyries, Trovatore, Le Donne Curiose, Hansel and Gretel, Pelleas and Melisande.

The autumn season of the Dal Verme closed with the performance of Pedrollo's L'Uomo che Ride.

On the last day of October a season of opera commenced at the Quirino in Rome. Massenet's Manon was the first attraction.

F. C.

ANNE ROSELLE
PRIMA DONNA SOPRANO
Exclusive Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall New York City

FLORENCE EASTON
SOPRANO, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
BRUNSWICK RECORDS EXCLUSIVELY
MANAGEMENT: HAENSEL AND JONES—AEOLIAN HALL, N. Y.

OVER 100 RECITALS BOOKED for
SEASON 1924—1925
MARCEL DUPRE
FAMOUS FRENCH ORGANIST
and
CHARLES M. COURBOIN
FAMOUS BELGIAN-AMERICAN ORGANIST
REMAINING DATES BOOKING RAPIDLY
Exclusive Management:
EAST OF THE MISSISSIPPI
Apply to
Alexander Russell
Wanamaker Auditorium
New York City, N. Y.
WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI AND CANADA
Apply to
Bernard Laberge
70 St. James St.
Montreal, Canada

FLORA
GREENFIELD
SOPRANO
Management ERNEST HENKEL, 1451 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Bryant 3352 KNABE PIANO

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

FRANK PARKER, formerly of Chicago, now head of the vocal department of the Utica Conservatory of Music, director of the music at the Park Baptist Church, and conductor of the Lyric Club of Utica, has been engaged as director of the Choral Society of Sherrill, N. Y. Mr. Parker begins his work with the chorus December 1.

The Music Department of Bay City Community Service has arranged a community concert course for the season of 1924-25. Season tickets cost one dollar for the five concerts and have been limited to eight hundred. Admission to a single concert is fifty cents for school children and one dollar for adults. At the community music round table of the recent National Recreation Congress in Atlantic City, Charles G. Tingle of Bay City said: "We have found concerts by outside talent to be one of the best ways of stimulating interest in our own community musical activities."

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hageman entertained at their studio residence, 257 West Eighty-sixth street, New York City, at a tea on Sunday afternoon, November 9, from five to seven. Many friends prominent in the musical world were present. Felix Salmond, cellist, played several numbers with Mr. Hageman at the piano.

A feature of the curriculum of the American Conservatory in Chicago is the musical history course on Saturday afternoons. There one hundred and twenty-five students enrolled in the class.

A song recital was given recently at the Utica Conservatory of Music by Annie Hitzelberger, soprano, and Clara Wenner, pianist. Alice Newman was accompanist for Miss Hitzelberger.

The Music School Settlement of New York City, located in the heart of the East Side is challenging the city to contribute a nickel for every nickel it collects in their campaign to raise funds for the maintenance of the Settlement. Many children have had to be turned away from the school this year because of the lack of sufficient funds to train them.

The Music School Settlement, organized thirty years ago, the mother settlement, has never been prosperous and this year faces a deficit of $20,000. The vocal department is under the supervision of Marcella Sembrich, the cello department under Pablo Casals, and the piano department under Ernest Schelling, who are members of the school board, although they do no personal teaching.

The New York State contest for young artists will be held in New York City during the latter half of February. This is the preliminary contest for the Liberty District contest to be held in May. The Liberty District embraces New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Winners in this district will be privileged to enter the Sixth Biennial National Contest in June at Portland, Ore.

The contests are open to young professional artists in voice (men and women), violin and piano. The purpose of these contests is the stimulation of artistic ability by competition; to furnish in part an outlet for the young musicians we are developing in this country by prizes, public appearances, as well as to demonstrate the interest and sympathy of the entire National Federation of Music Clubs in the young American artist.

Etta Hamilton Morris, first vice president of Music Clubs, is chairman of the contest for New York State.

John Loring Cook, teacher of voice, announces the twenty-fifth season of his work in Chicago as vocal coach, manager of his agency and director of his own school of music in Kimball Hall, Chicago. Maria Gerdes-Testa, pianist; William Konrad, violinist; Maybelle Crockett Dodds, soprano and teacher of piano; Dean S. Remick, pianist; Ostella Bouche McCord, soprano and pianist, and Rita Smith, teacher of dramatic art, will be among the faculty members.

A course in the appreciation of music, consisting of five lecture-recitals and five illustrative concerts, will be given in the Community Auditorium by Herman Epstein, pianist. The first lecture-recital, which will be held tomorrow night, will be concerned with Music Forms, and Mr. Epstein will play compositions of Beethoven, Mozart, Chopin, Schumann and others to illustrate.

The other concerts will be on November 26, December 10, December 23, January 28, February 11, February 25, March 11 and March 25.

HARRY ANIK
Student of Clarence Adler, Made His New York Debut in Town Hall on November 12.

The following editorial appeared in the Florida Times-Union, Jacksonvilla, Florida, on October 4, under the head, Aims of Music Students:

"At this time of the year especially the ambitious young person is turned to thoughts of a career and with a fair percentage of the whole the idea is for success in music. The Musical Digest, which is now well established as the standard in concise and dependable information regarding music and musicians, is also doing a good part to help along with criticism and comment, and suggests to the aspiring mind an analysis of conditions and possibilities.

" 'The throb of deep music yearning within the human breast seems a vigorous urge,' says the Digest. 'Where it exists hope gives way all too often before reason. Burning desire for a professional music career appears frequently to dull analytical sense . . . now and again to good purpose, though in strict truth, rarely.' The advice offered by the Digest is for music students to 'take stock' occasionally and determine through actual calculation, what chance there is of becoming a 'star.' The opportunity is strictly limited, and there should not be so much wasted effort in seeking the unattainable.

"This in no measure, however, should restrain the ambition to become proficient in music. There is room—even urgent need—in every community for musicians and singers and the town, village, city or neighborhood is the better for the presence of accomplished musicians. With all the competition of the rather newly-adopted attractions of the schoolgirl complexion, carefully applied before going out, the bobbed curls and the fascinations of fashionable apparel, the girl or young woman who can play on the piano or violin or sing, is never lonesome.

"Music has its place in every part of the civilized world; it is found among the uncivilized and serves a purpose although not perfectly understandable to the more advanced peoples. Music is desirable and needed in a thousand ways; it is demanded on many occasions and welcomed in all. The fairly competent pianist is an addition to any gathering. The trained vocalist never fails to get a hearing, and is more apt to be overworked than idle.

"Music as a profession is found to be a fairly well-paying proposition, although the extent of income from such sources is limited by the size and the ability to pay in the home town. It is good to know music. The instructor who furnishes the key to music-land is a benefactor; the recipients are usually glad and their accomplishment adds to the pleasure of many. It is a worth while study, even though not a great many music students may become stars."

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

EMILIO ROXAS VOCAL COACH
Studio: 2231 Broadway, N. Y. C. Phone: Endicott 6306
Coach and Accompanist to MARTINELLI for six years

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

V. TREVISAN Chicago Civic Opera Association
VOCAL STUDIO 74 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

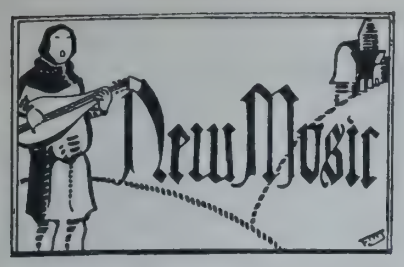
Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

ARTHUR J. HUBBARD — VINCENT V. HUBBARD
Teachers of Singing in All Its Branches
246 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON, MASS.

VOCAL ART-SCIENCE STUDIO ANITA MASON WOOLSON
Endorsed by Dr. Frank E. Miller 125 East 37th Street
Founder of Vocal Art-Science N. E. Corner Lexington Ave.
New York City
Telephone Murray Hill 0991

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS



EFREM ZIMBALIST'S tour of the Orient already has been productive of at least one concrete remembrance. G. Schirmer has just issued his Improvisation on a Japanese Theme, for violin and piano. Just how Japanese the theme is it is difficult to say, but it has pronounced Oriental flavor. The treatment is quite Occidental. Combining the smooth model melody with a sharp and interesting rhythmic figure, Mr. Zimbalist has done most of his improvising in the piano part, which, in the development becomes more and more complex, with original harmonic color and rhythmic vigor, while the violin lifts the theme, not much altered, into higher ranges to emphasize the effect of climax.

Just as skillfully as he builds up his piece, Mr. Zimbalist is able to reduce it, and the composition ends pleasingly quiet in mood with the violin repeating the theme "a piacere" over a sustained chord in the piano part. The piece is not easy to play, either for pianist, who has at least as important a role as the violinist, or for the latter. Mr. Zimbalist will doubtless prove its fitness for the concert stage without delay.

H. Balfour Gardiner's Noel is among the recent publications of G. Schirmer. It is a composition of good round melodies, the theme of Good King Wenceslas being particularly effective. It is not too difficult for the medium student of the piano to handle comfortably.

Many new items of interest to singers are on the new Schirmer lists. My Love in Her Attire, by Frederic Ayres, for medium voice, is an amourous ballad, but it keeps moving with light accompaniment, and avoids the pitfall of sentimentality. Mana-Zucca's Fluttering Birds, her Opus 88, is a song for soprano. The voice part reaches a high B flat several times, and calls for trills on the F, turns, and staccato, which give charmingly the light and lively effect for which the text calls.

Alice Barnett's Chanson of the Bells of Oseney is arranged for either medium or high tessitura. The chime and tinkle of bells is suggested by the composer in the broad swing of his rhythm and the richness of his harmony. A chromatic color somewhat unconventional makes the chime effect much removed from the commonplace.

Among the latest choral issues of the various publishers is Alfred Mistowski's Who Would Be a Merman Bold (J. & W. Chester, London). It is arranged for three female voices without accompaniment. The same composer's Ode to Loreto is composed for three-part female choir.

Frances Peralta, soprano, made her reappearance this season at the New York Metropolitan Opera, singing Elena in Boito's Mefistofele.

IT HAS long been controversial whether music has any healing effect, either moral or physical. The subject is taken up anew in a small book by Willem van de Wall, The Utilization of Music in Prisons and Mental Hospitals, wherein is discussed the application of music in the treatment and care of the morally and mentally afflicted. Mr. van de Wall is the director of the Committee for the Study of Music which for three years has carried on research for the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music.

From his experience during three years of study Mr. van de Wall has constructed great faith in the curing power of music. He does not claim that it is a cure-all, but simply that it is a very necessary detail in the work of salvage of the morally and mentally sick.

In the first part of his book the author tells of some of his experiences in correctional institutions, for boys, men, or women. In every case the story is the same: sullen dispositions, drab surroundings, all relieved by the introduction of musical activities. Mr. van de Wall starts with the premise that music brings out the finer emotions of the listener. He proceeds, however, more with a demonstration of the efficacy of musical organization in catching the interest of even the hardiest of criminals. His descriptions of the quickness with which persons in penal and health institutions took to glee clubs, orchestras, and dancing classes which he organized may be indication simply of the necessity of "extra-curricular" activities.

In the second half of Mr. van de Wall's little book are to be found more concrete evidences of the therapeutic effectiveness of music. He offers authentic anecdotes of persons with nervous illnesses alleviated and made normal by exposure to plenty of music. Not the least of the helpfulness of music grows out of its tendency to promote co-operation among patients, and out of its efficacy in using up the excess nervous energy which otherwise would be applied destructively.

Mr. van de Wall's book has no fixed thesis, although he is convinced that music can be an effective moral and mental healer. Rather he has gathered together many notes of his experiences, and lets them speak for themselves, while he is occupied with further experience, research, and study.

Early Italian Songs and Airs

Volume Two Now Ready

Transcribed and edited by
PIETRO FLORIDIA

(Two Volumes)
Volume Two (Forty Songs)

PUBLISHED IN TWO EDITIONS

FOR HIGH VOICE FOR LOW VOICE

PRICES:

Each volume in heavy paper, cloth back..... $2.50 Net
Each volume in full cloth, gilt..... 3.50 Net

Postage extra except in first and second zones from Boston and New York.

In this volume of The Musicians Library the editor completes his collection of early Italian masterpieces, and brings them forward to the beginning of the nineteenth century when the great school of song melodists yielded to the rise and predominance of modern Italian opera. The names of Scarlatti and Stradella are represented, together with many others less known but of imperishable value; and in the richly colored but appropriate harmonic dress Mr. Floridia has given them these songs are indeed a splendid harvest of beauty.

Send for our booklet about Progressive Holiday Giving. It is free.

Oliver Ditson Company 178-179 Tremont St., Boston 10
Chas. H. Ditson & Co. 8-10-12 East 34th St., New York

Order of your local dealer

J. HENRI BOVE
FLUTE SOLOIST
Recitals and Obligatos
191 Claremont Ave. New York
Phone—Morningside 4595

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. Telephone
New York City Circle 8815

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

Oratorio Society Sings Holst Work

Stoessel Conducts Brahms Requiem and Premiere of Hymn of Jesus.

Gustave Holsts's Hymn of Jesus was heard for the first time in New York at the first concert of the season of the Oratorio Society at Carnegie Hall last Wednesday evening. Albert Stoessel, conductor of the society, directed the performance.

The interest and importance of the composition were generally conceded by the reviewers. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, although admitting the technical and imaginative skill of the composer, thought the dance portions of the hymn "pretentious pompousness." Among the more enthusiastic writers was W. J. Henderson of the Sun. He found the work "graphic and dramatically eloquent" with effects "often hauntingly beautiful." In the main Olin Downes of the Times was inclined to agree with Mr. Henderson although he found that his interest flagged after the first part of the work. The opening he felt was "of rare beauty and impressiveness" and created the atmosphere "half pagan and half mystic" demanded by the text. Mr. Henderson continued in praise of the writing for voices which "shows skill and there is mastership in the distribution of dynamics between voices and orchestra."

Opposed to this view was Ernest Newman of the Post who said that the chief fault with the work was that it was written for a perfect chorus—rather than a chorus of human voices. The conception throughout, he felt, "is a fine one." Deems Taylor of the World was one who, although admitting the technical command of the piece, found it "generally unconvincing and even dull work." He wrote that the chorus "sang with energy and expressiveness, but did not always sound in tune." Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune considered the performance an effective one and complimented Mr. Stoessel for his "enthusism, musicianship and authority."

The Brahms Requiem was the other number offered. Boris Saslawsky, baritone, and Ethyl Hayden, soprano, were the soloists. Both received commendatory notices. Mr. Downes thought Mr. Saslawsky "sang with marked intelligence, and Ethyl Hayden sang a small but difficult part with excellent vocalism and musicianship."

Otto H. Kahn Encourages Composition of Jazz Opera

A REPORT was current in musical circles of New York last week that Otto H. Kahn, Chairman of the Metropolitan Opera Board of Directors, has unofficially been encouraging a number of American composers of popular music, including George Gershwin, Irving Berlin and Jerome Kern, to turn their attention to the composition of a serious opera with jazz music. Irving Berlin is said to have declared himself technically unequipped for such a work, while there was no comment from Mr. Gershwin or Mr. Kern, except that the latter thought such a work possible.

According to Mr. Kahn's idea, the subject of such an opera should be quite up-to-date and realistic in its treatment. It is believed that Mr. Kahn has simply been trying to arouse an expression of opinion among musicians concerning this matter, and to encourage whatever ideas or inspiration composers of popular music may have toward using their idiom in a serious work.

Rosenkavalier at Met

(Continued from page 1)

One of the newcomers in the cast was Ralph Errolle. Mr. Henderson congratulated him upon singing "his little Italian air better than it had been sung in many moons . . ." He was "graceful and mellifluous," wrote Mr. Taylor, who also thought that Mr. Bada was "an excellent Valzacchi."

The opera was "enjoyable" to Mr. Newman although he found the humor too broad and the characterizations stereotyped. Mr. Bender, Mme. Easton and Mme. Howard received his praise. Mme. Howard's Annina, he said, was "a finely pointed piece of work."

Leginska to Lead N. Y. Symphony

Ethel Leginska, who has conducted four important European orchestras during the fall, will direct the New York Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall on January 9. Leginska will conduct a program of classical and modern works including Weber's Oberon Overture, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, and several of her own compositions.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
GLORIA SWANSON in "WAGES OF VIRTUE"
A Paramount Production
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
POLA NEGRI in FORBIDDEN PARADISE
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1924-1925
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
BEGINNING SUNDAY
"THE SILENT ACCUSER"
With Eleanor Boardman
A Metro-Goldwyn Picture
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

Omitted (unintentionally of course) from the first-page picture of Beniamino Gigli the copyright line of Photographer Mishkin. In the November 11 issue of Musical Digest, by the way. Everybody happy now?

* * *

Pasadena extended a warm welcome to Mrs. Frank Gates Allen upon her recent return to her home there, after months spent in Europe. And the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra is also happy to have Mrs. Allen back again, for she is chairman of the Pasadena Philharmonic series and eminently efficient.

* * *

Charlie Wagner is smiling three kinds of smiles:

One because of Toti dal Monte's Chicago success.

One because the De Reszke Singers started their concerts in this country so auspiciously.

One because his new play, Quarantine, which has just opened in Washington was so well received.

* * *

Samuel Insull, the Chicago Civic Opera's Big Boss, has just been made Commendatore of the Crown of Italy. So too has Maestro Polacco, of that same organization.

* * *

Quite a number of Who's Who in New York's music circles (and in its smart set too) were guests last Sunday evening of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sachs at a buffet supper given in their home, 42 East Sixty-ninth street. Mrs. Sachs is prominent in the New York Philharmonic Orchestra councils.

* * *

Down in Cincinnati a few days ago there was a little gathering at a tea given by Christian R. Holmes (another New York Philharmonic factor, by the way) at which Miss Bertha Baur, Fritz Reiner, Mrs. Reiner, and Dr. Liszniewski and Mrs. Marguerite Liszniewska, the pianist.

* * *

Quite modest is a statement in Nicola Zerola's bill of particulars in which he is demanding of the New York Metropolitan Opera Company $100,000 damages for not being allowed to sing in performances other than concert. It calls to mind that remark of a southern darkey who heard a speech made by a candidate for a political office. To his employer this darkey said: "The gemmun suttinly did recommend hisself mos highly."

* * *

Hipolito Lazaro has sailed for Italy where he is scheduled to create the leading tenor role in La Cena delle Beffe of Giordano which is to have its premiere shortly at Milan's La Scala.

* * *

Lines-O'-Newser was headed for his office a few mornings ago, on foot. Crossing Seventh avenue he was obliged to step in front of a limousine which had been halted by the traffic. "Fortunate soul," he thought of the person who was seated in the car, and then looked at her. Lo and behold there sat Frances Alda, who was en route to fill a concert engagement in Pennsylvania. All of which shows how much better off materially singers are to mere wielders of the pen.

* * *

Don't forget—The Musical Digest address now is 243 West Thirty-ninth street. New York, we might add . . . since Sam Williams of the World is rather fussy about being explicit in details.

* * *

Owing to the magnitude of her European activities, Madame Georgette Leblanc (Maeterlinck) has been forced to cancel her American tour previously announced, from December to March of this season.

Besides a recital tour of the principal cities of Europe, Mme. Leblanc is to make personal appearances with her first film, L'Inhumaine, a new venture in motion pictures produced in France, which has aroused the critics to great enthusiasm. The Paris premiere is announced for late November.

Mme. Leblanc will return to America in December, 1925.

* * *

Percy Scholes, in the London Observer, tells—apropos of the recent appearance of Ethel Leginska as a conductor—of a conversation he had in Aeolian Hall, New York, in 1915: "She do play vell, dat leedle Polish girl," said a Germanic neighbor to him.

"She's not Polish, she's English," Mr. Scholes replied.

"But she have a Polish name."

"Her real name is Liggins," the critic again corrected.

"Nonsense!" protested the German. "No English girl could play like dat!" . . .

And so it appears that "Leginska" is really Liggins, a relic of the time when a foreign-sounding name was essential to success as a recitalist. The pianist confessed as much in an interview granted the London Daily Chronicle, where it appeared that the "Polish" name was invented for her by Lady Maude Warrenden, who had interested herself in "Ethel's" career (we suppose the "Ethel" still stands).

Margaret MATZENAUER
PRIMA DONNA CONTRALTO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, Inc., Fisk Building, 250 West 57th Street New York City
STEINWAY PIANO VICTOR RECORDS

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

Stepping Up to Opera
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 7 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Orchestra In New York Debut

Reviewers Unanimous in Favorable Reception of Pierre Monteux' Successor.

AUDIENCE FILLS HALL

The long awaited New York debut of Serge Koussevitzky took place Friday evening when he conducted the first concert of the thirty-ninth season here of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Koussevitzky proved to be a man of quiet bearing. Not only did he fail to "rant and rave," wrote Olin Downes in the Times, but "on the contrary, he was poise and self-restraint personified . . . He secured effects which had fineness of quality which few orchestras under any leader achieve today—and this with a minimum of visible effort." Deems Taylor of the World found his conducting "electric with energy" although he preserved his "fundamental poise and complete self-mastery."

Exemplary of the reviewers' comment was Lawrence Gilman's statement that there was "no resisting the vitality of the man . . . clarity of conception, quick sensibility, a comprehensive grasp of structure, a fusing and projecting imagination — these virtues are Mr. Koussevitzky's, beyond denial." Writing in the Sun, W. J. Henderson characterized him as "a virile, forceful and withal an analytical conductor, whose interpretations last evening combined sweep and power with searching insight and broad musical imagination."

His program, continued Mr. Henderson, "gave him room for an exhibition of his styles." It consisted of the Vivaldi Concerto in D minor, Weber's Oberon Overture, Debussy's Nocturnes, Nuages and Fetes, Honegger's Pacific 231, and Scriabin's Poem of Ecstasy. Mr. Henderson thought that in the Weber the "tonal magnificence of the orchestra was revealed in all its glory." Ernest Newman of the Post admired the "classical purity" of the Concerto, but considered the "most exquisite playing of the evening" in the Fetes. Agreed as to the conductor's skill in recapturing the delicacy of the Debussy works was Mr. Downes who also thought that there was the "artistic climax" of the evening.

Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail asserted that Mr. Koussevitzky was "an interesting and magnetic conductor . . . he can have his will with an orchestra and his way with an audience."

The entire program, according to Mr. Taylor, "exhibited, above all, an impeccable sense of balance, proportion and style, and an exquisite sensitiveness to detail and subtle nuances."

Giacomo Puccini 1923

Distinguished Italian Composer Who Died Last Saturday in Brussels.

Bulletins of News

The Roman Choir, comprising the master singers of the Patriarchal Roman Basilicas and the Sistine Chapel, arrived in New York on the Conte Verde on November 29 for a tour of the United States, Canada, Cuba, Mexico, and Australia.

Concert Management Arthur Judson announce that Nina Morgana, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, is now under their exclusive management.

Credit is due the following photographers for photographs appearing in this week's pictorial section: Forrest Lamont and Pablo Casals, Underwood and Underwood; Mabel Garrison, Apeda; Anna Fitziu, Photobroadcast-Bain News Service; Mario Chamlee, M. F. Weaver; Shura Cherkassky, Jeanne Bennett; and Tina Filipponi, G. L. Manuel, Paris.

Digests of the following week-end operas and concerts will appear in the next issue of The Musical Digest: Parsifal at the Metropolitan, Philharmonic Society, Roland Hayes, Elshuco Trio and Festival Quartet, New York Trio, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Nickos Cambourakis, Ignazio d'Amico and others, Andrea Chenier at the Metropolitan, Sergei Rachmaninoff, New York Symphony, Elena Gerhardt, State Symphony. Ignacy Dygas, League of Composers, Little Symphony, Walter McNally, Marianne Kneisel Quartet, Laura Gustafson and Charlotte Lund.

Puccini Passes Away In Brussels; Radium Fails to Save Composer

State Funeral Will Be Held in Italy; Homage Paid in Different Countries.

WAS AGED SIXTY-SIX

Dispatches from Brussels last Saturday brought news of the death of Giacomo Puccini, Italian composer of opera, at the age of 66. Death was due to a heart attack, induced, it is said, by the effects of radium treatment upon two tumors in Puccini's throat. The composer's son and daugnter were with him when he expired. Mrs. Puccini had started from her home at Terre del Lago, near Pisa, but illness caused friends to detain her at Milan when she arrived there.

The Italian government has announced its intention of giving the musician a state funeral, and of assuming the expense. Homage was paid the memory of Puccini in several countries; in the New York Metropolitan and the Chicago Opera Auditorium such recognition was made during the performances being given.

In spite of the known seriousness of Puccini's condition, it was believed that he would recover. News of his death came therefore as a shock; and throughout Italy, as well as in other countries where he was respected, there is mourning.

Giacomo Puccini was born in Luca, Italy, in 1858. His father, his grandfather, and his great-grandfather were musicians. So when he finally went, after study in his birthplace, to Milan to the Royal Conservatory of Music, it seemed a natural course.

Le Villi was Puccini's first opera. It was given in the Dal Verme Theatre, in Milan in 1884 and attracted only moderate attention. Manon Lescaut, produced in 1893 at Turin, gained widespread attention; and when La Boheme was given in 1896 Puccini's high rank as a composer of opera was established.

Tosca was produced in 1900, and four years later came Madama Butterfly . . . a failure at its La Scala (Milan) premiere, when Giulio Gatti-Casazza was director there. But, shortened afterwards, it met with success elsewhere. Then came The Girl of the Golden West, the "Triptych" consisting of Il Tabarro, Suor Angelica, and Gianni Schicchi. Turandot—which is finished save a few pages of the score which Arturo Toscanini will probably complete—is scheduled for its premiere at La Scala next spring.

Puccini was recently nominated to Italy's senate, and had been notified barely a week ago of the honor conferred on him.

Hidalgo Sings in Barber of Seville

Returns to Metropolitan After Fourteen Years; Didur Takes Part of Basilio.

Because she has "gained so immeasurably in richness of tone and vocal agility" (in the words of Alison Smith of the World), the reappearance of Elvira de Hidalgo as Rosina in The Barber of Seville at the Metropolitan last Thursday was called by many of the reviewers a "debut." Her actual debut in this role at the Metropolitan took place fourteen years ago and since that time Mme. de Hidalgo, according to the Times, "has matured in voice, physique, personality and art." Those who had looked forward to the appearance of Feodor Chaliapin as Basilio were disappointed as Mr. Chaliapin was indisposed. Adamo Didur took his place.

The Post was in agreement with the other papers in its statement that Mme. de Hidalgo's Rosina "was a pleasure with its warm Spanish beauty and acting and a voice that is rich and full-toned." Indubitable and gratifying growth as a singer and artist was found by Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram and Mail in the work of the Spanish singer. In her acting, he was pleased with the unflagging vivacity, and delicacy of touch. She revealed, he wrote, "a pleasant assortment of decorative patterns and delivered them with fluency, brilliancy, and, in general, with excellent taste." The Sun considered her performance "vocally interesting and histrionically excellent" while the Tribune characterized her voice as "a very pleasing coloratura soprano, smooth and fluent, if not one of large volume, able to round out ornaments and ride the loftiest notes. . . ."

The role of Basilio, said the Times, was filled "deftly" by Mr. Didur. His work was spoken of as "excellent" by the Sun and Mr. Sanborn liked the "familiarly competent music master of Mr. Didur." This reviewer also considered Mario Chamlee acted Almaviva "with spirit" and that he "sang much of the first act music beautifully." The Post agreed that Mr. Chamlee sang well, and added that Giuseppe de Luca "was, of course, a delight as the Barber." Mr. Sanborn said that his work and Mr. Malatesta's Bartolo "call for no new appraisal." Miss Smith commented that Mr. Chamlee, Mr. de Luca, and Mr. Malatesta sang their familiar roles with much spirit.

Mr. Malatesta's "rich effects," Mr. de Luca's "exuberant" barber, and Mr. Chamlee's "vivacious" work, the Sun added "all contributed to a spirited evening." Mr. Papi conducted "a well knit performance," and was, reported this paper, "on congenial terms with Rossini."

Stokowski Presents All-Wagner Program

Hageman Conducts Philharmonic With Poliakin as Soloist; Rich Quartet Plays.

Philadelphia, Nov. 24. — The first Wagner program of the year by the Philadelphia Orchestra was heard last Friday at the Academy of Music.

Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer did not content himself with moderate praise, but asserted that "it was great music, played by a great orchestra, with a great leader." The Record reviewer was equally enthusiastic. On the program were the Overture to the Flying Dutchman, the prelude to the first act of Lohengrin, the prelude to the third act of Tannhauser, the Siegfried Idyll, the Ride of the Valkyries, Wotan's Farewell and the Magic Fire music. Of the selections S. L. L. of the Public Ledger preferred the Siegfried Idyll, although he considered the Lohengrin "a superb piece of playing . . . delicate and beautiful." This reviewer also remarked on the rapt attention of the audience throughout the performance. Linton Martin of the North American summed up his review with these words: "Throughout the concert Mr. Stokowski developed details without ever losing sight of the larger design."

Richard Hageman was the guest conductor and Miron Poliakin the soloist at the concert of the Philharmonic Society here last night. The program, which included Tschaikowsky, Strauss, and Wagner, opened with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. Mr. Hageman's reading of this symphony was called by the Public Ledger "one of the most satisfying that has been given in Philadelphia in a long time." The North American said he conducted "excellently, and with fine co-operation from the musicians." The Inquirer and Record agreed as to Mr. Hageman's splendid leadership and sound musicianship.

"A flattering ovation" greeted Mr. Poliakin's playing of the Tschaikowsky Concerto in D major with the orchestra. Upon the reviewer in the Public Ledger he made a "profound impression, not only with his amazing technical equipment," but with his "characteristic reading," his beautiful tone and general understanding of the work. Equally enthusiastic were the other writers.

Anna Pavlowa and her Ballet Russe, who were seen here last Wednesday in two performances, were greeted by audience and reviewers alike with the usual plaudits brought forth by her appearance. The Record called it "one of the most beautiful and spectacular productions" in which she has appeared. The other papers agreed that she was more remarkable than ever. Alexander Volinine received several commendatory notices.

The San Carlo Opera Company continued its season here with productions of Andre Chenier, Madame Butterfly, Aida, Faust, and Trovatore. The continued success of the company culminated, in the opinion of the Record, in "a notable" performance of Aida. Faust, according to the Public Ledger, was "well conducted and well sung."

The Rich Quartet was heard at the second meeting of the Chamber Music Organization yesterday. The Quartet, consisting of Thaddeus Rich, first violin; Romain Verney, viola; Harry Aleinikoff, second violin, and Hans Kindler, cellist, played a Malipiero novelty, Rispetti e Strambotti. Their performance was generally praised. Among the other recitalists of the week were Bernardo Olshansky, Russian baritone, whose voice, according to the Public Ledger, had "an especially fine quality;" Lewis James Howell, baritone, assisted by Nina Prettyman Howell, violinist, and Helen Clarke McCoy, soprano, in joint recital with George T. Hottel, tenor.

Anna Case Sings in Marion

Marion, Nov. 18.—Anna Case, soprano, appeared here last evening in a recital under the auspices of the Lecture-Recital Club.

Metropolitan Opera Box

TOMORROW

Gioconda—with Mmes. Easton, Gordon, and Alcock; and Messrs. Gigli, Danise, and Didur; Mr. Serafin conducting.

THURSDAY

Carmen—with Mmes. Bourskaya, Mario, Ruth, Wakefield, and Galli; and Messrs. Martinelli and Mardones; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

FRIDAY

Marta (matinee)—with Mmes. Alda and Howard; and Messrs. Gigli, Didur, d'Angelo, Malatesta, and Reschiglian; Mr. Papi conducting.

Lucia (evening)—with Mmes. Toti dal Monte (debut) and Egener; and Messrs. Chamlee, de Luca, and Mardones; Mr. Papi conducting.

SATURDAY

Jenufa (matinee)—with Mmes. Jeritza and Matzenauer; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Oehman, Wolf, and Schutzendorf; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Aida (evening)—with Mmes. Peralta and Gordon; and Messrs. Fleta, Danise, and Rothier; Mr. Serafine conducting.

MONDAY

Tales of Hoffmann—with Mmes. Bori, Morgana, and Howard; and Messrs. Fleta and de Luca; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

Easton and Martinelli Appear in Carmen

Martinelli Sings Don Jose, and Joan Ruth Makes Debut as Frasquita.

The Metropolitan presented its first Carmen of the season last Wednesday in what the reviewers were agreed was an unusually vivacious performance. It was an animated presentation, wrote Alison Smith in the World, in which "the entire company plunged into the smouldering melodrama . . . with an intensity which made it a dramatic as well as a musical triumph." Florence Easton as Carmen and Giovanni Martinelli who replaced Miguel Fleta as Don Jose "not only took the vocal honors," asserted the Times, "but they carried on the story with more than the usual dramatic clearness and intensity."

An "intelligent, carefully analyzed and gracefully sung" characterization, rather than an emotionally abandoned" one, was Miss Smith's impression of Miss Easton's performance. The Herald Tribune commented favorably on her work. Mr. Martinelli, in the opinion of this reporter, was in good voice. Joan Ruth, a young American, made her operatic debut as Frasquita. She displayed, wrote Miss Smith, "a voice of bright and flexible quality, which she uses with deft dramatic effect. And it was even more evident that she is a skilful actress and decidedly decorative." She "made an excellent debut," according to the Times, and the Herald Tribune reviewer spoke in terms of approval of her voice, "a light soprano of some pleasing notes."

This paper also referred to Queena Mario's part as well sung, and the Times reported that she scored as Micaela. The Mercedes of Henrietta Wakefield, continued this review, was "well in the picture" and the other roles were "capably filled by Messrs. Mardones, Ananian, Meader, Martino and Tibbett. The orchestra, under the direction of Louis Hasselmans, was all that could be desired." Miss Smith concluded her review of the opera with the assertion that the principals "were all they should be, but the stimulating quality of the opera was as thoroughly due to the spirit of the chorus and to the vigorous work of Mr. Hasselmans. . . ."

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

Schrecker Prelude Conducted by Reiner

Rosen Plays Dvorak Violin Concerto; Cincinnati Orchestra Gives Pop Concert.

Cincinnati, November 25.—In his symphony concerts of last Thursday and Friday Mr. Reiner presented the contrast of Franz Schreker's Prelude to a Drama and Beethoven's Fourth Symphony. Between the two numbers was Dvorak's Violin Concerto, played by Emil Rosen.

In regard to the Schreker, tense anticipations of this modern work received a pleasant relaxation in the "rare delicacy of shading, the infinite variety," and its "theatricalism," declared Mr. Goldenburg in the Enquirer, while Mrs. Plogstedt of the Post admired the "skillful handling of the discords" and the enchanting effect of the almost unheard-of tonal combinations.

Mrs. Smith of the Times-Star was impressed with the orchestral display, elaborate scoring and wealth of detail imposed upon a bare structural outline. Samuel Wilson was thrilled, he wrote in the Commercial Tribune, and he described it in a word as "kaleidoscopic."

The reviewers welcomed the Fourth after an absence of four years from Cincinnati programs, and all approved of Mr. Reiner's interpretation, with the single reservation of Mr. Goldenburg that it seemed to "lack buoyancy."

Of Mr. Rosen, soloist, this writer said, "His accomplishments have placed him in the foremost rank among violin virtuosi," and Mrs. Smith called his playing "sparkling," with "assured technic." Mrs. Plogstedt admired the "beautiful singing tone and pure musicianship," and Mr. Wilson thought that Mr. Rosen technically left nothing to be desired, although he called the Dvorak Concerto "uninspired."

At the popular concert on November 16 Mr. Reiner presented a program of Tschaikowsky, and few seats were vacant in the hall. Recent recitals were those of Thamar Karsavina, Russian dancer, Italo Picchi, basso, Mrs. Edward McDowell, who accompanied her program by a lecture, and Eva Gauthier. B. G.

Music of the Movies

Accompanying the presentation of Janice Meredith at the Capitol Theatre this week is the musical score especially prepared for this picture by Deems Taylor. At the Rialto Rimsky's Spanish Caprice is the principal musical number, while the length of the feature picture at the Rivoli limits the musical program to the overture.

At the Piccadilly Victor Herbert's Babes in Toyland is being played by the orchestra under the baton of Mischa Guterson.

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

Grainger Plays Grieg In San Francisco

Audience of 9,000 Hears Popular Concert; Dux and Muckle Give Recitals.

San Francisco, Nov. 15.—An audience that nearly filled the Exposition Auditorium, which has a capacity of 10,000, was present for the popular concert of the San Francisco Orchestra under Mr. Hertz last Monday evening. Percy Grainger was soloist in the Grieg Piano Concerto.

The crowd of 9,000 applauded Mr. Grainger without stint, and he had to respond with several short encores. The reviewers also were commendatory. Charles Woodman wrote in the Call and Post, "His interpretation of the concerto was marked by splendid rhymthic phrasing, brilliant tone colors, and the most delicate finger work as well as tremendous dynamic power." This reviewer liked even better Mr. Grainger's playing of the Brahms Cradle Song, County Derry, and the other shorter numbers. Redfern Mason of the Examiner called the performance "masterful" and "superb," although he regretted that Mr. Grainger had not played something else, for he has given the Grieg often before in San Francisco.

Writing in the Bulletin Mollie Merrick said, "The Concerto became in the artist's hands a study in tone and a revelation in touch." The other large number on Mr. Hertz' program was Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherezade, "in which," to quote Miss Merrick again, "the pure tones of Mr. Persinger's violin, symbolic of the voice of the story-teller who beguiled a sultan held together four themes of fantastic and exquisite beauty." Two Wagner excerpts were also on the program.

Recent recital appearances in San Francisco have been those of Claire Dux and May Muckle, cellist. This was the second appearance here of Mme. Dux, who was assisted by Louis Persinger, concertmaster of the San Francisco Symphony. The comments of Mr. Woodman and Mr. Mason were characteristic of the reception of Miss Muckle. The former said, "May Muckle played superbly, but the program was not particularly impressive as it was all 'modern' and too much alike." The latter wrote, "May Muckle is a master of the cello, one of the three or four outstanding interpreters of the instrument."

M. J. C.

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

Cyrena van Gordon, contralto, is again appearing in leading roles in the presentations of the Chicago Civic Opera Company.

Francis Macmillen

After an absence of three years from the New York concert platform Frances Macmillen returned last Tuesday evening with a violin recital in Carnegie Hall. The reviewers believed generally that Mr. Macmillen's style was intimate and delicate, so that the choice of such a large hall was perhaps not of the best. The audience waived consideration of such matters in its approval of Mr. Macmillen's playing.

The reviewer of the Herald Tribune reported that the violinist's tone "was generally pure in quality, though slightly clouded at a few points." The same writer found "his technic, his ability to handle bravura passages with ease, dexterous and masterly." The Sun reviewer stressed the fact that the hall seemed over large for Mr. Macmillen's style that evening, although he added that his playing gained in warmth and vigor as the evening progressed.

Despite the smallness of tone, Mr. Macmillen was reported by H. F. Peyser, of the Telegram-Mail, to have played the Faure Sonata "with manifest devotion, musicianly taste, and a sense of style." The Erlanger Concerto was best played, according to the Times.

Name Festival Conductors

London, Nov. 8—The first Eastbourne Music Festival will be held from November 21-29, at the Winter Garden, Devonshire Park. Mr. H. G. Amers will be the director, and Sir Edward Elgar, Sir Alexander MacKenzie, Sir Dan Gadfrey, and Sir Henry Wood are visiting conductors.

Williams Leads Own Works

London, Nov. 8—At the St. Leonard's Festival last Sunday, Vaughan Williams directed a performance of his Old King Cole ballet music and the Charterhouse Suite.

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer
Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO
Victor Records

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

EDITH MASON
SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NE W YORK CITY

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 7

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

New York's Philharmonic and Toscanini

Rumors that Arturo Toscanini would come to New York a year hence as guest conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra have been confirmed by Clarence H. Mackay, chairman of its board of directors.

This is good news. It will be helpful to musical New York and to the Philharmonic. Moreover, it will give this distinguished conductor an opportunity to disclose fully his abilities in the symphony field.

When Toscanini appeared here, and elsewhere in this country, with the La Scala Orchestra he was at a disadvantage in not having an organization of the first rank. It will be available when the Italian maestro steps before a New York audience in January, 1926, with the Philharmonic men before him. For there can be little doubt that this organization is now one of the foremost anywhere to be found . . . one whose personnel is of the highest order.

The presence in this country of such a musician as Toscanini, if for a limited time only, is certain to exert a vital influence. He prefers not to absent himself from the La Scala Theatre for long; but the fact that he has accepted the Philharmonic's invitation is perhaps significant of future visits here. Possibly—if all goes well—this maestro may come every year to the United States. Should he consent to such a plan the country generally would be bettered by such an outcome.

Music in Hotels

The growth of serious music endeavors in the representative hotels of the United States is increasing steadily. At the outset of such undertakings they were regarded as out of place; and the interest was largely a social one. But now there has come an understanding of what these affairs mean, and just how they contribute to the combined effort in advancing our music art.

While the large cities are the leaders in pretentious concerts held in important hotels, some of the smaller cities are discovering the advantages which ensue from such procedure.

Apart from offering splendid and interesting programs to residents of those communities wherein such concerts are presented, they afford opportunities to travelers stopping momentarily in those hostelries to listen to good music well performed. It is a fine movement, this giving of concerts in hotels, and it should be encouraged.

High Lights and Luminaries

TOSCANINI is coming—what a pleasure to have him with us next season! When we saw him in Milan last summer he was considering propositions from America, but he was loath to yield. He told us that money was not his concern at all, but he was conscious of the responsibility which his position at La Scala put upon his shoulders—they need him badly out there. He is absolute ruler; not even Scandiani, general manager of the company, does things without consulting Toscanini.

"Why shall I leave my own country, and go to America?" he asked. "Here are my home, my friends, and I have more than enough to live on. Why cross the ocean, and give myself up to living in hotels, speaking a different language from my own?"

Evidently he has changed his mind, and we are mighty glad of it.

THE performance of the Barber of Seville at the Metropolitan last Thursday continues an astonishing record in the career of Elvira de Hidalgo. She told us "without exaggeration" that she has sung the role at least two thousand times all over the world. No wonder that she is absolutely mistress of the part!

Two thousand performances! That would mean that if she sang it every night including Sundays it would take five years and a half to make this record. Perhaps Elvira was not exaggerating . . .

Last time she did this part at the Metropolitan was in 1910. She has made progress since then! The voice is rounder . . . and those high notes! She reached an F without difficulty, and the tone even in that high region was pure and brilliant.

Carlo d'Ormeville, late dean of Italian impresarios and newspapermen, should have been there the other night. He used to be Elvira's guiding star. Perhaps when she moved up to that F she was high enough for him to hear her where he is now . . . He died last year at the age of eighty-seven, after a long career as editor of that splendid magazine, La Gazzetta, which monthly appeared with his excellent criticisms and a sheaf of verse besides.

Chaliapin was not in the cast, although he had been announced. That was disappointing. Adamo Didur did much to alleviate that regret. Gatti was wise (when is he not?) in his substitution, for Didur knows how to put over the comedy of the role of Basilio excellently.

Gennarino Papi gave the opera a fine reading. He "is on congenial terms with Rossini," said W. J. Henderson, the dean of Gotham reviewers. . . . We think that he was right.

WE HAVE just received a copy of London Punch, which, it seems, has gone into music reviewing too. We quote:

THE RIVALS

(Critics and amateurs are divided in opinion as to the relative merits of Mme. Frieda Hempel and Mme. Galli-Curci, who in private life is Mrs. Homer Samuels.)

Despite the grave importance of elections
There are indubitably certain sections
Of the community quite unconcerned
With candidates, rejected or returned.
Just now, e. g., in Music's charmed domain,
Where stars rise suddenly and shine and wane,
The rival merits of two-queens of song
Preoccupy the melomaniac throng.
And while one party find their favorita
In Galli-Curci, agile Amelita,
The other group in Music's inmost temple
Seek to enshrine the gifted Frieda Hempel.
I, who have never heard a single note
Proceeding out of either diva's throat,
Am clearly not entitled to a vote.
I learn at second-hand that Amelita
Is dark and slim and graceful as a cheetah.
While blonde and golden-haired is Madame Frieda,
A mixture of a Siren and Armida.
But, on the whole and from a due regard
For Greece's glory and the Chian bard,
I am prepared to back the singer's claim
Whose husband's honorable Christian name
Though "Christian" would be counted a misnomer
(By Mr. Pecksniff) is no less than Homer.

WE SHALL miss the premiere of Jenufa next Saturday afternoon at the Met. We are going out to the Windy City to sit in on some of the performances of the Chicago Opera Company. We have just read the official statement of Herbert Johnson that the company will not visit New York this season. Well, we shall play the role of Mahomet with that "mountain."

We have assurances from Mr. Gatti himself that Janacek's piece will be a success. To quote him: "The libretto is very powerful (How does one say 'poderoso' in English?), strong, magnificent; the music is appealing; and the singers will NOT be miscast this time."

BRUNO ZIRATO.

Communication

Editor Musical Digest:

I have just seen in the Musical Digest a notice in reference to the Washington Heights Musical Club Concert in Aeolian Hall on November 8 headed "Ruth Kemper Makes Debut." Now as I understand it this was the first of a series of concerts by artist members of the club, and was a most successful attempt to prove to the musical public and to the public at large that this organization is taking its responsibilities seriously in presenting to the public its artist members, be they debutants or experienced professionals, in a perfectly professional manner.

In no sense whatever was this concert to be considered the debut of Miss Kemper, who has already made a number of appearances in New York City and in other communities.

I hope that you will be so kind as to correct this error in your columns.

MARGARET LOWTHER KEMPER,
(Concert manager for Ruth Kemper.)
New York, Nov. 22, 1924.

Stepping Up to Opera

In Which John Charles Thomas Reminds That American Opera Houses Are Not Training Schools

by RICHARD ANDREWS

ONE of the eternally necessary things to do—so John Charles Thomas believes—is to watch one's step. He achieved his first ones so warily that each new one (in his career, of course) prompts the baritone to be sure his foot is to rest on solid ground. After the stepping-stones of musical comedy were safely crossed, and Mr. Thomas achieved Broadway and his name in electric lights, he marched off into the concert field, where stepping is vastly more difficult. Yet here, too, he staunchly stepped his way. Now the singer is turning in another direction, one natural enough to enable the average person to answer correctly at the first guess.

Opera?

Yes.

"The stairway that leads up to operatic success is as hazardous as it is icy," said Mr. Thomas a few mornings ago as he paused to rest during a rehearsal of his recital program. "Its smoothness is deceiving, and if you start up on the run beware the pains of a bruised pride. It is safer to go slow and watch your foot on each step, for even those who arrive at the levels where things commence to thaw know that a misstep can easily land them back at the bottom with a fractured ambition.

"For the young singer whose ambitions bring him to the foot of this stair—and I confess that mine have—there are many factors to be considered. Reasonable confidence in one's voice is, of course, taken for granted, for it is folly to entertain such ambitions without adequate vocal equipment. That is but the first enticing step. Just consider how multitudinous and exacting the details of operatic art are, the amount of dramatic action alone one must master before he sets about to synchronize action with song. . . . One point in illustration—operatic repertoire covers a span in history from the days of mythology to the days of the Golden West, and even more recent. Manners and customs in different days and lands have been as distinctive as costumes. A broad and intimate knowledge of them is as essential as versatility to the man who would successfully impersonate Wotan or Herod one night and Scarpia or the Toreador a few nights later." Mr. Thomas rose to pantomime illustration.

"A singer cannot safely depend upon scenery, costumes and a virile personality to impress an intelligent audience. Fancy what success a man would have with the Russians in an audience if as Boris Goudunoff he would cross himself according to Rome instead of the Greek Orthodox custom!

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

"Now," continued Mr. Thomas, settling himself once more in his chair, "it is true that such details can be learned in the studio and from books and observation. But knowing how to do a thing and being able to do it are two separate and distinct matters. Herein lies the great problem of the American singer with operatic ambitions.

"It is true that we have in this country every opportunity for study but can you tell me where the American singer can obtain adequate operatic experience in his own country? Knowledge merely prepares him for the first step toward the operatic stage. Poise, facility and artistic finesse can only be attained through actual experience before the footlights, and much of it. Until all that one has learned is ripened by experience it is unreasonable to expect the fruits of success.

"Since conditions do not offer the American singer the opportunities for gaining stage experience at home, he is practically obliged to commence his career abroad. It is wrong to believe that the American singer goes abroad solely to gain a European operatic reputation. The many smaller opera houses abroad offer him opportunity to gain that fundamental experience there without which it is unreasonable to expect success at home.

"For remember this," emphasized Mr. Thomas, "the Metropolitan and Chicago operas are not training schools. It is unfair for the American singer to expect the privilege of schooling in companies where audiences demand—and rightly demand—only the finished product.

"I place little stock in the oft-heard complaint that the American singer has no chance in American opera houses. There are enough American principals at both leading houses to disprove the statement, and with certain exceptions these singers first went abroad to reinforce their knowledge with practical experience. The American singer who has prepared himself for the kind of opera demanded by the American public has had little difficulty winning his way."

All of which leads up to the fact that Mr. Thomas purposes identifying himself rather seriously with opera, and to that end has accepted an engagement to sing leading baritone roles next summer and the winter following in La Monnaie Theatre, Brussels.

We imagined an objective in the Thomas procedure.

"Is it possible," we inquired, "that you have in mind a specific goal . . . say the—"

Here Mr. Thomas interrupted.

"Naturally. Have I not explained that I desire to appear in this country in opera?"

"In that case it may be permissible to assume that you may have an eye upon—"

"Upon whatever suitable engagement may offer after my contract with La Monnaie has expired," observed Mr. Thomas blandly.

And there we let the matter drop.

But one thing is certain. John Charles Thomas is avoiding the pitfalls which check (and sometimes blight altogether) the desired careers of many American singers operatically inclined.

He will acquire experience; then—perhaps two years hence—one may find him announced by a distinguished American opera company to appear in premier baritone roles.

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

JESSIE CHRISTIAN
SOPRANO
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger 1322 Kimball Building Chicago, Ill.

INA BOURSKAYA
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Metropolitan Opera Company—Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management: S. HUROK, INC. Aeolian Hall, New York City

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

CHARLES MARSHALL
TENOR CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

N. Y. Philharmonic Society

The Philharmonic Orchestra gave its regular Thursday-Friday pair of concerts on November 20 and 21 as well as a performance on the following Sunday afternoon. William Van Hoogstraten included on his program of the first of these concerts Brahms Third Symphony in F major, Mabel Wood Hill's transcriptions of two five voice fugues with preludes from the first book of Bach's Well Tempered Clavichord, Nos. 4 and 22, and Max Reger's Variations and Fugue on a theme by Mozart.

The performance was "an admirable one," said the Sun reviewer. The Brahms was particularly well done with "climaxes effectively and logically developed." The writer in the Herald Tribune agreed that the rendition of this work was above average, and wrote that he liked particularly Mr. van Hoogstraten's conception of the first movement which he played "with exhilarating energy and breadth and power."

"A short and attractive program," as the Sun had it, was presented by Mr. van Hoogstraten on Sunday. It consisted of Handel's Concerto Grosso in D major, with the solo violins played by Messrs. Guidi and Lange and the cello by Leo Schultz, Ravel's Mother Goose suite, and Dvorak's seldom played Second Symphony. Of this last the World said that Mr. van Hoogstraten gave it "its naive and genuine values" and the audience received it with enthusiasm. The Post thought the symphony fine and "full-bodied" superior in "many respects to the more popular New World Symphony." The Herald Tribune agreed that the work was "tuneful and effective and received a most smooth, mellifluous performance from the Philharmonic forces." The Times reviewer also liked the composition.

Albertina Rasch

Albertina Rasch, former premiere danseuse of the Vienna and other opera companies, reappeared at Town Hall on the evening of November 20 assisted by Chester Hale, Jacques Cartier, an ensemble of twenty-five dancers, Peter Merenblum, violinist, and Max Rabinovitch, pianist. The observer of the Sun summed up the recital as follows: "The entertainment was very attractive. Miss Rasch danced with the routined skill of an accomplished artist, and her colleagues gave her able support."

According to the Herald Tribune "Miss Rasch brought to her interpretations all of the exquisite art and skill which her previous appearances have led one to expect." This review praised the company as enhancing the reputation of the premiere danseuse. The Times report of the recital included no critical analysis.

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St, New York City — Telephone Circle 8815

Antonio Lora

"Earnestness and obvious devotion" were the qualities which the reviewer of the World found pervading the Aeolian Hall piano recital of Antonio Lora on the afternoon of November 21. Barring a tendency to extremes in dynamics the Herald Tribune report had only praise for the pianist, who "proved to have the fleetness of fingers and ability to encompass technical difficulties necessary to an effective performance."

In the Sun it was reported, "Mr. Lora played with good finger technic, ease, and assurance of manner, and no little musical intelligence," while the Times commentator found a "wide range of dynamics, even to utmost delicacy." The former reviewer tempered his praise with the belief that Mr. Lora's range of expression was not of the broadest.

Jacques Goutmanovitch

An unfamiliar sonata, that in G major by Guillaume Lekeu, was the feature of the program of Jacques Goutmanovitch, violinist, who returned to Town Hall a week ago last evening, after giving two New York concerts last season. The Herald Tribune writer said that Mr. Goutmanovitch "again proved himself a thoroughly competent violinist with a tone of soft and agreeable quality, warm rather than brilliant, and a capable technic."

Alison Smith in the World found the violinist inclined to scratch, and the Sun writer believed that he displayed limitations of technic and interpretive ability, but the Times declared that undoubtedly Mr. Goutmanovitch gave his audience enjoyment.

Friends of Music

Ossip Gabrilowitsch was soloist at the third Sunday afternoon concert of the Friends of Music in Town Hall. He played Beethoven's Emperor Concerto, and, according to the Herald Tribune, his performance was "a laudable one, with a smoothness and polish which still permitted ample vigor and zest." This report called Mr. Bodanzky's orchestral accompaniment "satisfactory," while in the Post it was asserted that "the orchestra provided a most pleasing background."

The program, which was heard by a very large audience, included the Mendelssohn Overture, Von der Schonen Melusine, and the Handel Concerto Grosso No. 13, in F.

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

The Lenox String Quartet

The first of the two scheduled Aeolian Hall concerts of the Lenox String Quartet on the evening of November 21 included an American work of Brahms and Haydn. This was Alois Reiser's B minor Quartet, Op. 16. The members of the quartet remain unchanged: Sandor Harmati, first violin; Wolfe Wolfinsohn, second violin; Nicholas Moldavan, viola; and Emmeran Stoeber, cello, founder of the quartet.

The Reiser composition was, according to the Sun, "admirably performed and . . . made a fine showing of what good, strong, even beautiful music a present day American writer is able to give, while employing modern harmonies and not forgetting melodic form." The Times thought the work "worth rehearing."

The Herald Tribune considered that Mr. Reiser had written skillfully and euphoniously, with a notable lyric vein" although the work was "too mild to make a marked impression."

The newspapers were cordial in their reviews. The Sun spoke of the quartet as "an organization only two years old and already holding a position of high distinction among American chamber music bodies." The Herald Tribune said that the Brahms C minor Quartet "had a smooth performance."

Little Symphony

At the third of the series of six Sunday evening concerts of George Barrere's Little Symphony at Miller's Theatre on November 23 Bettie Gilmore, harpist, was soloist, and Arthur Whiting was guest conductor in a composition of his own, Dance Music.

The Post reported, "The phrasing and rhythm were markedly unusual in all numbers of the program." In the World it was said that the harp solos from Debussy, Pierne, and Hasselmans were "piquant and elusive and charmingly played by Bettie Gilmore." In the opinion of the observer of the Herald Tribune "simplicity and charm characterized Mr. Whiting's music."

An unfamiliar Sinfonie Concertante of Haydn, and compositions of Tschaikowsky and Perilhou completed the program.

Julia Glass

Julia Glass, pianist, who made her first New York appearance as soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra several years ago, and who since has played in public, returned to the concert platform in a recital at Aeolian Hall on the evening of November 21. The Times report said, "Miss Glass confirmed the good impression of her youthful debut a few seasons since."

The Sun reviewer commented on the "enthusiastic applause" which Miss Glass won from her audience, and said, "That she has progressed in her art since her last appearance here was made evident by her performance of her principal numbers. Her general grasp of the musical content of MacDowell's Sonata Tragica was admirable."

The commentator of the Herald Tribune agreed as to the improvement in her art, and the amelioration of the hardness which was a characteristic of Miss Glass' playing on her earlier appearances. This writer felt that her vigor was tastefully applied, but Alison Smith in the World wrote that her quieter interpretations were "dexterous and rippling," while her fortes were overemphasized.

Rosa Armandie

Stressing the works of French composers and including a modern group in her program, Rosa Armandie, soprano, appeared in recital at Aeolian Hall on the afternoon of November 20. Allison Smith of the World thought that she sang "in a voice of charming and persuasive quality," while the reviewer of the Times, who thought, incidentally, that the program contained too many sombre numbers, found "a good deal to commend."

In the Herald Tribune it was reported that Mlle. Armandie "had considerable more volume than the average soprano recitalist, generally smooth and full in tone, though sometimes it took on a rather shrill edge in top notes." This writer also believed that the singer "had a very satisfactory degree of expressive and interpretative ability."

The audience was extremely cordial in its reception of Mlle. Armandie's program.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management: Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
First appearance with N. Y. Symphony Orchestra Nov. 30, 1924
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York — STEINWAY PIANO

MME. ETHEL PARKS
Lyric-Coloratura Soprano
MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Beethoven Association

No Beethoven was included in the program of the Beethoven Association in Aeolian Hall a week ago last evening. Helen Stanley, soprano; Sigismund Stojowski, pianist, and the Lenox String Quartet, consisting of Messrs. Harmati, Wolfinsohn, Moldavan, and Stoeber, assisted in the presentation of a Haydn Quartet in F major; the Schumann Piano Quintet; Chausson's Chanson Perpetuelle; and a number of songs of Schubert and Schumann.

Of Mme. Stanley's singing of the German songs the reviewer of the Herald Tribune wrote, "She sang in excellent voice, with strong and firm high notes, one or two of these rather penetrating—an expressive performance." Deems Taylor of the World agreed that Mme. Stanley showed to best advantage in the Lieder, commenting on her "exceptional style and diction," while he mentioned also a little lack "in warmth and dynamic flexibility."

That Mme. Stanley's voice was heard to best possible advantage in the Chausson, which he described as "admirably suited to Mme. Stanley's voice, which is rich in color," was the opinion of Mr. Downes of the Times. This writer thought that the Lenox Quartet showed to best advantage in the Haydn, while Mr. Stojowski shone particularly in the Schumann. Pitts Sanborn called the playing of the quartet not flawless, and with the majority of reviewers declared the Chausson performance unfinished, but he added, "The Lenox gentlemen showed in general a sympathetic understanding of what they were about, and a professional command of style." Ernest Newman wrote in the Post that Mme. Stanley's voice was pleasant, and he, too, found that the quartet's spirit that evening seemed better than its technic.

Elsa Alsen

Elsa Alsen, remembered for her work with the late Wagnerian Opera Company, was heard here in recital at Aeolian last Tuesday, accompanied by Frank Bibb. Admiration for her work was manifested by all the reviewers. However, Olin Downes of the Times, Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, and the Sun commentator were of the opinion that the singer is happier in opera than in the concert field. The Herald Tribune reviewer, on the other hand, wrote: "In opera Mme. Alsen had shown a voice of ample power and notable dramatic ability, and proved able last night to use these assets with success as a recitalist."

Commenting on her "artistic sincerity and earnestness," Mr. Sanborn asserted that, whether singing in opera or concert, she "has that rarity, a real dramatic soprano voice . . . a voice of uncommon natural beauty, even a 'golden' voice, produced as a rule with delightful freedom. Nevertheless, there is no doubt that opera, not concert, is Mme. Alsen's proper field." Mr. Downes found displayed in the performance "the exceptional qualities of Mme. Alsen's voice and her dramatic temperament." In speaking of the "vitality and breadth of genuine sentiment" which she imparted to all her work, the Sun reported that "her art in song delivery was admirable, although not of corresponding merit to that of her excellent work as heard here on the operatic stage. Her voice, of splendid dramatic power, she used with much skill . . . her use of tone color was good." The Post commented on the "interest" of her recital, and spoke of the warm response of the audience.

Gitta Gradova

The impression of unusual pianistic ability given by Gitta Gradova in her two recitals here last season, was strengthened by her concert at Aeolian Hall last Wednesday evening. "The combination of power, technique and spirit which had served her well last year," wrote the Herald Tribune reviewer, was again manifested. Chopin's A flat major Waltz and the Tango and Seguidilla of Albeniz "showed an unusual capacity to bring out subtle variations of rhythm," continued this writer. Mme. Gradova's playing, asserted the Sun, "again impressed by its fire, vitality and strength." Her program, which was more than half devoted to Scriabin, included his Fourth Sonata, Danse Languide, Vers la Flamme grouped with the F sharp minor Prelude. Moussorgsky, Medtner, Liszt, and Bach were also represented. Her hearers were fascinated, reported the Times, "with unaffectedly beautiful playing, backed with a rare force of temperament and personality."

Frances Hall

To quote the World, "Frances Hall on the afternoon of November 24 gave another of her piano recitals, which have become a familiar and gratifying occurrence in Aeolian Hall." The same reviewer felt that Miss Hall played the Brahms F minor Sonata "with understanding and true technical grasp." The Times report called the recital "not only interesting, but artistic," and the pianist proved to this observer that "she can play on a large canvas as well as on a smaller one" in the manner in which she handled the Brahms work.

The necessary "power and intelligently applied energy" were found on hand in full measure by the Herald Tribune reviewer, who thought that the climatic measures of the Sonata came off best, but the Mail-Telegram chronicler, who also approved of the manner in which Miss Hall played this work, thought that she found "more congenial occupation in the Schubert Moments Musical, which she played deftly, with musical feeling and charm of lyrical mood."

Josef Hofmann

The first New York recital of Josef Hofmann for this season took place in Carnegie Hall on the afternoon of November 24. The reviews were quite unanimous in their praise of Mr. Hofmann's playing and couched their opinions in terms which have become familiar to readers of the Musical Digest during the past few years.

A new voice, that of Ernest Newman, was added to the others this season, and Mr. Newman agreed with his colleagues: "It may be only a personal preference but to me he is the most satisfying of living pianists —which perhaps is only another way of saying that his way of looking at music is, in a humble way, my own." Mr. Newman added that Mr. Hofmann seemed to him unique in giving him so many of the things that make music beautiful, "loveliness of tone, delicacy of shading, a fortissimo that never becomes brutal, a rhythm that can at will be either steady without monotony or varied without caprice, and above everything, the feeling that what we are listening to is not so much a performance as an improvisation, as if the music were being born then and there."

Constance McGlinchee

Constance McGlinchee, a pianist from Boston, gave a New York recital in Aeolian Hall last Tuesday afternoon. The reviewers were agreed that Miss McGlinchee showed talent and ability together with good technic, although they thought that her art needed some seasoning which might make her interpretations more individual and profound.

"Much of her work was interesting," said the Sun, commenting on the pianist's "sensitive touch, resonant, sonorous tone, vigorous style and technic, and adequate understanding." The Herald Tribune report spoke of "considerable clearness and fluency, and vigor judiciously applied." This commentator preferred the Schumann on the program to the Beethoven. The Times said, "Miss McGlinchee has a tone that is full and musical, and a good technical basis upon which to build as a virtuoso."

Examples of tone production aid both teacher and pupil

A man's voice does not demonstrate well to a woman student and vice versa, but with the actual examples of tone production are afforded for each student's type voice, and so are of invaluable assistance.

Oscar Saenger Course in Vocal Training

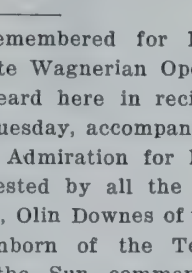
Victor Records of the Oscar Saenger Course are on sale by all dealers in Victor products. Ask to hear them.



There is but one Victrola and that is made by the Victor Company—look for these Victor trade marks

TRADE MARK
Victrola

Victor Talking Machine Company, Camden, N.J.
Victor Talking Machine Co. of Canada, Ltd., Montreal

GEORGE BOYLE

Pianist Composer

No students can be accepted during the season 1924-25
Except at
The Institute of Musical Art, New York
and
The Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
FISK BLDG., NEW YORK PENNSYLVANIA BLDG., PHILA.
STEINWAY PIANO WELTE MIGNON RECORDS

K O L I T S C H

Management: Antonia Sawyer, Inc,. Aeolian Hall, New York

MELIUS

Prima-Donna Coloratura

PARIS OPERA BERLIN OPERA

REPERTOIRE:

"Traviata"
"Rigoletto"
"Il Barbiere di Siviglia"
"Lucia di Lammermoor"

REPERTOIRE:

"Lakme"
"Romeo et Juliet"
"Il Flauto Magico"
"Martha"

Season 1923-24
41 Star Guest Operatic Appearances

BERLIN:
Grosse-Volksoper
Deutsches Opernhaus
Charlottenburg

LEIPSIC:
Stadttheater

FRANKFORT:
Staatsopera

WIESBADEN:
Staatsopera

VIENNA
Volksoper

BELGRADE:
Royal Opera

BUDAPEST:
Royal Opera

PRAGUE:
Deusche Opera

STOCKHOLM:
Royal Opera

MONTE CARLO:
Casino Opera House

RE-ENGAGED ENTIRE SEASON 1924-25

MANAGEMENT:

LOUDON CHARLTON — Carnegie Hall, New York

Alglala Given in Cleveland

Judson House in Cast of American Opera; Pavlowa Appears Again.

Cleveland, Nov. 17.—Alglala, the opera by Francesco B. De Leone of Akron and Cecil Fanning of Dayton, which was first produced some months ago in Akron, was given its local premiere at Masonic Hall last Friday evening. The performance, given under the auspices of the National Federation of Music Clubs, delighted the audience.

That the music was melodious, dramatic and original, the reviewers were agreed. There was some disagreement, however, as to its permanent value. Wilson G. Smith of the Press "ventured" his critical reputation that Mr. De Leone has the talent for operatic writing. The opera, he wrote, "abounds in ingratiating tunefulness and in the dramatic episodes reaches climaxes of intense dramatic utterance." He considered that the young American "writes spontaneously and with a facility that only those of inherent talent possess . . . moreover, it is admirably orchestrated." Mr. Smith, in spite of his enjoyment of the work, found it of interest as a novelty, but doubted its permanency.

Archie Bell wrote in the News that "the score abounds in melodies . . . not to mention excellent ensemble numbers." This chronicler also thought that Mr. De Leone displayed "much imagination and originality." Of this same opinion was James H. Rogers of the Plain Dealer. He commented that the composer was "before all a lyricist . . . not one only, but many melodies of genuine beauty are to be heard in Alglala."

The book by Cecil Fanning tells a simple Indian love story, revolving around the racial theme of the love of an Indian girl for a white man. The four principals in the cast were, according to Mr. Rogers, "uniformly excellent." Judson House, tenor, this writer thought, "one of the best of our American tenors . . . he has a ringing, resonant voice of agreeable timbre, and he uses it with commendable skill." Mr. Smith said Mr. House "displayed a tenor of decidedly pleasing quality." He "sang splendidly and acted well," according to Mr. Bell.

Janet Watts, a Cleveland singer, had a "voice of charming quality, light as to volume but clear, flexible and of good carrying power," wrote Mr. Rogers. Francis Sadlier and Cecil Fanning were both in excellent voice and heard to good effect. Other reviewers congratulated the cast for a splendid performance and Mr. Smith had "only praise to record."

The chorus also received favorable comment and of the orchestra Mr. Rogers wrote: "F. Karl Grossman conducted an efficient orchestra with his usual spirit and well routined expertness."

Anna Pavlowa and her Ballet Russe gave two performances here last week. Both were enthusiastically received. Mr. Smith found that Pavlowa "still remains the epitome of terpsichorean art . . . passing years seem to have no vitiating effect upon her grace of motion or suppleness of form." She was to Mr. Rogers "the same matchless ballerina; a slender, alluring personification of grace and charm . . . she seems to dance more exquisitely than before." This same enthusiasm was evident in Mr. Bell's review.

Both he and Mr. Rogers had a special word of praise for Mr. Oliveroff. The Voices of Spring by him and Butsova was "beautiful," wrote Mr. Bell and Mr. Rogers said Miss Stuart and Mr. Oliveroff danced a divertissement called Pastorale in a "delightful fashion."

The usual large audience attended the Symphony concert, Nikolai Sokoloff conducting, on last Thursday. And the reviewers meted out their usual lavish praise. Mr. Smith said he felt it rather a bromide to say again how excellent was the work of the orchestra. The soloists, Carlton Cooley, viola, and Arthur Beckwith, violin, occupied stellar positions. They played the Mozart Symphonie Concertante in E flat major, to quote Mr. Bell, with the perfection of one instrument, "a gorgeously toned instrument that stamped each as virtuoso offering something worthy of his best efforts." Other writers lauded their work. The program was made up of Brahms, Mozart, Wagner and Schubert.

The enthusiasm at the Sunday pop concert was marked by its spontaneity. Earle Laros, the soloist announced for the concert, was unable to appear. Instead the Prelude to Saint-Saens' Deluge was played by Concertmaster Arthur Beckwith, "fluently and warmly," as Mr. Rogers put it. Weyert A. Moor, flutist, was also applauded as soloist.

Peoria Hears San Carlo

Peoria, Nov. 22.—Under the auspices of Chas. C. Adams the San Carlo Opera Company gave a performance of Rigoletto here last night. Tina Paggi sang the role of Gilda, and the performance was directed by Aldo Franchetti. Among the recent recitalists in Peoria have been Amy Neill, violinist, who played under the auspices of the Amateur Musical Club last Thursday evening, and Edward Rechlin, organist, who three days before played works of Bach and the earlier composers at the Shrine Temple.

Mischa Levitzki will open his eighth American concert tour tomorrow evening in Wilson, N. C.

Cleveland Orchestra on Tour

Preceding its New York concert at Carnegie Hall on the evening of December 9, the Cleveland Orchestra will play at the Yale School of Music at New Haven, December 7, and Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, December 8. On the day following their New York concert Nikolai Sokoloff and his orchestra will give two concerts in Wilmington, Del., two in Harrisburg, Pa., on the 11th, and three in Pittsburgh on the 12th and 13th. Following is the program which will be presented in New York: Brahms' First Symphony; Arthur Shepherd's Overture to a Drama (New York premiere); d'Indy's La Queste de Dieu, and Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody, No. 1.

More Musicians Return

The musical world was represented on the Majestic, which arrived from England last Tuesday, by Ethel Leginska, pianist; Rudolph Polk, violinist, and Adela Verne, pianist.

GIGLI

ALMA BECK
CONTRALTO
For Bookings of Season 1924-1925 address
Alma Beck
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Fisk Bldg., N. Y. C.
or
Lucy N. Shiels
1049 Park Avenue
New York City

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway
New York City
Telephone
Endicott 6074

FORREST LAMONT
TENOR, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson
4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Aeolian Hall, New York

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

On The Music Highway

MISCHA-LEON, tenor, who made his local concert debut here a few weeks ago, will give a second recital at Aeolian Hall on Thursday evening, with Walter Golde again at the piano. Mr. Mischa-Leon will offer first a group of French and Spanish songs by Lili Boulanger, Ravel, Hue, Laparra, Roussel, and Georges, then an English group by Ireland, Hughes, Bantock, Gibbs, Butterworth, and Holbrooke, one group consisting entirely of songs by Hugo Wolf and a Scandinavian group by Lange-Miller, Grieg, Sinding, Knudsen, and Heise.

Helen Stanley, in conjunction with Paul Althouse and Arthur Middleton, sang an operatic program on November 7 in Des Moines, for the Iowa State Teachers' Association, to an audience of over 7,000. The following night Mme. Stanley and her colleagues sang another program of like character in the same city in the subscription series of concerts presented by George Ogden. Following these Des Moines appearances, each artist gave individual recitals in other Iowa cities.

Under the auspices of the Friends of Art, Elizabeth Gutman is giving a recital tonight in Baltimore. She will sing folk songs in costume. On the same evening an exhibition of paintings executed by her is to be held at the Alumnae Lodge of Goucher College, of which Miss Gutman is a graduate.

Mrs. George S. Richards, Duluth's impresario and promoter of the All Star Concert Course in Duluth and Hibbing, Minn., has just returned from a three months' tour of Europe, where she visited many of the leading opera houses, and attended the Bayreuth and Munich Festivals.

She opened her concert series in Hibbing, with Sousa's Band, matinee and evening, on October 27. Other attractions on her course there are Pavlowa and her company, and Paul Althouse and Arthur Middleton in joint recital. Her Duluth course will soon be announced.

The recital by Emilio de Gogorza, postponed from November 16, will be given this afternoon, at Aeolian Hall.

Alfred Cortot will know many crowded hours before he completes his coming tour, which begins at New York on January 24, when he is soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra. There is one stretch of nineteen days on his itinerary in which he makes eighteen appearances.

The Hart House String Quartet has been giving a series of Sunday evening recitals for the String Quartet Club of Toronto. The members of this quartet, which was formed as a permanent organization last spring, are Geza de Kresz, first violin; Harry Adaskin, second violin; Milton Blackstone, viola, and Boris Hambourg, violoncello. They also have been giving a series of five concerts at the Hart House Theatre, Toronto. The remaining concerts of the series are on December 4, January 8, and February 12.

Four negro spirituals will be sung by Charles Stratton, tenor, at his recital, December 11, at Aeolian Hall. Other songs are by Monteverde, Tarenghi, Santoliquido, Cavalli, Paladilhe, Gaubert, Schubert, Strauss, Hadley, Schindler, Vaughan Williams, Absorge, and Dickinson. Harry Oliver Hirt will be at the piano.

Tosca Seidel has just completed a tour which included more than twenty concerts in Norway.

Ruth Breton has just been engaged to be soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, New York, on December 28. Miss Breton will play the Glazounow Concerto under Henry Hadley's direction. On December 8, Miss Breton is appearing in recital in St. Paul.

The Mendelssohn Club of Philadelphia announces its fiftieth anniversary Jubilee Concert, assisted by the Philadelphia Orchestra, for February 11, at the Academy of Music. The club will give Brahms' Song of Destiny; Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise; The Uplifted Gates, by Gilchrist, which is being scored for the orchestra by N. Lindsay Norden; and Mr. Norden's orchestral sketch, Silver Plume.

A Christmas suite by Rimsky-Korsakoff will be sung by the Russian Symphonic Choir when this organization appears with the New York Symphony Orchestra on December 20 and 27. The first concert will be held at the Academy of Music in Brooklyn and the second at Carnegie Hall.

Ernst von Dohnanyi, Hungarian composer, pianist, and conductor, will invade the State of Texas on his first tour of this country, going to the Lone Star state soon after his arrival here in January. Mr. Dohnanyi has been engaged to play at the San Antonio College of Music, on January 24, and at Houston, Texas, on January 26. Mr. Dohnanyi recently appeared in recital in London.

Returning to the Manhattan Opera House for an extra week beginning Monday night, December 22, Anna Pavlowa and her Ballet Russe will give a matinee and evening performance on Christmas. Pavlowa will not return to New York in the spring as has been her custom, but will go from Los Angeles to Mexico City and then to Havana, before returning to London.

During her Christmas week engagement, her programs will feature ballets and divertissements of especial appeal to children.

Erminia Ligotti, young soprano, sang not long ago the role of Desdemona in the performance of Otello at the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia.

Planning to arrive here just before Christmas, Maria Ivogun, Hungarian coloratura soprano, will sail for New York, December 13, on the Columbus. Chicago will hear her December 30, and after that she will appear in Des Moines, at the Bagby Musicales in New York, at Lynchburg, Va., Columbus and Cleveland.

The third season of the Musical Art Society of Erie, Pa., was started on November 12, with Rhys Morgan, Welsh tenor, as soloist. Ann Wilson, contralto, and Marjorie Vail, soprano, also sang solos.

Judson House will sing the tenor role in the performance of the Verdi Requiem, which is to be given by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra in Milwaukee. He will sing in five solo appearances with that orchestra this season.

The annual series booked by Loudon Charlton in Willimantic, Conn., includes Helen Stanley, Sylvia Lent, and Lambert Murphy.

The New York String Quartet, which introduced a quartet by Paul Hindemith at one of its concerts last season, promises the first American performance of this interesting composer's third quartet at its only New York recital this year, at Aeolian Hall, on December 9.

R. E. Johnston has arranged with the Metropolis Club of New York for their annual concert in the ballroom of the Biltmore Hotel, Saturday evening, on December 20. Beniamino Gigli, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Beatrice Mack, soprano, and Eddy Brown, violinist, will appear on this occasion.

Merulla Cianci, soprano, J. Henri Bove, flutist, and Carrol Hollister, accompanist, appeared in the eleventh Story & Clark Eleventh Invitation Musical on November 13.

The second recital of Carlos Sedano, young Spanish violinist, will take place next Monday at Carnegie Hall. The program will include Cesar Franck, Mendelssohn, Glazounow, Sarasate, Lotto, Chopin-Wilhelmj, Wieniawski, and Paganini.

Charlotte Harvis, coloratura soprano, will assist Alessandro Bonci in his only New York recital of the season at the Manhattan Opera House, next Sunday afternoon.

Among recent contracts closed for William Gustafson are those for the Tuesday Musical Club, Pittsburgh, Pa., the Philharmonic Society of Newport, R. I., the Chaminade Club of Providence, R. I., the Wednesday Club of Bridgeport, Conn., Columbia University, Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston, the Friends of Music, New York City, the Oratorio Society of Hartford, Conn., and Contemporary Club of Newark, N. J.

Paul Kochanski's first New York recital is scheduled for Saturday afternoon, December 13, at which time he will play, for the first time in this city, Suite Populaire Espagnole (de Falla) and Tsigane (Ravel). The Polish violinist will also be soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra at one of its Havana concerts February next.

Louise Homer, who is now appearing as guest artist with the Chicago Civic Opera Company, will follow her appearances there with a number of concerts in Kansas City, Fall River and Boston.

Among the forthcoming engagements of Ernest Davis, tenor, are appearances in the Messiah with the Elizabeth Choral Society and in Portchester; one with the Verdi Club of New York; and one with the Morning Choral Club of Brooklyn. Mr. Davis will start on tour in January, during which he will have several concerts in Pennsylvania and which will take him as far west as Illinois and Kansas.

After her appearance at the third Biltmore Morning Musicale this Friday, Marguerite D'Alvarez will sing at the Brooklyn Apollo Club on December 9, at the Plaza Hotel on December 11, and with the Schola Cantorum at Carnegie Hall on December 30.

ANNE ROSELLE
PRIMA DONNA SOPRANO
Exclusive Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall New York City

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1924
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

ARMAND TOKATYAN TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York City
Season 1924-1925 Now Being Booked

Federation Holds Its Board Meeting

Music Club Officers Convene for Five Day Session in Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh, Nov. 22.—With an attendance which included thirty-five of the forty-five members of the Board and twenty-one State Presidents from all over the country, the annual fall Board meeting of the National Federation of Music Clubs took place at the Hotel Schenley here beginning on November 17 and ending yesterday.

Much of the time was devoted by Mrs. John F. Lyons, president, who was in the chair, to the furthering of plans for the coming biennial convention at Portland, Ore., next June 6 to 14. A tentative program was arranged for this convention, to include meetings and conferences of the Board; reports and meetings of the various departments, including extension, education, junior, publicity; competitions for young artist and other winners of district contests; and premiere of the American opera of Frank Patterson, The Echo.

The principal feature of the Board meeting was the completing of the fund of $2,000 by the Past Presidential Assembly for scholarships. The New England Conservatory, Cincinnati Conservatory, Curtis Institute of Music, and the Institute of Musical Art each consented to provide one scholarship for a year of study including living expenses. Mr. Damrosch, director of the last named school, has also accepted the post of Honorary Chairman of the educational department of the Federation of Music Clubs.

The reports of the various departments included that of the American Music Department on its work in securing performance for three American operas, Alglala, which has already been given in Cleveland; Ralph Lyford's Castle Agrazabt, to be given in January in Cincinnati, and The Echo, mentioned above. The Junior Department reported on its course of study for the young, and the Extension Department on the increase in the number of music clubs throughout the United States.

Other details of organization and of extension of the work of the National Federation of Music Clubs were taken up, including the invitations from Boston, Hot Springs, and Chattanooga for the 1927 biennial. Final choice has been postponed.

Golden Jubilee for Harpist

Miss Maud Morgan, the harpist, celebrated her golden jubilee on the evening of November 22 in Carnegie Hall, New York. Her career began in 1874, when she accompanied the violinist Ole Bull. The Central Society of Harpists, of which Miss Morgan is president; the Rubinstein Club, fifty local harpists; Herbert Dittler, violinist, and Dr. William C. Carl, organist, assisted in the testimonial.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

Gerhardt Soloist With St. Louis Orchestra

Jacobsen Plays in Pop Concert; Van Gordon, Carreras and Hayes in Recital.

St. Louis, Nov. 22.—The past week has been one of unusual musical activity here. In addition to the regular concert of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra there was the second "pop" concert and the first of a series by the orchestra for school children. Among the recitalists were Cyrena van Gordon, Maria Carreras, Roland Hayes, Royal Dadmun and Margaret Salsman.

At the regular concert of the orchestra, Rudolph Ganz conducting, Elena Gerhardt was the soloist and was enthusiastically applauded. Richard L. Stokes of the Post-Dispatch said that "her voice has an individual and kindling timbre. Effortless is her command of the niceties of tone color, of gracefully carved phrasing, of intricate rhythm." The Globe-Democrat writer, Richard Spamer, considered that Mme. Gerhardt sang the Wolf and Strauss lieder "with a lyric completeness that made of them grand opera arias in impressiveness."

Sascha Jacobsen, soloist at the "pop" concert, received generally commendatory reviews. The writers found him a young violinist of promise with technical skill and musical understanding. The Post-Dispatch lauded him for an "excellent tone, an informed musicianship and a practical skill. . . ."

Miss van Gordon's recital brought a large audience to the Odeon November 18. Her program was a lengthy one and she was gracious with encores. Mme. Carreras played a formidable program in a way that delighted her audience at her concert on Friday. The Globe-Democrat discovered in her playing "power, brilliancy and finesse." Roland Hayes, tenor, in his recital for the benefit of of the St. Louis Colored Orphans' Home, was extremely well received. Mr. Stokes said that he sang Mozart, Handel and Schubert "with almost flawless art." Blanche Furth Ullman said he sang with "exquisite artistry."

The Morning Choral Club's Members' Day recital drew a large attendance to hear Royal Dadmun, baritone, and Mrs. Margaret O'Connor Salsman, harpist. Both were warmly applauded.

Little Opera Starts Career

The Little Opera of America, organized to foster an American equivalent for the French Opera Comique, announces as its first presentation Mandragola, a Florentine romance by Alfred Kreymbourg, with music by Ignatz Waghalter. Eleanor Painter will sing the part of Donna Beatrice, which role she has already sung in Berlin. The composer will conduct the Little Opera performance.

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

GITTA GRADOVA
Gave a Piano Recital in Aeolian Hall Last Wednesday Evening.

Liebling Plays at Met

George Liebling, European pianist, who made his American debut not long ago, appeared for the second time in New York at the third of the Metropolitan Opera House Sunday evening concerts. He played Liszt's E flat Concerto and a solo group. The Herald Tribune report said, "Vigorous and effective brilliance characterized his performance," and the Sun found "again the talents of an artist with an impressive range of dynamics and a wealth of ability in tonal brilliance and technical achievements." Other soloists on the program were Queena Mario, Jeanne Gordon, Ralph Errolle and Millo Picco, with the Metropolitan orchestra, conducted by Paul Eisler.

American Organist Plays

An American organist, Richard Keys Biggs, appeared in recital at Town Hall last Tuesday evening. "He played with admirable command of the technic of his instrument and he imbued his various readings with sympathy and good style," said the review in the Sun. The Herald Tribune limited its analysis to the report that Mr. Biggs "showed a thorough acquaintance with the organ in general." A large audience applauded Mr. Biggs. The other newspapers did not carry critical reports of the concert.

Arriving Today
on
Steamer "Conte Verde"
"The Roman Choir"
Ensemble of Soloists
Including:
CAVALIERE GIUSEPPE GIORGI, celebrated dramatic tenor and cousin of His Eminence, Cardinal Giorgi of Rome; REVEREND ANTONIO GRIMALDI, basso at the Sistine Chapel for sixteen years; CARLO LUZZANI, leading soprano, and whose voice has won for him the title of the "second Farinelli;" ROBERTO PAGLIARANI, who recently sang at the Costanzi Theatre, Rome, in "MEPHISTOPHELES" with the great Italian basso, GIOVANNI de ANGELIS; PIETRO BARCHI, splendid tenor and favorite pupil of the great teacher Cotogni; also other eminent OPERA and CHURCH singers, including basso, GUIDI; baritones, BOSCHI, AUGELLO and LAZZARINI; male sopranos, FERRI, CHIRONI and MELAPIONI; tenor, FARINA; male contraltos, MAZZETTI, RANCHERO and TACCINI; also CAVALIERE ANGELO NEGRI, celebrated Roman composer, pianist and organist.
Alluring programs of classical sacred music (in Latin and Italian), favorite grand opera selections, popular Neapolitan folk songs, specially arranged choruses, solos, duets, trios, quartets and sextets, with piano and organ accompaniment.
For American-Canadian concert dates apply quickly to FRANK W. HEALY
SOLE MANAGER
906 Kohler & Chase Bldg.
San Francisco, California

Hutcheson Plays Classic Music

In his second concert in Aeolian Hall, Nov. 22, Ernest Hutcheson played Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven works.

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals, After January, 1925
Brunswick Records Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND
Tenor
CONCERT—RECITAL—ORATORIO
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

CYRENA VAN GORDON
Prima Donna Mezzo Contralto Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management:
For the East: R. E. Johnston, 1451 Broadway, New York City
For the West: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

THE MUSICAL DIGEST

A TENOR ARMORED: And prepared otherwise for a Wagnerian role. He is Rudolf Laubenthal of the Metropolitan.

TINA FILIPPONI is her name. She is a newcomer pianiste who is to make her American debut in New York early in February next.

AN OBLIGING pianiste is e-cile de Horvath, for here is (pictorially) paddling canoe for herself and her hus-band.

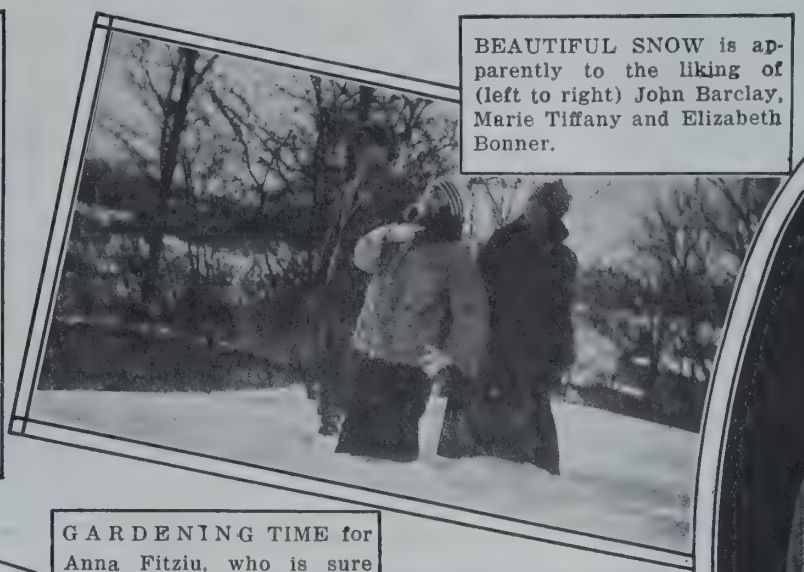
A PUZZLE PICTURE: Which is the better singer, Amelita Galli-Curci or Jack Dempsey?

GENUINE TALENT is conceded to Shura Cherkassky by experts; and they predict for him a glowing future—and before long.

AN ATTRACTIVE prima donna is Edith Mason . . . . with an equally attractive fan. The American soprano is again with the Chicago Opera.

IN A NEW RO Here is Albert S ding, generally a rable as a violi venturing mid unique sting show his pianis skill.

PICTORIAL SECTION



BEAUTIFUL SNOW is apparently to the liking of (left to right) John Barclay, Marie Tiffany and Elizabeth Bonner.

GARDENING TIME for Anna Fitziu, who is sure such practice helps the voice.

PABLO CASALS, pausing in his New York home after a practice hour with his 'cello.

WELL DISGUISED as the False Dimitri, in Boris Godunuff. The tenor is Forrest Lamont of the Chicago Opera Company.

RISON is ure sing-fitting to la bull's-ak.

A REUNION: The tenor, Mario Chamlee, and his former teacher, Signor Albertieri, meeting in latter's California studio.

EASY when you know how. But it took Rosina Galli years to acquire technic for this feat, as performed at the Metropolitan.

RALPH

ERROLLE

American Lyric Tenor

RECEIVES OVATION

as

ROMEO

when called before the curtain at the end of act four at his

Metropolitan Debut

on Nov. 8, 1924

The New York Telegraph states that he could become "A RARE COMBINATION of a MURATORE and a DE RESZKE," and other critics write as follows:

"He sang with an excellence of elegance and suavity."—New York Sun.

"The youthful tenor essayed the role of the tragic lover in the presence of a crowded house and with results which were attested by the enthusiasm of the audience."—New York Post.

"The new Romeo had youth in his favor and he met intelligently the unaccustomed surroundings. He scored an ardent burst of applause after the balcony scene."—New York Times.

"In the evening another throng welcomed the latest American tenor."—New York Evening Telegram.

"The audience was immediately impressed by his beautiful, well modulated voice, as well as the excellent style and warmth of his interpretation."—New York Staats-Zeitung.

"He has a beautiful lyric tenor voice. Last night he showed elegance and distinction and his French enunciation was impeccably correct."—New York Telegraph.

Management

DANIEL MAYER

Aeolian Hall — New York

Personal Representative

JOHN BELLUCCI

1452 Broadway

New York

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Stefi Geyer Soloist With Verbrugghen

Schmitz Assists in Other Minneapolis Orchestra Concert; Play Stravinsky's Petroushka.

Minneapolis, Nov. 15.—Stefi Geyer, young Swiss violinist, and E. Robert Schmitz, pianist, were soloists at the second and third concerts of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra respectively. At the concert a week ago, Henri Verbrugghen conducting, the usual symphony was dispensed with, and Dvorak's Symphonic Variations were played instead. Other numbers were the Brandenburg Concerto in G major by Bach and the Queen Mab scherzo from Berlioz's Romeo and Juliet. Typical of critical opinion was the comment in the Tribune that "Mr. Verbrugghen had his men thoroughly in hand."

Mlle. Geyer, who made her American debut in this performance, played Spohr's Eighth Violin Concerto in A minor with a tone that was, to quote Victor Nilsson of the Journal, "very smooth and musical and of considerable carrying power." Other reviews were equally laudatory. The Pioneer Press discovered this same "refinement of style and sensitive musical judgment." Her tone, wrote this reviewer, was "beautiful" and she played with "imagination, poetic insight and instinctive grace of expression. . . . She is a violinist to be remembered and to be welcomed."

James Davies of the Tribune characterized her as "one of the most satisfying violinists in the concert field. . . . She is that anomaly, a rationalist in musical art." This writer asserted that he had seldom heard a purer tone.

The Concerto was applauded vigorously and Mlle. Geyer responded with several encores.

At the concert last night the program, according to Mr. Nilsson, was performed "with excellent ensemble and much exquisite solo work." Mr. Verbrugghen introduced two new compositions: Stravinsky's Petroushka Suite and Mozart's Seventh Serenade. Mr. Nilsson thought the Stravinsky music clever and ingenious and the Mozart played particularly well. His enthusiasm for Mr. Schmitz's rendition of Cesar Franck's Symphonic Variations was echoed by other reviewers. Of him he wrote: "Enthusiastically received, Mr. Schmitz responded with a powerful and clear cut performance of Bach's A minor Organ Prelude and Fugue in the Tausig arrangement, and with a tender and sweet interpretation of Couperin's Sister Monica."

To Conduct Alliance Players

The Amateur Symphony Orchestra of the Educational Alliance will have as its conductor Richard Hageman, former conductor of the Metropolitan and Chicago opera companies.

Vincent Lopez Makes Concert Appearance

Leads Orchestra of 40 in New York Program as Preface to Concert Tour.

"Strange sounds filled the auditorium of the Metropolitan Opera House yesterday afternoon," wrote the reviewer of the Sun of the first concert appearance of Vincent Lopez and his Jazz Orchestra of forty players on November 23, but he added, "Opera could not be forgotten, for there were reminiscences of the song of the Queen in Coq d'Or, and Borrah Minevitch played the siren song of Delilah on a mouth harmonica."

As usual in their reports of concerts of jazz orchestra the reviewers commented on the dexterity of the musicians, and this time the leader, Mr. Lopez, who played the piano, shared the admiration. Several of the reviewers were agreed that as serious music what the jazz on the program lacked was originality, although, as the Sun put it, "The jazz composers are more brilliantly successful when jazzing up other people's music than when striving to deal with matters outside their realm." This observer called them "matchless" in their own style. The Herald Tribune also reported great skill in "instrumentation and combinations of sonorities" as being the outstanding feature of Mr. Lopez' appearance.

The reviewer of the Mail Telegram was convinced that Mr. Lopez' coming tour "is certain of success if the reception he received at his first concert is to be taken as a criterion." The catchiness of rhythm praised by this reviewer was not so well received by Deems Taylor of the World, who thought that after a short time it appeared monotonous and standardized. The Post reporter also found that the jazz instrumentation and the players' virtuosity stood out, and he regretted that Mr. Lopez himself was at the piano so little.

ELVIRA DE HIDALGO
Who Sang Rosina in the Barber of Seville at the Metropolitan Last Thursday, Reappearing With the Company After an Absence of Some Years.

Seattle Hears Organists

Seattle, Nov. 20.—Two organists were among the recent recitalists here. The veteran Clarence Eddy was heard at the First Presbyterian Church on November 5, and the Seattle Organists' Club presented Charles M. Courboin in a recital in the Plymouth Church auditorium ten days later.

Riccardo Martin was recitalist last Thursday evening in the latter hall, and Gideon Hicks, Canadian baritone, gave the first concert of the series by the newly established Palmerton-Mendel Concert Bureau. Mr. Hicks took the place at the last moment of Louis Kreidler, who was ill.

The opening morning musical of the year under the sponsorship of the Seattle Musical Art Society was given last evening by the Spargur Quartet. The program included compositions of Haydn, Goossens and Howells.

Violinists Play With Symphony Society

Chemet, Kochanski and Spalding Soloists in Two Damrosch Programs.

Three violinists, Renee Chemet, Paul Kochanski and Albert Spalding, were heard as soloists at the last two programs offered by the New York Symphony Orchestra at their regular Thursday-Friday pair of concerts on November 20 and 21 and the following Sunday afternoon concert at Aeolian Hall.

Mr. Spalding and Mr. Kochanski, wrote W. J. Henderson in the Sun, "gave a performance of uplifting beauty" of the Bach Concerto for two violins and orchestra at the earlier concerts. "They played together with so much finish, such loveliness of tone and such devotion to the spirit of Bach, whose music they evidently felt to be very much alive, that they aroused the audience to a genuine enthusiasm." This statement of Mr. Henderson's is typical of the press comment. Deems Taylor of the World considered it "a rare privilege to hear Kochanski and Spalding play it . . . the two played with such warmth and expressiveness, such understanding of the music and each other, such selfless devotion to the common task as to make the occasion . . . memorable." The "delight of the evening" to Ernest Newman of the Post was the Bach—"a model of pure line drawing."

The rest of the program consisted of Brahms' Third Symphony and Scriabine's Poeme de l'Extase. This last, Ernest Newman felt, was played with too little abandon.

On Sunday, after Mozart's Jupiter Symphony as an opening, Mme. Chemet played the F minor Violin Concerto of Edouard Lalo. Mr. Newman thought she displayed "a thoroughly sympathetic understanding of this thoroughly French music." Although considering her a brilliant violinist who played with facility, "dash and vigor," Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune thought her tone rather hard. The Sun writer congratulated Mme. Chemet for "the admirable skill, appreciation, spirit and authority" with which she played. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram and Mail found her "delightful."

Following this was "a brilliant rendering," as the Sun said, given by Mr. Damrosch at the piano, Mr. Pollain conducting, and Vladimir Drucker, trumpet, of Saint-Saens' Septet for trumpet, piano and strings. The final number was Lazare Saminsky's Lament of Rachel. Mr. Gilman said that, although his music was "always worth studying and hearing," it was not quite effective at that hearing. On the other hand, the Sun thought that with its "rich orchestral color," in spite of some uncertain moments, "made quite an impressive effect of mood."

Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Mason & Hamlin Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE.
NEW YORK

FRANCES PERALTA
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
MANAGEMENT: NATIONAL CONCERTS, INC., 1451 Broadway, New York

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

Two Orchestras Play in Boston

Henry Hadley Leads People's Symphony; Apollo Club and Recitalists.

Boston, Nov. 24.—An one hundred and fifty year old novelty was the feature of the sixth concert last Friday of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. It was Boccherini's Symphony in C major which was composed in 1775. The playing of this, of Mozart's Overture to the Marriage of Figaro, and of Debussy's La Mer, were particularly well liked by the reviewers. The other two numbers, Rachmaninoff's The Isle of the Dead and Rimsky-Korsakoff's Caprice on Spanish Themes were thought below average both in content and in rendition.

The Transcript reviewer, H. T. P., was of the opinion that Mr. Koussevitzky conducted unevenly, but S. M. of the Christian Science Monitor was equally convinced that the performance "showed Mr. Koussevitzky in a better light as an interpreter than have the preceding five . . . he and the orchestra seemed more in each other's confidence and the sympathy between them was clearly evident in the quality of the performance." Philip Hale of the Herald said the Mozart was played brilliantly and "at a swift pace that did not forbid clarity, grace and elegance." Opposed to the other writers who found the novelty unusually interesting was Warren Storey Smith of the Post who, although admitting that it had its "moments," thought it merely "tepid."

The playing of the Mozart and Boccherini was commended by Mr. Parker, but he did not like the playing of the Rachmaninoff or Rimsky-Korsakoff.

Another event of the week in symphonic music was the fourth concert yesterday afternoon of the People's Symphony, conducted by Henry Hadley of New York Philharmonic Orchestra. The chief item on the program was Mr. Hadley's First Symphony, Youth and Life, composed in 1896, but never before heard in Boston. Other compositions played were: Vivaldi's Concerto in A minor for string orchestra, and the Oberon Overture of Weber.

Despite a certain conventionality which the Globe reviewer found in the Symphony, he admitted that it did not lack originality and power. He thought it an "interesting, effectively written work" judged by the standards of 1896, and showing great talent. The Transcript chronicler considered it "high-spirited, at times almost elusive," and E. G. of the Herald thought it "nervous music . . . . exuberant, precocious, bombastic at times, there is no marked philosophic progression, and the riotous youth of the finale still exults in his careless vigor, rather than in the joyous strength that is the result of conflict."

Mr. Hadley's conducting of his composition was unanimously lauded. "With his customary amazing and tearing energy," he spared neither himself nor his orchestra, wrote E. G. In the Globe it was said that he "gave an eloquent reading of his own work" and the Transcript characterized him as "dynamic and compelling."

The fifty-fourth season of the Apollo Club was opened with a concert, Emil Mollenhauer conductor, last Tuesday night. The club was assisted by Richard Crooks, tenor, Frank H. Luker, pianist, and E. Rupert Sircom, organist. D. McC. wrote in the Transcript that the voices were "clear, strong, animated; attacks sharp, incisive, exact, yet free from the suggestion of a staccato quality; and the romantic spirit is not far removed . . ."

Mr. Mollenhauer was congratulated by Philip Hale for bringing the club "to a remarkably high degree of technical proficiency; more than this, the members sing with rhetorical as well as musical intelligence."

On last Thursday evening, Harry Farbman, violinist, gave a recital in Jordan Hall. He was accompanied by Carl Lamson. The artist received the enthusiastic praise of the critical audience. Writing in the Transcript, C. S. S. did not hesitate to dub him "unquestionably a new violinist of the first rank . . . one readily recognizes in him the master musician." This commentator liked particularly his lack of mannerisms and found in his playing technical excellence but not "technical display."

More or less agreed was R. R. G. of the Herald who reported Mr. Farbman is a musician "with passion in his musical nature, and poetry and, most important of all, charm." The Christian Science Monitor found in his recital technical resources, an "exceptionally clear and crystalline" tone, and the same lack of affectation admired by C. S. S.

An organ recital was heard in the same hall the next night. Marcel Dupre, French organist, played Franck's Chorale in A minor, Bach's Fugue in D major, pieces by Delamarter and Jepson and an organ symphony of his own composition. The Monitor said that Mr. Dupre again "gave proof of those powers which have placed him in the front rank of interpretative musicians, and again he gave proof of a command and understanding of the organ . . . which makes him a unique figure in the world of organists."

Other recitalists of the week were: Sergei Rachmaninoff, who was greeted by an unusually large and responsive audience; Harrison Potter, pianist; Rose Armandie, soprano, and Clara Haskil, pianist; Reina M. Falardeau, soprano; and Kate Friskin, pianist.

MAY PETERSON

VOCALION RECORDS

SOPRANO Formerly Opera Comique and Metropolitan Opera Company

Exclusive Management: HAENSEL & JONES, AEOLIAN HALL
NEW YORK CITY

At Her First New York Recital of This Season

FRANCES NASH

"Well illustrated the progress made by this American pianist in the last few seasons."—(N. Y. Tribune.)

"There was a virility of thinking, a firm drawing of melodic lines and a handling of musical masses which seized the attention of the listener and never allowed it to wander. Miss Nash played with insight, conviction and enthusiasm that was contagious."—(N. Y. Times.)

The New York Times.
(November 8th, 1924.)

"Some people, when they wish to denote that a pianist has a dry style, say that he or she is 'intellectual.' It is a misleading classification. Obviously an artist cannot have too much intellect or bring too much thought to bear upon a creative or interpretative act. What is meant is actually that the artist has too little emotion, that there is nothing but the intellect in his playing, which, when it is true, is a very difficult thing. These things are remarked apropos of the piano recital given yesterday afternoon by Frances Nash in Aeolian Hall. Miss Nash has shown unmistakable talent before this, and her right to be taken seriously as an artist.

Yesterday she showed a finer intellectual grip of her material than at any previous appearance of hers that this writer has attended. There was a virility of thinking, a firm drawing of melodic lines and a handling of musical masses which seized the attention of the listener and never allowed it to wander. Miss Nash played with insight, conviction and enthusiasm that was contagious.

The program was unconventional: Ravel's delightful sonatine, Chopin's B minor sonata, three 'Movements Perpetuals,' by Francois Poulenc; six compositions, from Kodaly's opus 3, and Liszt's 'Le Leggierizza,' and Fifteenth Rhapsody for a more conventional ending. There were certain defects in the performance—notably a tendency to blur with the pedal, and the sonorities that were too thick—a tone usually overheavy in the lower registers of the instrument, but these were minor deficiencies of interpretations always personal and authoritative in spirit. It is either a very little or a good deal to say that a pianist is 'interesting' in these days of schools and shoals of virtuosi, young and old, who flood the concert halls from Fall to Spring. Miss Nash is really an interesting pianist; one who has legitimately made her way as an artist, and whom the musical observer makes a mental note to watch in future seasons."

The New York Herald and Tribune.
(November 8th, 1924.)

"Displays Skill," "Selects Program with Care, Revealing Technique and Flavor."

"Frances Nash, who made her first appearance of the season yesterday at Aeolian Hall, is not one of those who seem to select their programs from the Twenty Most Popular Numbers of the last hundred recitals. Instead of an eighteenth century work in a nineteenth century dress, Miss Nash began with Ravel's Sonatine, a work that might well be heard more often, and followed the Chopin B minor sonata—the one without the funeral march—with a series of short pieces by Francois Poulenc and Zoltan Kodaly, before ending with Liszt.

Miss Nash, who had shown a skilled, somewhat flavorless technique, two seasons ago, and more temperament and expression last season, brought plenty of both to yesterday's performance, and color and intelligence were well combined in the Chopin sonata. Miss Nash understood the work, and never lost sight of its fundamental ideas and after a little too continuous vigor in the first movement, produced fluent lightness and sonorous emphasis where they were due in the other three. The performance well illustrated the progress made by this American pianist in the last few seasons.

Poulenc's three 'Movements Perpetuals' brought in two tunes of a familiar sound, the second resembling a phrase from the Volga Boat Song. These and the six pieces of varying mood, and pace from Kodaly's opus 3, had a mildly acid, undoubtedly latter day flavor, but far from an extreme one."

(These Press Reports are reprinted exactly and without cut)

Direction of EVELYN HOPPER
Aeolian Hall New York

Ampico Records Chickering Piano

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

MAYOR HYLAN, of New York City, appears to be insistent on establishing — somewhere in our midst—a music center. Defeated in his efforts to acquire for that purpose a part of Central park the mayor has shifted to the Bronx, where the Jerome park reservoir is declared available.

Upon this Mayor Hylan desires to have erected a "Music and Industrial High School" wherein music in all its branches will be taught, and also dancing, and the drama arts (though the official statement coming from Chamberlain Berolzheimer miscalls them "dramatic" arts. They doubtless will prove dramatic enough if the project ever comes to pass).

Following a dinner held recently by Mayor Hylan's music committee in the Waldorf-Astoria hotel it was announced that some of the school funds could be used to defray a part of the expense for erecting a building containing a large auditorium suitable for opera, a chamber music hall, a modern theatre, a dance hall, gymnasium, class rooms, and practise studios.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION would have jurisdiction over this proposed institution. Its object, states the announcement given to the press, will be "to foster the love and appreciation of good music and, further, to provide instruction to all eligible candidates."

Such a project, were it possible to disassociate it from politics, offers certain admirable features. But under the Hylan administration—or any similar administration—it will not be disassociated from politics. On the contrary it will be tied so fast to poltical practices long common in New York as to interfere seriously with any adequate functioning.

Mayor Hylan and those of his lieutenants who have stood with him in his efforts to identify himself with the city's municipal music activities have not created for themselves an impregnable position. Every move has smacked of a desire to emblazon the name of Hylan on the public music escutcheon. The methods have been harsh and bold and uncompromising.

ONLY last summer some person in authority amongst the mayor's official family caused programs to be printed for the Edwin Franko Goldman band concerts held in Central Park which gave the credit for those concerts to Hylan. As a matter of fact Hylan had nothing to do with them. The City of New York had nothing to do with them. Mr. and Mrs. Murry Guggenheim and Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim contributed the $10,000 fund which made them possible. Their names as the donors appeared on the programs until the interfering public officer caused them to be removed.

New York has dirty streets; streets wherein the pavements are in need of repair; crime on the rampage; public school needs which are not provided for; parks so badly kept as to be unsightly, and other municipal shortcomings directly chargeable to the Hylan administration.

If Hylan is reelected there is nothing in his official record to lead to the belief that he will better it. Nor is it likely that any mayor who succeeds him—if he be inclined to do what Hylan has done—will be an improvement.

That is why I cannot enthuse over the Hylan plan for a Music and Industrial High School. It has, at this distance, too much the appearance of a medium of further publicity for a man who seems to like that better than performing his duties as many feel he should, and of being in addition a "good thing" for political office holders.

CHARLES HENRY MELTZER has contributed an article to the current issue of The American Mercury wherein he repeats what he has previously stated elsewhere, his objections to what he alleges in substance to be persistent discrimination against the American composer of opera and American opera singers.

Mr. Meltzer makes the direct charge that the managements of the New York Metropolitan and the Chicago opera companies are opposed to giving fair opportunities to present with reasonable frequency American operas, and opposed as well to permitting Americans to appear in leading roles.

The article is headed "The Ring that Rules Our Opera," and it doesn't mince words. Charles Henry is nothing, if not frank, but his arguments might carry a stronger appeal if he were to have accorded the credit which seems due for some of the things done by the two organizations mentioned which recognized American creative and interpretative effort.

Mr. Meltzer does not make it clear whether he favors the complete exclusion of all foreign made operas, and all foreign singers and conductors. I cannot feel that he holds any such belief, for if the standard opera repertoire were to be squelched in the Metropolitan and the Chicago Auditorium there would scarcely be enough first-rate American works to take their place.

And while we unquestionably have some splendid American opera principals, it would be no easy task to conduct two such opera institutions as those named with casts and conductors completely American.

MY SYMPATHIES are with any practicable movement to further the best interests of all that is deserving in American opera.

When an admittedly fine opera score is created by an American it deserves to be recognized—either by the Metropolitan or by the Chicago opera managements.

When there appears an unquestionably capable American singer who is fitted through resources and experience to be entrusted with leading roles that singer should be given leading roles . . . by either the Metropolitan or the Chicago companies.

At the Metropolitan one discovers quite regularly in the casts the names Rosa Ponselle, Mario Chamlee, Clarence Whitehill, Florence Easton, Queena Mario, Ralph Errolle, Jeanne Gordon, Frances Peralta, Merle Alcock, Nina Morgana, Edward Johnson in first roles. Secondary parts—some of them highly important, being almost first parts—are assumed by other Americans.

The same is true in the Chicago company, where strictly first role American artists include Edith Mason, Charles Hackett, Alfred Piccaver, Cyrena Van Gordon, Kathryn Meisle, Florence Macbeth, Charles Marshall, Mary McCormic and Forrest Lamont.

On a percentage comparative basis it appears that the United States fares about as well as any other nation in having its singers represented in leading roles.

THERE can be no questioning the fact that the managerial inclination—in both the companies referred to—is towards what is operatically foreign. Yet is there not some reason therefor? These managements must consider the demands of the public to which they cater . . . a demand which indisputably is for considerable of what is made in and what comes from Europe.

If Metropolitan or Chicago patrons were offered an operatic diet consisting wholly of home-made works interpreted by home bred singers would they be satisfied? They would not, and no one knows that better than Charles Henry Meltzer.

At present writing the backbone of opera in this or in any other country must be made up of Italian, German, and French operas. And in the United States the distinguished singing artist is in such demand that he or she (regardless of nationality) must be engaged if pretentious opera is to succeed.

WHAT THIS COUNTRY requires —and as quickly as it can be rightly brought about—is a company specializing in opera in English. It ought to be heard and seen in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, and other important centers.

Such an organization, offering an adequate number of American operas interpreted by American singers, could serve as the vehicle to develop what Mr. Meltzer terms an American School of Opera.

But it will require money to carry through such a project. It will take time to develop it because we have as yet not enough first-rate composers writing in the opera idiom. Wherefore, during the early period of operation, such an organization would be compelled, of necessity, to use much of the repertoire which now prevails at the New York Metropolitan or in the Chicago Auditorium.

The American School of Operatic Art is designed to function along these lines, and next Spring it will begin to do so.

WHOEVER CRITICISES the methods which obtain in either of our two foremost opera houses should offer methods of substitution which can be practically applied. There can be no gainsaying that in both those opera houses errors of commission and omission are going on. Neither is perfect, or close to what is perfect. But could any such radical changes as Mr. Meltzer apparently has in mind be introduced without endangering the permanency of those organizations?

It would be interesting to have Mr. Meltzer's plan—if he has one—in complete detail. And if he has any such plan, or can work one out, I will give it space in this department.

MORRIS BAGBY was the pioneer in offering in a hotel a series of musicales. They are known everywhere as the Bagby Morning Musicales; they are held in the ball-room of New York's Waldorf-Astoria hotel; they are unique.

Mr. Bagby is a keen judge of what is excellent in music and its interpretation. He has the ability to distinguish with corresponding facility what is not of that order. For years Mr. Bagby has upheld the artistic standards established at the outset of his enterprise. He has rendered a genuine service to the music art, to musicians, and to his discriminating and exclusive clientele.

R. E. Johnston's Biltmore Morning Musicales, of more recent origin, have won deserved recognition. Now we have two other series of similar affairs: One held in the Plaza hotel, under the management of Andres de Segurola, the other being conducted by Paul Longone at the Ritz Carlton.

Other cities, following New York's fashion, are fortunate in a proportionate degree. The possibilities in this specialized field of endeavor appear to be limitless.

DOWN IN NEW ORLEANS music still thrives, through the French Opera passed out some time ago. There is much culture there, and it appears to recognize what is musically worthy. In a recent issue of the New Orleans States, one of the leading daily newspapers, there appeared an editorial of which the following is a large part:

"New Orleans is to be congratulated on the fact that, unlike New York, it is able to hear some of the world's greatest artists at a purely nominal cost, John M'Cormack, for instance, supreme as a tenor.

"The city's obligation is to the Philharmonic Society, which for years has been making a struggle to encourage the coming of the stars of music and which opened its season last week with an artist who made a most profound impression on the public, and to Mr. Robert Tarrant whose enterprise has been a source of so much delight to music lovers.

Mr. Tarrant's series of five concerts is to open on Monday evening with the DeReszke Singers. Others on Mr. Tarrant's list for this season are Myra Hess, Cecil Arden, Kathryn Meisle, and John M'Cormack.

"Seats for the entire series of five, with no favoritism shown in their distribution, call for a subscription of only $5, making the price of each concert but $1.

"An impresorio or a society like Mr. Tarrant and the Philharmonics, who work out plans by which we may have the finest of artists come hither, are not only to be regarded as pathfinders but entitled to the generous support of so music-loving a community as New Orleans."

ANTONIA SAWYER, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York City

PRESENTS

Photo by Morse, N. Y.

VLADO

KOLITSCH

Violinist

New York Recital: Carnegie Hall, January 27th, 1925

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

Intermezzo Triumphs in Dresden

Reviewers Unanimously Approve Strauss' Music but Differ Regarding Libretto.

Dresden.

At this late date Strauss has again scored a victory. His comedy, Intermezzo, has just had its premiere in Dresden, conducted by Fritz Busch, and the performance was attended with all the warmth of reception and the air of success which were lacking when Schlagobers, the ballet, was presented for the first time last spring.

The reviewers assembled from far and wide in the capital of Saxony, and wired their approval without delay back to their newspapers in Berlin, Vienna, Prague, Munich, Hamburg and the other cities.

The music of Intermezzo triumphed unreservedly, but concerning the libretto of Strauss there was difference of opinion. The controversies grew for the most part out of the question of taste involved in the construction of the story on an incident in the life of the composer himself. Not only he (Conductor Storch) and his wife were recognizable in the plot, but also a number of other persons well known in the music world.

On the one hand there was, for example, the opinion of the reviewer of the Prague Bohemia, who called the story "tasteless fun," and on the other there were the persons who appreciated the harmlessness of the work, and had considerable pleasure from seeing on the stage characters whom they knew in real life. To the most favorable of the writers present Strauss seemed actually to be inaugurating a new style in operatic writing.

Music Captivates

If part of the public was not much interested in the plot or in the controversy as to whether a composer has a right to be as candid as Strauss has chosen to be in this case, there was no doubt as to their interest in the music. Writing in the Hamburg Fremdenblatt, Prof. Chevalley said that "Intermezzo stood its test by being effective from the first moment on." The Munich reviewer emphasized the charm of the finely pointed wit, and also the "splendid swing" of the music, which nevertheless was without any shocking details of technic, either melodic or harmonic.

The Neues Wiener Journal reported to its readers in Strauss' home city that "his success increased from scene to scene." This writer said: "The music is pure Strauss, full of fragrance and sweetness. The performance was perfectly finished; the orchestra sounded magnificent. As he has always done in each successive new work, Strauss has given the instruments new and interesting tasks throughout the score."

The reviewer of Prague Bohemia, although he found fault with the libretto, changed his tune in speaking of the score: "It is true that the music is popular, but it is pure Strauss. The composer has managed to write a score that in every measure accentuates without distorting the spoken word."

Action and Music Blended

The same fact was stressed by Dr. Schmidt: "Never could one dissociate the word and action from the music. The older opera used to distinguish the spoken dialogue from the song. In the former the composers provided the progress of the action, and in the latter they presented simply feeling. Since the Romanticists and Wagner we have been observing experiments to blend both of these forms of expression. Now Strauss does something different. He takes the singing part of the opera proper, and transfers it to the orchestra, which gives it in the form of symphonic intermezzo. On the stage he puts a mixture of sung and spoken dialogue.

"This allows in the changes in the plot the greatest liberty and subtlety in the gradation of various moods. Thus Strauss accomplishes an unprecedented distinctness in the presentation of the actors' words, and the audience never for a moment loses track of what is going on in the development of the story."

Max Marschalk, reviewer of the Berliner Vossiche Zeitung, said: "We can find in musical literature no example which so perfectly subjects pure music to the music of the spoken word, and which yet preserves an untrammeled independence. In his Intermezzo Strauss gives us not only a distinctly comprehensible story, but also pure music, sensual, infatuating music—which in the play sometimes ironises the dramatic situations and sometimes rises to the highest plane of tragedy. Yes, Strauss can still put them all in his little pocket, those who are writing music today! The most daring and skillful of the youths have still much to learn from him."

Performance Excels

Undivided praise was accorded the manner of presentation of Intermezzo. All the names connected with the performance were mentioned with approval by the reviewers: Dr. Reucker, the manager; A. Mara, stage manager; Fritz Busch, conductor; Correck, who was given the problem of impersonating the composer in the character of Storch; and above all others, Lotte Lehmann, borrowed for the occasion from the Vienna State Opera. Her singing and playing were called great.

ARTHUR KURSCHNER.

RENÉE
THORNTON
Lyric Soprano
in a significant success

Form 1204

CLASS OF SERVICE	SYMBOL
Telegram
Day Letter	Blue
Night Message	Nite
Night Letter	N L

If none of these three symbols appears after the check (number of words) this is a telegram. Otherwise its character is indicated by the symbol appearing after the check.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

NEWCOMB CARLTON, PRESIDENT GEORGE W. E. ATKINS, FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT

PHONE LONGACRE 9704

RECEIVED AT AEOLIAN BUILDING, N. Y.

17FY FMS 27 BLUE 5 EXTRA

NEWWILMINGTON PENN 829A OCT 23 1924

DANIEL MAYER

AEOLIAN HALL NEWYORK NY

RENEE THORNTON CONCERT GREATEST SUCCESS WE EVER HAD WONDERFULLY ARTISTIC PROGRAM SUNG WITH CONSUMATE ART REENGAGEMENT FOR NEXT SEASON WANTED WITHOUT FAIL

NORVAL BRELOS

DIRECTOR OF MUSIC WESTMINSTER COLLEGE

927A

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

"We enthusiastically confirm the impression of her so personal charm, the exquisiteness, grace and simplicity of her demeanor, the lifting, lilting quality of her voice, the artistic sincerity of her vocal workmanship."
—Herman Devries in Chicago American, October 8, 1924.

RICHARD HAGEMAN
at the piano

Exclusive Management:
DANIEL MAYER
Aeolian Hall New York

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Costanzi Foresees Great Season

Organization and Facilities Perfected With View to Establishing Regular Repertory Theatre.

Milan.

While the problem of the Teatro Nazionale dell'Opera is awaiting settlement, Rome is making every effort to maintain the musical artistic standard to which it has become accustomed by the productions of the Teatro Costanzi. Because of the general financial crisis and the special monetary difficulties assailing operatic ventures in Italy, there could be no better policy to pursue than to establish a schedule of expenditures in conformance with these difficulties, and to adhere to this schedule strictly. It is such a policy which the Costanzi directors propose to do during their coming winter season.

Improved Orchestra

After exercising the greatest zeal in the face of almost incredible surrounding difficulties, the management has succeeded in gathering an orchestra at this theatre which will be stable in its personnel for the next three years, and during that time it will doubtless become really worthy of one of the leading theatres of Italy or of any other country. Many musicians prominent in Italy are in its ranks, including the members of the Quartetto di Roma (Oscar Zuccarini, first violin of the quartet, is concertmaster of the orchestra), and the well known violoncellist, Tito Rosati.

The Roman press is assured that the present year will mark the commencement of a new era in the career of this leading theatre of the Italian capital. The long-period contract will enable the Costanzi to prepare without fear of coming dispersion of its forces a number of new operas, or operas long unheard, for its repertory, while always the standard of the performances of those works already within the repertory, will continue to approach a higher plane of perfection.

Rome intends to have that same rotation of presentations which already for some time has been established at La Scala in Milan. It is difficult to predict what success this plan will have in the capital, for the Roman public for opera differs somewhat from that of Milan, in its training at any rate.

Motion Picture Competition

In any case this will be the first step toward the establishment of a stable repertory lyric theatre in Rome, where hitherto the passion for opera has not often been so ardorous that the high price of tickets has not inclined to cool it entirely. Opera has another enemy in Rome—it is the city in which as in no other of Italy the motion picture industry is prosperous and flourishing.

The chorus of the Costanzi has likewise been bound by a three-year contract, and the same benefits which the stability of the orchestra will provide will be derived in some measure from having the personnel of the chorus fixed. Besides these two improvements Signora Carelli, director of the Costanzi, is planning a number of important physical improvements for the theatre building, alterations which not only will favor the audience, but also increase the facilities of presentation.

The "panorama" above the stage has been raised five metres in height, so that the total height of the theatre above the platform is now twenty-three meters. This increase will enable the scenic directors to accomplish much more impressive effects of view, and also tending toward scenic improvements have been the measures taken to better the electrical equipment of the Costanzi so that the lighting effects may be much lovelier and more impressive.

Other improvements in the building include safety devices for the audience in case of accident or fire, and better arrangements for handling the crowd both entering and making its exit.

National Opera Coming

Meantime the project for the building of a National Theatre of Opera has been lost sight of, and the new building will shortly begin to be constructed within the bounds of the city. The future of Rome promises a development which will allow two operatic organizations to flourish in it without any uncomfortable crowding or competition.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

Chicago Opera Bill

TONIGHT

Traviata—with Mme. Muzio and Messrs. Schipa and Schwarz; Mr. Cimini conducting.

TOMORROW

Carmen—with Mmes. Garden and McCormic; and Messrs. Ansseau, Rimini, and Cotreuil; Mr. Polacco conducting.

FRIDAY

Faust—with Mme. McCormic and Mr. Chaliapin; Mr. St. Leger conducting.

SATURDAY

Werther (matinee)—with Mmes. Garden and Freund; and Messrs. Hackett, Ansseau and Kipnis; Mr. Polacco conducting.

Trovatore (evening)—with Mmes. Muzio and Lenska; and Messrs. Lamont and Formichi; Mr. Cimini conducting.

Donne Curiose of Wolf-Ferrari is the opening opera of the autumn season at the Costanzi, and the winter season will open three days before Christmas with Wagner's Meistersinger, directed by Edoardo Vitale. The cast of the production of the German work will include Marcel Journet, Francesco Merli, Maddalena Bugg and Taurino Parvis.

The Naples Season

Meantime Rome and Milan are not monopolizing the operatic activity of Italy. The plans of the San Carlo of Naples have just been given out officially. The novelties will be Cavaliere della Rossa, Cena delle Beffe, Marinuzzi's Jacquerie, Lodovico Lunghi's Fior di Spina, and perhaps others. The repertory will include also Tannhauser, Africana, Falstaff, Aida, Traviata, Norma, Sonnambula, Tosca, Rigoletto, and Fedora.

Among the artists engaged by the San Carlo are Signore Blanco-Sadun, Borghi-Zerni, Boninetti, Cervi-Caroli, Dalla Rizza, Mazzoleni, Pacetti, Poli-Randacio, and Bianca Stagno-Bellincioni; and Signori de Paolis, Galeff, Montesanto, Oldrati, Stabile, Stracciari, and others. The director will be Gino Marinuzzi.

American Artist Sings in Butterfly at Berlin Opera

Berlin.

Eleanor Painter-Graveur was recently guest at the State Opera here in a performance of Mme. Butterfly. "Her soulful, charming representation of the part, and the lovely expressiveness of her voice" were praised in full by the reviewers in the press, as well as accorded cordial welcome by the audience. Max Marschalk wrote in the Vossische Zeitung, "Mme. Painter, with a fine feeling for style, puts a tenderness into the part of Mme. Butterfly which puts one in mind of the best work of Geraldine Farrar in that part. Her soprano is radiant, and has considerable beauty."

Prof. Weissman in the Berliner Zeitung am Mittag shared this reviewer's enthusiasm: "Butterfly in Mme. Painter has found an embodiment worthy of imitation, a flawless impersonation. One is convinced by every motion of this artist. She seemed at times expressly created for the part, and with every move of her body, with every glint of her eye, with every gesture, she was Mme. Butterfly." A. K.

New Conservatoire Councillors

A number of new additions have just been made to the Superior Council of the Paris Conservatoire. Among the new members of the council are Mme. Rose Caron, Gustav Charpentier, George Hue, Alfred Bruneau, Paul Dukas, Gabriel Pierne, Edmond Duvernoy, Jean Moulierat, Pierre Lalo, Jacques Rouche, Albert Carre, Charles Widor, Paul Vidal, Eugene Gigout, and A. Chapuis.

Name New Faculty Members

Dr. Theo Lierhammer has been appointed principal professor of singing at the Staatsakademie fur Musik in Vienna; Richard Strauss takes charge of the free composition classes and Max Reinhardt of stage design.

Georgette Leblanc in Europe

Georgette Leblanc will begin her European tour in Milan, Italy, this Thursday. After appearances in ten or more Italian cities, Mme. Leblanc will be heard in Switzerland, Belgium, and other continental countries.

New Operas in Berlin

A new opera by Cyril Scott, The Alchemist, will be given for the first time at the Essen Theatre in Berlin. Ludwig Hess' Das Hausgenschenk had its first performance at the Rostock Theatre in October.

Bilotti Gives London Recital

London, Nov. 28.—John Bilotti appeared in recital here today, playing before a sold-out house.

FLORA
GREENFIELD
SOPRANO
Management ERNEST HENKEL, 1451 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Bryant 3352 KNABE PIANO

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

CLAUDIA MUZIO
SOPRANO, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: HARRISON & HARSHBARGER,
1322 Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: O. SCOTTO, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Wagner Opens Paris Season

Dutch Company Presents Series at Champs-Elysees; National Opera Gives Parsifal.

Paris.

The autumn season was opened at the Champs Elysees Theatre with a Wagner Festival comprising three works of the master, namely, Tristan and Isolde, Siegfried and Walkure.

The Grand Opera also did its best to open the new season in a brilliant fashion with a series of well staged performances of Parsifal.

The Wagner Festival at the Champs Elysees Theatre, which opened on October 7 and ended on November 12, gave in all six performances of Tristan and Isolde, five of Walkure and three of Siegfried. The works were sung in Dutch by the ensemble of the National Theatre of The Hague and conducted by Albert van Raalte, who is chief conductor of The Hague opera.

Financially speaking, the Festival resulted in a great success, but artistically it left much to be desired.

The Pasdeloup Orchestra, which holds a very honorable position musically as far as French orchestras are concerned, could, however, not do entire justice to the exigencies of the Wagner operas. It is an association which has however done excellent work in the execution of lighter music but an entire Wagner night seemed out of its sphere.

Of the three performances given Tristan and Isolde perhaps may be considered the most successful attempt offered vocally as well as scenically.

Mme. Poolman-Meissner as Isolde, made a distinctly good impression in the part and her singing left little to be desired. She possesses a very powerful mezzo-soprano which, however, she is rather inclined to force in the upper register in the dramatic moments of the score. Her mezzo-voce is delightfully sweet, fresh, and she uses it with unbounded charm. Dramatically, her Isolde is well studied and thought out, lending a rather stately attitude to the role.

Tristan Well Sung

The Tristan of Jules Moes was a good standard performance, for his tenor is not exactly a brilliant one but possesses good schooling. His upper notes are sometimes a trifle oversung. In the third act he distinguished himself with his sincere acting which was consistent.

The Kurneval of Richard Van Helvoirt-Pel was sung in good style, displaying a baritone of volume and pleasant timbre.

The remaining parts were all sung indifferently, the voices lacking in general in volume and training.

Albert van Raalte in the pit labored obviously against odds as the Pasdeloup Orchestra did not respond to his indications.

The mise-en-scene was traditional in its simplicity.

The Walkure, the second work presented in the Wagner Festival, drew large crowds despite the fact that the Grand Opera was giving this opera at the same time.

Die Walkure is unquestionably one of the drawing cards at the Grand Opera and will always attract large crowds to any extra performances that may be given anywhere else in Paris, even if the score is sung in a foreign language.

Mme. Poolman-Meissner

The center point of attraction was again the magnificent Brunnhilde of Mme. Liesbeth Poolman-Meissner, (wife of the stage manager, Poolman).

Vocally she responded entirely to the demands of the role and it was only here and there that a certain undue forcing of the voice was to be observed. A delightful Walkure whose fine interpretation of the master's wishes evinced great enthusiasm at the fall of the curtain on the third act, was this performance.

The Wotan of Richard van Helvoirt-Pel was a truly godly conception of the part and his consummate art in presenting a true god in mannerisms and dignified deportment added much in obtaining the enthusiastic reception the artist received at the conclusion of the second and third acts.

Vocally a more smooth voiced Wotan would perhaps have pleased more, as his baritone is rather robust and harsh and especially so in the upper parts of the register.

His stage presence lent itself particularly to the happy personification of the god of gods as Helvoirt-Pel is tall and slim in build.

Chus de Vos as Siegmund was acceptable in the part, vocally his tenor seemed tired, but dramatically his conception was happy. Helene Horneman was the Sieglinde. Hendrik Huffinga sang Hunding.

The third act introduced an unhappy collection of Walkures whose main fault was that they lacked voice. This evident carelessness of the management was severely criticized by all the leading Paris reviewers.

Futuristic Scenery

The new mise-en-scene for Walkure and Siegfried, especially conceived and painted by the Russian artist Alexeieff in the studio of the Champs Elysees Theatre had been extensively advertised everywhere in Paris prior to the opening of the season but entirely failed to arouse enthusiasm.

Alexeieff's conception is futuristic or cubist, or perhaps an entirely new form of seeing and representing nature.

His trees are so simple in their shape and form that they consist of an enormous straight trunk and a gigantic straight root protruding from the foot of the tree. The impression given seems unnatural and untrue. In order to conceal the emptiness of the stage-setting the stage is enveloped in continual darkness, so much so that it is quite difficult to distinguish the artists on the stage.

Jacques Urlus Sings

In the three Siegfried performances the veteran tenor Jacques Urlus appeared in the title part.

Urlus is not unknown to Paris audiences as he appeared in Tristan in the Wagner Festival of last year, which was held at the same theatre with the ensemble of The Hague opera.

His Siegfried possesses the exuberant youthfulness that the part requires; full of boyish pranks and mischief. Vocally his voluminous tenor has suffered but little and the forging song is sung with tremendous vigor.

The Mime of I. R. Schulze is sung exceedingly well but his conception of the part is rather a little burlesque and too much on the comic side.

The Wanderer of van Helvoirt-Pel was sung in great style and his beautiful baritone distinguished itself particularly in the first act in his address to Mime. Helene Horneman as the Bird sang with great difficulty as the part was quite unsuited to her voice.

Erda was sung by Mme. Poolman-Meissner who was called upon to sing this part at a few moments' notice as the artist billed for this role suddenly fell sick.

Needless to say Mme. Poolman displayed a most beautiful voice and astoundingly enough the flexibility of her voice allowed her to sing a part which is written below her register.

Brunnhilde was sung by Mme. Meissner and although the first few bars sung at her awakening were rather forced, she soon made up for this by singing extremely well the remaining part of her role.

Dramatically she left a good deal to be desired. Her movements seemed rather exaggerated and failed to convince that at one time she was a Walkure and the favorite at Walhalla!

The mise-en-scene had the same shortcomings as that of Walkure. The bird that should guide Siegfried to the rock where Brunnhilde rests slumbering in the second act, did not put in an appearance and thus rather spoiled the final scene of that act.

Albert van Raalte again the conductor, managed to obtain a good result in his reading of the score which however at times seemed rather fast in the tempi and showed little consideration for the artists, allowing the brass instruments to dim the voices on the stage.

The festival was well patronized by Society and astonishingly enough the management adhered to the Bayreuth tradition: that of closing the doors at the beginning of each act and completely extinguishing the lights in the auditorium during the acts without any undue protests on the part of the Parisian public which is accustomed to arrive always late and expects to find its seats in a half lighted auditorium.

K. H. STOTTNER.

To Give Intermezzo in Prague

Richard Strauss' Intermezzo, which has just had its premiere in Dresden, will be presented in Prague at the German Theatre this season. Pfitzner's Palestrina and Bittner's Rosengartlein are also scheduled for performance at this theatre.

RHYS MORGAN
THE WELSH TENOR
Management: ROGER DE BRUYN, 1540 Broadway, N. Y. C.
DR. J. O. HOWELLS, Associate

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York — Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

The Center for Modern Music
J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

THE tentative program for the Music Teachers' National Association Convention to be held at St. Louis, December 29-31 is completed and on the press and will be mailed out to the members of the association, as well as to a large list of musicians, within the next few days.

The subjects to be discussed this year cover a wide range, among those of special interest being such papers as Quarter-Tone Music, Music and the Radio, Thematic Development, Rhythm and Its Musical Implications, Music of the Beggar's Opera, Jewish Folk-music, Rhythmic Tricks of Chopin and Schumann, Analogies Between Color, Form and Sound, College Music, University Theory Classes, Grading Applied Music Students.

There will also be conferences on College Music, Public School Music, Community Music, Organ and Choral Music, History of Music and Libraries, Tests in Music Intelligence, Piano and Voice. The conference leaders so far selected are Heinrich Bellamann, Harold L. Butler, Edward B. Birge, Peter W. Dykema, Charles N. Boyd, J. Lawrence Erb and William Benbow.

The local committee at St. Louis, under Ernest C. Krohn, chairman, has made arrangements for the entertainment of the visiting members by a series of musical and social events that promise to add much to the pleasure of the three days' session. Through the courtesy of the St. Louis Piano Teachers' Educational Association there will be a piano recital by Rudolph Ganz, Monday evening, the 28th; on Tuesday evening, through the courtesy of the Missouri Chapter of A. G. O., an organ recital by Charles Galloway; Wednesday evening, a recital of compositions by St. Louis composers followed by a New Year's party given by the St. Louis Guild. It is also possible that the visiting members will be guests at the Sunday afternoon concert of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra.

Edoardo Ferrari-Fontana, formerly of the Boston Opera Company and the Metropolitan, has opened a studio in New York for vocal instruction. He will emphasize, in his teaching, the interpretation of the operatic and concert repertory, with special attention paid to diction in Italian, French and Spanish.

An Hour of Music with his pupils was given by Dudley Buck last Tuesday evening. Those appearing were Alena Wilstead, Adelaide de Loca, Franz Munn and Leslie Arnold.

The tentative program of the Harvard Glee Club has been announced by Dr. Archibald Davison, conductor. Six concerts will be given on the spring tour, in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh and Ithaca, New York. In addition they will be heard at Milton Town Hall, December 7; Wellesley College, February 26; and Smith College, May 2.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, and Dusolina Giannini, soprano, have been engaged for the first two concerts in Symphony Hall, which will be given on December 11 and February 19.

Community Service of Centralia, Illinois, is launching a plan for a community choral society of 150 voices, to be directed by W. M. Parsons, who for the past four seasons has directed the chorus of the municipal opera of St. Louis.

The Music Department of the Centralia Women's Club is giving a series of public musicales during the winter.

The New York City College of Music has engaged Giovanni E. Conterno, composer and conductor, as director of the department of musical theory and ensemble.

Last Wednesday evening Anton A. Gloetzner, of Washington, gave a musical at the studio of Franz Proschowsky. Mr. Gloetzner was a pupil of Franz Liszt with whom he lived and worked for some time. The program included numbers by Sylvia Lent, young violinist, and songs by Muriel La France and Mr. MacMains, artist-pupils of Mr. Proschowsky.

As a feature of its educational program the Story and Clark Piano Company has inaugurated at its New York store a series of twelve free lessons in elementary piano instruction for children having no pianos in their homes. The course extends over a period of six weeks, two hourly lessons per week. Teachers of the Dunning system are employed and arrangements with Dunning teachers have been made for those who desire to continue their instruction at minimum fees after completing the gratis course. The first class to graduate numbered thirty children from the ages of six to fifteen years. A graduation party was held last Saturday evening at the Story and Clark Concert Salon.

The Ventura County, California, Eisteddfod is sponsoring a competition for an original song among amateurs of the country, F. J. Hokin, Secretary of Oxnard Community Service, has announced. The contest is in two parts—the first for a poem, the second for a musical setting for the poem chosen.

WILLIAM CRANE CARL
American Organist Who Received the French Decoration of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

George F. Boyle, pianist and composer, is teaching at two of the larger music schools this season, dividing his time between his duties at the Institute of Musical Art in New York and the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

Among the hundreds of piano students who were candidates for the Juilliard scholarships, nine were pupils of Ernest Hutcheson, and all nine were among the thirty successful candidates.

Four of the young artist pupils of Mr. Hutcheson have been preparing with him for appearances in public. Jerome Rappaport, boy pianist, played the Mozart D minor Concerto with the Barrere Little Symphony last Sunday evening.

On January 24-25 Frances Hall is appearing with the Orchestral Society, playing the Boyle Concerto—the same concerto which Mr. Hutcheson introduced to New York and Brooklyn several years ago with the New York Philharmonic. Josepha Rosanska has been engaged for an appearance with the Minneapolis Orchestra in New Orleans, February 13, playing the Rachmaninoff Concerto. In March, Muriel Kerr, a Canadian, will play the Saint-Saens G minor Concerto with the St. Louis Orchestra.

Dr. William Crane Carl received the congratulations of several hundred friends a week ago last evening when the Alumni Association of the Guilmant Organ School tendered him a reception in the chapel of the First Presbyterian Church, New York, in celebration of his recent decoration by the President of France as a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor . . . Dr. Carl being the first American organist to receive this distinction.

Preceding brief congratulatory addresses by Willard Irving Nevins, City Chamberlain Philip Berolzheimer, the Rev. Dr. George Alexander, and Philippe Perier, French Council Suppleant—to which Dr. Carl responded—an enjoyed musical program was presented by Olive Marshall, soprano; Amy Ellerman, contralto; Ernest Davis, tenor; and Edgar Schofield, baritone; individually and as the First Presbyterian Quartet.

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

SAMOILOFF
BEL CANTO STUDIOS
309 W. 85th St. Tel.: Schuyler 6952 New York

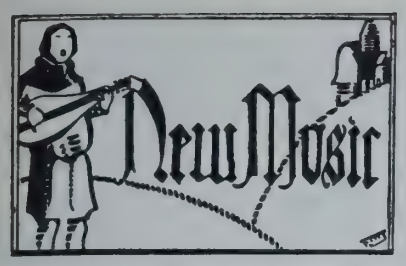
WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

DUDLEY BUCK
Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City
Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director
120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application
Address Dept. V

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117



MICHAEL FOKINE, dancer, under the auspices of Musikraft, Inc. (New York), is editing a series of his dance creations. This edition is a novelty in the music publishing field. Under each line of music and parallel to it is the pictorial representation of Mr. Fokine's movements in the interpretation of that music. The series of small figures thus provide a synchronization of the dance and the music to which it has been conceived.

Of course it is doubtful whether the student of dancing will be able to read fluently off the page the living interpretations of Fokine, but the illustrations are accurate and detailed enough to provide stimulating example and suggestion to the dancer.

Among the numbers in Mr. Fokine's dance repertory which are at present under preparation are La Reve de la Marquise, Valse de Chopin, Carnival, Spectre de la Rose, and the Swan (the last one of Pavlowa's best known creations). Mr. Fokine will add more and more numbers to this group from time to time.

G. Ricordi & Company are issuing a number of new items in the series which consists of choral compositions of the repertory of the Schola Cantorum of New York. Kurt Schindler, conductor of this chorus, has lately added to the series an edition of Psalm 134, by Jan Pieter Sweelinck, the seventeenth century composer. It is arranged for a six part mixed chorus, including two parts for soprano. one each for alto and tenor, and two for baritone. The English text is supplied by Mr. Schindler.

Kling Klang, The Bells of Speyer, also with an English version of Mr. Schindler, is a composition by Ludwig Senfl, composer of the sixteenth century, for chorus of soprano, alto, two tenor and two bass parts.

Other issues for chorus by Ricordi include Were You There, an arrangement for mixed four part chorus of a negro spiritual. The editor is H. T. Burleigh, who also has made the arrangement of 'Tis Me, Oh, Lord, another negro song. This edition of the spiritual is for four parts of male voices.

Mr. Burleigh's arrangements of Steal Away, I'm A-Rolling, and My Lord, What a Morning, also negro songs, are for mixed four part chorus.

Another addition is made by Oliver Ditson to the series of Russian Songs issued by that house. Far on the Road We Journeyed Together, by Ippolitoff-Ivanoff, is published in two ranges. It is a typically Russian song of farewell, with a melody based on the simplest of motifs. The text is translated from the Russian by Constance Purdy.

The same house is issuing also Hail the Crown, a negro spiritual, arranged by Avery Robinson. This song has often been on the concert programs of Roland Hayes, negro tenor. The arrangement is not as simple as it might be to give the pure color of negro song, although the charm of the melody remains. Ditson publishes the piece for high and low voices.

Thou, the Spirit All Pervading, a sacred song published for high and low ranges, by Charles P. Scott, and My Dream, by Louis Victor Saar, for high and medium voices, also are Ditson publications.

A number of new songs are published by Boosey & Co. Rain, Rain, Rain, by Vera L. Gay, published for high, low, or medium voices, is a colorful patter song, relieved at times by smoother melody. Tell Me At Twilight is a ballad by Albert Tracy Huntington. The publishers issue it for medium and high ranges. I Sent You a Song, by Wilfrid Sanderson, is issued for the same tessiture, and is also a sweet melodious ballad without too serious pretension. Howard Fisher's We Shall See is issued for the same ranges.

FRANCIS ROGERS
Varied His Teaching Activities With a New York Recital Week Before Last in Town Hall.

Philharmonic Leader Returns

Willem Van Hoogstraten will resume direction of the Philharmonic Orchestra tomorrow evening, when the third of the ten Students' Concerts will be given in Carnegie Hall. The program will consist of two symphonies, Tschaikowsky's Pathetique and the C minor of Brahms. The fourth Students' Concert is scheduled for New Year's Eve. Henry Hadley has just finished conducting a number of Philharmonic programs.

THE ART OF COUNTERPOINT, by C. H. Kitson (Oxford, Clarendon Press).

Mr. Kitson bases the greater part of his teaching on the pure technic of the sixteenth century. The majority of his given melodies are based on his ecclesiastic modes. It is difficult to praise this plan too highly. It is quite novel among Anglo-Saxon musicians, but it is certain to give most effective results.

The latter part of the book, nevertheless, is devoted to modern counterpoint, that is, tonal and harmonized counterpoint. It is, perhaps, excellent preparation for fugal writing, but we are inclined to regard this genre as hybrid and untrue, this deference to harmony in the progress of the parts, which give up most of their independence to the necessities of vertical conformance—that independence which is the very spirit of counterpoint.

In the chapters dedicated to strict counterpoint the author has combined a numerous collection of examples borrowed from the great polyphonic school of the Renascence, examples chosen with remarkable discernment. An entire chapter is devoted to the English composers of this period, completing in this department the excellent researches of Mr. Fellow.

If Mr. Kitson displays an intelligent liberalism toward parallel octaves and fifths, he is perhaps too severe regarding the rhythmic combinations possible in elaborate counterpoint, and a little too punctilious concerning the manners of combining passing notes. Nevertheless the book must be called practical for teaching purposes, useful and liberal in its spirit.—Raymond Petit in the Revue Musicale.

Benefit for Free City Opera

A special grand opera performance is to be given at the Metropolitan Opera House some time in January to start the fund which is to finance the free municipal open air operatic performances proposed by the mayor's committee on music, it has just been announced. Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the board of directors, wrote to Philip Berolzheimer, head of the committee, expressing the interest of the Metropolitan Opera Company in the movement, and offering the use of the opera house for the benefit of the fund.

A Course of Study in Music Understanding
SECOND YEAR—NOW READY
From Song to Symphony
By Daniel Gregory Mason
Price, $1.50 net
Adopted by the National Federation of Music Clubs
Authoritative Concise Readable
This new manual of music appreciation leads the student step by step from folksong to the modern symphony. It presupposes an understanding of the subjects so luminously treated in Prof. Gehrkens' Fundamentals.
Send for our booklet about Progressive Holiday Giving
Oliver Ditson Company, 178-179 Tremont St., Boston 10
Chas. H. Ditson & Co., 8-10-12 East 34th St., New York
ORDER OF YOUR LOCAL DEALER

Virginia Carrington Thomas Mus. Bac. A. A. G. O.
AMERICAN ORGANIST AND COMPOSER
"Conscientious musicianship was admirable and brought warm applause."—New York Sun.
"Serious, scholarly performance. Technical capacity. Knowledge of the organ."—New York Herald Tribune.
Dedications CONCERTS Private Recitals
SEASON 1924-1925 NOW BEING BOOKED
Address: 562 Fifth Avenue, New York

Flonzaley Quartet Plays in Chicago

Many Recitals Feature Week; McCormack, Werrenrath, Schumann Heink, and Muzio Sing.

Chicago, Nov. 17.—This past week has been one of numerous concerts. The Flonzaley Quartet in its performance at the Playhouse, opened its program with a new work by Albert Spalding. Tschaikowsky's Andante Cantabile was given, according to Edward Moore of the Tribune, "a heavenly performance." Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner said that the Quartet, with the assistance of Harold Bauer at the piano, made of the Brahms Quintet "a lovely communing with the muse."

Reinald Werrenrath and John McCormack gave concerts the same day. Both sang to capacity audiences and were enthusiastically received. Mr. Werrenrath, as Mr. Gunn put it, "gave one of those delightful recitals which he knows so well how to put over . . . he sang new songs with admirable art." The News found Mr. McCormack's voice as lovely as ever, "the melodic line was sustained with a warmth of tone and breadth of phrase possible only to such a master of the art of song."

In a concert for the benefit of the Home Education Association, Ernestine Schumann Heink was received warmly. The Post asserted that she was "in her finest form, and sang with sustained beauty of tone and interpretative force."

The Kinsolving Musical Mornings began at the Blackstone with Claudio Muzio of the Chicago Opera Company and Jerome Swinford, baritone. Mme. Muzio demonstrated that she had her voice "under remarkable control, and could do the lighter things with grace and delicacy," stated the Post commentator. Mr. Swinford, continued this writer, displayed a voice of "mellow quality" which showed a "fine appreciation for the texts."

The Tribune thought Socrate Barozzi's violin recital with Bernard Wagenaar at the piano "an example of skilled team work . . . Each was a fine performer and played with a deference to and understanding of the other." Although her voice was slightly unsteady at times, Anastasia Rabinoff, according to the press, proved herself an artist of promise in her recent recital here. The Post credited her with "good quality and range." Mae Willems, pianist and singer; Jean MacShane, pianist, with Milan Lusk, violinist; and Baroness Olga von Turk-Rohn, soprano, also were heard here during the week.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld
RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street
Premiere Showing
D. W. GRIFFITH'S
'ISN'T LIFE WONDERFUL'
RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA
RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street
GLORIA SWANSON in
"WAGES OF VIRTUE"
FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA
Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

Toscanini Will Conduct Philharmonic Next Season

ARTURO TOSCANINI, Italian conductor, has agreed to conduct a series of concerts of the New York Philharmonic Society next season, it was announced last Tuesday evening by Clarence H. Mackay, chairman of the Board of Directors, at a meeting of the directors and officers of the society. Mr. Toscanini's engagement will probably begin in January, 1926, and will include a series of concerts, but the exact number and their dates have not been made known.

The re-engagement of Willem Mengelberg for three years longer was announced at the same meeting.

Mr. Toscanini, who has not been at the head of any American organization since his last engagement with the New York Metropolitan Opera Company in 1914-1915, has just opened his annual season at La Scala in Milan. In 1920-1921 he toured the United States in a series of sixty symphonic concerts with an orchestra which he brought with him from Italy.

Besides this information, it was definitely given out that the two guest conductors who are to appear with the Philharmonic this season will be here in January, Wilhelm Furtwangler to make his first appearance on the 3rd and Igor Stravinsky on the 8th.

Chaliapin and Alda Sing In Faust at Metropolitan

Fodor Chaliapin brought his "jovial Mephistopheles," in the words of the World chronicler, back to the Metropolitan on the evening of November 22 in the first Faust of the season. Frances Alda's Marguerite, according to the Herald Tribune, was "again delightfully sung," as was Mr. Martinelli's Faust. Lawrence Tibbett sang his old part of Valentin with facility. He stepped into the role at the last moment due to the illness of Vincent Ballester, who was scheduled for the part. Others in the cast were Mme. Dalossy as Siebel, Miss Wakefield as Martha, Paolo Ananian as Wagner.

Mr. Chaliapin's performance was greeted with tumultuous applause by the large audience. The World wrote that his Mephistopheles changed the entire character of the opera, bringing to it a certain spirit of geniality. The Herald Tribune said he "acted and sang with his wonted energy and skill." The Sun considered that he utilized the plenteous dramatic material of the role to excellent effect.

The World and Herald Tribune both commented particularly on the excellence of Mr. Hasselman's conducting.

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
MARION DAVIES in
"JANICE MEREDITH"
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

From Edinburgh comes a post-card from Lawrence of Evans and Salter. He is as delighted with that city as its people appear to have been with Amelita Galli-Curci. "The tour has been a tremendous success from every standpoint," writes Evans.

* * *

American singers now in Europe are making gratifying impressions on the people and on experts who are in an even better position to observe them. They deserve to be given corresponding consideration in their own country.

* * *

More musicians active in this country will eat Thanksgiving turkey—a year hence—than indulged in that luxury last Thursday.

* * *

Koussevitzky exploded his first musical fire-cracker in New York on Thanksgiving night. It made enough of a noise to be heard thousands of miles off . . . as it will be in due course.

* * *

And there'll be another noise—a still bigger one—a year from January next when Toscanini leads his first New York Philharmonic concert.

* * *

That last board meeting of the National Federation of Music Clubs, held a few days ago in Pittsburgh, is said to have been one of the most satisfactory ever known.

* * *

It is whispered about, incidentally, that Mrs. John F. Lyons' successor as president of the National Federation, will probably be Mrs. James Stillman Kelley. When the next biennial is held in Portland, Me., next June Mrs. Lyons will have served two terms.

* * *

Lucrezia Bori is quite pleased with herself as a writer. We wonder if by any chance she coached with W. J. Guard.

* * *

Springfield, Mass., is quite proud of its orchestra. Its most ambitious program was given recently, under the conductorship of Arthur H. Turner, and with Mary Jordan singing three solos for contralto.

* * *

Back stage in the Metropolitan Opera House a few evenings ago Assistant General Manager Ziegler met Victor Sincere, who is active in the organization which made the Metropolitan's visit to Cleveland last spring such a success. "We will have a better record next year," observed Mr. Sincere, who generally knows whereof he speaks.

* * *

Now that Mischa Elman has a real string quartet he's perfectly happy.

* * *

Those Vincent Lopez jazz lopings in the Metropolitan Opera House seemed to limp a bit.

Jules Daiber, now the official manager for the Bayreuth Festival, is back in the United States again. He promises improved performances for next summer, and anticipates a sold-out house for every performance.

* * *

The new Steinway Hall is nearing completion. And the space in this building is filling rapidly. It will seem strange to find the house of Steinway in New York's West Fifty-seventh street. We wonder where Ernest Urchs et al. will eat their luncheons after all the years spent at Luchow's Fourteenth street place.

* * *

Irene Pavlowska was seen a few evenings ago watching a performance of the deadly dull Madame Pompadour. Substituting Irene for the vocally impossible Wilda Bennett would help the performances.

* * *

Douglas Stanbury, who was one of the mainstays on Sam Rothapfel's music program at New York's Capitol Theatre, is now a member of the Chicago Opera Company. And at his first effort, as Silvio in Pagliacci, Douglas did surprisingly well.

* * *

What has become of that announced De Feo opera project, slated for New York last fall?

* * *

Chicago Opera activities are gratifying the followers of that institution. Newcomer artists are pleasing, and the ensembles appear to have enlisted the approval of the newspaper reviewers.

* * *

Edith Mason hurried to New York, after her appearance in Madama Butterfly last week, all in smiles . . . for her endeavors enlisted approving words from those whose opinions count. And on Saturday the soprano returned to Chicago, where she was scheduled to sing again, last night, in the same opera.

* * *

On board the Mauretania, which reached New York last Friday, was Arno Segall, the violinist, who will make his American debut in New York's Carnegie Hall on January 14.

* * *

Frieda Hempel was the hostess at a tea, given in the rooms of the Gramophone Company in London, to some veteran concert-goers who were among the hundreds that have written to her about her Jenny Lind concerts. Several of her guests had themselves heard the "Swedish Nightingale" whom Miss Hempel emulates.

Lois Willoughby, the singer's right-hand woman, was of course very busy that afternoon, and The Musical Digest's London representative, who had come around to have a "look-in," thought he would help her by pointing out some of the notables. He indicated a distinguished looking gentleman with twinkling eyes and a fine reddish-brown beard, and asked, "Do you know who that is?"

Miss Willoughby took a hasty look. "Santa Claus!" she replied, quite positively. It was Edwin Evans, the critic and musicographer.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

A Musical
Vice-President
See Page 5

VOL. VII NO. 8 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Wolfsohn Will Give Series of Concerts In Several Cities

Circuit Is to Include Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and the National Capital.

FIX POPULAR PRICES

Plans of the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, of New York, are maturing to establish a circuit of cities wherein it will conduct annually, under its own management, a series of ten popular-priced subscription concerts in each of the several cities to form that circuit. Including New York the communities will number at least five; and negotiations are pending in other places than those now chosen to start the project, in 1925-1926. Supplementing New York will be Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., and Chicago.

The Boston series will be held in that city's Symphony Hall on Thursday evenings: Oct. 22, Nov. 5, Dec. 3, Dec. 17 (1925), Jan. 7, Jan. 21, Feb. 4, Feb. 18, Mar. 11, and Apr. 8 (1926). The attractions tentatively selected are Lucrezia Bori, Margarete Matzenauer, the London String Quartet, Albert Spalding, Alexander Brailowsky, Reinald Werrenrath, Josef Hofmann, Mme. Homer and Louise Homer Stires, and an orchestra—either the Chicago, the Cleveland, or the Detroit organization . . . with its regular conductor.

Philadelphia's Wolfsohn series is to be held in the Academy of Music on Wednesday evenings: Oct. 28, Nov. 18, Dec. 9 (1925), Jan. 13, Feb. 10, Mar. 10, Apr. 7, Apr. 30 (1926).

The auditorium has been chosen for the Washington concerts. The dates of the series, to be given on Monday evenings, are: Oct. 19, Nov. 9, Nov. 23, Dec. 7 (1925), Jan. 4, Jan. 18, Feb. 1, Feb. 15, Mar. 1, and Mar. 16 (1926), the attractions tentatively chosen being Miss Bori, Cecilia Hansen, Mme. Matzenauer, one of the three aforementioned orchestras, Mr. Werrenrath, Thamar Karsavina, the London String Quartet, Josef Hofmann, Mario Chamlee, and Benno Moseiwitsch.

In Chicago the ten Wolfsohn subscription concerts are to be presented in Orchestra Hall—on Sunday afternoons—on dates shortly to be decided. The offerings, subject to some possible slight change, will be: The Homers, Mr. Werrenrath, Mr. Hofmann, Mme. Karsavina, Mr. Brailowsky, Mr. Spalding, the London String Quartet, Mr. Moseiwitsch, Miss Hansen, and Edward Johnson.

For the Philadelphia series—and wherever else any changes are deemed essential—there are available from the Wolfsohn list of attractions the following: Mabel Garrison, Eva Gauthier, Elisabeth Rethberg, Maria Ivogun, Maria Kurenko, the coloratura

(Continued on page 24)

Mme. Toti dal Monte, the Italian soprano, who was heard in New York for the first time in Lucia di Lammermoor at the Metropolitan Opera last Friday evening.

Bulletins of News

An offer to finance the construction on a site near the Library of Congress of a small auditorium suitable for the production of chamber music, at a cost of about $60,000, has been made to the library by Mrs. Frederick Shurtleff Coolidge, patroness of the annual Berkshire festivals. The order was transmitted to the library committee of both houses of Congress last Thursday by Herbert Putnam, librarian of Congress.

Two important moves have just been made by the Brunswick Phonograph Record Organization. The first of these moves was the purchase, last week from the Aeolian Company, of the entire rights in the Vocalian phonograph record business, which will be continued by Brunswick under the name Vocalian.

The second move is the beginning, tonight, of what is to be known as the Brunswick Hour of Music. It will consist of broadcasting from its New York laboratories—at Seventh avenue and Fifty-second street—at stated times music interpreted by distinguished music artists and music organizations whose exclusive phonograph recordings are controlled by Brunswick . . . made possible through arrangements with the Radio Corporation of America, and by the permission of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

The first of these Brunswick Hours of Music will take place tonight, the participants being Florence Easton, Elly Ney, Mario Chamlee, and the Cleveland Orchestra, with Nikolai Sokoloff conducting. The next of these broadcastings will take place on Dec. 16 and 23. Thereafter, for the next few months, these affairs will be given once each week.

Jenufa, an opera from Czecho-Slovakia, by Leos Janacek, was produced for the first time in America at the Metropolitan Saturday night. In the cast were Maria Jeritza, Kathleen Howard, Margarete Matzenauer, Ellen Dalossy, Grace Anthony, Laura Robertson, Charlotte Ryan, Marie Mattfeld, Martin Oehman, Richard Laubenthal, Gustav Schuetzendorf, and James Wolfe. The performance was conducted by Artur Bodanzky. A digest of the reviews of this premiere will appear in next week's issue.

Toti dal Monte Makes Her New York Debut At the Metropolitan

Appears in the Title Role of Lucia di Lammermoor and Is Received Warmly.

MAD SCENE APPLAUDED

An audience which taxed the capacity of New York's Metropolitan Opera House heard and saw Mme. Toti dal Monte last Friday evening when the Italian soprano made her first appearance here in the name part of Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor. She was received warmly.

Olin Downes, in the Times, wrote while the singer is "noted as a coloratura soprano" that "the voice seemed last night to have a lyrical rather than a coloratura character. This is not to say that her technic was inadequate to the bravura passages of Donizetti; these were sung competently, often with brilliancy, but not with that freedom and electrical virtuosity which justifies the coloratura music and its interpreters.

"She often gave lyrical passages a true pathos and she colored her tone effectively for emotional purposes. This was the more admirable an achievement, inasmuch as the voice is not a large one, and not capable of wide range of dramatic effects. But there were plausibly emotional moments in the mad scene, and in this scene the cadenzas were treated not only with technical adequacy but with musicianship. Passages of the cadenza often omitted by other singers were restored by Miss dal Monte, with results that gave a greater measure of significance than is usual to these passages. There was also the gift of the singer for the stage. Her figure is plump as the figures of many mezzo-soprani—particularly those who die as Violetta—tend to be, but she has beautiful hands and arms, and expressive gestures. She is a sincere interpreter, a real musician, and a woman who has evidently worked out with care and thought her interpretive equipment. This was not a sensational appearance, but it was a successful one, and the success was of an uncommonly legitimate order for a singer of such a style and an opera of the nature of Lucia. There was long and loud applause for Miss dal Monte at each moment sanctioned by the traditions of the opera. She had reason to be gratified with her reception."

Neither Lawrence Gilman nor Deems Taylor, first reviewers respectively for the Herald Tribune and the World, appeared to be present; their assistants, F. D. Perkins and Miss Alison Smith, wrote. The former stated in part: "At a first hearing, Mme. dal Monte can be set down as an excellent lyric soprano, though

(Continued on page 24)

Mary Garden Sings First Role of Year

Returns to Chicago Opera in Thais; Joseph Schwarz Appears as Athanael.

Chicago, Nov. 25.—Last night Mary Garden rejoined the Civic Opera in the title role of Massenet's Thais, the part that introduced her to Chicago.

"The power of personality is the essential force in this world," asserted Karleton Hackett in the Post, "and Mary Garden is one who will not be denied." This opinion was shared by Maurice Rosenfeld who wrote in the News that "it matters little what part she plays and sings, she fascinates her audience by her vivid personality, by her distinguished bearing and by her artistic accomplishments." Edward Moore of the Tribune and Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner agreed as to Miss Garden's magnetism and both made the statement that they had never before heard her sing the role as well.

Mr. Gunn wrote that she is that very rare person, "an operatic artist who also is a great actress." He then added: "She is now a great singer as well, a better singer than in years past. The tone is beautifully sustained. The voice is even throughout its range. Its color varies from brittle brilliance to soft warmth, according to the demand of the moment."

Joseph Schwarz, as Athanael, played the part for the first time, and, to quote Mr. Moore, "did it almost as well as any one I have ever seen." Mr. Rosenfeld was also of the opinion that "no one has ever sung the music with finer tone quality or with more artistic finish than did Joseph Schwarz, the Russian baritone . . . he played the role with a realism that was perfect." Mr. Hackett was more reserved in his commendation and Mr. Gunn considered Mr. Schwarz miscast in the part.

Another member of the cast who was well spoken of was Jose Mojica as Nicias. Mr. Moore said he was "perfect, with a wealth of pictorial detail indicating careful study." He deserved special praise, wrote Mr. Rosenfeld, "for his fine vocal and histrionic representation." Alexander Kipnis sang the small role of Palemon "admirably," continued this reviewer, and Mr. Gunn agreed that he was excellent. Gladys Swarthout and Lucie Weston were mentioned favorably. This last named reviewer said they sang the music allotted to the slave girls "charmingly."

Roberto Moranzoni conducted and, as Mr. Hackett put it, "gave an excellent reading of the score, save for the slow tempi in certain places." The reviewers also had a word of praise for Gregor Scolnik, concertmaster of the orchestra, who played the Meditation "beautifully," to quote Mr. Hackett.

Adela Verne Plays Paderewski Concerto

Is Soloist With N. Y. Symphony; Damrosch Conducts Children's Concert.

On the program of the New York Symphony Orchestra at its concert in Aeolian Hall the afternoon of November 30 Mr. Damrosch conducted the Harold in Italy Symphony of Berlioz. Paderewski's A minor piano Concerto, with Adela Verne as the soloist, three excerpts from the Children's Corner of Debussy as orchestrated by Andre Caplet, were also presented at this concert.

Miss Verne's reappearance after an absence of fifteen years was cordially welcomed by the audience. "She asserted herself," said the Times, "as one of the masters of the piano. Her success was immediate and unmistakable." The Post wrote that the pianist, who has just come from England to make a tour of this country, "displayed a fine technique and played the difficult score with a vim and precision which won much applause. She is sure to be heard from." Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail was of the opinion that Miss Verne played the concerto "capably throughout, and in the final allegro, brilliantly." The performance served to "establish her as a musician of authority and comprehension," according to Alison Smith of the World.

In the Berlioz Symphony, Rene Pollain played the viola solo. His playing received favorable comment from the press commentators. The March of the Pilgrims, thought the Post writer, was "beautifully handled by Mr. Damrosch" who also gave to the Debussy pieces the sympathetic treatment they deserved.

Another Saturday morning concert for children was given the day before by Mr. Damrosch. As the Times said, he was in his "usual genial and communicative mood . . . and generally comported himself like a beloved headmaster."

Ina Bourskaya Sings Carmen

There was an important change in the cast of Carmen when it was repeated at the Metropolitan last Thursday. Ina Bourskaya sang Carmen in place of Florence Easton, thus returning to the role in which she made her New York debut last year. According to the Sun, Mme. Bourskaya was "consistent and generally commendable." The Herald Tribune agreed that she gave a "creditable performance, vocally and dramatically, becoming distinctly dramatic at the end of the third act."

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Lohengrin—with Mmes. Jeritza, Matzenauer, Ryan, and Bonetti; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Whitehill, Bender, and Schutzendorf; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

THURSDAY

Mefistofele—with Mmes. Alda and Peralta; and Messrs. Gigli and Didur; Mr. Serafin conducting.

FRIDAY

Tosca (matinee)—with Mmes. Jeritza and Wakefield; and Messrs. Fleta, Scotti, and Malatesta; Mr. Serafin conducting.

La Juive (evening)—revival, with Mmes. Easton, Ryan, and Galli; and Messrs. Martinelli, Rothier, Errolle, Gabor, d'Angelo and Wolf; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

SATURDAY

Cavalleria and Pagliacci (matinee)—with Mmes. Ponselle, Telva, and Wakefield and Messrs. Tokatyan and Picco; and with Mmes. Bori and Messrs. Fleta and Danise; Mr. Papi conducting.

Tannhauser—with Mmes. Easton, Gordon, and Delaunois; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Whitehill, and Bender; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

MONDAY

Andrea Chenier—with Mme. Ponselle and Messrs. Gigli and Ruffo; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Weston Gales Makes Debut As State Symphony Leader

Weston Gales, newly appointed assistant conductor of the State Symphony Orchestra, led the Franck Symphony at the organization's second matinee of the season in the Metropolitan Opera House, December 1. Guiomar Novaes was the guest artist, playing Grieg's piano concerto, with Mr. Stransky conducting.

The Herald Tribune said that Mr. Gales "gave a musicianly and unaffected reading of the symphony," the Sun, that "the composition was played smoothly and with well considered light and shade." The Post reviewer thought his reading "was satisfactory," whereas the Times said there was "still some excess, perhaps, in over-anxious moments of sonorous climaxes." Mr. Stransky conducted, according to the Herald Tribune, "to the manifest delight of the large audience," while the hearers "rejoiced in a peculiarly limpid, exhilarating and brilliantly effective performance of Grieg's piano concerto by Mme. Guiomar Novaes." The Times said Mme. Novaes "displayed a maturity of combined strength and grace to delight admirers in her seventh season before this public." The Post said her return to the concert hall "should be the occasion for rejoicing among all true music lovers."

Omaha Hears Concert Of New Orchestra

Englebert Roentgen Is Guest Conductor in Debut Program; Florence Van Hoven Soloist.

The new Omaha Symphony Orchestra, sponsored by the business and professional women's division of the Omaha Chamber of Commerce, gave its first concert in the Auditorium of that city on the evening of November 20. The organization numbers sixty-five musicians, with Ernest Nordin resident conductor, Rudolph Seidl associate resident conductor, and Englebert Roentgen, of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, guest conductor. Mr. Roentgen led the orchestra on this occasion.

The program began with Beethoven's Egmont overture, op. 84. Florence Van Hoven, soprano, sang the Ritorna Vincitor aria from Aida, and later, a group of songs: Le Baiser by Thomas, Duparc's Lamento and Valse Caressante and Crying of Water by Roentgen and Campbell-Tipton respectively. An aria from Carmen was added. The orchestra played the New World Symphony by Dvorak, followed by the Serenade for String Orchestra, Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, by Mozart, and after the songs Debussy's the Afternoon of a Faun with the Tannhauser overture in conclusion.

The Omaha press was enthusiastic over the accomplishments of orchestra and Conductor Roentgen in this first concert. According to the Omaha Bee's music reviewer the concert "was a triumph from any point of view . . . The most amazing proof of the orchestra's musicianship was in its rendition of Debussy's Afternoon of a Faun." August M. Borglum in the World Herald said the "New World Symphony was given in splendid style," and "the overture to Tannhauser was conducted with majestic breadth." Both reviewers spoke favorably of the singing of Miss Van Hoven.

Testimonial for Victor Herbert

Opera singers and other artists will pay tribute to the memory of Victor Herbert at a testimonial to be given under the auspices of the National Opera Club in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria on Thursday afternoon.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

CYRENA VAN GORDON
Prima Donna Mezzo Contralto Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management:
For the East: R. E. Johnston, 1451 Broadway, New York City
For the West: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

FORREST LAMONT
TENOR, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson
4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Aeolian Hall, New York

QUEENA MARIO
Soprano, Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: Metropolitan Musical Bureau, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Koussevitzky Ill, Burgin Conducts

Giannini Sings With Boston Orchestra Under Concertmaster; Brailowsky and Sedano in Debuts.

Boston, Dec. 2.—Because of the illness of Serge Koussevitzky, the first of the supplementary series of Monday symphony concerts was conducted by Richard Burgin, the concertmaster. The soloist was Dusolina Giannini, soprano. The Globe reviewer, P. R., discovered in the concertmaster's capable direction "evidence that Mr. Burgin would prove a conductor with individuality and energy if heard when he had the usual time for rehearsal and preparation." L. A. S. in the Christian Science Monitor agreed that he acquitted himself most creditably.

The other chroniclers held more or less the same opinion. All expressed the greatest enthusiasm for the singing of Miss Giannini. Exemplifying critical comment was P. R.'s assertion that she proved to be "the most admirable new singer heard here in many years." H. T. Parker of the Transcript found her "adept with phrases, rhythm, accent, transition, pause and climax, her tones were shapely, full-throated, flowing and plastic."

Warren Storey Smith of the Post, who gave credit to the orchestra for the "whole-hearted support" they gave Mr. Burgin, received "a rarely favorable impression" from Miss Giannini's singing. The Herald thought her voice "beautiful" and "most judiciously trained." She sang Weber's Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster. Other pieces played were the Overture to Oberon, El Amor Brujo by de Falla, Pacific 231, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

After an absence of two Sundays, Emil Mollenhauer was in his usual place as conductor at the fifth concert of the People's Symphony. Fela Rybier, pianist, was the assisting soloist in Tschaikowsky's Concerto in B flat minor. The Transcript called her "a most accomplished young musician," which seemed to be typical of the general opinion. E. G. in the Herald noted particularly her "ardor, marked sense of rhythm" and a ready, if not always rounded, technic. Other commentators echoed these statements.

The local debut of Alexander Brailowsky, Russian pianist, caused very full press comment. Z. B. F. of the Monitor discovered in him "an interesting new star in the musical heavens. He promises much." In the words of P. R. "a large audience was roused by the brilliant technic and fervent interpretations of the pianist to an unusual pitch of enthusiasm." Mr. Brailowsky was credited by R. R. F. of the Herald with "boundless technic, keen intelligence, warmth of temperament, and magnetic personality." Liszt's Sonata in B minor revealed his technic, wrote A. H. M. in the Transcript, "as absolutely of the first order, his tone in the singing passages, as limpid, crystal clear, often very beautiful."

Another recent debut was that of Carlos Sedano, young Spanish violinist. Philip Hale predicted that he will go far, because of his "many excellent qualities; pure intonation, well-trained left hand, flexible bowing, a beautiful tone . . ," In addition to these qualifications, P. R. discovered "a keen sense of pitch, a feeling for time, stress, and phrasing." Perfection of technic was also admitted by the Transcript commentator, who considered his tone "round, full, warm and rich."

As the Monitor observer, S. M., said of Elena Gerhardt's art as displayed at her recent song recital, "it requires little comment at this late date. Its outstanding qualities are known and appreciated by the music loving public." In spite of this familiarity the papers waxed enthusiastic in their appraisal of her work.

Other recitalists were Lois Maier, pianist, whose technic and tone were appreciated by the reviewers; Laura Littlefield, soprano, whose interpretations the Globe called "thoughtful and intelligent" and whose tonal quality was lauded by the Transcript; and Beatrice Martin, soprano, whose program and voice the Herald thought charming.

Naegle Gives Concert Again

Charles Naegle, pianist, gave his second local recital of the season at Aeolian Hall December 1. "Mr. Naegle showed again that he is a player of talent and one who is able to give a performance combining an admirable piano touch with poetic charm," wrote the Sun reviewer, whose remarks were typical of the newspaper comment.

Sing Franck Liturgical Music

A concert of liturgical music by Cesar Franck, which included his Solemn Mass in A, Op. 121, was given on the evening of November 15 at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, by the choirs of the cathedral and of Trinity church.

Second Recital by Lamond

The second New York recital this season by Frederic Lamond, pianist, was given last Wednesday at Aeolian Hall.

ALFRED PICCAVER
Made His Debut of the Season With the Chicago Opera in Cavalleria Rusticana on November 25.

Piccaver Makes Season Debut in Chicago Opera

Chicago, Nov. 26.—For the first appearance this season of Alfred Piccaver, tenor, Cavalleria Rusticana was repeated last evening at the Auditorium by the Chicago Civic Opera Company. "Vocally it was a rather stirring exhibition," wrote Edward Moore in the Tribune. Maurice Rosenfeld of the News liked Mr. Piccaver's acting.

"He has a powerful voice, which served him well," continued Mr. Rosenfeld. "It negotiated with great facility the high tones in the part. There was besides, a lyric quality, which came forth in his last air." From his performance, Karleton Hackett of the Post sized the tenor up as "a singer for the dramatic roles . . . a valuable addition to the company." In his duet with Santuzza, according to this writer, Mr. Piccaver "sustained the heavy passages with resonant tones which had reserve back of them." He also carried "some fine long phrases with ease" in the Siciliana.

Although Glen Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner admitted "the most cordial recognition of Mr. Piccaver's gift," he thought that Rosa Raisa "carried off the honors of the event." Mr. Gunn further characterized the tenor as "one of the great robust tenors of the generation."

Szymanowski Novelty Played by Kochanski

Stokowski Presents New Violin Concerto in Fourth New York Concert.

In the fourth New York program of the Philadelphia Orchestra Mr. Stokowski presented in Carnegie Hall last Tuesday evening the Szymanowski Violin Concerto. It was composed in 1917 and played for the first time two years ago in Warsaw by Mlynarski. The concerto is dedicated to Paul Kochanski, who played it last Tuesday again, after having presented it in Philadelphia the week before with Mr. Stokowski's orchestra.

The Sun reviewer said in his report of the concert: "This violin concerto is one of the most interesting works yet given us by the modern school, a brilliant illustration of the possibilities of the new methods in the domain of solo writing, a weird oriental type of melody, built upon long undulating melodic lines and essentially lyric."

Mr. Newman in the Post found the music "most engaging in the slower passages," some of them "of great beauty," but he asserted that it seemed to him not to be enduring music. In the Herald Tribune Lawrence Gilman likened the work to "a chromatically yearning Tristan" influenced by Schonberg and Scriabin.

"But who could play it save Mr. Kochanski?" this reviewer queried, concerning the solo part. Mr. Gilman commented on its great difficulty, although he said that Mr. Kochanski played "with admirable purity of tone." "Perfect understanding" and "profound musicianship" were terms used by Mr. Newman to describe the soloist's playing, and the Sun reviewer praised the "fine performance" where the most advanced technic and purity and breadth of tone were required.

The reviewers all were pleased with the playing of the orchestra. Pitts Sanborn in the Telegram-Mail and Mr. Gilman agreed that the Haydn was presented with particular brilliance.

Pianist May Be Envoy

It has been rumored in reports from Warsaw that it is the intention of the Polish Government to offer Ignace Jan Paderewski the post of envoy to Washington.

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 8

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Giacomo Puccini

The passing of Giacomo Puccini removes from the creative opera world one of the last great living figures. In widespread popularity he was perhaps the foremost musician of modern times in his field. Certainly no other of this day finds such continuous representation of his operas in the current repertoires of the leading theatres in different countries. So Puccini must be given a very special place—one surpassing considerably that held by Mascagni, and still more Leoncavallo's.

Like many another who chose the creative sphere, Puccini toiled at first in trying circumstances. Nor did success come quickly. He was thirty-five when his Manon Lescaut was produced; and it was three years later that La Boheme raised him to eminence, paving the way to financial security and further prestige.

But he was to know deep humiliation . . . even after honors had come to him. For he never got over the adverse reception given Madama Butterfly at its premiere, in Milan's La Scala. It is said that his recent consent to permit his last work, Turandot, to be presented in Milan cost him much pain. Yet he acquiesced, perhaps because of his confidence in the guiding master-hand of his friend Toscanini, who will prepare the work and conduct it (and who may complete its final pages also).

There has always been a difference of opinion with respect to Puccini's creative gifts and accomplishments. His friends and admirers have ever acclaimed him a master. Others were equally positive that his scores were deficient in superlative writing.

Compared with other opera composers—Verdi and Wagner among them—Puccini must be accorded a secondary place. His music shows less originality; it reveals none of that greatness which is to be found in some operas; it reflects the influence, the pronounced influence, of men whose explorations opened music vistas which appealed as worthy of emulation.

Where Puccini shone was in his sense of the theatre. He had the natural feeling for effective treatment of a dramatic situation. His use of music high lights and shadows was rarely out of place. He appeared to know what would "go."

Puccini's place will be preserved—during the near at hand years, surely—by his Boheme, Tosca, Madama Butterfly, and Manon Lescaut. The public holds those works, particularly the first three, in high esteem. To have written them was an achievement of which any man might be proud.

So many of us go through life without doing enough of anything to attract a particle of attention.

And, after all, there is a vast difference between a question of fact and a question of opinion. Occasionally it is difficult even to establish the former.

Nevertheless, merit somehow seems to manage. Where it is linked to industry and patience it generally, in the end, makes a creditable showing.

High Lights and Luminaries

Chicago, Dec. 6.

CHICAGO is well named the Windy City. We are there now, and should know. And the very windiest of all its parts is the corner of Michigan and South Wabash Avenues. That is the point where all musicians or persons connected with music meet, or have offices, or talk about music. . . It is very windy there.

The first person into whom the wind blew us upon our arrival was the always-smiling Jack Adams of the Wolfsohn Bureau. This time he was having more to make him smile than ever, we imagine. Karsavina has just made her Chicago bow. She won a great reception, and so did Josef Hofmann, who gave his first recital here of the year the other day.

Edward Moore of the Tribune said, "Pianists may come and pianists may go, but Josef Hofmann etc. . ."

George Brown, also of Wolfsohn, is on hand here helping Jack smile. And we caught a glimpse of Guy Golterman. We are obliged to him for our shelter in this city—the hotels are crowded to the doors. He "checked out" and we "checked in."

OF COURSE we went to the opera at the Auditorium. The week was begun with Butterfly, sung by Edith Mason, Charles Hackett, and Giacomo Rimini. Signor Polacco wielded the stick like a magic wand. Such lovely things happened! He has our congratulations on the quality of his orchestra:—excellent!

Edith Mason received an ovation both on her entrance and after the duet with Charlie Hackett. He got his share too. Of course Rimini was impeccable as Sharpless.

Karleton Hackett, reviewer of the Post, has been listening in on the performances from the top balcony. He likes it up there . . . says that the voices reach him rounder and fuller in tone than down below.

He even heard the voice of the little girl (who played the Pinkerton boy) when she said to Miss Mason after the duet with Sharpless, "Please don't cry."

CLAUDIA MUZIO sang with Tito Schipa to a sold-out house in Traviata on Tuesday evening. Josef Schwarz also was in the cast, and the conductor of the occasion was Pietro Cimini.

Claudia Muzio received an ovation after she sang the aria, Forse e lui. We have always preferred a dramatic soprano to a coloratura in the part of Violetta. The house seemed to agree with us. It was pleasant to have our opinion corroborated by so many people. Muzio was a picture in the part, and sang the entire score well nigh perfectly.

Schipa was in fine form in his first appearance of the year. His Alfred, as we have always known, has substance, color, and genuine life.

Schwarz was a very good Germont Pere, and Cimini conducted with discrimination and zeal.

OUR MARY sang Carmen on Wednesday. It was quite different from all the others which we have seen and heard. And we admired her in so many details! Judging by the reception she got Mary Garden owns Chicago, or could if she wanted to.

Ansseau was right in the picture as Don Jose. Rimini was a fine Toreador, and in excellent voice. He did his part so well that if there were any bulls about they must have shuddered. Mary McCormic made a fairly good Micaela. Polacco was conductor, and he brought out delicately the "sfumature" of the Bizetian score.

WE WENT to hear Juive on Thursday . . . with a hammering heart, for we have not seen it since that fatal night of December 24, four years ago, when the one and only Caruso sang at the Metropolitan.

We didn't want to go this Thursday, but Rosa Raisa persuaded us, and we did not regret our change of mind.

Of course Rosa was superb as Racnel. She sang and acted as we had expected. Charlie Marshall had a tremendously difficult task (in our eyes, we mean), and we must say that he did very well. Lazzari and Florence Macbeth were splendid.

WE HAVE gathered out here authentic information about the tour of the Chicago Civic Opera Company after it finishes its home season early in 1925. The longest out-of-town stay of the ensemble will be in Boston, where the company will give two weeks of performances, lasting from January 24 to February 7.

Two days later Signor Polacco's singers will appear in Washington, D. C., where they are scheduled to give performances on February 9 and 10, and on the 13th and 14th, the last a matinee performance. On the two intervening days the company will sing in Baltimore and will present there also a matinee on the 14th.

Pittsburgh is the next city on the schedule, and that city will see the Chicago company in three performances on February 16, 17 and 18. The next three days will find the company in Cleveland for four performances in all, for both matinee and evening performances are to be given in the Ohio city on the 21st.

On February 23, 24 and 25 Chattanooga will hear the company, and Memphis will be the next stop, with performances arranged for February 26, 27 and 28, the last day being occupied with both afternoon and evening presentations.

The first performances of March will take place in Dallas, where the company will sing on the 2nd and on the afternoon of the 3rd; the two following days will find the opera in Tulsa, and three performances are scheduled immediately thereafter for St. Louis, on March 6 and 7 (matinee and evening of the latter date).

Cincinnati is the last city where the company is sure to appear on its winter tour. Performances have been arranged there for March 9, 10, 11 and 12. There is a possibility—even a probability—that Signor Polacco will carry his forces on to Milwaukee for performances on March 13 and 14 (matinee and evening), but that has not yet been definitely fixed.

Quite a schedule!

BRUNO ZIRATO.

Autodidacts, Including a Vice-President

Charles G. Dawes Is Another of the Long and Honored Line of the Self-taught in Music

CHARLES GATES DAWES, the President's understudy after March 4 next, is self-taught in music. That makes him an autodidact, and of the most observed kind.

General Dawes, according to those who have written more or less intimate sketches of his life and works in the last few months, has found leisure for autodidactism between being a schoolboy and, in due time, organizing and managing gas and electric companies. Now that the election is over, it is possible to mention Mr. Dawes' music without being accused of making an unfair campaign attack. He not only plays: he also composes, and this, too, he learned to do by himself.

He started on the flute when he was a small boy, without a teacher. From the flute he aspired to higher ranges and taught himself the piccolo. He played it in the town band of Marietta, Ohio, when he was still a youngster. And then he taught himself to play the piano, and began meddling with thorough bass and counterpoint and whatever else was needed, and wrote pieces that were afterward orchestrated.

General Dawes, they say, is shy about his music. He has plenty of good company as an autodidact, however, and as far as American public life goes he could cite as a companion so robust a figure as Benjamin Franklin. Was he too an autodidact? Voluminous biographies merely hint. They set forth, however, that he played the harp, the guitar and the violin, and to the end relished the armonica, which he first heard while living in London. The armonica (without an h) was a sort of musical glasses. It touched his inventive interest; he improved it so that it became a recital instrument.

Self-appointed esthetes tilt their noses at the mention of autodidacts. So do the academical. They have the professional-professorial attitude, which asks first not "What can she do?" but "Whom did she study with?"

The official attitude has largely governed the world's treatment of the self-taught artist. The autodidact has not submitted to neglect, however. He has gone his way, not even caring that the musical world has usually chosen to forget that he was self-taught any more than it cares for Bach's statement that the secret of his genius was industry. That world is now celebrating the centenary of Anton Bruckner. He had a teacher in the end, it is true, but previously he had made himself a musician.

Beside Bruckner of the somber symphonies, set Irving Berlin, the son of a cantor, who composed Alexander's Ragtime Band without ever taking a lesson. There were Ole Bull, too, a self-made man of music—some critics have aimed at him the criticisms usually directed at self-made men—and George Telemann, who lived in Cracow in the seventeenth century; New York heard a bourree of his only the other night.

(Courtesy of the New York Times)

VICE-PRESIDENT-ELECT CHARLES G. DAWES

They are a strange lot, these autodidacts. Hugo Wolf is among them. His father, a leather merchant, taught him the rudiments of piano and violin, but of academic schooling he had only the little between his entrance in the Vienna Conservatory and his expulsion because of a practical joke. At seventeen he was his own teacher, and he had no other after.

Dvorak learned violin and organ and composed before he ever saw the inside of a music school, and when he did he had to support himself by playing in theatre orchestras. Schumann, who had only desultory training before he was 20, made himself "an effective pianist and leader of a school orchestra."

Moussorgsky is another, helping to create a new age in music—a clerk who had wanted to be a soldier. His medical friend Borodin had had little musical training, but he, too, flared up as one of the new stars when, like Moussorgsky, he became one of the Five.

Nor is there a monopoly in the books of biography. Pause at doors in New York and you will hear the autodidact in his variety: The timid ones, with the foot firmly on the soft pedal; the brazen, using the other foot and rejoicing; the young ones, those marvels who do not have to be driven to practice, but peck away, hoping for a recognizable chord.

The janitor lurking curiously in the hall, however, seems to say apologetically of these autodidacts, "Well, once they get in a house, you know how it is."

In Dublin one day a red-haired youth of sixteen found a piano that was not in use and sat down before it with a diagram of the keyboard. In ten minutes he had arranged his fingers on the first chord, and then he banged. The lad was George Bernard Shaw.

"What I suffered," he informed his biographer, Archibald Henderson, "what everybody else in the house suffered, while I struggled on, laboring through arrangements of Beethoven's symphonies, of Tannhauser, and of all the operas and oratories I knew, will never be told."

He kept on for months with a technique of his own. In playing a scale he did not call his thumb to the aid of the fingers, passing it under his hand. No, he crossed the fourth finger over the fifth to the next key, and did the best he could.

"This method," he says, "has the advantage of being applicable to all scales, diatonic or chromatic, and to this day I often fall back on it. Liszt and Chopin hit on it, too, but they never used it to the extent I did."

Shaw failed, perhaps because of the fingering. He acknowledges that he was beaten by the keyboard. He became proficient enough, however, to play accompaniments, and his autodidactism had its share in making him, in time, a music critic in London.

The autodidact symbolizes a trend in education that comes down from Socrates (who said he did not teach but merely stirred up his pupils' interest), through Rousseau to President Lowell, who calls lectures "stuffing the goose with chestnuts," and Dr. Meiklejohn, who looks for a university millennium when students will be allowed to study.

Meanwhile the autodidact (not even excepting Mamma with her correspondence course in jazz) asks: "Well, can a teacher teach you to play Beethoven?" He seems to think that sums up a good deal of it—and he pays no attention at all to the janitor, who is still lurking apologetically in the hall.—[Reprinted in part from the N. Y. Times.]

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Maron & Hamlin Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

Cleveland Orchestra Plays Loeffler Work

Samaroff Soloist in Liszt Concerto; Hutcheson and Kindler Give Recital.

Cleveland, Nov. 28.—Charles Martin Loeffler, Boston composer, whose Poeme for orchestra was played for the first time here by the Cleveland Orchestra last night, was in the audience and received an overwhelming ovation from the audience, the orchestra, and Nikolai Sokoloff, conductor. Olga Samaroff was soloist at this concert.

The critics were as enthusiastic as the audience in their praise of both composer and pianist. The Loeffler Poeme was hailed by Wilson G. Smith of the Press as "a work by the most individual of modern composers," who has a message to deliver and delivers it "in a manner indicative of supreme mastery of orchestra resources, and with a foundation of pregnant and vital ideas." Archie Bell wrote in the News that it is "primarily, beautiful music, not descriptive . . . Mr. Sokoloff gave the piece a fine reading and his men responded in a manner that must have pleased the composer." In the work, James H. Rogers of the Plain Dealer, found "charmingly contrasted orchestral colorings, enticing harmonies." This writer also considered that the Brahms Symphony in D was read by Mr. Sokoloff "with rare insight."

Mme. Samaroff, according to this writer "plays, as of yore, with power, with eloquence, and with a brilliance and facility that never fail her." The Liszt First Concerto for piano and orchestra was given a "magnificently brilliant exposition at the hands of Mme. Samaroff, who played it with a brilliancy and fine interpretative conception that captured both the reviewers and the audience," Mr. Smith asserted. Archie Bell found in her playing "delicately shaded, subdued, yes, masterly musicianship, virtuosity and a keen intelligence."

On Tuesday Sergei Rachmaninoff appeared at Masonic Hall in the dual role of pianist and composer. Mr. Rogers said that the audience was "lavish in its plaudits," and the critical comment was of equal enthusiasm. Another concert heard recently was the joint recital given by Ernest Hutcheson, pianist, and Hans Kindler, cellist. According to Mr. Rogers, they played "with irresistible fire and abandon, yet preserving at all times admirable unanimity of purpose . . . this was chamber music par excellence."

Hold Third Biltmore Musicale

The third Biltmore Musicale took place last Friday morning. Marguerite d'Alvarez, mezzo-contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; and Geraldine Leo, violinist, appeared on the program.

Question Box

1. What are the original meanings of the words cantata and sonata?
2. When was Isaac Albeniz born, and when did he die? With whom did he study?
3. What is a capriccio?
4. What was the occupation of E. J. de Coppet, patron of chamber music?

Answers to Last Questions

1. Hans Pfitzner, although usually referred to as a German composer, was born in Moscow in 1869.
2. Schumann injured his hand in attempting to make it more flexible for piano playing.
3. Moussorgsky entered the army and his interest was turned definitely to music thereafter, when, at the age of twenty-two, he met Cui and Balakirew.
4. Anton Hekking, Dutch cellist, was a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1889 to 1891, and of the New York Symphony Orchestra from 1895 to 1898.

Grainger Is Soloist With Detroit Orchestra

Detroit, Nov. 28.—The Thanksgiving Day program of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra held allure by reason of Percy Grainger's appearance as soloist and conductor, and of a presentation of Goldmark's Negro Rhapsody.

Glinka's Ruslan and Ludmilla Overture opened the program, and was followed by the Schumann C major Symphony, presented by Mr. Gabrilowitsch with "characteristic grace," wrote Eugene Leuchtmann in the Free Press. This reviewer considered the Goldmark and the playing of Mr. Grainger in one concert "something to be thankful for." Grieg's A minor Concerto provided the solo, and the pianist-composer led the playing of his Colonial Song and Shepherd's Hey.

Cyril Arthur Player in the News said Mr. Grainger rose to great heights in the closing movement of the Grieg, and thought the Goldmark number very pleasing, if not great music. The Times reviewer found the Negro Rhapsody sturdy, colorful and interesting, and pleasantly lacking in ultra-modernism. Mr. Grainger he preferred as pianist, and produced what seemed to him "more like a beautiful etching of the original than the work as Grieg wrote it."

MIGUEL FLETA

Who Will Appear in Tosca This Friday Matinee at the Metropolitan.

Didur Sings in Gioconda

La Gioconda was presented at the Metropolitan last Wednesday for the third time this season, with Adamo Didur replacing Jose Mardones as Alvise, in what the Herald Tribune called a generally well done performance. Mr. Didur's part, according to this report, was "well acted." The other members of the cast were the same as in previous presentations. Tullio Serafin conducted.

New Tenor Sings Again

Mischa-Leon, tenor, who made his local debut a few weeks ago, was heard in his second recital last Thursday at Aeolian Hall.

According to the Herald Tribune Mr. Mischa-Leon sang, "as before, with an agreeable voice and much interpretative skill; with expression in his song, and admirable diction."

League of Composers Give First Concert

Mmes. Tas, Bacon, and Delaunois and Mr. Judson House Appear in Modern Works.

A characteristic ultra-modern program was the offering of the League of Composers at the first concert of their second season at the Klaw Theatre November 30. Among the numbers offered were Tcherepnin's Sonata for violin and piano, played by Helen Teschner Tas and Katherine Bacon; Two fragments for Chamber Orchestra by Honegger, L'Ombre and L'Homme et la Mer, conducted by Howard Barlow; Stravinsky's Concertino for strings, given by the Lenox Quartet; two songs by Stravinsky and three of Castelnuovo-Tedesco, sung by Mme. Delaunois, with Mr. Barlow conducting; and Die Maschine by Fritz Klein, intended as a burlesque on modern music.

The honors of the occasion went to Honegger and Stravinsky, according to the comment in the newspapers. There was some difference of opinion as to the other numbers. Ernest Newman wrote in the Post that "head and shoulders above everything else in the program stood Stravinsky's Concertino for string quartet . . . when he is not so self-conscious, he writes with admirable ease, fluency and roundness." This writer also considered the Honegger pieces interesting, the first being "an expressive piece of writing." In the second piece added to the usual instruments were four wine bottles which were "played" with drumsticks.

Olin Downes of the Times agreed that "after all, the master of the evening remained Stravinsky, with the firm hand, the sure technique and the sardonic quality which distinguishes him in a certain vein."

The German composition, Die Maschine, lacked humor and generally fell short of its purpose, the chroniclers found. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail said that Miss Jeanne de Mare "prefaced this reticent revelation with some remarks that were really entertaining, which the Maschine in performance was not." Mr. Newman called it a "dullwitted attempt at humor."

The opening number was "brilliantly played" by Mme. Tas, violinist, and Miss Bacon, pianist, wrote Mr. Downes, and the Herald Tribune considered the Sonata a "genial and lucid piece of writing; but it has, also, not much to say." Judson House, tenor, sang the Assyrian Prayers of Frederick Jacobi, which the reviewers seemed to think hardly showed this composer at his best. Mme. Delaunois did the Stravinsky songs "very well" wrote W. J. Henderson in the Sun.

Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

RAYMOND HAVENS Pianist
Soloist with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 8 performances
Soloist with CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 2 performances
Soloist with MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 3 performances
For Dates and Terms Address:
EVELYN LIGHT, Sec. 87 Pinckney St., Boston, Mass.

JESSIE CHRISTIAN
SOPRANO
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger
1322 Kimball Building
Chicago, Ill.

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

ELSEWHERE in this issue of The Musical Digest there appears a news account of a plan to establish, in four of the foremost cities in this country, a series of ten subscription concerts each. Apart from the feature of bringing a wholesale music bureau into the local management field the project is significant for portending a revision downward of prices for tickets.

For years the public has been asked to pay for most music attractions other than opera by our two great companies either $2.50 or $3—sometimes even more—for the choice available seats. Nor has this high price been confined alone to the principal cities; it has flourished in communities where a considerably smaller amount should have been the proper price.

There are exceptions, of course; as in those rare instances wherein the people are willing to part with an extra dollar or two to satisfy either their curiosity or to go to hear an artist who has for them some very special appeal.

BUT THE DAY of long prices for even the very fine individual musician, or organization, seems to be passing. And so the purpose of the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau to establish in Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, and Washington a series of ten concerts each (beginning next autumn) is one to be watched . . . especially since the scale of seat-prices represents a slash resembling that of New York's recent taxi rate war.

When the Wolfsohn Bureau made known its intentions with respect to its New York series of popular-priced subscription concerts (which have yielded greater financial rewards than was anticipated) the New York Sun, in its issue of October 4, had the following to say, in part, in an editorial:

"Persuading the public to attend concerts is one of the difficult problems of the impresario's life. In some cases a large attendance is easily assured. It is only necessary to announce the names of certain beloved performers with the human voice, on violin or piano, to fill the concert hall. Such favorites are so few.

" * * * The plan of obtaining audiences for concerts in this way [lowering prices] is unique in recent musical enterprise in this city. Its advantages will not alone lie in assuring audiences for the separate performances. It is hoped that the series will get New Yorkers into the habit of attending concerts. Many of them read the offerings, talk of going and are diverted by other occupations. Holders of subscription tickets are likely to be more tenacious of their purpose. So the new system of a bargain in music is not resting only on its business advantages. It is expected to increase the number of lovers of music until they become habitual concertgoers. * * *"

What applies to New York applies to many another community in this country.

A GOOD MANY PEOPLE were surprised by the aural and visual impressions made in Carnegie Hall last Thursday week by Serge Koussevitzky. He had been heralded a sensationalist. Reports led to expectations of violent acrobatics and what not, all designed to lead the auditor into judging as the spectator is wont to judge.

Instead Koussevitzky did nothing of the kind. He confounded those who had predicted he would resort to showmanship, by avoiding completely any showmanship methods. He made a truly deep impression upon discerning and fair minded persons who have sat before distinguished conductors, and the other kind, and have learned to distinguish between the two.

Koussevitzky is serious-faced and dignified. He did not on the two occasions he conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York resort to a gesture or pose which appeared other than natural and purposefully meant. You looked upon a well set up figure, an intelligent countenance; and you observed the directness with which he performed his task.

I QUESTION if the great majority of both audiences failed to approve of Koussevitzky, and to experience the magnetic qualities he reflects. Some few expressed themselves as preferring to wait before stating finally their opinions. That is wise, too, because one never knows until a conductor has been amply tested and thereby reveals the full measure of his worth.

But Koussevitzky unquestionably made a splendid New York beginning. He is a musician, he is sensitive, he has his men well disciplined, and he knows what effects he wants and just how to get them. And I have a feeling that Koussevitzky isn't going to disappoint in the classics by any such margin as some people predicted he would.

Incidentally, the Boston Symphony is a beautiful orchestra—in all that goes to make one. If its concerts do not become increasingly popular I shall have guessed completely wrong.

THE NATIONAL Federation of Women's Clubs is tireless in its endeavors to promote music. This organization—which has a membership of more than twenty-five hundred clubs that are grouped into state units, then into district units—hesitates at nothing that will serve still further to enrich the lives of the people . . . through the aid of music.

Mrs. John F. Lyons, president of the Federation (now nearing the end of her second consecutive term) spent the last week in New York. She sees gains that have been made during the past three and a half years; and she foresees further gains to come after she has relinquished her present office. Mrs. Stapleton, treasurer of the Federation, holds views similar to those of Mrs. Lyons.

Both of these officers are vigorous in their endorsement of the strides which the Department of Junior and Juvenile Clubs has made. And simultaneously comes from Charles E. Tremaine, president of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, a fifty-four page booklet, published by that organization, which presents a course of study for 1924-1926. It contains programs, with explanatory text, and was prepared by Helen Norfleet—and endorsed by Mrs. William John Hall, National Chairman of the Federation's Department of Junior Clubs.

THESE JUNIOR CLUBS have become one of the strongest influences in the Federation activities. The young people are learning how music may be utilized in fruitful ways; ways beneficial to the daily lives of those who study it and promote it.

Miss Norfleet's book begins with a message to Senior Clubs and Music Teachers; devotes a chapter to organization suggestions; passes along to a message to the Juniors, and then gives over seventeen chapters to pianoforte music of various periods.

There is a list of books for suggested reading, and music publishers, and mechanical reproducing instrument firms who can supply the music, phonograph records, and player rolls mentioned in the various sections of Miss Norfleet's writings. This course of music study should have, and doubtless will have, a wide distribution.

NEW YORK'S Capitol Theatre celebrated its fifth birthday anniversary not so many days ago. Messmore Kendall, president of the owning company, and Edward Bowes, vice-president and managing director, have done something out of the ordinary in bringing this motion picture house to its present affluent state. But I shall have to give the credit for the actual operation to Samuel L. Rothafel.

Rothafel took the management of the Capitol about three years ago, when it was offering bills in which the public showed very little interest. Within a few weeks he had completely changed the character of the entertainment, and through able advertising gotten increased numbers of people into the theatre.

I remember those days of reconstruction. Presently the orchestra had been developed to a most commendable degree. Then admirable singers were presented—soloists, and ensembles—and entertaining features having an artistic touch.

The ingenuity of Rothafel is peculiar to him alone. He senses what is good for the public and what the public will like. And he is very much in earnest in seeking to present what he feels has an uplifting value.

I have spent considerable time watching Rothafel work. I have sat beside him in the Capitol Theatre projection room while he personally selected the music to go with a new feature picture. In other ways it has been possible to study this man, and to analyze his methods. They are typically his own. Perhaps that is why he has been so successful in a field where the competition demands results.

DAYTON, OHIO, on a rainy day isn't so bad. It all depends what one is doing and whom one meets. Also who the personal guides happen to be.

I have been thinking a bit of some of my recent experiences in a city where music means much in the lives of the people. One of these experiences occurred in the Patterson School, where the grade orchestra, led by Conrad Yahries, played several compositions. It was a truly splendid school orchestra, with the youngsters as serious as their elders are and disclosing talents for their respective instruments of an unmistakable order.

Miss Leota Clark, principal of that school, started the music there with two kiddies—one pianist, one violinist—who played for the other children to march into their school rooms. By degrees the interest in music spread, and within a few years there was a school orchestra.

THERE ARE twenty-seven grade school orchestras in Dayton, and five in the high schools. Also three high school bands. One thousand public school children participating in orchestral work; what a record! I believe that this figure includes the three hundred members of Dayton's parochial schools.

Before my visit to the Patterson School I had been taken by Miss Adelaide O'Brien to the Jefferson School—where Miss Elizabeth Brown is principal—to hear the kindergarten percussion orchestra. These youngsters are all under six years of age. Yet they were being taught to develop their sense of rhythm . . . to the baton waving of a sober looking boy who seemed to appreciate that discipline had to be maintained.

YES, Dayton is assuredly musical, and otherwise artistic too—as I discovered during the luncheon given by Mrs. H. E. Talbott at Gray Manor, where there were present Miss Penelope Perrill, a feature writer on the Dayton News, Daniel Mahoney (son-in-law of former Governor Cox), and Howard Egbert, respectively general manager and editor of the News, and B. B. Thresher, man of leisure and art promoter. For Mr. Thresher is responsible for the library which circulates paintings—fine paintings—much after the manner of circulating books. The interesting part of it is that the canvases are well treated.

There was the same display of interest in music and art at the luncheon given in the Engineers' Club, to consider ways to promote further the destinies of Dayton's Westminster Choir. And again, at the dinner given by Mrs. Talbott in her home, the topics were of music and what is kindred to it. Even E. G. Burkham, publisher of the Dayton Journal and the Dayton Herald, forgot momentarily about politics and other large news matters; and equal concern was manifested by J. A. MacMillan, president of the Dayton Civic Music League, and other representative citizens of the city who are business men, and hard headed at that.

The foregoing are some of the reasons touching the why of Dayton's music tendencies . . . and its decision that, among other things, the Westminster Choir shall have its chance.

"He can stir audiences to a wild pitch of enthusiasm."

—Boston Herald, November 25th, 1924.

BRAILOWSKY

"A sure drawing card to the box-offices."

—Boston Globe, November 25th, 1924.

"A pianist of high rank."

—Boston Transcript, November 25th, 1924.

"Mr. Brailowsky quickly established himself as a pianist of brilliant technique. . . . In interpretation he is first of all the poet." —Boston Traveler, November 25th, 1924.

"No pianist since Paderewski's time has made such a complete and instant conquest."

—Toronto Daily Star, December 1st, 1924.

In America until March, 1925

SEASON 1925-1926 NOW BOOKING

Management:

WOLFSOHN MUSICAL BUREAU, INC.

250 West 57th St.

New York City

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

MASON and HAMLIN PIANO

AMPICO RECORDINGS

Stock Leads Bruckner Work

Lent and Medtner Are Soloists in Chicago Symphony Concerts; Elshuco Trio Plays.

Chicago, Nov. 29.—Anton Bruckner's Unfinished Symphony played by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, achieved, according to Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner, "the most surprising and impressive success of Frederick Stock's present season." The conductor discovered in this "noble" work, continued Mr. Gunn, "its every effective moment, of which there are many . . . it was given a great performance, notably the scherzo."

Maurice Rosenfeld of the News was another to comment on the enthusiastic reception of the Bruckner work. He, too, was impressed with the symphony, especially the "meaty and tuneful themes . . . developed and elaborated with such ingenious musical skill, with such consummate art of the adept in musical construction . . ." He admitted that at times the themes were over-developed, but held that the work was interesting at all times.

The other feature of the program was the playing of Sylvia Lent, youthful violinist, as soloist. Miss Lent played the Bruch G minor Concerto "with rare beauty of tone, with flawless technique, with a dignity and earnestness of style that contrasted pleasantly with her youthful unself-consciousness," wrote Mr. Gunn. He considered Miss Lent "the most interesting soloist of the season thus far." Of equal enthusiasm was Mr. Rosenfeld who congratulated the artist for "brilliance and spontaneity," ample technique, and a good sense of accent and rhythm.

The appearance of Nicholas Medtner as player and composer of the featured piano concerto at the preceding symphony concert, was met by general approval of him as a pianist, and some dissension in respect to his creative talent. Maurice Rosenfeld called him a "veritable sensation." Of his piano concerto in C minor he said, "It is a very heavily scored work, long and sombre in theme and musical build."

Edward Moore of the Tribune agreed that Mr. Medtner is "a first class pianist" but felt that the composition, which "starts magnificently" cannot keep up the pace. The Herald and Examiner reviewer, Glenn Dillard Gunn, thought the pianist "an admirable virtuoso," but "his own concerto not a successful display piece." Karleton Hackett of the Evening Post on the other hand considered it to possess themes of "character" in which are "both breadth and charm."

Also on the program was Scriabin's Symphony No. 3, The Divine Poem, about whose merits there was some disagreement among the reviewers. Mr. Rosenfeld found that this music is "full of melodic beauty" and was played by Mr. Stock and his orchestra "with big tone volume and great technical finish." Mr. Gunn, however, cared not so much for the Scriabin, taking comfort in the Secret of Suzanne number at the beginning of the concert and the Mozart E flat Symphony played later on, which he called "a delight in every moment."

One of the important events of the week in Chicago was the concert given by the Elshuco Trio of New York in the foyer of Orchestra Hall. Edward Moore of the Tribune said that the sometimes harsh combination of piano and violin was in the case of Mr. Giorni's playing "blended" so as to take "its proper proportion, and so the music of Beethoven, Opus 97, and of Tschaikowsky, Opus 50, sang from the first note to the last." Maurice Rosenfeld of the Daily News wrote that the trio "evinced a good tone blend, a perfection in the art of ensemble." The Herald Examer also spoke of this blending of piano with the other two, its reviewer writing that he had "never heard cello and violin tone more perfectly matched and blended." Mr. Hackett of the Post wrote, "The precision of the playing was admirable, but the balance of the parts was not always quite in proportion. The cello was apt to dominate."

Guiomar Novaes, Brazilian pianist, gave a recital here after her year's retirement from public appearance in the United States. Her performance was termed by Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner "the artistic climax" of a day full of concerts, and he further went on to call her "the great woman pianist" of the present day. Her playing of Chopin and a Godowsky transcription of Rameau's Tambourin were both most favorably commented upon. Edward Moore in the Tribune wrote that he perceived a marked improvement even since her last appearance in concert.

Roland Hayes, tenor, was another Chicago recitalist this week. Maurice Rosenfeld of the News wrote that his concert was "another demonstration of a sincere artist disclosing his gifts and accomplishments without extraneous devices and with genuine self-effacement." Further, he said, "Mr. Hayes' art is at its best in purely lyric song and in the performance of poetic, romantic selections." Both he and Glenn Dillard Gunn in the Herald Examiner liked his negro spirituals. Mr. Gunn also approved his Beethoven songs sung in English. "To hear Roland Hayes sing the negro spirituals is an experience," asserted Karleton Hackett in the Post, and the Tribune said "he has cultivated the art of singing softly until it is a fine art."

Last Friday night Sascha Culbertson gave a violin recital in Orchestra Hall before a large audience. He played Grieg's C minor Sonata and Bach's Chaconne, the Paganini Concerto and the Wieniawski Faust Fantasie with the approval of the Herald Examiner. Karleton Hackett thought the playing in places during the Paganini number "inelastic," but for the most part showing an "understanding of the music," with "a tone of warmth."

Other concerts were the two-piano recitals in Kimball Hall, also on Friday evening, by Leon Benditzky and Vitaly Schnee that received favorable comment; a chamber music concert by the Chicago String Quartet; a concert arranged by Mme. Derrfuss in Orchestra Hall on Thursday for the benefit of the Sisters of St. Francis, Mme. Derrfuss singing with "a contralto voice of natural beauty, go range and volume," according to Mr. Hackett.

Faye Ferguson, a young pianist, made her Chicago debut in recital on Friday. The Daily News "found Miss Ferguson to be a young artist of serious purpose and commendable musical gifts."

The Post said of Isa Kremer, who sang here this week, "She is always an interesting singer of ballads, but in the Russian and Jewish songs she gets a peculiar quality which makes them distinctive." Mr. Finston led a symphony concert at the Chicago Theatre Sunday noon, with "just the right kind of program," according to the Post, on it the Saint-Saens Dance Macabre with the violin obbligato played by Eugene Dubois, concertmaster of the orchestra. Miss Rae Bernstein played the Bortkiewicz concerto for piano with orchestra, as special soloist.

Chicago Opera Bill

TONIGHT

Mefistofele—with Mmes. Muzio and Claessens; and Messrs. Chaliapin, Cortis, and Oliviero; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

TOMORROW

Rigoletto—with Mmes. Macbeth, Correnti and Perini; and Messrs. Piccaver, Schwarz, and Lazzari; Mr. Weber conducting.

THURSDAY

Lakme—with Mme. Pareto; and Messrs. Schipa, Defrere, and Cotreuil; Mr. Lauwers conducting.

FRIDAY

Carmen—with Mmes. Garden, D'Hermany, Swarthout and Macbeth; and Messrs. Ansseau, Stanbury, Cotreuil and Rimini; Mr. Polacco conducting.

SATURDAY

The Jewels of the Madonna (matinee)—with Mmes. Claessens and Raisa; and Messrs. Lamont, Rimini and Oliviero; Mr. Cimini conducting.

La Traviata (evening)—with Mmes. Pareto and D'Hermanoy; and Messrs. Schipa, Schwarz and Mojica; Mr. Cimini conducting.

Edith Mason Appears In Madame Butterfly

Giorgio Polacco Conducts; Role of Pinkerton Sung by Charles Hackett.

Chicago, Nov. 28.—"So perfect a rendition of the music of Cho-Cho San, and so realistic an interpretation of the dramatic unfoldment of this operatic character have rarely been given here," was the verdict of Maurice Rosenfeld, music reviewer of the Daily News, regarding the acting and singing of Edith Mason in Madame Butterfly at the performance of that opera by the Chicago Civic Opera Company last Monday evening.

Mr. Rosenfeld expressed the opinion besides that "Miss Mason's voice is the purest, smoothest, and most expressive of any soprano of the day." Karleton Hackett wrote in the Post that Miss Mason was in superb voice, singing "with a warmth and variety of tone color which brought out every shade of meaning" in her part.

Others in the cast were not forgotten by Mr. Rosenfeld, and he praised Giorgio Polacco, conductor, also, "who conducted with a master's intuition and understanding" and "produced from the orchestra forces a tonal background of a myriad dynamic effects and colors." Also in the words of Mr. Rosenfeld, "Charles Hackett's manly impersonation of Pinkerton was truly American," and "his singing was virile and warm," while Flora Perini, the Suzuki, "showed that she has a mezzo-soprano voice of depth and richness."

Karleton Hackett thought that "Charles Hackett was in excellent voice, and sang with spirit" and that "the duet with Miss Mason was one of the high lights" of the evening. This reviewer had praise also for Messrs. Rimini, Beck, and Oliviero, and for Miss Perini, and he said besides, "Mr. Polacco conducted with authority."

Mr. Rosenfeld found Mr. Oliviero "very good as Goro," and added praise of the appearance and singing of Elizabeth Kerr.

Club to Give Musicale

Albert Stoessel, violinist, and Arthur Loesser, pianist, will be the artists appearing at the Eighth Andiron Club Musicale, for the maintenance of the Andiron Club Publication Fund, at Town Hall next Monday evening.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

GRADOVA Concert Pianist
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Duo Art Records Steinway Piano Fisk Building New York

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

EDITH MASON SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK CITY

On The Music Highway

THE Schola Cantorum, under the direction of Kurt Schindler, announces a performance of Chabrier's opera Briseis as part of the program for its first subscription concert of the season on December 30 at Carnegie Hall with the following cast of soloists: Dusolina Giannini, soprano, who will sing the role of Thanasto, the mother of Briseis; Mario Chamlee, tenor, as Hylas, the lover of Briseis; John Charles Thomas, baritone, as the Catechist, and Leon Rothier, basso, as Stratokles, the Greek servant. The work has had but one previous presentation in America, when it was given by the same organization (then known as the MacDowell Chorus), under Kurt Schindler's direction, thirteen years ago with a cast composed of Alma Gluck, Bressler-Gianoli, Edmond Clement, Dinh Gilly and Mr. Rothier.

The program will also include Act IV—The Novgorod Fair—from Rimsky-Korsakoff's opera Sadko. Although one of the favorites of Russian repertoire, this will be its first presentation outside of Russia. The chorus of 200 voices will be assisted by the full Philharmonic Orchestra in both works.

May Peterson's tour of her home state, Wisconsin, has just been concluded. The enthusiasm of her audiences is indicated by the fact that at Watertown she sang no less than thirteen encores.

Lee Pattison and Guy Maier will be the featured piano duetists on December 14 at the Henry Miller Theatre with Barrere's Little Symphony Orchestra.

Alexander Brailowsky, Russian pianist who made his American debut at Aeolian Hall on November 19, gave his second New York recital at Aeolian Hall on December 5.

Mme. Elena Gerhardt gave a second recital in Aeolian Hall on the evening of November 30. Her program devoted two groups to Brahms, and Hugo Wolf, the third to modern American and English songs, including Burleigh's The Sailor's Wife, Carpenter's The Lawd Is Smilin' and Walter Golde's To an Invalid.

Ruth Rodgers is to give a recital at Pennsylvania State College on December 12 and in Syracuse on December 17. Miss Rodgers will be heard in recital in New York City for the first time in January, on which occasion Isidore Luckstone will be at the piano.

Yolanda Mero will be heard in four joint recitals this season in Massachusetts and Maine. Worcester, Lowell, New Bedford and Portland will hear the pianist in conjunction with a singer.

Esther Dale, soprano, will give a recital in Town Hall tomorrow evening, with John Doane at the piano. Her program has been selected from names of songs sent in after her managers announced that Miss Dale would sing a request program. Miss Dale has arranged from the suggested songs, pieces by Bach, Brahms, Dvorak, Debussy, Poldowski, Koechelin, Tom Dobson, and John Alden Carpenter.

The New York Matinee Musicale, of which Mrs. Rosalie Heller Klein is president, gave the first concert of its first season at the Hotel Ambassador, New York City, last Sunday afternoon. The members of the club who participated in the concert were Harrington Van Hoesen, Alma Beck, Berthe Van den Berg, Catherine Widman, and a vocal sextet made up of Mary Merker, soprano; Marie de Keyzer, soprano; Anna Bohn, contralto; James McKinley Rose, tenor; Myron Watkins, tenor, and Richard E. Parks, basso. Ada Zeller was at the piano. Tea was served to members and their guests in the Italian Garden adjoining the ball room at the close of the program. The next concert will take place January 25.

Lynwood Farnam commenced a series of Monday evening organ recitals on December 1 at the Church of the Holy Communion, Sixth avenue and Twentieth street, New York.

Monday evenings in February Mr. Farnam will give four Bach programs. Some of the newer works are occasionally repeated at these recitals.

At the Pittsburg, Kan., Festival this spring a quartet consisting of Marie Sundelius and Julia Claussen of the Metropolitan Opera Company and Paul Althouse and Arthur Middleton, formerly of that organization, will be heard in performances of Elijah, the Messiah and in concert.

Arno Segall, Hungarian-American violinist, who recently appeared in London, arrived a week ago on the Mauretania. He will make his New York debut on January 14 at Carnegie Hall.

Besides a recital appearance in Chicago, Ethel Leginska will be heard there on March 22 with the New York String Quartet. Her composition, Four Poems After Tagore, will be given on this occasion.

Milton Aborn's plans for musical stock the coming spring and summer include several circuits of four cities each.

There will be resident choruses, and a traveling cast will specialize in each play, this cast giving the same piece in each city.

Musical directors will be located permanently in each city, while traveling stage directors will perfect the local chorus a week ahead for each change of bill.

The production will travel with the cast, saving expense usually attending such productions. The appearance of a different cast of principals each week will be a new point of interest.

After four weeks of a piece has been played over the circuit the cast will start over again with another play.

Each city will have a season of eight to twelve weeks, starting after Lent.

Cesar Franck's Prelude, Choral and Fugue opened the second recital program of Charles Naegele at Aeolian Hall on the evening of December 1. There was a group of Chopin, followed by works of Stravinsky, Ravel and Debussy.

Ruth Breton, violinist, will appear for the first time in Philadelphia on December 15. Her New York orchestral debut is scheduled for December 28, when she will play the Glazounow concerto with the Philharmonic Orchestra in Carnegie Hall under Henry Hadley's direction.

The second dance program by Albertina Rasch and company, which was announced for Tuesday night, December 2, in Town Hall, was postponed until the middle of January, when it will be given in the Manhattan Opera House with its larger capacity and stage equipment.

Mieczyslaw Munz arrived from Poland on November 22, leaving immediately for his tour on the Pacific coast. He will be heard in New York later in the season.

Charlotte Harvis, coloraturo soprano, who has appeared several times in and about New York, has been selected by Alessandro Bonci as assisting artiste on his concert tour, inaugurated in Detroit two weeks ago. His only New York appearance was at the Manhattan Opera House last Sunday afternoon, December 7.

Three appearances in Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia with the New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch conducting, were recently made by Tito Schipa.

Moriz Rosenthal will give his first New York recital of the season at Carnegie Hall on the afternoon of January 4 as the sixth concert of the Wolfsohn subscription series.

Allen McQuhae, Irish tenor, will give his first New York recital in two years at Carnegie Hall on the evening of January 11.

Wanda Landowska plays in Washington on December 11 and at the Music Schools Settlement concert in New York on December 12. On December 19 Mme. Landowska will be heard at the Biltmore Musicales in New York.

William Bachaus is to give a series of three subscription concerts of piano music in New York this season. His program will contain a number of novelties.

Three artists took part in the concert under the auspices of the Washington Heights Musical Club last Tuesday evening in Aeolian Hall, New York. They were Michael Anselmo, violinist; Regina Kahl, soprano; and Virginia Ruggiero, pianist.

Marguerite d'Alvarez, Elvira de Hidalgo, and Richard Hale are the soloists scheduled for the third of Andres de Segurola's Artistic Mornings at the Hotel Plaza next Thursday. Mme. d'Alvarez will sing the aria from Debussy's Lia and songs by Borodine, Deems Taylor, and Fuster. Mme. de Hidalgo's offerings vary from the aria from Lakme to shorter numbers of Respighi, Rimsky-Korsakoff, and Luna. Mr. Hale's program includes a group of negro spirituals.

On his way to Texas, where he is appearing in many cities, Rafaelo Diaz, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, sang in Natchez, Miss., and in Selma, Ala. The latter was a joint recital with Sascha Jacobsen, violinist.

Jeanne Gordon interrupted her intensive operatic work on Thursday morning, November 20, to give a recital for the Haarlem Philharmonic Society of the City of New York at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

Samuel Dushkin, American violinist, who has been concertizing in Europe, is expected to sail on the Paris, on December 6. Recently he gave the world premiere of Ravel's new Rhapsodie de Concert, Tzigane, with William Mengelberg at Amsterdam. On November 9 he played the Mozart double concerto with Lionel Tertis, English violist, at Queens Hall, London. These two artists are scheduled to play this work early next year with the New Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Dushkin will give his first New York recital in Aeolian Hall on January 18, when he will feature the Ravel Tzigane.

Other scheduled appearances of the violinist are in Washington, January 9; Evanston, January 20; Chicago, January 22; New York, March 5 and 6; Washington, March 17; Baltimore, March 18; Philadelphia, March 19.

RAFAELO DIAZ
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Management: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
HARDMAN PIANO

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
First appearance with N. Y. Symphony Orchestra Nov. 30, 1924
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

CLAUDIA MUZIO
SOPRANO, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: HARRISON & HARSHBARGER,
1322 Kimball Building, Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: O. SCOTTO, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

Rosenthal Soloist In Rothwell Concert

Los Angeles Orchestra Plays Berlioz Work; Gives Popular Concert.

Los Angeles, Nov. 22.—The Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra gave the program of its fourth pair of concerts yesterday afternoon at the Philharmonic Auditorium. The interest of the occasion was divided between the Chopin Concerto for piano in E minor, Moriz Rosenthal, soloist, and the Berlioz Harold in Italy Symphony.

Concerning the playing of the pianist Carl Bronson of the Los Angeles Herald said, "Upon this occasion he completely transcended anything which our ardent admiration had conjured, and, of course, the response was a demonstration which the beloved pianist will not soon forget." Florence Lawrence of the Examiner said Mr. Rosenthal gave "a magnificent interpretation," the Illustrated Daily News thought it "was alone well worth going to hear," and Bruno David Ussher in the Express considered "Rosenthal's keyboard art . . . masterly"; whereas Edwin Schallert in the Times, although thinking Chopin not an orchestra composer and the orchestration of his concertos "light in color and emphasis," wrote that Mr. Rosenthal's tones "were delicate and enchanting" and his phrasing in "most excellent taste." Jose Rodriguez of the Record joined the others.

This reviewer championed particularly the virtues of Berlioz, in whose Harold symphony Emil Ferir, in the words of Mr. Schallert, played a solo "charmingly." Mr. Ussher said "Berlioz's music took on new life, much to the ennobling and vivifying playing of Emil Ferir in the great viola solo."

On November 16 there was an unusually large audience present at the third "pop" concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Walter Henry Rothwell.

The novelties were Moussorgsky's Gopak and Rimsky-Korsakoff's Chanson Russe from Doubinouschka. The Record reviewer admitted that neither composition was a "startling novelty" but added that "they proved well worth the trip to hundreds for whom the rest of the program held no special attraction." Jules Lepske, of the first violin section of the Philharmonic, the Illustrated Daily News reported "handled Bruck's Scottish Fantasy as a solo with admirable skill." The Examiner found him "in excellent form." The Express found his work highly commendable.

Strauss' Death and Transfiguration was given an "authoritative" reading by Mr. Rothwell, said the Examiner.

STELLA de METTE
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Formerly with Metropolitan Opera
Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.
Exclusive Management of
ANTHONY BAGAROZY
Aeolian Hall New York

Koussevitzky Gives Second N. Y. Program

Brahms' Fourth Symphony and Prokofieff's Scythian Suite Played by Bostonians.

In the second concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in Carnegie Hall the afternoon of November 29, there was, according to Olin Downes of the Times, "additional testimony to the present excellent technical status of the band and to the temperament and individuality of the conductor. Mr. Koussevitzky had a better grip of the situation than on Thursday night; he worked his will more completely in interpretation."

The first half of his program was Russian and included Glinka's Overture to Ruslan and Ludmilla, the Prelude to Moussorgsky's Khovantchina, The Flight of the Bumble Bee from Rimsky-Korsakoff's Tsar Saltan, and the Scythian Suite by Serge Prokofieff. After the intermission Brahms's Fourth Symphony was played. The reviewers were divided in their opinion as to which half the program was better played. Lined up with Ernest Newman of the Post in his admiration of the playing of Brahms, were Olin Downes of the Times and the writer in the Sun. Deems Taylor of the World, and Herbert Peyser of the Telegram-Mail thought (in the words of the former) that in the Brahms Mr. Koussevitzky "appeared to less advantage than in anything else he played." Academic and "surprisingly uninteresting" was Mr. Taylor's opinion, while Mr. Peyser, although admitting that the interpretation "had breadth, clarity and technical command," thought that it "fell grievously short in authenticity of style and the poetry native to this music."

Mr. Newman, on the other hand, said that Mr. Koussevitzky "gave us a performance of Brahms' Fourth Symphony that was vital throughout, —broad, massive and lucid, with some exquisite playing in the andante . . ." Mr. Downes thought that in "breadth, in virility and beauty of color, this was a reading that did admirable justice to the spirit, the form . . . of the symphony." Writing in the Herald Tribune, Lawrence Gilman was more conservative. He found it "by no means a transcendent performance" but admitted its eloquence and warmth.

"A marvelously detailed and brilliant performance" was given the Scythian Suite, wrote Mr. Taylor, although the music lacked vitality and individuality. "Vivid and stirring" were Mr. Newman's adjectives in speaking of this work, although he, too, admitted that the chief merit of the work was in the expert scoring and "profoundly interesting . . . not so much for what it achieves as for what it stands for and strives for." Mr. Gilman did not find the work effective, except in the last movement.

RICHARD CROOKS
Sang at the Hotel Biltmore Musicale Last Friday Morning.

Chicago Opera Presents First Trovatore of Season

Chicago, Nov. 25.—Mmes. Homer and Muzio, and Messrs. Rimini and Lamont were included in the cast which sang Il Trovatore at the Chicago Opera for the first time this season last Wednesday evening.

Mme. Homer, in the opinion of Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald-Examiner, "gave stars and others a great lesson in the art of song," and marked in this performance "the highest level of the season thus far." She "fairly lived her role," said Maurice Rosenfeld in the Daily News.

Mmes. Muzio and Homer were singled out by Edward Moore of the Tribune for particular praise, and Karleton Hackett wrote in the Post that Claudia Muzio's singing "was fine, with interpretative force, tonal beauty, and technical certainty." This reviewer referred to Mr. Lamont's voice as "full and clear" in the Miserere, while Mr. Rosenfeld considered that this singer's was "a rousing performance, even though there were a few spots where the matter of intonation might have been slightly impure."

Mr. Gunn accorded full praise in his review to Mme. Muzio as Leonora, Mr. Rimini as the Count, and Forrest Lamont as Manrico. Mr. Rosenfeld said of Mr. Rimini, "He conducted at a pleasant, if not sensational pace."

Bodanzky Conducts Metropolitan Parsifal

Matzenauer, Laubenthal, Whitehill, and Bender Sing at Thanksgiving Day Matinee.

Thanksgiving afternoon saw the performance of Wagner's Parsifal, a production "up to the Metropolitan's high standard," to use the Post's phrase. "Under Bodanzky's magic baton," continued this review, "the orchestra sang Wagner's 'swan song' as even the most critical music lover would have it given. The score of the first part of the third act has seldom if ever been better played." The writer in the Times agreed that the performance "was of familiar and generally excellent qualities." The World reviewer congratulated Mr. Bodanzky for conducting with "fluency and excellent balance."

The cast was highly praised. Margarete Matzenauer's Kundry "is one of her most successful roles," wrote the Post commentator; the Times said she showed "commendable restraint and dignity;" and the World admired her for her "earnest, capable" performance. The Parsifal of Rudolph Laubenthal was a "sympathetic interpretation which rose to lofty heights in the last scene," said the Post. Herbert Peyser in the Telegram and Mail found him a "personable, workmanly hero;" the Times said that he excelled in what it termed "perhaps his best role;" the World admired his "good looking and technically correct" impersonation.

Clarence Whitehill gave his "usual adequate performance," stated the Post while the World enthused that his characterization "for vivid reality and overwhelming tragic power deserves to stand very close to the Boris of Feodor Chaliapin." This reviewer also liked Paul Bender's "mellow" Gurnemanz. It was called by the Times "intelligent and well sung," and the Post commented that Mr. Bender's interpretation "makes that knight a human and lovable as well as a dignified character."

The Klingsor of Gustav Schuetzendorf was approved by the Times chronicler. Others in the cast were Paolo Ananian, Marion Telva, Angelo Bada, Carl Schlegel, Ellen Dalossy, Louis Hunter, George Meader and Max Altglass. The Times lauded Mr. Bodanzky for accomplishing much with the score.

Ethyl HAYDEN
Lyric Soprano
Management: Loudon Charlton—Carnegie Hall, New York

ETHEL
GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 192
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

LOS ANGELES EVENING EXPRESS, MONDAY, MARCH 17, 1924

MME. SCHNITZER GREAT PIANIST

By FLORENCE PIERCE REED

The most highly individualized of the women's pianoforte coterie is Germane Schnitzer, who appeared as soloist with the Philharmonic orchestra at yesterday's pop concert. Here is an artist of exceedingly fine which never fizzes or goes high a flame because of the intelligence behind her work. Therefore each tone and each phrase glows with warmth and has a touch of something that sparks fire to the emotions. But thanks he to the intellect, it can never be designated as just pretty playing or delicate playing which certain women pianists affect.

HAS VIGOR

Her playing has vigor and what we Americans would call real "pep." Temperament was reflected through the Liszt E Flat Major Concerto as sun shines through clouds. Throughout there was exquisite finish. Her tone is round and voluminous or it is by and delicate at will. The legato and power, the various crescendo, hand power, and paused, fings were effectively used. But crowning all was the ease, the phrasing smooth, and the taneous surmounted and the ranged tempo with which she moved, so rapid that one could scarcely discern the movement of those fleetly fingers. Then, too, the tricky staccato was all clear cut and superb in its way.

LOS ANGELES EXAMINER. MARCH 21, 1924

Mme. Schnitzer's Pianism Perfect

BY WILLIAM PROHME

THE vision of perfection has the effect, upon most idealistic people, of making them shrink. They compare their own small gifts with this of perfectly co-ordinated people, and proceed to feel small. Something of this effect is created by Mme. Germaine Schnitzer, who gave Los Angeles music lovers an opportunity yet last night to hear her in recital. Her appearance with the Philharmonic Orchestra had but whetted their appetites. They wanted more. They wanted to hear her play alone.

Mme. Schnitzer did so for them last night. The piano is almost a detached one. The instrument is—the instrument. She stands between the instrument, composer's works and the audience. She gives them music. The piano is the medium.

One has the feeling of perfect mastery. Nothing in piano technique is strange to her. Yet nothing is it is unconscious, either. The piano is part of her. It is me—Germaine Schnitzer—who is making beautiful music for us. And when we are lowing up, we are happily content to have luxury spun for us.

She has everything—beauty brains, fine musical perception, and perfect technic. She displays them in the Bach Chaconne (the transcription) she made of music which is of orchestral proportions into a piece of perfect piano playing. From the gentlest of pianissimi, she strode into the bulgar crash of heave chords. and did it all as if she were telling quietly, a lovely story. Boundless is pardonable when enthusiasm is pardonable when one tries to write of her. The usual words of admiration seem pale when applied to Mme. Schnitzer. The thousand moods that are contained in the Schumann carnival, which she played in full, supply to ripple off in full magic. It was a perfect delight—to

SEASON 1924-1925
BOOKED SOLID
Chickering Piano
Ampico Records

Read the following photographic reproductions of the press Comments and See

WHY

After Her Successes of 1924
The Los Angeles Philharmonic Honored Only

SCHNITZ

WITH RE-ENGAGEMENT FOR SEASON 1925

THE MORNING OREGONIAN, SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1924

Mme. Schnitzer's Recital Played Faultlessly.

Sure Touch and Intense Phraseology Displayed.

BY C. HILTON-TEVIET

A VERY beautiful piano recital was given by the lyric ably celebrated French artiste, Germaine Schnitzer, last the public auditorium upon rectors of the Music League of York.

Mme. Schnitzer is a woman great personal allure and charm, and her art reflects quality in a thousand subtle Her playing is and nervous usage strongly rhythmic, and in the sense—for logy into a better word—of wood in its fullness expression. Apart from with flawless technique, the mu the technique, the singing tone the high and in her softer leg the delicate, decorative the little angel-wings under her pelting fingers with a lavish tone.

Mme. Schnitzer is a brilliant most delicate discrimination some of her readings, as pianistic nuances were all of different through, possessed the ultimate in color and the exquisite Rosamund Ballet" in the drawing added that revealed the dis close as it is written, sometimes which even Stokowski cannot

STOCKTON DAILY INDEPENDENT. MARCH 29, 1924.

ARTIST PROVES PIANO MASTERY WITH CONCERT

Madame Schnitzer Magician of Sou... Varied Progra...

It was a colossal program which Madame Germaine Schnitzer presented to an audience which left no vacant places in the Central Methodist church last evening. Few pianists select for one evening's rendition compositions calling for so tremendous an expenditure of energy, so many varying shades of temperament, so wide a range of interpretative insight as that with which Madame Schnitzer elected to regale her Stockton audience. And through all she went like some great elemental force which finds nothing in its pathway over which it is not supreme.

Madame Schnitzer is a magician of sound, to sing tones as a painter paints colors. The magnificent Carnaval, by Schumann, which was given by Schnitzer, was superbly vital pictures with the color of her music. She gave the difficult work as a story-teller might tell a delightfully interesting tale—full of whimsicality, humor, joyousness and infinite beauty.

To select any portion of the program presented by Madame Schnitzer as more especially superbly done would be especially impossible as to say a red rosebud were more perfectly wrought than a white one. In all the musical phases of her brilliant program, she was the premier artist—in the dazzling clarity of her tone, the vigor of her conceptions and the exquisite delicacy of her interpretations.

THE SAN FRANCISCO JOURNAL SATURDAY, MARCH 8, 1924

PIANIST FEATURES SYMPHONY CONCERT

Miss Germaine Schnitzer Is Impressive in Her Introduction

The introduction of Miss Germaine Schnitzer, pianist, was the feature of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra concert yesterday afternoon. Attracted by an artist who has not been heard in San Francisco, the Friday audience was larger than usual, entirely filling the lower floor of the Curran theater, in addition to the usual good attendance upstairs. Miss Schnitzer first played the Mozart E flat major "Concerto." Through the three movements the player showed herself to have extreme facility of fingering a clear touch, almost limpid in the delicacy. Despite the orchestral accompaniment with its many instruments, Miss Schnitzer's work stood out. An especially commendable feature was the judicious use of the pedal. This composition, well filled with florid...ities, exemplified Mozart in happy mood, and its themes were easily met by Miss Schnitzer. Later she played the Saint-Saens "Africa," with orchestra, also new here, demonstrating more bravura of touch and expression.

THE OREGON DAILY JOURNAL PORTLAND, OREGON. SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1924.

French Pianist Is Heard in Program Of Big Compositions

By J. L. Wallin

Mme. Germaine Schnitzer, distinguished French pianist made her Portland debut last night under the auspices of the G. F. Johnson piano company and just

Mme. Schnitzer is one of the best-known pianists in Europe, and just before the present visit to the Pacific Coast closed an extended tour of Western Europe and Scandinavia. Prior to the European trip she was one of the favorites in the music centers of the Atlantic Coast.

That the majority of the audience was a sensational success was indicated soon after she had begun her program, which included Schumann's "Carnaval," which here a few days ago by Maurice Rosenthal. This stupendous composition was read most interestingly. It drew in appeal from movement to movement and it has many of them

LOS ANGELES ILLUSTRATED DAILY NEWS MONDAY, MARCH 17, 1924

Mme. Schnitzer Scores Triumph At Philharmonic

MME. GERMAINE SCHNITZER, French pianoforte virtuoso, scored a tremendous personal triumph at the Philharmonic auditorium yesterday afternoon, the occasion being her appearance as guest soloist with the Philharmonic orchestra at the tenth "popular" concert given by that organization this season.

Substituting Liszt's "Triangle Concerto" in E-flat for the Mozart composition in the same key, which was originally scheduled to play, Mme. Schnitzer fairly swept the big audience off its feet with the strength, fire and surety of her instrumentalization, more than earning the many curtain-calls she received at the conclusion of her performance.

LOS ANGELES EVENING EXPRESS, FRIDAY, MARCH 21, 1924

DYNAMICS IN PIANISTE'S ART

By FLORENCE PIERCE REED

A woman pianiste with all the dynamics of the masculine player, plus innate feminine soul fire, is Mme. Germaine Schnitzer

LARGE ATTENDANCE

The artiste was complimented with an attendance which was capacity on the main floor, with 400 seated on the stage and at least 500 turned away.

SAN F... M...

GIRL... IN M...

By RED...

the element of... pianist. Miss ... who played the ... certo and triump...

clarity which Mad... cleared to be char... French genius. She... the singing phrase. ... periods flowed with ... limpid and as full ... La Duse's Italian.

And the orchestral ... as the part for the ... done with the distinct... pects from artists keyed ... best by the example of ... colleague.

not present yesterday, by ... go tomorrow. You will ... pianist of rare mentality a... bility, and the orchestra ... great music con amore.

December, 1925
926, Apply to gement of Schnitzer
enue, New York

LOS ANGELES EXAMINER
MARCH 17, 1924.

PIANISTE IS GREAT ARTIST

Mme. Germaine Schnitzer, Soloist at Philharmonic, Enraptures Audience With Mastery

BY WILLIAM PROHME

NOTHING is so stimulating as to be moved to the point of completely unleased enthusiasm. To be enraptured by anything—whether it be a sunset, a poem, a lovely woman, or a piece of music played with genius—that is to ascend to the peaks of existence.

A few thousand of us were so moved yesterday afternoon at the Philharmonic Auditorium, at which Mme. Germaine Schnitzer, the French pianiste, did it with her playing of the Liszt E flat concerto with the Philharmonic Orchestra.

Mme. Schnitzer was told by Sarah Bernhardt that she had "grace, rhythm and power." That is another way of saying she has musical perceptions of the intellect, and perfect technique, all thoroughly co-ordinated.

Watching her, one felt the perfect co-operation between brain and tool—her hands. And this merely serving a complete comprehension of what she played.

Here was superplaying, the work of a woman whom one can honestly say she has thoroughly mastered her medium. There are pianists and pianists. With an orchestra many of the best seem a bit cowed, frightened. Not Schnitzer. She looks at the aggregation of eighty men beside her and says, "I am you equal." And she is. Her playing leads, it does not follow. She vies with them in mere tone production where that is required. Nothing can drown her out if she does not wish to be. Her force is too great. Nearly a dozen times she was called out by the audience, which had gone half mad at her performance. She had proven a sensation, indeed.

But it was a Schnitzer day. Nothing else mattered much.

LOS ANGELES EVENING HERALD
MARCH 17, 1924

SCHNITZER IS FEATURE OF CONCERT

Pianist Scores Triumph in Appearance With Philharmonic Orchestra

By CARL BRONSON

The tenth popular concert of the Philharmonic orchestra drew a large and representative audience to the Philharmonic auditorium yesterday afternoon and featured one of the most radiant pianists of the day, Germaine Schnitzer. The vehicle chosen by her for her duo with our orchestra was very much to the liking of all and very wonderfully placed beneath her fingers, and no doubt Liszt himself would have applauded her beautiful presentation of her "Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1 in E Flat."

The triumph throughout this magnificent work of pianistic art was in the performer's consistent treatment of the piano, which brought out all of the beautiful ...ces of the instrument and made ...ere accompanying accessory ...but an ideal vehicle for the ...d expression was so at home ... Schnitzer with the difficulties in hand that she vied with the various orchestral instruments which led into her phrases and met them with tones equal to their individual qualities.

This was a very unusual attempt and met with the most pronounced success, enhancing the assistance of Walter Henry Rothwell by holding all within the brilliant and traditional tempos of the real Lisztian art of the director and the heights of emotional appreciation were reached by the audience when with the last chords of the concerto ap...

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE
MARCH 8, 1924

...ENCH MUSIC FEATURE AT ...AY CONCERT

...Y C. B. BROWN

...chnitzer has been lon... California,but she was ...uting for ... one of the most in... pianists that I have ... the one regret in ... her appearance ... is not to give a ... revealed qualities ... and delicate in... going that should ... ingenuely inter...

...LY SKILL ...ely E flat mi... (not the one ... a work new ... erforce) and ... fantasy of ...luting in it... ...ts technic... ...ic strengt... ...ed so that ...rrents of ...phrasing ...against a ... tone s... ...earanc... ...would ...that on... ...ch in ...a po... ...rder... ...plete ...ani... ...ty.

THE SEATTLE STAR
TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 1924.

Music

Germaine Schnitzer Great Artist

Mme. Germaine Schnitzer, young piano virtuoso, who has received such favorable criticism thruout the country, was heard in recital last evening at the Plymouth Congregational church. Considered one of the most talented women pianists of the day, her concert was a revelation of pianistic art.

LOS ANGELES EVENING HERALD
MARCH 21, 1924

MME. SCHNITZER IN RECITAL HERE

By CARL BRONSON

Mme. Germaine Schnitzer presented a brilliant program before a very large and appreciative audience at Philharmonic auditorium last night and further proved her superiority as a pianist of the rarest accomplishments. There was almost continued demands for encores which the good taste of the performer prevented her from responding to at all times. She remade and made many atmospheres which were too unusual to be so lightly broken and she preferred to leave the platform and let what she had presented sink deeply into the consciousness of her hearers before presenting a counteraction. There is much virtue in this idea and while interruption is unavoidable in the enthusiasm stirred by the remarkable powers of this pianiste her good taste as to encores is commendable. Her program opened with that tremendous "Chaconne in D" by Bach-Busoni which so often amuses the Mirror" which so often amuses the piano, but under her skilful hands there was not a string forced beyond its powers. The Schumann "Carnival" has grown to be quite a popular vehicle for the varied emotions of the modern virtuoso, and though it is a bit long this musician warmed it into life and made much of the little pictures so cleverly drawn.

Sing Fedora in Philadelphia

Jeritza Appears in Metropolitan Performance; Kochanski Is Soloist With Orchestra.

Philadelphia, Nov. 29.—Giordano's Fedora was sung by the Metropolitan Opera Company November 25 on their second visit here this season. The performance offered the first local appearance this year of Maria Jeritza, who, with Antonio Scotti, and Giovanni Martinelli, interpreted the leading roles in the opera.

The Public Ledger congratulated the Metropolitan on having, in Mme. Jeritza, "a great singing actress" for the role. Especially in the last act, this writer thought "her vocal work, as well as her acting, was superb." Mr. Martinelli, according to this report, "has seldom been in better voice in this city and his high clear tones were the singing feature of the performance." The Record found these two singers "equal to every demand" of their respective roles; Mme. Jeritza's voice was "opulent and enthralling and she sang with fluid ease"; Mr. Martinelli, too, "quite outdid himself." Linton Martin of the North American and Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer agreed as to the excellence of their work.

Mr. Martin reported that Mr. Scotti and Mr. Papi shared the applause with them. The former sang "effectively" in a secondary role, and his work "received a fine interpretation," wrote Mr. Muschamp, who also considered that Mr. Papi "conducted with musicianly skill, and in the spirit of the composition." Other writers were agreed with this as they also were that the remaining roles were made the most of. Nanette Guilford received favorable comment for her singing of the Countess of Olga.

Paul Kochanski, Polish violinist, was the soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra November 28. The Szymanowski Violin Concerto, which he played, was received with mixed emotions by the reviewers. The composition itself was not generally liked, but Mr. Kochanski's playing was. The Public Ledger, although it doubted the success of the Concerto, said that the artist "gave a wonderful exhibition of violin playing." Linton Martin admired his "full, free, pure tone" when the score permitted—"which wasn't always." To Mr. Muschamp the composition was "incoherent in tonality and form, presenting itself in a rambling, rhapsodic fashion that tired the auditors." Less emphatic was the Record chronicler who, although he found the music confusing, thought the tonal effects, orchestrally, "beautiful, with many new experiments that were always conformable."

The concert opened with Weber's Overture to Der Freischutz, and Haydn's Symphony in G major, and Liadoff's Danse de l'Amazone completed the program. The writers were in accord with Mr. Muschamp when he wrote "all the music of the afternoon was superbly played by Mr. Stokowski and his men."

The newspapers continue to laud the San Carlo Opera Company. Of recent offerings, those receiving the most praise were Otello, Lucia di Lammermoor, Rigoletto, and Lohengrin. In the last-named the return of Giuseppe Agostini, tenor, was featured. He was cordially welcomed. Josephine Lucchese's "brilliant singing" in Rigoletto came in for much enthusiastic commendation. The Record said she "displayed her coruscating gifts as a coloratura and the sweet quality of her appealing voice evoked a thunder of applause following the singing of Caro Nome." Another to receive special mention was Stella de Mette in Carmen. Cavalleria and Pagliacci were also heard.

Heading the list of recitalists was Paul Whiteman with his orchestra. He was applauded lustily by an audience which included Leopold Stokowski. The reviewers admitted themselves enthused by his jazz and the Public Ledger reviewer exemplified critical comment when he wrote "Few more interesting entertainments have been given in this city for years." A feature of the program was George Gershwin's playing of his Rhapsody in Blue.

Sascha Culbertson, violinist, gave a recital at Witherspoon Hall. In it the Bulletin found "some excellent playing, wherein a volatile and romantic temperament was admirably controlled by a vast and capable technique." The Public Ledger agreed that Mr. Culbertson showed a "fine tone and all the technic he will ever require in his work."

The Music Club of the University of Pennsylvania, under the direction of H. Alexander Matthews, and the Orchestra, conducted by Hedda van den Beemt, gave the first concert of its season recently. The Women's Symphony Orchestra, under the auspices of the Philadelphia Music Club, also gave a concert. The soloists were Helen Laird, soprano, Rosetta Samuel French, pianist, and Oscar Langman, violinist.

Rachmaninoff Gives N. Y. Concert

In his first New York recital appearance of the season at Carnegie Hall on the afternoon of November 30, Sergei Rachmaninoff was up to his best form, the reviewers agreed. Deems Taylor wrote in the World what was more or less the sentiment of all the newspapermen present:

"Mr. Rachmaninoff is one of the few pianists whose playing possesses such interest in itself that he is wellnigh independent of his program. This fact stood him in good stead yesterday afternoon at Carnegie Hall, where he held a large audience spellbound by his playing of a program that, however excellent in detail, was by no means a novel one."

Ruffo and d'Arle Arrive

Tita Ruffo, baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, returned on the Leviathan last Tuesday for his season in New York. Mr. Ruffo said that he will make a concert tour in the spring. Yvonne d'Arle, soprano of the Metropolitan, arrived on the same ship.

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Whitehill and Bender

Die Meistersinger was repeated at the Metropolitan on December 1 with Clarence Whitehill, recovered from his indisposition which necessitated Paul Bender's playing of the part in the previous performance, in the role of Hans Sachs. In this performance Mr. Bender sang the role of Pogner.

The Post chronicler found Mr. Whitehill "in fine voice" and his "remarkably fine work" in the old shop better and truer to life than he has ever done before. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail called it "a finely wrought" performance. Mr. Sanborn said also that Mr. Bender in the role of Pogner was "admirable." Alison Smith of the World stated that Mr. Whitehill was in excellent voice "and the magic of his workshop scene has never been more true or haunting." Admitting that Mr. Whitehill is "a fine and scrupulous artist, and that everything that he does is intelligent and worthy of respect," Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune thought he showed a tendency to "refine and subdue" the character to too great an extent.

To W. J. Henderson of the Sun, Mr. Whitehill's performance was "as mellow and engaging" as it always has been.

This writer thought that Mr. Bender as Pogner was "a tower of strength" in the performance.

The Elshuco Trio

The second of the series of concerts of the chamber music of Brahms by the Elshuco Trio and the Festival Quartet took place the evening of November 28 at Aeolian Hall. The assisting artist was Gustave Langenus, clarinetist. On the program were the A major Sonata for piano and violin, played by Hugo Kortschak and Aurelio Giorni; the Clarinet Quintet, and the F minor Quintet, Op. 34. The first number, said the Times, "was played with marked sympathy and musicianship."

Alison Smith of the World was gratified with the "sure craftmanship and instrumental balance" displayed in this second concert. "A notable example of how a piano should sound in a chamber music ensemble," was the Herald Tribune's comment on Mr. Giorni's playing. Agreed as to the excellence of Mr. Giorni's work was Herbert Peyser in the Telegram and Mail. Another of the artists who received especially favorable comment was Mr. Langenus. The Sun considered that his performance in the clarinet quintet proved him to be a "master of his instrument." Of the whole performance the Herald Tribune wrote that "the players performed their pleasant and profitable task most creditably, with a generally smooth, well blended tone."

PERSIS COX
Pianist and Teacher
Address: Pierce Building
Copley Square, Boston, Mass.
and
Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass.
Baldwin Piano Welte-Mignon Records

Emilio de Gogorza

The postponed recital of Emilio de Gogorza, baritone, took place last Tuesday afternoon at Aeolian Hall. The reviewers were frank to admit that, although a slight trace of cold could be detected in his voice at first, the concert was a musical event of importance. Several of these chroniclers complained that Mr. de Gogorza's appearances here are distressingly few and far between. Richard Aldrich of the Times expressed the sentiment of the critical audience to some extent when he said "his vocal skill and artistic accomplishment were such as have made so many of his recitals heretofore memorable occasions."

The writer in the Herald Tribune asserted that "the performance was an instructive example of a full use of vocal resources, interpretation of songs instead of mere vocalization . . . his voice scores its effectiveness through his capability to express a wide range and variety of feeling and its finely shaded gradations." Although the Telegram-Mail reviewer suspected traces of a cold, he said "Mr. Gogorza's remarkable command of breath, the smoothness and nobility of his legato, the variety of his tonal coloring were all the more conspicuous because the voice itself was not always the docile instrument of his will . . . as the afternoon advanced, however, his voice warmed . . . and gained in freedom and facility." In the final group of Spanish songs, he sang "with admirable ease, as well as with fire, with emotional intensity, and with that chic which is peculiarly his."

Equally fired with enthusiasm over the concert was W. J. Henderson of the Sun. "Technically Mr. de Gogorza is without a superior," he stated flatly. "He is a master of vocal method."

Alma Kitchell

Mme. Alma Kitchell, contralto, gave a song recital in Town Hall on the evening of December 1. The Sun reviewer said that she "revived the drooping spirits of those who seek the elusive muse of music among the Forty-third street concert halls" although "in the finer realms of tone production Mme. Kitchell's vocal performance was not always consistently good. The Herald Tribune thought it "agreeable singing, if not entirely beyond cavil."

In the opinion of the observer of The Post, Miss Kitchell was the "possessor of a really pleasant voice, of smoothness and fine beauty and color, accompanied by a stage presence and an ability of interpretation that many a veteran might have envied." The Times reported that she "displayed a voice of ripe sympathetic quality and of much flexibility."

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Philharmonic Orchestra

With Henry Hadley conducting for the first time this season, the Philharmonic Orchestra, in its concert November 29, played a program consisting of the Brahms First Symphony, the Schumann Cello Concerto, with Leo Schulz as soloist, and, in memory of its composer, the late Victor Herbert's Irish Rhapsody. According to the Herald Tribune, "Mr. Hadley seemed in excellent conductorial form for his seasonal debut, directing with skillful competence, while Mr. Schulz . . . played with notable smoothness of tone and dexterity of technique." The Sun considered that the Herbert work was "splendidly performed by Mr. Hadley and his orchestra."

At the concert on the 26th, Willem Van Hoogstraten conducting, Nicholas Medtner made his third appearance here. He played Beethoven's Fourth Piano Concerto "to Mr. Van Hoogstraten's excellent accompaniment," wrote Deems Taylor in the World. Mr. Medtner's "excellent playing" of the concerto did not surprise Olin Downes of the Times who had heard him before, and who considered that he played with his customary "beautiful quality of tone, with a fine sense of the delicate proportions of the most romantic of Beethoven's compositions . . ." In his work, Ernest Newman of the Post found "powerful intellectuality, disdain of all softness of line and of accent . . ." Mr. Newman also complimented Mr. Van Hoogstraten very highly for his more than creditable reading of Tschaikowsky's Pathetic Symphony.

Ignazio d'Amico Sings

With the assistance of Jean Lampasona and Giulia Bergamo, sopranos, Ignazio d'Amico, baritone, gave a recital at Town Hall November 29. He sang numbers from Thomas's Amleto and Verdi's Ballo in Maschera and shorter solos. With the other two artists, he sang operatic duets.

Little Symphony

George Barrere and the Little Symphony Orchestra gave the fourth of their six concerts on the evening of December 1 in Henry Miller's Theatre. Mr. Barrere again introduced a novelty, the Symphony in E flat by Franz Neubauer, Bohemian contemporary of Mozart. Albert Stoessel, and Reber Johnson, violinists, with Jerome Rappaport, played Mr. Stoessel's Suite Antique for violin, piano and orchestra. Mr. Rappaport played also Mozart's Piano Concerto in D minor, with orchestra. There were selections by the French composer Hue and a seldom heard composition of Beethoven.

The Sun said the Neubauer symphony "proved of much interest," the Post that it showed "distinctly the influence of Mozart," but it "nevertheless stood up under its own merit." Of the rest the Post observed the Hue numbers "were particularly well received" and that the young pianist Mr. Rappaport, "pleased" in the Mozart Concerto.

Hercules Pascal

Hercules Pascal, basso, assisted by Elinor Whittemore, violinist, and Solon Alberti, accompanist, gave a concert at Town Hall last Wednesday evening. Deems Taylor's lyric entitled Captain Stratton's Fancy was represented on the program which also included Greek folk songs, German and Russian songs and operatic excerpts. The Sun thought Mr. Pascal showed skill in the management of his voice which was "powerful but agreeable." He interpreted his numbers, continued this review, "with earnestness, and his sympathy and clear diction were praiseworthy." The Herald Tribune said that the singer repeated his very acceptable performance of last year, and the Times was pleased with his rendition of the Greek songs as well as finding him "dignified" in his singing of the more ambitious opera airs.

ERNEST DAVIS

A MELLOW QUALITY and ringing high notes are always welcome in a tenor.

Ernest Davis, at his recent New York recital, prompted The Times critics to comment on this mellowness of tone.

The Herald-Tribune reviewer declared that Mr. Davis "has a tenor voice of notable ease and smoothness, and adequate volume, and expressive capacity."

"Exceptional dramatic ability * * * and fervent interpretations" were qualities commented on in The American, while The Sun chronicler emphasized "a voice of good quality, well placed and endowed with considerable powers of expression." The World and Evening World reviewers also contributed favorable opinions. The whole in recognition of the achievement of an American Tenor.

In the Middle West January 15 to February 15

MANAGEMENT
Daniel Mayer Aeolian Hall, New York

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

BUZZI-PECCIA
FOUNDATION OF THE OLD ITALIAN METHOD
VOICE DICTION PERSONALITY
33 WEST 67TH STREET NEW YORK

FREEMANTEL

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Marjorie Meyer

Marjorie Meyer, New York soprano who made her debut last March, reappeared in a Town Hall recital on the evening of December 3.

W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that her voice was light but "of pretty quality," best in its upper register. Besides approving heartily her program arrangement, he observed that there was "one of the most dazzling outpourings of 'floral tributes' ever seen in the hall."

The Herald Tribune reviewer commented favorably on her program and thought Miss Meyer sang "with taste and intelligence," if with a voice of "comparatively limited volume." He particularly pointed out "delicate handling" of the Italian numbers, with success in the matter of high notes, although the lower appeared of more uncertain tone.

Pitts Sanborn observed in the Telegram Mail the same type of approval of Miss Meyer's "unusual and exacting program," pointing out that her voice, of "light calibre and color, could be heard with pleasure in music of a gently lyric" nature.

The Times reported her voice to be lyric, "of sweet and unvarying timbre," specially capable in the Italian songs, and remarked that there was occasion "to admire the unering loveliness of the workmanship of Brahms' Botschaft." This reviewer said the song by Evelyn Merriman, still in manuscript, "should be heard again." A large audience applauded generously. Frederic Persson was at the piano.

Eugene Frey

In a difficult program ranging from classic airs to modern songs, Eugene Frey, Alsatian baritone, was heard in debut at Town Hall, New York, last Thursday. His "tuneful" voice, with its "effective quality of giving pleasure to its listeners" and its "something personal which appealed to their sympathies" impressed both his audience and the Times reviewer. To the writer in the Herald Tribune Mr. Frey's voice was especially effective in soft or mezzo-forte passages, where it showed "an unusually firm and smooth quality of tone and a certain rich fluency." The artists's stage presence was well spoken of in the Sun. The World found the recital "distinguished by almost perfect diction and phrasing and the warm, full quality of his voice. His Handel numbers were sheer joy, but he was less happy with the latter-day Italians." Mr. Frey was accompanied by Russ Patterson.

Edmond Vichnin

Edmond Vichnin gave a first piano recital at Aeolian Hall on the afternoon of December 3. He has already played in Berlin and Vienna. His program included numbers by Debussy, Medtner, Glazounoff, Schumann, Fannie Dillon, Goossens, Moussorgsky, Korngold, Liszt and Pick-Mangiagalli.

The young pianist displayed "sound musicianship and genuine talent," according to the Sun's reviewer, although at times an "unsympathetic touch." "He has now, with fingers fleet and strong, to gain poetic insight," said the Times account, although it recognized his "brilliant" interpretation of the less interesting Glazounov number, which Alison Smith of the World called "interminable." The Telegram-Mail reviewer thought he should learn greater "delicacy," although recognizing the "cleanness of his playing."

Ignacy Dygas

The first American appearance of Ignacy Dygas, Polish tenor, took place at the Manhattan Opera House the evening of November 30. Mr. Dygas, who is said to have appeared in opera in Warsaw and Moscow, sang operatic numbers and Polish, Russian, and Italian folk-songs. The Herald Tribune reported that the tenor displayed "a voice of good size and agreeable quality." The Times reviewer found Mr. Dygas's voice one of "excellent quality and power, despite some effort in this last point." The accompanist of the evening was Wilfred Pelletier. A good sized audience, many of whom were Mr. Dygas's compatriots, applauded warmly.

Pouishnoff Appears Again

Leff Pouishnoff, Russian pianist, who made his American debut here recently, gave a second recital in Aeolian Hall, December 1. The Sun said he "confirmed the excellent impression he had made at his first appearance." Equally enthusiastic were the other chroniclers. Deems Taylor wrote in the World that "the good impression Mr. Pouishnoff made at his debut deepens upon a second hearing. He is an exceptionally gifted pianist, with a technique that is apparently equal to anything, has an unusually graceful and polished style, and an excellent sense of proportion."

Boy Violinist in Concert

A fourteen-year-old Greek violinist, Nickos Cambourakis, played at Aeolian Hall the evening of November 29. With the Tartini Devil's Trill Sonata and Wieniawski's D Minor Concerto as his principal offerings, the young artist gave what the Herald Tribune characterized "a promising performance, with a tone of very satisfactory quality." Mr. Cambourakis was accompanied by Diana Graffman.

San Francisco Hears Eichheim Work

Composer Leads Orchestra in Novelty; Geraldine Farrar Appears in Carmen Version.

San Francisco, Nov. 24.—The San Francisco Symphony Orchestra's third subscription pair of concerts contributed to the week's musical entertainment a novelty, Henry Eichheim's Oriental Impressions. Tschaikowsky's Francesca da Rimini was also played for the first time by the orchestra. The D Major Symphony of Brahms, whom Alfred Hertz "has taught us to love," as Redfern Mason expressed it in the Examiner, was the other number given.

The Eichheim sketches were five, based on folk and temple music gleaned during his travels in Korea, Japan, Siam and China, supplemented by use of gongs and xylophones, tam tams and bells. Mr. Mason liked its sincerity and realism, and the conducting, which was by its composer. Its "faithfully realistic impressionism" was also enjoyed by Ray Brown of the Chronicle, who considered it shamed some other sham attempts at Orientalism. Mr. Elliot in the Herald likewise attested its beauty, and the "ease and distinction" with which its composer conducted. On the other hand, although he considered it of more than passing interest, Mr. Woodman of the Call thought the composition not comparable to the Brahms, for instance.

This reviewer rather liked the Tschaikowsky piece; but it did not meet with the entire approval of Mr. Mason, or Mr. Brown, who thought it "unconvincing." Both conductors were cordially applauded.

The second evening program of the orchestra was given in the Civic Auditorium with a repetition of two major works given October 31, Tschaikowsky's E Minor Symphony and Deems Taylor's Through the Looking Glass. Eva Gauthier was the soloist, with some Ravel, Bainbridge Crist's Chinese Mother Goose Rhymes, and Una voce poca fa from Il Barbiere di Siviglia.

The symphony was the "climax" of the program, Ray Brown recorded in the Chronicle, which he regretted to have been so placed in the program that its superior dramatic content may have indirectly been the cause of a lesser enthusiasm from the audience during the subsequent Taylor suite. William Elliot of the Herald considered however that both had been well received, and his praise of Miss Gauthier covered all her numbers, including her short encore, but stressing the group of brief descriptive songs, which appealed to the audience. To Mr. Brown her voice lacked the power needed for singing with orchestra.

Geraldine Farrar's production of Carmen here drew an audience that filled the Capitol Theatre. Her "operatic fantasy" was the subject of much diverse comment in the local press. In general, the reviewers felt that the new version was a far cry from the familiar Bizet opera. Ray C. B. Brown of the Chronicle said that "even the magnetic personality" of Farrar could not make it seem quite convincing.

Mollie Merrick wrote in the Bulletin that the unconventionality of setting and costume "came as a shock" to the audience. That Farrar won applause was due, according to Miss Merrick, to her "tremendous personality and supreme acting artistry . . . by the time she lay in the sudden subtle beauty that only Farrar can bring to a stage death, she had completely conquered even the most conventional" of her audience. The version was considered by Redfern Mason "a suitable vehicle for the display of her arts and her personality, the death scene was superb, and there were moments, too, in the love scene that revealed the real artist."

FRANCES PERALTA
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
MANAGEMENT: NATIONAL CONCERTS, INC., 1451 Broadway, New York

Anton BILOTTI Pianist
Management: Lionel Powell & Holt, London, England
Steinway Piano Welte-Mignon Records Exclusively

ELSA ALSEN
Famous Wagnerian Dramatic Soprano
FIRST N. Y. RECITAL—Evening of November 25 at Aeolian Hall
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG 1425 Broadway, New York City

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

RUTH ST. DENIS with TED SHAWN and the Denishawn Dancers
Season 1924-1925 Now Booking
Pacific Coast Tour Nov. 24—Jan. 10 Already Booked
Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

POUISHNOFF

PIANIST

W. J. HENDERSON, Dean of New York critics, says of Pouishnoff in THE SUN:

"ONE OF THE FINEST NEW PIANISTS HEARD IN A LONG TIME."

THE SUN TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1924.

Russian Pianist Makes Debut.

Leff Pouishnoff, Russian pianist, made his American debut in a recital yesterday at Aeolian Hall. This player effected his entry into New York in a singularly quiet and unheralded manner, but by his performance he at once made it clear that he is on of the finest new pianists heard in the city in a long time. His bearing is modest, his manner quiet and dignified. He has been playing for some time in Europe and London. He began with the simple D minor "Melodie" of Gluck. This he followed with Beethoven's thirty-two variations in C minor, which he played with poetic insight, intellectual power, good piano tone and much admirable finger technic. After the variations he gave the D minor organ concerto attributed in the program to Wilhelm Friedmann Bach, who was the gifted son of the great Johann.

No finer piece of pianistic management of dynamics and tone coloring has been heard in Aeolian Hall in many a day than Mr. Pouishnoff displayed in the opening passages of the concerto's score yesterday, and as for his playing of the colossal work throughout, it was, in short, a widely varied and fine demonstration of rare musical talent admirably developed. His program included Liszt's B minor sonata, three compositions each by Schumann and Chopin—the latter's "Polonaise Fantasie" for one, and the "Islamey" fantasy of Balakireff. The audience was of moderate size.

The Der Male Ch us.

Second New York Recital

"The good impression Mr. Pouishnoff made at his debut deepens upon a second hearing. He is an exceptionally gifted pianist with a technique that is apparently equal to anything, has an unusually graceful and polished style and an excellent sense of proportion."—N. Y. WORLD.

"There seems quite a present and a future for Mr. Pouishnoff as pianist and composer."—N. Y. TIMES.

"Called further attention to the excellence of his technique."—N. Y. HERALD-TRIBUNE.

"The reading had clearness and authority."—N. Y. AMERICAN.

"In every phrase he played he showed himself a master of tonal variations, his piano touch was a delight and he never once forced his instrument beyond normal limitations."—THE SUN.

His 2nd New York Recital took place at

Aeolian Hall

on

Monday Afternoon

December 1st

OWING TO PREVIOUS ENGAGEMENTS MADE FOR EUROPEAN CONCERTS TO BEGIN IN FEB. POUISHNOFF WILL BE AVAILABLE FOR ONLY A LIMITED NUMBER OF AMERICAN APPEARANCES THIS SEASON

Exclusive Bookings by

HUROK INC.
WORLD'S GREATEST STARS
Aeolian Hall — New York

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

BALDWIN PIANO

WELTE-MIGNON RECORDINGS

Werther Is Revived By Chicago Opera

Garden, Ansseau, and Freund Sing in Performance of Massenet Opera.

Chicago, Nov. 29.—In the revival of Massenet's Werther by the Civic Opera Company, Mary Garden appeared for the first time in the part of Charlotte, Fernand Ansseau sang the title role, and a native young soprano, Helen Freund, made her operatic debut. Miss Garden, wrote Edward Moore in the Tribune, "went through the notes of the score as if Massenet had composed it for her use this season." The critical audience approved the reappearance of this opera in the repertory and Maurice Rosenfeld of the News felt it another good vehicle for Miss Garden's "unrivaled art as actress and singer."

Karleton Hackett asserted in the Post that Miss Garden "sang with sustained beauty of tone, and the other chroniclers were convinced that she was excellent in the part. None of them failed to comment on her youthful voice and appearance which were factors in her success in the role.

The debutante of the evening was well liked. The newspaper writers decided that she proved herself an actress and singer of ability. Several expressed themselves as amazed at her stage presence and perfect poise. "A delightful voice, a charming young actress" was Mr. Moore's contribution. Mr. Hackett was affected by her "pretty ingenuousness" which was most appealing, and Mr. Rosenfeld admired her "clear, fresh voice, pleasing in quality. She sang her music with taste and with a poise which was unusual for so young a singer."

Contributing to the general success of the performance was Mr. Ansseau. He sang with appreciation for the text and with warmth of tone, wrote Mr. Hackett, "This music makes great demands on a tenor. There must be great variety of tonal shading, unlimited high notes and absolute vocal control. Mr. Ansseau was equal to them all. The full voiced phrases had richness as well as resonance, the soft phrases had tenderness and he could modulate his voice at will to express what was required by the text. Very fine singing." Glenn Dillard Gunn stated in the Herald and Examiner that he had never sung better.

Alexander Kipnis "likewise rose to noble heights of lyric art," continued this commentator. Mr. Rosenfeld found him "in fine form vocally." Edouard Cotreuil put touches of subtle humor into his bailiff and sang most effectively, according to this writer. Giorgio Polacco was complimented for his reading of the score.

Many Varied Concerts Heard in Washington

Philadelphia and New York Symphony Orchestras Give Programs in Capital.

Washington, Nov. 28.—Washington's musical season was opened by Emilio de Gogorza, of whom Helen Fetter of the Evening Star wrote, "He never appeared to better advantage, arousing fresh admiration with the artistry of his tone production, dramatic emphasis and excellent enunciation." This was on October 16. On the day following Mme. Tamaki Miura won "sympathetic attention and even tears from a capacity audience" as Mme. Butterfly, with the San Carlo Opera Company, Aldo Franchetti conducting, and Ada Salori, Dimitri Onofrei, Giuseppe Interrante and Giuseppe di Benedetto carrying the other leading parts.

Vladimir De Pachmann made his appearance here on October 25, leaving behind him in his seventy-fifth year, something of the radiant and refreshing candor and originality of a child. Other recent recitalists were Olga Samaroff in a program that was much approved; and Renee Chemet, whom Miss Root, of the News declared to be a keen surprise to her hearers. Kate Scott Brooks of the Herald described her tone as vigorous, bold and of much color, and said that her technic was all that could be desired and her temperament abundant.

The Philadelphia Orchestra visited Washington on October 28 and November 25, crowding the house each time. The first program consisted of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, and of a Stravinsky group—Fireworks, Song of the Volga Boatmen and the Suite from the Bird of Fire. Mr. Stokowski was openly dissatisfied with the reaction of the audience to this group and countered successfully, so to speak, in his second concert with a Wagner program.

The New York Symphony Orchestra has also played here twice, once in the Fine Arts series, where the program ranged from Mendelssohn's Fingal's Cave through Pierne's Cydalise to Tschaikowsky's Nutcracker—all with expository remarks in Mr. Damrosch's graceful manner—and once under Mrs. Wilson-Greene's management, when Honegger's Pacific 231 was the bone of contention. The Evening Star found the sheer power of the work such as to compel attention whether one likes it or not, and the Washington Post saw "a great deal of the spirit of America" in this example of ultra-modernism.

Mrs. Wilson-Greene's enterprises have also included a recital of Feodor Chaliapin, Anna Pavlowa and her Ballet Russe in dance, two engagements being necessary to meet the demand, and Paul Whiteman and his Orchestra.

M. G. S.

CORNELIUS VAN VLIET
Who Will Present the First of His Series of Three Chamber Concerts at Rumford Hall, New York, on December 19.

To Give Chamber Concerts

Cornelius van Vliet, cellist of the New York Trio, will present this season a series of three chamber concerts at Rumford Hall, New York City. The first concert will take place on December 19, and the succeeding two on January 29 and March 27. The assisting artists will be Elly Ney, pianist; Evelyn Jeane, soprano; Samuel Lifschey, violist; Clarence Adler, pianist, and Louis Edlin, violinist, the last both members of the New York Trio. Other artists assisting, from the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, will be Hans Lange, assistant concertmaster; John Amans, flute; Bruno Labate, oboe; F. Roelofsma, clarinet; Bruno Jaenecke, French horn, and A. Fortier, bass.

At the first concert, Bach, Porpora, Mozart, and Beethoven, will figure in a classical program. The next two performances are scheduled respectively for romantic and modern music.

Brailowsky Is Again Favorably Received

Larger Audience Present at His Second New York Recital Than at Debut.

Alexander Brailowsky at his second New York recital, which took place at Aeolian Hall Friday evening, not only confirmed the impression made at his debut here sixteen days previous but added much to his prestige.

"Not many young pianists who have made appearances in America in recent years play with the poetry, the individuality and the fire that characterized the performance," wrote Olin Downes in the Times, "He is a born virtuoso in the highest sense of the word . . . a man born to perceive and reveal beauty."

While Mr. Downes detected moments when the pianist's temperament got the better of him he admitted that such were quickly forgotten "because the big line of the performance absorbed the detail that has been slightly askew, and the overwhelming temperament and sincerity of the artist compel respect and response in those who listen."

The Herald Tribune reviewer was impressed by the "splendid energy and dramatic power and the evident conviction" of the pianist, also commenting upon the warm approval of the large audience . . . which was twice the size of that which heard Mr. Brailowsky's first recital. Many encores prolonged the program.

Mr. Brailowsky will give an all-Chopin program at Carnegie Hall on the afternoon of January 10 for his third New York appearance this season. He has been reengaged to play in Boston and Toronto. He has also been engaged to appear in Minneapolis and with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Ithaca Conservatory of Music 1892--33rd Year--1924

TUITION UNDER MASTER TEACHERS 4 Master Scholarships Valued at $700.00 each 4 BOARD and ROOM FREE

Scholarships Awarded Through Competition—Note the Date

JANUARY 19, 1925

I. THE CESAR THOMPSON MASTER SCHOLARSHIP IN VIOLIN.
II. THE LEON SAMPAIX MASTER SCHOLARSHIP IN PIANO.
III. THE RUTH ROGERS MASTER SCHOLARSHIP IN VOICE.
IV. THE GEORGE C. WILLIAMS MASTER SCHOLARSHIP IN EXPRESSION.

INSTRUCTION
in theoretical subjects
WITH WELL-KNOWN SPECIALISTS

For application blanks and information—write The Registrar
ITHACA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
DEWITT PARK, ITHACA, NEW YORK

K O L I T S C H

Management: Antonia Sawyer, Inc,. Aeolian Hall, New York

Southern Conference Holds Third Meeting

Name of Organization Changed; New Officers Chosen for Coming Year.

Winston-Salem, Nov. 22.—At the third annual meeting of the Southern Conference, held in Winston-Salem, N. C., from November 17 to 21, there were present delegates from fourteen Southeastern states. Miss Alice E. Bivins of Greensboro, N. C., the president for the past year, and Mr. William Breach of Winston-Salem, host to the Conference, were in charge of the arrangements of the meeting.

The Conference approved in principle the plan suggested by the National Conference which will provide for biennial meetings of the National and Sectional groups in alternate years. The official name was also changed to The Southern Conference for Music Education, in an attempt to emphasize the fact that the organization includes not only supervisors of music in the schools but also representatives of college and university music departments and all other teachers of music in its territory.

From the standpoint of music education in the South, the important event of the week was the report of the Committee on Educational Policy, which presented a course of study and a plan for the accrediting of music and the acceptance of music credits as college entrance requirements.

The organization and work of the music department in the Winston-Salem schools received high praise during the week. Numerous demonstrations and the four major concerts were presented.

The incoming officers are Miss Helen McBride, president, assistant supervisor of music in Louisville, Ky.; Miss Irma Lee Batey, vice president; Jennie Belle Smith, secretary; Leslie A. Martell, treasurer; William Breach, publicity agent, and Paul J. Weaver, auditor. The meeting place for next year has not been definitely decided but Birmingham, Ala., and Baton Rouge, La., are being considered.

Forrai Appears In Tannhauser

Chicago, Nov. 28.—The Chicago Civic Opera Company gave for its Thanksgiving offering a second performance of Tannhauser. Mme. Olga Forrai sang the part of Elizabeth, otherwise the cast remained as before. The new heroine presented a "charming and youthful figure," said Mr. Gunn in the Herald, who liked her clear enunciation besides. Mr. Hackett in the Post thought her sympathetic, with "dignity" and "charm," and, although her singing was at times "a little thin," he considered she sang with "fine appreciation."

St. Louis Hears Two Symphony Programs

Stefi Geyer and Elsa Kraus Are Soloists; Ganz Conducts Deems Taylor Suite.

St. Louis, Nov. 20.—The St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, Rudolph Ganz, conductor, in its concert at the Odeon November 28, offered Deems Taylor's Through the Looking Glass Suite. Mme. Stefi Geyer, Hungarian violinist, was soloist in Spohr's Gesangscene Concerto.

Richard Stokes in the Daily Post-Dispatch found the Jabberwocky music "journalistic," witty, impressionistic, and refreshing. Richard Spamer in the Globe Democrat preferred the less pictorial harmony of the Mozart Magic Flute Overture with which Mr. Ganz began his concert. The Times reporter considered Mr. Taylor's scoring "both interesting and unique, and his melodies beautiful."

Blanche Ullman found the suite "clever and whimsical." All the reviewers were agreed on the excellence of Mme. Geyer's playing, which Mr. Spamer said was consummated with "surpassing ease, smoothness and clarity and without apparent effort." She was enthusiastically applauded.

On November 23 Elsa Kraus, pianist, and a St. Louis woman, was featured at the third popular symphony concert. Her playing of Grieg's Concerto in A minor showed her to be "one of the most accomplished pianists this city ever produced," according to Marguerite Ely of the Globe-Democrat. The possessor of "a clear-cut and satisfying pianism," Miss Kraus was called in the Post-Dispatch. The latter reported the program generally "replete with melody," including as it did, Schubert's March Militaire, the Cantabile from Tschaikowsky's Fifth, Sinding's Rustle of Spring, some Puccini, Von Suppe and Mascagni.

Repeat Chenier With Ponselle

Andrea Chenier, repeated at the Metropolitan November 29, brought Rosa Ponselle "as a vigorous and tragic Madeleine," in the words of Alison Smith of the World. The Post reported that Miss Ponselle "acted as well as she sang . . . she threw herself into the part with an emotion and a vocal expression which kept pace with the increasingly tragic character of the action." Her duets with Gigli, who had the title role, "brought storms of applause," continued this paper, "culminating in an ovation at the end of the third act."

ETHEL PARKS
Who Appeared in Her First New York Recital of the Season Last Night in Town Hall.

Music of the Movies

At the Piccadilly this week Tschaikowsky's 1812 Overture is the main number of musical program. The regular Sunday forenoon concerts are being continued weekly at the Piccadilly. The length of the feature picture limits the Rialto music this week to the prologue, in which Miriam Lax, soprano; Inga Wank, mezzo-soprano; and Beatrice Wightwick, contralto, are taking part.

The Rivoli orchestra is presenting daily selections from the works of Beethoven, and the Ensemble is appearing in the prologue. Wagner's Meistersinger Prelude is the overture at the Capitol, and the ballet is dancing to music of Henry Hadley. The first of a series of impressions of famous songs is introduced this week with a dramatic presentation of The Lost Chord.

Music of Verdi is featured on the program of the Mark Strand Theatre, with the orchestra and soloists giving selections from Aida, Otello, and Forza del Destino. Songs of more popular nature are also being sung in connection with the feature film.

Dicks Conducts Sacramento Orchestra

Sacramento, Nov. 25.—The Sacramento Municipal Symphony Orchestra gave its second concert of the season November 21 under the baton of Franz Dicks, formerly of the Minneapolis Symphony. Beethoven, Verdi, Rachmaninoff, Zerco, Wagner, Wilhelmj, Grieg, and Strauss works were on the program.

Petroushka Played Under Verbrugghen

Schmitz Is Soloist With Orchestra, and Gives Lecture Recital; Verbrugghen Quartet Appears.

Minneapolis, Nov. 15.—Stravinsky's Petroushka Suite and Mozart's D major Serenade were offered by Henri Verbrugghen and the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra at its third concert last night. The former occasioned controversy of opinion. James Davies in the Tribune treated the Stravinsky lightly in his report, and yet he "frankly liked it." Mr. Nilsson of the Journal found it interesting and "capitally played," and the preceding Roman Carnival by Berlioz one of "Mr. Verbrugghen's finest overture interpretations." E. Robert Schmitz assisted in the Stravinsky Suite and in Cesar Franck's Symphonic Variations, and deserved his enthusiastic reception, according to Mr. Nilsson.

The Verbrugghen String Quartet inaugurated its series of concerts on November 15 at the McPhail auditorium, Henri Verbrugghen prefacing the program with analytical remarks. On this occasion Debussy's Quartet, Op. 10 and the Beethoven Op. 59, No. 1, were given, with an "impression of splendid artistry," said Mr. Davies.

Mr. Schmitz, pianist, gave the second of his three lecture recitals on November 1.

Frances Paperte Sings In Reiner Pop Concert

Cincinnati, Dec. 2.—After two Sunday afternoon programs devoted entirely to Wagner and to Tschaikowsky, Fritz Reiner conducted the Cincinnati Symphony last Sunday, in a varied popular program, in which Frances Paperte, soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, was soloist.

Mrs. Plogstedt in the Post wrote that Mr. Reiner's performance of the Overture from Marta was "stunning," and that the Second Hungarian Rhapsody was played with "characteristic fire." This reviewer called Miss Paperte "charming with many possibilities." In the opinion of Clark B. Firestone, who reviewed the concert in the Times-Star, the soloist displayed "both lyrical and dramatic gifts."

"A pleasing voice and graciousness of manner," were found in the soloist by Carl Adams of the Enquirer, and the observer of the Commercial Tribune, Samuel Wilson, thought Miss Paperte's voice "lovely to hear," although he believed that her interpretative gifts need maturing.

All the reviewers praised the freshness of interpretation which Mr. Reiner lent to the many familiar pieces on the program.

Establish New Prize

Christine Nilsson has left the sum of £2,000 to the Paris Conservatoire to found a prize in her name.

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

MAY PETERSON
VOCALION RECORDS
SOPRANO Formerly Opera Comique and Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: HAENSEL & JONES, AEOLIAN HALL
NEW YORK CITY

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Nerone Opens La Scala Season

Wagner's Rheingold Is Presented on Second Night; Toscanini and Gui Conduct.

Milan.

At the opening of La Scala on November 15 there were present the customary first night crowd, with the great number of foreigners,—Americans always predominant in numbers.

Nerone, which was the opening attraction of the Scala season, is no longer a novelty for most, for by now the opera has entered the ranks of the regular pieces in the repertory of the Milan company. It has been established that the posthumous work of Boito breathes an artistic atmosphere of the highest ranges, and far from the superficiality and artificiality of much of the music of our times, it contains many pages of music of the sanest and most robust quality. Although it may not be the masterpiece which was expected from such an artist as Boito, it is a work of the most excellent and important artistic dimensions.

There were certain important differences between the production of Nerone which opened the Scala season the other night, and that which marked the premiere of the work last May. In the first place the part of Asteria was not in the hands of Rosa Raisa, but was sung by Maria Carena. Then again Signor Autori replaced the basso Pinza in the role of Tigellino.

The New Asteria

Signora Carena, gifted with a voice that is essentially lyric, gave to the part everything that she has in the way of loveliness of tone quality and (more limited) of volume. Certainly in the parts of the opera where she was required to be a dramatic soprano, or a mezzo-soprano, she contended with very great difficulties. She is best in such parts as the leading roles of Lohengrin or Aida, in which she has in the past achieved the greatest of success at La Scala.

The part of Tigellino too is not such that the new singer in the role, Signor Autori, showed to best advantage in it, as did his predecessor of the premiere.

In the orchestra for the performance the other night was a considerable nucleus of that which played last May. A score or more of players who were on hand then are at present among the forces of La Scala, and needless to say the fusion of all the musicians, both old and new, was quite perfect, for at their head was Arturo Toscanini.

In his hands the score of Boito had the customary interpretation of love, both in general lines and in the matter of the minutest details, in the tone color, in the intimate spirit of the work.

The other artists were all members of the original company, and gave their very best in this most recent performance. They were Signor Pertile, who sang Nerone, Signor Journet, (Simon Mago), and Signora Bertana, (Rubria). The second of these three particularly earned applause by the clarity of his diction and by the excellence of his acting.

Performance Lacks Fire

For all that, the presentation this time lacked the warmth which that of last spring had in full measure. The audience was not carried away by its enthusiasm, but tempered its applause with complete self control.

With the presentation of the Rheingold on the second evening of the season the company began to satisfy one of the most persistent of the desires of its clientele, to hear the complete cycle of the Ring. Very shortly the Valkyries will be given, and Siegfried and Gotterdammerung are scheduled for production early next year. This will mark probably the first time that this cycle of Richard Wagner will receive complete and regular presentation anywhere in Italy, although separate productions of the four parts have been given in various theatres at long intervals.

Gui Conducts Rheingold

The Rheingold attracted one of the most intelligent and elegant gatherings ever seen at La Scala. It was conducted by Vittorio Gui, who read the score, for the most part, with fluid clarity and refreshing robustness, displaying with pleasing clearness the thematic material of the composition. Signor Gui showed himself a genuine master of the intellectual content and of the mechanical structure of the Wagnerian music in general, and of Rheingold particularly.

From time to time certain of the heroic themes seemed somewhat lacking in decisive vigor, the lyric qualities of the music being over-emphasized.

The tenor Amadeo Bassi sang the part of Loge, and he probably earned the honors of the evening. His diction was clear and beautiful, and besides his singing there was his convincing and skillful acting to commend. He is a singer of security and experience; he knows how to overcome imperceptibly difficulties of range.

Signor de Angelis, basso, is a veteran in Wagnerian interpretation, and he was quite at home in the part of Wotan. Expert musician, he drew the very best possible from a voice that is already on the decline.

The Fricka of Signorina Agozzino was really beautiful. The other members of the cast, all of whom sang creditably, were Signor Badinio as Alberico, Marta Offers as Erda, Signor Nessi as Mime, and Signori Righetti and Melnick as Giants. Signorine Valobra, Ferrari, and Lanza were the Rhine maidens, and displayed lovely youthful voices.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

Milan and Brussels Hold Funeral Services for Puccini

Brussels, Dec. 1.—Funeral services were held today for Giacomo Puccini, who died here Saturday. The route to the Church of Ste. Marie was lined by crowds and the church was filled long before the services began. The ceremonies were attended by a representative of the King, members of the diplomatic corps, and the Italian Embassy staff. Artists from the Theatre de la Monnaie sang Gounod's Ave Maria, Cesar Franck's Panis Angelicus, and Niedermeyer's Pater Noster. The coffin was covered with floral tributes from King Albert of Belgium, King Victor Emmanuel of Italy, and Premier Mussolini. The coffin was sent to Milan for burial.

Milan, Dec. 3.—The funeral of Giacomo Puccini was held in the Cathedral here today. The artists from the Scala Theatre, headed by Arturo Toscanini, were in attendance and joined in singing the funeral march, conducted by Toscanini, who was almost overcome with emotion. In spite of the rain, the procession to the cemetery was followed by an impressive number of people. Military honors were paid to the dead at the cemetery. The coffin was placed in the tomb of the Toscanini family temporarily.

Italian Notes

Bologna, Nov. 19. — Charpentier's Louise opened the season of the Comunale Theatre in Bologna on the evening of November 15. The opera was new to the city at this performance.

Rome, Nov. 18.—At the opening of the season of the Costanzi in Rome, when Wolf-Ferrari's Donne Curiose was given for the first time in that theatre, although not in Rome, the critics expressed particular praise of the ensemble and of the work of the conductor, Piero Fabroni.

The singers of the evening, who also are reported to have acquitted themselves excellently, were Maria Briganti (Rosauro), Ines Ferraris (Columbina), Ebe Ticozzi, and Signori Rebonato, Lunardi, Lussardi, Tega, and Uxa. Signora Briganti, the youngest of the company, was singled out for special commendation by the reviewer of the Giornale d'Italia.

Rome, Nov. 18.—Another Japanese artist has appeared on the Italian scene for the role of Butterfly. On the 15th Nobuko Hara sang the part at the Costanzi. She is extremely slim in build, but displayed nevertheless a voice of considerable volume. The middle register was adjudged good by the reviewers present, but they felt that the singer's lower notes left much to be desired. She was very quick and nervous in her movements on the stage, although hers was an intelligent and fitting impersonation.

The tenor Capuzzo had an equal success. Really excellent in its color and smoothness was the orchestral accompaniment provided by Maestro Piero Fabbroni.

Rome, Nov. 18.—Night before last the Maschere of Mascagni was presented at the Quirino Theatre. This was the first performance of the piece in several seasons. F. C.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Nicholson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

ABBY MORRISON
SOPRANO SAN CARLO GRAND OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON, 1451 Broadway, New York City

The Cleveland Institute of Music
A MODERN LABORATORY SCHOOL
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
The Institute carries pupils from the initial steps in musical training through the most advanced grades.
Rhythm, Ear-Training, Solfege, play an important part in the foundation lessons.
Orchestral Training, Composition, Pedagogy, Accompany ing, under master instruction, are offered advanced students.
Write for catalogue on regular instrumental and vocal courses
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Royal Philarmonic Opens Season

Other Orchestral Concerts; Americans Among London Recitalists; Choruses Active.

London.

The Royal Philharmonic orchestra opened its 113th season in London on November 20, before a Queen's Hall audience so ample that an overflow of attendance had to be seated on the platform, behind the double basses and the brass—an unusual sight at a symphonic concert. Since the program was quite conservative (Tod und Verklarung, the first Brahms Piano Concerto, and the Beethoven Symphony in A), it must have been the soloist and the conductor who attracted attention. Katharine Goodson played the one role, Wilhelm Furtwangler the other.

Mr. Furtwangler, it will be remembered, was acclaimed at his debut here last season. This time, however, the critics were in less favorable vein. All agreed in complaining that he forced the brasses especially, Mr. Scholes in the Observer going further to write: "We had all the slow parts too slow, all the loud parts too loud, and so forth" in the Strauss tone-poem. The Sunday Times commented: "We must credit Mr. Furtwangler with a passion for detail, but an acute sense of perspective is equally indispensable in a conductor; in the symphony it was perceptible that this is not his strongest suit." The Telegraph felt that the conductor belongs to the "temperamental" class, and that this quality leads "at times to an excess of zeal."

Katherine Goodson Soloist

As for the soloist, the same writer noted that she played "with splendid virility and technical assurance, without, however, persuading us that she was deeply enamored of the work." Miss Goodson "made all there is to be made" of the work in the Times' writer's estimate, "by turns sombre and unctuous." Mr. Scholes thought she "played with a vigorous, rough, hard brilliance, rather than with any keenly sensitive feeling."

At a Queen's Hall Symphony concert another English pianist was soloist: Miss Myra Hess. She was heard in the Schumann A minor Concerto, and, with the leader of the violin and flute sections, in the fifth Brandenburg Concerto of Bach. The distinction of her performance, "virile, resilient, and sunny" (the Observer), was a matter of universal comment.

Among recitalists, three of great note filled as many houses during this week of 16-23 November. Two were "repeats," Kreisler, who filled the Albert Hall on Sunday afternoon, and Galli-Curci, who filled the Alexandra Palace on Saturday evening; the other, Pablo Casals, filled the Aeolian Hall on Tuesday evening for a program of Bach, with harpsichord accompaniment. This "whole concert," says the Telegraph, "may be said without exaggeration to have been a revelation." And the Sunday Times writer goes on to commend the cellist's "incomparable finish of phrasing," "sensitive bow-hand," calling him "the very incarnation of rhythm."

Three other recitalists were of American origin: the violinist Arno Segall, of whose debut I have already written, was again commended for the "neatness" of his playing; and Samuel Dushkin caused the Telegraph writer to say again what the critics have already noted: "His violin playing has about it an order of brilliance that almost disarms criticism. He is able to make light seemingly of the most prodigious difficulties in a way that implies something almost amounting to genius." But this writer feels that Mr. Dushkin should not "rest content with the laurels that are rightly his on the technical side of his art, but pay increasing attention to the art of interpretation."

American Pianist in Debut

The third of this group of artists was Richard Buhlig, pianist, who made his first appearance in London since 1913 on November 17. "He commands consistent attention," said the Sunday Times critic, "by expressing himself decisively," but he is sometimes inclined to put "muscle before music." His "severity," the Telegraph chronicler felt, "brought an intense seriousness that was oppressive." Nevertheless, his recital "was an event of interest for those who care for pure pianoforte music; the passage of years has confirmed him in his own qualities."

Concert givers of a more local interest were many, and I can briefly note only some of them. Miss Adila Fachiri, violinist, added to what one reviewer termed "the week's orgy of unaccompanied Bach" in a recital that won much commendation, for "cleanness of style and impeccable phrasing" (the Times), for "warmth of tone and sense of power" (the Observer), for "unerring rhythmic sense" (the Telegraph). Mme. Kirkby Lunn's vocal recital again made evident a "wondrously rich voice" (the Telegraph), and those "niceties of vocal and expressive control of which she has long been mistress" (the Sunday Times). Of two pianists, Raoul de Koczalski won commendation as a Chopin interpreter for an excellent technique, and especially a "velvety touch;" Walter Gieseking for the further merits of "a powerful intellect and a rare sensibility."

Weingartner Also Conducts

Although there were in London in the week of November 9 to 16 many noteworthy concerts, still nothing occurred of startling interest, for the season is settling down, and artists and organizations are falling into the routine of second and third appearances.

Thus, besides the second of Dr. Malcolm Sargent's children's concerts, there were two orchestral events; one the second appearance of the Halle Orchestra, and another a special Wagnerian concert by the London Symphony, under Felix Weingartner. The latter met with varying receptions. The Telegraph, commenting on the rather small audience, said: "Those who stayed away missed some wonderfully finished and expressive readings." To the Observer, however, the evening "was an almost complete disappointment." The Sunday Times, too, in spite of the satisfaction it described, found "a suspicion of dullness here, a hint of overstrain there."

Perhaps the soloists were its cause, for the soprano announced could not appear and was replaced at the last moment by Miss Florence Austral. Singing in English to the German of a "young tenor manifestly unqualified either by voice or experience" (the Telegraph) to essay the last scene of Die Walkure, Act I, she was not able to make this part of the program a success, in spite of the valiant and capable efforts with which the critics credited her.

Suggest Regular Leaders

Note has frequently been made in these letters of the roughness of the London orchestral ensembles, and this was the subject of comparisons in the press on the occasion of the Halle concert, when the midland orchestra was commended for its finish of performance. Lack of rehearsal in London is generally given as the reason for local shortcomings, but it has long been felt that the policy of a new conductor for each concert, pursued for box-office reasons, had something to do with the matter. The Sunday Times writer came out with this after the Weingartner evening, suggesting "boldly" that the "L. S. O. might do worse than consider the appointment of a permanent general conductor, for the sake of regaining the discipline by which they won their laurels. That this is not what it was we may have suspected, but it has taken the advent of the Manchester players to drive the conviction home."

It is a fact that none of the London orchestras have regular conductors, as any reader of The Musical Digest may discover for himself by turning to last year's Summary Issue, where he will find, for example, that the Royal Philharmonic gave seven concerts under six leaders during 1923-24.

Three Choral Concerts

There were three choral concerts during the period under review; at one, held in commemoration of Armistice Day, Foulds's World Requiem made as little impression on the critics as it did when given on a similar occasion a year ago. The Royal Choral Society gave Berlioz's Faust, and the Philharmonic Choir opened its season with what seems to have become an annual performance of the Bach B minor Mass. Two chamber music bodies won newspaper commendation: the Snow and the Hungarian String Quartets. With the former appeared Frederick Thurston as clarinetist in the Brahms Quintet for that instrument. He is one of the woodwind players of whom London is justly proud, another being Leon Goossens, oboist, brother of Eugene.

There was only one new recitalist: Senor Vianna de Motta, the pianist who had previously assisted the cellist Suggia. He made a good impression. Five "repeats," though, merit attention: a Cortot-Thibaud concert, and individual recitalists by Frieda Hempel, William Bachaus, Alfred Cortot, and Arthur Rubinstein. All these artists were again rewarded with very distinguished commendation.

P. L.

Coates to Conduct in Spain

London, Nov. 15.—A series of Russian operas under the baton of Albert Coates, the English conductor, will shortly open the opera season in Barcelona, Spain. Mr. Coates plans to sail for the United States to take up his duties in Rochester shortly after Christmas.

Irrelohe Sung in Leipsig

Leipsig, Nov. 16.—Schrecker's opera, Irrelohe, under the direction of Gustave Brecher, was recently presented at the Municipal Theater here.

Name New Conservatory Head

Amsterdam, Nov. 4.—Sem Dresden, pianist and composer, has been named director of the Amsterdam Conservatory. He takes the place of Julius Roentgen, who is retiring.

SAMOILOFF
BEL CANTO STUDIOS
309 W. 85th St. Tel.: Schuyler 6952 New York

"Music & Letters"
FOUNDED 1920
The British Musical Quarterly
100 pages: 20s per annum post free to any part of the world
"Music and Letters is the best thing of its kind that is published, and forms a valuable addition to the library."—Musical Standard, August 23rd, 1924.
LONDON: 22, ESSEX STREET, W. C. 2

EUROPEAN NEWS AND VIEWS

Paris Opera Gives Parsifal

Motion Picture Is Exhibited in Historic House; Serge Liapounov Dies.

Paris.

With the conclusion of the summer vacation the Paris Opera immediately took measures to put new life into a repertory which not infrequently of late has been called slow and uninteresting. The first presentation in the fall was that of Wagner's Parsifal, a well studied and excellently staged performance. This opera is considered here perhaps the best represented of all the Wagnerian works in the Opera repertory.

The two features of this first performance which attracted most attention by their excellence were the lavish stage setting and the unusually good execution of the score by an orchestra under the baton of Philippe Gaubert. The conductor put a new life into the sacred music of Wagner's festival play.

With the exception of that of the chorus, the singing was generally agreed to be below the standard of excellence to be expected from the Opera. The impression gained was that the voices of the chief exponents did not do justice to their parts. The majority of the singers seemed not to possess sufficiently powerful voices to battle with Wagner's score, but the work of the chorus was distinctly good.

Franz Sings Parsifal

Paul Franz, dramatic tenor, to whom usually are entrusted the chief roles in the Wagnerian repertory of the Opera, sang the title role of Parsifal. He was not up to his best standard. Although his voice was powerful, it seemed to lack polish, and the upper notes at times were forced. He used to be a baritone before he made his debut at the Opera in 1909 in Lohengrin, and his voice apparently is seeking its old range.

Dramatically, too, M. Franz was not convincing. In the first and second acts he did not represent the youth without stain or blemish, but presented too manly a hero. In the third act when he should have reached maturity, he seemed awkward and unfitted in the part.

Mlle. Demougeot, the leading female Wagnerian singer in the Opera, gave a fine dramatic delineation of the part of Kundry. Unfortunately her well trained and polished mezzo-soprano was not sufficiently powerful to cope with the score. Her singing is very well balanced, her upper tones being as pleasing as the lower.

M. Delmas, the veteran baritone, who sang the role of Gournemanz, entered entirely into the saintly spirit of his part and gave pleasure from beginning to end. While his voice still retains some of its greatest beauties, there were moments when it was physically not up to its great task. His upper tones are still brilliant, but it was the lower that sometimes gave him obvious trouble.

Rouard Earns Praise

The surprise of the evening was undoubtedly the return of the young baritone, M. Rouard, in the role of Amfortas, which he sang in a manner worthy of the highest praise. Here is an artist who seems to have a great future before him. His voice has considerable volume, and it possesses smoothness and an even scale. Never a note was forced, and there was vigor and youthful freshness in whatever he sang.

His plaintive address in the first act could scarcely have been sung more beautifully. Although the part does not require much dramatic skill, M. Rouard convinced with his few gestures that he has resources of that sort too.

M. Huberty as Klingsor displayed a rather hard voice, but he acted the part well. M. Narcon was competent as Titurel.

Philippe Gaubert's reading of the score leaned to the mystic side. He laid particular stress on the string parts, and the musicians of the orchestra responded admirably.

The mise-en-scene, although ten years old, looked as fresh and beautiful as at its premiere in January, 1914. The moving scenery disclosed itself without a hitch. Special praise must be given to the stage movements of the chorus and to their singing.

This was the fifty-first performance of Parsifal at the Opera. Wagner's work is now as much as ever one of the best drawing cards in the entire repertory.

Opera Presents Film

For the first time in the history of the Grand Opera the management has presented a motion picture. The idea was originated with the purpose of protecting the French prestige in the film world. The aim was to exhibit in worthy style the first of a series of films dealing with French history.

Le Miracle des Loups was the title of the film, which was presented with great pomp and circumstance in the form of a gala night, at which the President of the Republic was present, together with all the ministers, the diplomatic corps, and all the lights of the social and dramatic worlds.

Oddly enough, one of the principal roles in the motion picture was taken by Vanni Marcoux, the French basso.

Henri Rabaud, director of the Conservatoire, wrote fitting music for the occasion, and the chorus of the opera was drafted to sing. So great was the success of the occasion that Le Miracle des Loups is running at the Opera House twice weekly, and the audiences are invariably of capacity size.

The return of Fritz Kreisler in two concerts at the Opera aroused widespread attention. This was his first appearance since the pre-war days, when the violinist was a favorite in Paris. His initial bow was greeted with tremendous applause, and he speedily established himself in his old favor. An interesting feature of the two concerts was the distribution of the three hundred stage seats on each occasion to his old pupils in Paris, to his ex-comrades in the Conservatoire, and to musicians who were blinded during the war.

Russian Composer Dies

Following hard upon the death of Gabriel Faure was that of the Russian composer, Serge Michaelovitch Liapounov, who died in Paris on November 11.

Liapounov was born at Paroslaw on November 30, 1869. He studied at the Moscow Conservatory up until 1883, and after that he lived in Petrograd until a few months ago, when he took up residence in Paris. He had been billed to appear with the Pasdeloup Orchestra early in December. Among his best known works are his Ballade, Op. 2; Overture Solonelle; Symphony in B flat, Op. 12; Ukrainian Rhapsody, and a number of symphonic poems.

Faure, who died sometime before, was given a solemn state funeral. A number of opera artists and conservatoire students sang parts of his works, and an orchestra composed of some of his students took part in the ceremony.

K. H. STOTTNER.

EDMUND BURKE
Canadian Baritone, Welcomed to His Alma Mater, McGill University, by General Sir Arthur Currie, Now Principal of the University (left).

New Finnish Opera Produced

A new opera by the Finnish composer, Madetoja, has just had its first performance in Helsingfors, says a cable dispatch to the New York Times from Berlin. The work, whose title is Pohjalatsia, is ultramodern in technic. It is said that critics hailed its appearance as an epochal event in Finnish music history.

Holland Has New Quartet

Amsterdam, Nov. 4.—Under the name of the Concertgebouw Quartet a new group of chamber players has been formed in this city. At their first concert they will present quartets of Koechlin and Milhaud, French composers.

To Produce Biblical Opera

Berlin, Nov. 15.—Rudi Stefan's opera, Die Ersten Menschen, is to have its first Berlin performance at the Volksoper shortly with Melanie Kurt in the role of Eve. The opera is an interpretation of the Cain and Abel episode in Genesis.

Pierne Elected to Academy

Paris, Nov. 29.—Gabriel Pierne, composer and orchestra leader, was elected a member of the French Academy of Fine Arts today to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Theodore Dubois.

Hempel Sings in Liverpool

London, Nov. 14.—Frieda Hempel and her assisting artist, John Amadio, accompanied by Coenrad V. Bos, gave a recital this week in Liverpool.

FLORA
GREENFIELD
SOPRANO
Management ERNEST HENKEL, 1451 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Bryant 3352 KNABE PIANO

FLORENCE EASTON
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
BRUNSWICK RECORDS EXCLUSIVELY
MANAGEMENT: HAENSEL AND JONES—AEOLIAN HALL, N. Y.

ANNE ROSELLE
PRIMA DONNA SOPRANO
Exclusive Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall New York City

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

A CONCERT was given November 22 in the auditorium of Stuyvesant High School, New York City, under the auspices of the Association for the Establishment of a Jewish Memorial Conservatory of Music in Palestine, in memory of the Jewish soldiers who fell in the World War. The artists heard were Mischa Mischakoff, May Barduk, and Harry Kaufman.

Dr. Alexander Lyons of Brooklyn was the principal speaker at the exercises preceding the musical program. "In the homeland of the Jewish people," he said, "which is again to become the centre of Jewish culture, our musicians will create music and sing the songs that express the Jewish spirit, as the psalmists and singers of old."

Charlotte Harvis, soprano, a pupil of Emilio A. Roxas, assisted Alessandro Bonci, tenor, in his only New York recital of the season at the Manhattan Opera House last Sunday afternoon. Miss Harvis who was heard recently in an Intime Recital of Mana Zucca's compositions given by the pupils of Mr. Roxas, sang four groups of songs and the duet from the first act of Lucia with Mr. Bonci.

A successful concert was recently given in Watertown, N. Y., by Jeanne Palmer, soprano, and Donald Fiser, baritone, pupils of Maude Douglas Tweedy. Miss Palmer was also heard in De Witt Clinton Hall in New York and in Darien, Conn. Mr. Fiser has sung with the Yale club and the Athenaeum club.

Jeanne Le Vinus, mezzo-soprano, artist-pupil of Hilda Grace Gelling of New York City, made her concert debut in a recital at the Woodlawn Heights Methodist Church on November 21. Willard Sektberg, organist, and Patty Peterson, pianist, assisted. Miss Le Vinus, who has studied with Miss Gelling for the past five years and who won the silver medal in the New York Music Week Contests last year, received highly commendatory notices in the local press.

The Fontainebleau School of Music has announced that during the season of 1924 there were enrolled in the school one hundred and twenty-five students who took one hundred and seventy-five courses. The number taking each course was: piano, sixty-nine; accompaniment, four; violin, fourteen; cello, two; harp, two; singing, twenty-five; opera, fourteen; harmony, fourteen; applied harmony, five; composition, four; conducting, eight; organ, fourteen.

There were eight students who received the Diplome d'Execution in piano, sixteen the Diplome d'Aptitude in piano, ten the Diplome d'Aptitude a l'Enseignment General in piano, four the Diplome d'Execution in singing, three the Diplome d'Aptitude a l'Enseignment du Chant, one the Diplome d'Execution in violin, four the Diplome d'Aptitude a l'Enseignment du Violin, five the Diplome d'Execution in organ, and five the Diplome d'Aptitude a l'Enseignment de l'Organ.

Three artist pupils of Richard Hageman broadcasted a program of vocal music from Radio Station WOR on the evening of November 26. Mr. Hageman was their accompanist. Mrs. Cobina Wright, soprano, who is to give an Aeolian Hall recital on December 18, Renee Thornton (Mrs. Hageman), soprano, and Marley Sherris, Canadian baritone, each sang a group of songs.

Helen Norfleet, pianist of the Norfleet Trio, is the author of the new course of study issued by the Junior Department of the National Federation of Music Clubs. The subject is the Development of the Piano and its Literature. The book, which is published by the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, is being issued free to organizers and leaders of junior clubs.

The volume includes a message from Mrs. William John Hall, chairman of the Department of Junior and Juvenile Clubs of the National Federation, which offers suggestions for organization of new clubs and a report of recent work of the Junior Department.

FRANK LAFORGE
Again in the Midst of His Winter Activities as Teacher, Pianist, Coach, and Composer.

Master Class Conferences in voice, piano and violin will be held by the Nebraska Music Teachers' Association during the next session, which will be held in Lincoln, Nebraska, on February 9 and 10, 1925. The leader of the master class conference in voice will be Oscar Seagle. Rudolph Reuter of Chicago has been selected to head the master class conference in piano and, to date, no leader for the violin conference has been chosen.

On the violin faculty of the David Mannes Music School may be found the names of two leaders of well known string quartets: Sandor Harmati of the Lenox String and Scipione Guidi of the Philharmonic Quartet. Also on the faculty is Wolfe Wolfinsohn, second violinist of the Lenox String Quartet. Mr. and Mrs. Mannes, directors of the school, were known for many years as sonata recitalists.

The Lawrence Choral Union at the University of Kansas, under the leadership of Dean D. M. Swarthout of the School of Fine Arts has begun its second year with an enrollment of 515. Rehearsals are being held weekly.

At the Musical Festival Week, the last week in April, the chorus will appear on two different evenings, giving the Messiah at one performance and the Verdi Requiem at another. Both choral numbers will have the accompaniment of the University Symphony Orchestra which is under the direction of Karl Andrist, Professor of Violin of the Fine Arts School.

Gretchen Haller, contralto, who graduated last May from the Ithaca Conservatory of Music under Bert Rogers Lyon, head of the vocal department, has been awarded a Juilliard Foundation fellowship, which includes $1,000 to be applied to tuition.

John Grolle, director of The Curtis Institute of Music, resigned as head worker of the Music Settlement School, on November 21. He will continue in a volunteer capacity, however, as director of all of its musical activities and policies. Mrs. Elizabeth C. Darby Grolle takes his place as head worker.

The Music Settlement School, of which Mr. Grolle has been the directing head practically since it was founded, has become a model for schools of similar character throughout the country, the latest being in Peoria, Ill. It was founded and endowed by Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok, in memory of her mother, the late Louisa Knapp Curtis. The demand for musical education upon the part of young persons not ordinarily reached through settlement work channels led Mrs. Bok to extend her musical activities, with the result that the Curtis Institute of Music, named in honor of her father, Cyrus H. K. Curtis, was opened several months ago.

Mme. Marcella Sembrich and Mme. Charles Cahier of the voice faculty have already started their duties at the Curtis Institute.

Alberto Jonas, piano teacher and author of Master School of Modern Piano Playing and Virtuosity, will speak at the piano conference of the Music Teachers' National Association in St. Louis which will be held from December 29-31.

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

ARTHUR J. HUBBARD — VINCENT V. HUBBARD
Teachers of Singing in All Its Branches
246 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON, MASS.

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

EMILIO ROXAS VOCAL COACH
Studio: 2231 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Phone: Endicott 6306
Coach and Accompanist to MARTINELLI for six years

V. TREVISAN Chicago Civic Opera Association
VOCAL STUDIO 74 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

AMONG the recent Italian publications of music are Four Characteristic Compositions for Piano, by Gottfredo Cattolica (Umberto Pizzi, Bologna). The music is in no sense modern. Signor Cattolica apparently has not aligned himself with the movement of the youths of Italy. The pieces are written correctly and with propriety, picturesque in their style and free in form. The melody is quite Italian (in the opera sense), and is writen with understanding of the technic of the piano. The publication in its physical aspects is beautiful and clear.

E. M. Finzi's Seventeenth Century Minuet for string quartet is issued also in a piano arrangement by F. Bongiovanni, Bologna. The composition is brief and full of grace, and is especially noteworthy for its characteristic rhythm. In the piano version it is very easy to play, being well within the range of the technic of the elementary student. The string version is almost as simple, so that the quartet is well adapted to ensembles of limited technical capabilities.

Considerable sacred music is included in the latest choral output of the Oliver Ditson Company, Boston. Cardinal Merry del Val contributes three motets for four part chorus of mixed voices: Tantum Ergo, O Salutaris Hostia, and Panis Angelicus. New Ditson anthems for mixed voices are Hear My Cry, O Lord, by Alexander Kopyloff (arranged by H. Clough-Leighter); O'er the Distant Mountains, by Edward Shippen Barnes; Blessed Art Thou, O Lord, by W. G. Gowst; Be Brave, Be Strong, by Alfred Wooler (including soprano solo); and In Thee O Lord I Put My Trust, by Vassili S. Kalinnikoff (arranged by Mr. Clough-Leighter).

Marion Bauer, American composer, includes in her Op. 16 Four Poems for voice and piano, all of which are in keys suited to high voice. They are entitled Through the Upland Meadows, I Love the Night, Midsummer Dreams, and In the Bosom of the Desert (G. Schirmer). The texts to which the songs are written are taken from works of John Gould Fletcher.

J. HENRI BOVE
FLUTE SOLOIST
Recitals and Obligatos
191 Claremont Ave. New York
Phone—Morningside 4595

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. Telephone
New York City Circle 8815

Florence Macbeth is touring in the Far West with her concert company. This photograph, including from left to right, Carl Rollins, Florence Macbeth, Leo Braverman, Mrs. Macbeth, Henry Sopkin, George Roberts and Richard Beidel, was taken when the company was in Medicine Hat, Sask.

Florence Macbeth and Company Tour Montana

Butte, Nov. 23.—Butte music lovers enjoyed their first taste of opera last week when Florence Macbeth, soprano, appeared here with her company in the Broadway Theatre in a one act character representation of the Secret of Suzanne. The program of the evening included a number of operatic excerpts from Rigoletto and Lucia.

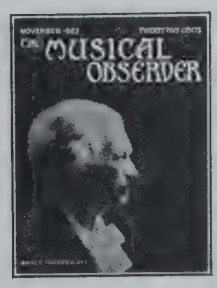
Assisting Miss Macbeth were George Roberts, whose accompaniments, solos and direction of the Secret, won him applause second only to that accorded Miss Macbeth; Carl Rollins in solos and in character representation; Edward Wharton, as Sante; and a string ensemble, including Messrs. Sopkin, Braverman, and Beidel.

Some days previously the company appeared in the Algericas Temple in Helena, Mont., opening the music season of that city. The program was identical with that of the Butte appearance, and the audience was equally favorable in its reception.

Hammond Elected to League Board

Richard Hammond, young American composer, has been elected a member of the executive board of the League of Composers. He is the seventh composer on its board of eleven musicians and laymen. Mr. Hammond served last year as the American delegate to the festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music at Salsburg.

TO APPEAR ON JANUARY 1st, 1925
APOLLO
A JOURNAL OF THE ARTS
EDITED BY R. SYDNEY GLOVER
A high-class Magazine dealing with ALL the Arts—Popularly written—SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED in COLOUR and MONOCHROME.
Articles by the leading Authorities—Music a special feature—Art and Music News—Book Reviews—Notices of New Prints ——— Etc., etc.
Monthly: One Dollar Net or by Annual Subscription Nine Dollars Post Free
Editorial and Publishing Offices: 6 Robert St., Adelphi, London, W. C.2



For a $2.00 bill attached to this coupon, we will enter your subscription for one year for the Musical Observer,—the up-to-date music magazine, which among other interesting features contains music for piano, violin and piano, piano and voice,—and send you one of the following premiums.

MINIATURE MASTERPIECES for Violin and Piano (Collection of 24 simplified arrangements of famous solos.)
MODERN PIANO ALBUM (a collection of 24 modern compositions.)
SELECT SONGS OF THE MASTERS (high or low voice), Vol. 1 (20 easy songs each a popular favorite).
FRANZ SCHUBERT ALBUM for High or Low Voice (a collection of 13 selected songs).

THE MUSICAL OBSERVER CO.
62 COOPER SQUARE, N. Y. CITY
NAME .....
ADDRESS .....

A SORT of companion to the League of Composers Review is the Quarterly Bulletin of the Franco-American Musical Society (published by the Society at 130 West Forty-second street, New York). This periodical also is a mouthpiece of modernism in music, and has names on its various lists of committees and directorates which turn one's mind automatically to the International Composers' Guild.

The last Bulletin contains three articles, one by Stefan Freund, one by Darius Milhaud, the French modernist composer, and one by J. Herscher Clement. Mr. Freund writes on Arnold Schonberg, and limits his discussion to the presentation to the reader in chronological order of the accomplishments of Schonberg in the world of music, beginning with his first study of the violin at the age of twelve and carrying through his most recent compositions.

The only critical comment in this terse exposition is a quotation from the writings of Schonberg himself: "It is not permissible to speak of disharmony. All is harmony; that which to us appears as a dissonance, is but a distant harmony. The day will come when all that now appears discordant, will be considered a simple harmony, and one will call disharmonies the assembling of sounds that today we cannot even faintly conceive of. The complete history of music shows that the musician of genius is he who introduces the dissonances into the spheres of harmony." This Mr. Freund offers as "admirable characterization" of Arnold Schonberg.

Mr. Milhaud's article, Polytonality and Atonality, is a reprint from La Revue Musicale of a paper which anyone interested in the course of modern music will feel called upon to read, because it presents lucidly and completely, with the employment of considerable information about old and new composers, salient facts concerning two types of technic in music. Musical illustrations are included in the expositions.

The third article deals with Debussy and Impressionism, and is one of a series of essays by J. Hirscher Clement on the French school of music since 1879. The first of this series appeared in the last issue of the Bulletin, and the third article, which will concern itself with modern composers, will be published in the next issue. A. F.

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

Toti dal Monte in New York Debut

(Continued from page 1)

not one to cause such a meteoric and unreserved burst of enthusiasm. . . .

"Besides her assets, the singer had, with an appealing personality, no little histrionic ability, and while effective in the vocal flights of the Mad Scene, sang it with heed to its swift changes of feeling, not forgetting the text in the chances for vocal display. Mario Chamlee was the Edgardo, braving a cold to sing, while Mr. De Luca was in fine voice as Lord Ashton. Mr. Mardones was Raimondo, with Minnie Egener and Messrs. Bada and Paltrinieri in the other parts. Mr. Papi conducted."

Miss Smith wrote: "Her interpretation recaptured all the languors, the palpitations, the flourishes that are so generously supplied by this combination of Victorian romance and Italian intrigue, and she blended them with disarming grace and artistry. From the beginning she exhibited vocal agility and a smooth and limpid quality of voice, but the first scenes and the first duets seemed muted and impassive, the obvious effect of nervousness."

Mr. Newman of the Post apparently did not write the brief comment appearing in that newspaper which stated that Mme. dal Monte was "clearly on her mettle, she made the most of the role, playing it with sincerity which the libretto scarcely has and making madness graceful in her supreme scene."

According to Mr. Henderson, in the Sun, "Mme. dal Monte's voice is a good one, a coloratura soprano with lyric qualities, sufficient power and a range quite as extensive as Donizetti's score requires. Last evening she sang some tones which seemed to issue from a throat not well opened and which assumed a wiry and pinched sound.

"On the other hand, many of her broader lyric phrases had a warm color and were delivered with an admirable legato. Her phrasing was always good and her taste in ornament not marred by extravagance. Her florid passages were unevenly done, and this, too, may have been due to nervousness. Brilliancy was not conspicuous in the coloratura, but it was for the most part musical. Her mad scene disclosed an intelligent effort at interpretation, and it was also well sung."

Mr. Sanborn, in the Mail and Telegram, agreed in the main with Mr. Henderson. The reviewers recognized that Mr. Chamlee suffered from a cold, yet they found in his endeavors much to commend. Mr. de Luca and Mr. Mardones also were praised.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld

RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street

"North of 36"

WITH AN ALL STAR CAST

RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA

RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street

D. W. GRIFFITH'S

'Isn't Life Wonderful'

FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA

Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

GEORGE BARRERE
Looking Somewhat Weary After His Recent Journeys on Pacific 231.

Wolfsohn to Give Concert Series in Large Cities

(Continued from page 1)

soprano from the Royal Opera at Petrograd who is to make her United States debut January next; Mary Lewis, the American lyric soprano who has appeared at the Paris Grand Opera, Vienna, Monte Carlo, Covent Garden and elsewhere; Merle Alcock and Marion Telva, Allen McQuhae, Vincente Ballester, Clarence Whitehill, Moriz Rosenthal, Nicolai Orloff (the Russian pianist who is to make his United States debut next November), Toscha Seidel, Edouard Zathureczky, the Czech violinist who is to be heard in this country for the first time on January 10 next, Felix Salmond, and Salvatore de Stefano.

The prices for a single seat for the entire ten concerts in each of the four cities to be added to New York will be $5, $10, and $15; box seats are to be placed at $15 each for any one of the series of concerts.

John Trevor Adams, president of the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, stated that he had little comment to make concerning the project further than it was to be an endeavor to "normalize" prices for concerts of the first-order. "The response to our New York series now in progress at Carnegie Hall would seem ample proof of the public's willingness to patronize superior offerings of a musical and dancing character if the prices are not too high," said Mr. Adams.

"Exorbitant prices for tickets to such attractions have long been an unfortunate rule. Our belief is that a lowering of prices will not alone increase the average attendances at concerts by attractions of recognized superiority, but will result as well in larger gross monetary returns."

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door

World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre

Edward Bowes, Managing Director

MAE MURRAY in

"Circe the Enchantress"

PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL

Capitol Grand Orchestra

Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

A Los Angeles newspaper columnist writes a few paragraphs about Mary Garden's recent utterances when that lady returned to this country . . . anent what one does and doesn't wear, under certain and sundry conditions. He seems not to admire her publicity methods any more than he does her efforts in vocalism. And he refers to her—amongst other references—as "kittenish." Well, others realize that Mary is sometimes odd, but she does manage to get into print.

* * *

Olga Samaroff's press agent has called her the "peripatetic pianiste," and all because she is "about the busiest person on the Atlantic seaboard," . . . being no sooner settled in her "cosy apartment" in New York than she is compelled to rush to fill some new concert engagement. That excellent artiste is now en tournee in the South and Southwest. She returns in time to appear with the Society of the Friends of Music, December 14.

* * *

Another touring artiste is Cecil Arden, who writes from Texas confiding: "I am in love with Texans." Well, that's that.

* * *

The New York Times published recently three letters of protest on the scheme of Hizzoner Hylan, New York's most musically music mayor, to set up a school of music for political advertising purposes. Others feel as do Herman Spingarn, Margaret T. Baldwin, and Morris Zucker.

* * *

If ever there is a New York School for Music and Industrial Arts (which there won't be) Hizzoner could preside over the department for wind instruments.

* * *

Albert Coates, Felix Weingartner, Serge Koussevitzky, Wilhelm Furtwangler, Bruno Walter, Vladimir Shavitch, and George Schneevoigt are the conductors who are leading the London Symphony orchestra at the nineteenth series of Queen's hall concerts in London during the current season. The first four already have done their duty. Shavitch is next, his program being set for January 12.

* * *

Vermont "points with pride" to Esther Dale, the soprano. And they named for her at the last state fair a dahlia.

* * *

Cablegrams from London state that Anton Bilotti made something of an impression on the London critics at his recent appearance there. The reviews will come along in due course.

* * *

Myra Hess isn't going into the movies. Her manager, Annie Friedberg, assures Lines-O'-Newser that the report is entirely false. To which we will all say "amen," since Miss Hess is far too good a pianiste to waste on films . . . where she could not be heard, no matter how interesting it might be to see her.

* * *

Theodore Steinway, Ernest Urchs, Frederick Reidemeister, Albert Sturcke (all of the house of Steinway) and Manager George Engles sat lunching at the round table in Luchow's, directly opposite the Steinway New York establishment. Something was said about Paderewski's attitude on a possible ambassadorial appointment, whereupon one of those present remarked: "Well, if he accepts it how can Engles collect his commission?"

* * *

Claire Dux has at last achieved the goal sought by many an artist. She has appeared in "the funnies." A comic strip, widely syndicated, recently published a cartoon in which the flapper of the family pleaded for an anklet "like Claire Dux's."

* * *

Back from England has come Miss Lois Willoughby, press and personal representative for Frieda Hempel. And Miss Willoughby assures Lines-O'-Newser that her Boss is looking forward to her return to the United States, within a few weeks.

* * *

Mrs. Esther Danesi announces the marriage of her daughter, Natalia, to William B. Murray on Wednesday, December 3 last. They will be at home after December 15 at 146 East Thirty-sixth street, New York. Mr. Murray is in charge of the artists' department of the Baldwin Piano Company.

* * *

Percy Grainger will be back in New York shortly, after his Australian and his far-west tour of this country. A reception is to be given the pianist by Mrs. Antonia Sawyer on Sunday afternoon, December 21, in the Burritt Studios, 22 West Fifty-fourth street, New York.

* * *

Richard Crooks, the American tenor, was a bright spot in the last New York Biltmore Morning Musicale, his associates on the program being Margarete d'Alvarez and Geraldine Leo, violiniste. The silvery-voiced Richard sang four opera arias hand running: First, the trying Pearl Fishers air, then the serenade from Iris, and as encores the Meistersinger prize song and the Salut d'Amour from Faust. And all the while Manager Fitzhugh Haensel smiled contentedly.

* * *

Royal Dadmun has just completed a recital tour through the middle west where he enjoyed a cordial welcome, and soon leaves for his third successive Pacific coast tour. Included in his itinerary are San Francisco, Sacramento, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Santa Barbara and Modesto, Cal.; Seattle, Wash.; and Portland, Ore., where he has been reengaged as soloist with Portland's orchestra. He will also be a Messiah soloist at Providence, R. I., December 28.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

The Premiere of Jenufa See Page 2

VOL. VII. NO. 9 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

DEC 29 1924
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Local Managers Meet In Two Days' Session; Problems Discussed

Gathering Takes Place in the Commodore Hotel, New York, and Is Well Attended.

PLAIN TALK IS HEARD

Evidence confirming the data contained in the series of ten articles on the Concert-Giving Industry published recently in consecutive issues of The Musical Digest was forthcoming in the midwinter sessions of tne National Concert Managers' Association, held yesterday and today in the Commodore Hotel, New York City.

At the time of going to press a full account of the various discussions was not obtainable, but the scheduled program, which is presented below, indicates how some of the existing problems which require solution are being taken up. That program, as originally arranged, is:

MONDAY

Meeting called to order—10 a. m.

1. Address of greeting and welcome by President of the New York Managers (delegated to Loudon Charlton).

General Business, reports of committees, etc.

1. "What I have learned about the concert business in my tours with Mme. Galli-Curci," by either Mr. Evans or Mr. Salter.

Adjournment—12 p. m.

Luncheon at Commodore Hotel—12:30 p. m.

Meeting convenes and guests are invited to remain.

1. "What is commercialism in the concert business?" (by representative of Musical America).
2. "Is the drama taking the place of concerts?" by Mr. C. S. Wagner.
3. "Getting the value out of advertising and spending the dollar wisely"—(newspapers, outdoor, mail, screen, telephone, etc.).
4. "Suggestion to concert managers for the coming season."
5. "Has civic opera been tried in your city and with what result?"
6. "What effect is the four or five for a dollar course ticket price having on the concert business in the smaller cities?"

Adjournment—4 p. m.

Meet for dinner and attend the opera—6:30 p. m.

TUESDAY

Meeting called to order by the President—10 a. m.

Reports from every territory represented.

1. "Are concert prices holding their own, or are the concert managers forced to reduce their prices to meet public demand?"
2. "Shall houses be papered when audiences are small?"
3. "Are new managers being established in your territory?"

Adjourn for Buffet Luncheon—12 p. m.

Meeting called to order—1:30 p. m.

1. Discussion of "Spot Light."
   a. Does it serve any purpose?
   b. Shall it be merely an expression of opinion by the editor?
   c. What suggestion can be made for its betterment?
   d. Can it ever be a mirror of concert conditions without using names and dates?
2. Selection of next convention dates.

Giovanni Martinelli, as he appeared in the role of Eleazar, which he sang at the New York Metropolitan last Friday evening when the Halevy Opera was produced there for the first time since Enrico Caruso sang in it in 1920.

Bulletins of News

Chancellor Elmer Ellsworth Brown, of New York University, has announced the appointment of Dr. Hollis Dann as Professor and head of the department of music education of New York University. Dr. Dann was formerly supervisor of music of the Pennsylvania State Department of Education and is nationally known for his work in the training of teachers of music in public schools. He will undertake his new duties at New York University on February 1, 1925.

Dr. Dann, who holds the degree of doctor of music from Alfred University, was head of the department of music at Cornell before going to Pennsylvania. Before that he had been supervisor of music in the public schools of Ithaca and director of the Ithaca Choral Club.

The work of Dr. Dann will be distinct from that being done by Albert Stoessel, who is in charge of the department of music established last year to further the development of the cultural side of music. Dr. Dann's work will be confined to the School of Education, while Mr. Stoessel's pupils are drawn from the various schools and colleges in the university.

On his first American appearance, that with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in Carnegie Hall on the evening of January 1, Igor Stravinsky will lead a program entirely of his own works, it has been announced. The program will include the Volga Boat Song (arranged for wind instruments), Scherzo Fantastique, Firebird, Pulcinella, and Petroushka. Stravinsky will conduct another program of his own compositions on January 10, including Fireworks, Scherzo Fantastique, Song of the Nightingale, and Le Sacre du Printemps. At the pair of concerts on February 5 and 6 the Russian composer will present the American premiere of his concerto for piano. He will be soloist, and Willem Mengelberg will conduct.

Mrs. Edward MacDowell, widow of the composer, is the winner of the $5,000 award by the Pictorial Review to the American woman who made the most valuable contribution to the advancement of human welfare in 1923.

Mrs. MacDowell has established in Peterboro, N. H., a colony to provide ideal working conditions for the creative artist.

Martinelli Sings in Revival of La Juive at the Metropolitan

Miss Easton, Rothier and Errolle Appear in Halevy Opera.

HASSELMANS CONDUCTS

Halevy's La Juive was sung at the Metropolitan Friday evening for the first time since the Christmas Eve of 1920 when Caruso made his last appearance. Giovanni Martinelli sang the part of Eleazer. The others in the cast were Florence Easton, Leon Rothier, Charlotte Ryan, Ralph Errolle, Arnold Gabor, Louis d'Angelo, and James Wolfe. The performance was conducted by Louis Hasselmans.

Olin Downes wrote in the Times that Mr. Martinelli, who "has a splendid vocal organ," was heard "in all his glory." Not only did he sing well, but he "acted with unusual dramatic ability." Mr. Martinelli was credited by F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune with "a very creditable performance, in which he was in excellent voice." The long aria in the third act "for strength and quality" seemed to Mr. Perkins to be "one of the best things he has ever done." In the Telegram-Mail, he was commended for his vocal excellence as well as the sincerity and expressiveness of his acting. Alison Smith of the World liked his vocal smoothness and the pathos in his acting.

Miss Easton adorned her part, wrote Mr. Downes, with "her customary skill in song, her intelligence and musicianship." Mr. Perkins thought she "carried off the palm from the dramatic standpoint, with unusual fervor and intensity in her acting." The reviewer in the Telegram-Mail admired her work, especially in the second act duet.

Another performance that received commendation was that of Leon Rothier. According to Mr. Downes, he again "gave much dignity to the role of the Cardinal and evidenced again his past mastery of its style. By the Telegram-Mail writer he was called "generally compelling, a huge and sonorous Cardinal." Miss Ryan received cording to Mr. Downes, "showed spirit and talent in his performance."

Others in the cast, the Joseph Urban settings, and the ballets, were well spoken of. Miss Smith said that the performance was enlivened by "the spirited conducting of Mr. Hasselmans."

Cleveland Orchestra Plays in New York

Arthur Shepherd's Overture to a Drama Conducted in Local Premiere by Sokoloff.

The Cleveland Orchestra, Nikolai Sokoloff, conductor, gave its one concert of the season in New York on December 9, at Carnegie Hall. Its largest offering was Brahms' Symphony No. 1, in C minor, and the program included also a novelty, Overture to a Drama, presented for the first time in this city although composed five years ago by Mr. Arthur Shepherd, assistant conductor of the orchestra, and two shorter numbers, La Queste de Dieu from La Legende de St. Cristophe by Vincent d'Indy, and Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1, Op. 11, in A major, by Georges Enesco.

The general opinion voiced in the newspapers after the concert was one of praise for the visiting organization. The authenticity of the reading of Brahms' Symphony was agreed upon, although it lacked emotional inspiration, was "too studied and solicitous of detail," in the opinion of Mr. Downes of the Times. In the World Deems Taylor wrote that the reading was inclined to be "too reverent," and Mr. Newman in the Post observed that where this reading "lost in fire, it gained in massiveness." Mr. Gilman in the Herald Tribune liked Mr. Sokoloff's adherence to the tempo marking in the slow movement, although Mr. Peyser felt in the Telegram-Mail review that the tempi at times were too slow.

Mr. Henderson in the Sun called the Brahms' reading "careful and respectful" on the whole, although he thought the symphony was played with "more intensity than finish."

This reviewer said that Mr. Shepherd's overture has a "spirit of gallantry," and that the themes are "confidently handled" and the orchestration "opulent in assurance and knowledge." Mr. Henderson found it a composition to make Americans "grateful," and thought that it was given an energetic performance with a generally "good quality of orchestral tone."

Mr. Downes commented favorably on the construction and interest development of the overture, and liked to hear this "straightforward music-making." Mr. Gilman wrote that he would like to hear it again, "music of a curious tonic quality," if "a little austere." He called Mr. Shepherd a "practiced craftsman." The Telegram-Mail took note of the "irreproachable" structure of this work, and its instrumentation, but said that it was in need of "musical ideas." Mr. Newman found a weakness, in "a certain failure" to keep interest steadily flowing through its changes, although he found each section "vital enough in itself," and Mr. Sokoloff's reading "vivid." In a careful account Mr. Deems Taylor summarized the work as being "colorfully scored and written with exceptional skill," and given a "brilliant performance."

The d'Indy number occasioned differing comment. Mr. Taylor considered it an "imposing" but "hardly nutritious work." Mr. Downes pointed out that its strength, while not of the composer's "granite" best, had much that was commendable, "employing most fortunately" material of the plain chant in its legendary description. Mr. Gilman on the other hand found it "noble and touching," and worthy of being heard again. It was "long" to Mr. Newman, who considered Mr. Sokoloff's reading thoughtful.

The Enesco Roumanian ending was a pleasantly lively change, according to Mr. Newman, while Mr. Gilman went further, calling it a "brilliant and infectious performance" of "a delightful end piece."

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Lucia—with Mme. Toti dal Monte and Messrs. Martinelli, Danise, and Mardones; Mr. Papi conducting.

THURSDAY

Jenufa—with Mmes. Jeritza and Matzenauer; and Messrs. Laubenthal and Oehman; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

FRIDAY

Gioconda (matinee)—with Mmes. Ponselle, Gordon, and Alcock; and Messrs. Gigli, Danise, and Mardones; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Boheme (evening)—with Mmes. Alda and d'Arle; and Messrs. Martinelli, Scotti, Rothier, and Malatesta; Mr. Papi conducting.

SATURDAY

Cosi Fan Tutte (matinee)—with Mmes. Easton, Bori, and Peralta; and Messrs. Meader, de Luca, and Didur; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Samson and Dalila (evening)—with Mme. Gordon; and Messrs. Oehman, Whitehill, and Rothier; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

MONDAY

Thais—With Mme. Jeritza and Messrs. Tokatyan and Danise; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

Orpheus Club Begins Season

Springfield, Dec. 4.—The Orpheus Club of Springfield opened its fifty-first season with its 147th concert in the Auditorium last night, John J. Bishop conducting. The club ensemble of 150 voices was assisted by Lillian Gustafson, soprano soloist, and by Augusto Vannini's Symphony Ensemble of eighteen players.

The finest singing of the club during the evening, according to the Daily Union, was in R. Hunting Woodman's An Autumn Lament. Miss Gustafson was warmly praised in the local press for her "lovely lyric voice" and clarity and distinction of style. The Vannini ensemble was also accorded due praise in the papers.

Play Atterberg Symphony

Stokowski Leads Swedish Novelty; Tales of Hoffman Given by Metropolitan.

Philadelphia, Dec. 10.—There were two features on the program of the Philadelphia Orchestra's concert Friday afternoon. The first was the playing by Leopold Stokowski and the orchestra of a new Symphony in F major by Kurt Atterberg, Swedish composer, and the other was the appearance as soloist of a young Englishman, now head of the music department of Bryn Mawr, Horace Alwyne.

The consensus of critical opinion seemed to be that while the symphony was interesting, it was not an inspired composition. S. L. L. of the Public Ledger said it was a "well written composition, but not strikingly original or beautiful, but it is an interesting piece of music and well worth performing." Linton Martin of the North American thought the music "agreeable but never great. There isn't a theme in it that rises above the commonplace, and the scoring is solid, sedate, but never inspired."

Opposed to this opinion was the Record commentator, who asserted that the work "shines forth as genuine music, so simple and direct that it can be fully appreciated at the first hearing . . . it made a profound appeal."

There was no doubt in Mr. Martin's mind as to the finely artistic style and impeccable technic of Mr. Alwyne's playing. His rendition of Strauss' Burleske for piano and orchestra gave it a "whimsicality which was charming. His sense of rhythm is perfect, his temperament is vital but finely controlled, his tone exceedingly beautiful and delicate, and his technic ample for all practical concert needs."

The revival of Offenbach's Tales of Hoffman by the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York at the Academy Tuesday night was cordially received by the audience and the press. The production was "sumptuously beautiful," according to Linton Martin, and Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer added that "there were fine singers in the solo parts, an excellent chorus, and beautiful scenery." S. L. L. agreed that it was "superbly staged" and agreed with the others as to the excellence of the performance of Louis Hasselmans, who conducted, and the orchestra.

According to the Record, Miguel Fleta was a romantic figure, "his singing was suave and dramatic, and he always held attention." Mr. Muschamp, as well as other writers, found his work most commendable. Lucrezia Bori also received much laudatory comment. The Record said she "played each role admirably and she sang with glorious freedom of tone and with dramatic fervor." Mr. Martin wrote that Miss Bori's "clear tones gave considerable beauty" to the different roles she played. The Public Ledger agreed that she was "delightful," and Mr. Muschamp found that she had the "knowledge of how to use a good voice," that her tone was firm, "with an even scale, and a delightful timbre."

The mechanical doll, wrote this reviewer, "received a fine interpretation" at the hands of Nina Morgana. "The waltz was well rendered and her acting was at all times interesting." Equally enthusiastic was the writer in the Public Ledger, who wrote that Miss Morgana "was splendid as the doll in the first tale, in appearance, action and voice. Hers was one of the successes of the evening, and she revealed an unusual versatility in an intentionally stilted role, which she endowed with charm and character." In the Record was the comment that she "sang the part with expression, and in a fine musical voice."

Giuseppe de Luca made of each of his roles "a character study" and sang them with the "artistry that is his," wrote the Record commentator. The Public Ledger considered his "effective characterizations," and Mr. Muschamp in his work found a modulation of voice and character to suit each role. Others in the cast who received commendatory notices were Kathleen Howard, Paolo Ananian, Lawrence Tibbett, Gustav Schuetzendorf, Angelo Bada and Merle Alcock.

Lisa Roma Sings

A young American soprano, Lisa Roma, gave a song recital at the Princess Theatre the afternoon of December 7. According to the Herald Tribune, she displayed a voice of very good size and was received cordially. Mary Miller Mount accompanied Miss Roma.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

Jenufa Presented at Metropolitan

Janacek Opera Has American Premiere; Music Less Approved Than Singers and Staging.

The first performance in America of the opera Jenufa, by the Czecho-Slovakian composer Leos Janacek, was given by the Metropolitan Opera Company the evening of December 6. The composer, who is now seventy years old, began work on the opera in 1896 and finished it in 1903. It has been much played in Austria and Germany in recent years.

The story is adapted from the play by Gabriele Preiss, and is concerned with a tragedy of peasant life. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail summed up the plot in the following words: "Jenufa, the foster-daughter of a sexton's widow, is wooed by two youths, step-brothers. By one, the handsome village Lothario, Stewa, she is wronged. Nevertheless, Laca, the good and worthy youth, would wed her.

"At this somewhat awkward juncture the devoted foster-mother takes over the plot. Seeing an unsurmountable obstacle in Stewa's babe, she gives Jenufa a sleeping potion, carries the child to the frozen river and thrusts it under the ice and then persuades Jenufa when she awakes that the child has died a natural death. Of course the deception is discovered, whereupon justice looks out for the sexton's widow. But the way for the marriage has been cleared. Comment, ethical or other, on this naive story is unnecessary."

The critical audience was rather unimpressed with the importance of this story and agreed, more or less, with Mr. Sanborn's last sentence quoted. Deems Taylor of the World considered it "fairly good melodrama." Of this opinion was W. J. Henderson, who wrote in the Sun that the play "has melodramatic force and in the second act becomes really intense." Ernest Newman ridiculed the story in the Post.

From the musical point of view, the newspaper men were inclined to the opinion that the first act, with its dances and folk songs, was excellent, but that from this point the opera was on the decline. In the words of Mr. Sanborn, "musically, the first act is delightful in its unaffected folk quality, its freshness, its blithe dance measures, the naturalness of the musical speech, the transparent and apt orchestration," but Mr. Janacek was less successful in handling "the emotional accumulation of the succeeding scenes." Olin Downes of the Times agreed with these opinions.

In commenting on the musical value of the work, Mr. Taylor wrote: "Unfortunately Leos Janacek, although a fine musician with excellent taste and a sensitive ear for word values, shows little evidence of being a composer of any particular distinction or dramatic power." Lawrence Gilman commented in the Herald Tribune that "there is nothing very seriously the matter with Jenufa except the music," although he considered that the composer "has sincerity, feeling, a sense of the theatre, an incorruptible aesthetic sincerity." W. J. Henderson said that the opera depended to a large extent upon the histrionic ability of the actors for success.

And that the actors possessed this ability neither Mr. Henderson nor any of the other writers had any doubt. As this reviewer said: "The stage manager must be warmly praised. No other opera has been produced at the Metropolitan with a more excellent co-operation of action, picture and groupings. The principal singers were all admirable and they united their efforts in a very fine ensemble. The individualizing of groups of choristers and even single figures showed theatrical craft." Other chroniclers were entirely in accord with this statement and joined in congratulating Wilhelm von Wymetal.

Maria Jeritza's Jenufa, asserted Mr. Downes, "is undoubtedly one of her finest accomplishments . . . she made a remarkable impression." Mr. Henderson thought her voice "powerful and vibrant" and her acting commendable. Mr. Taylor wrote that she sang "with never-failing variety and vitality" and made her emotional scene "a moment of touching simplicity and pathos." Equally enthusiastic was Mr. Gilman. Pitts Sanborn said that first honors were shared by Mme. Jeritza and Margarete Matzenauer, as the foster-mother.

Agreed with Mr. Sanborn were other commentators that "rarely has Mme. Matzenauer done anything so powerful." Mr. Henderson found she "revealed in a tragic role unsuspected vigor and feeling" in the "most striking impersonation of the evening." Another who felt she had done nothing in years "so adroit and fine as her performance," was Mr. Gilman.

Olin Downes considered Rudolph Laubenthal "admirably cast, he sang his role with an air of reckless certainty and felicity of phrase that became him and his role equally well." Of the same opinion were other reviewers, who also were impressed with the excellence of Martin Oehman as Laca. Mr. Sanborn said these two singers "impersonated skilfully the contrasted young men." Mr. Oehman's work was praiseworthy for "its intelligence and quiet force," according to Mr. Gilman. Mr. Taylor said his voice and personality showed to excellent advantage in the part.

Kathleen Howard as the grandmother, wrote Mr. Henderson, sang in a voice "much younger than her appearance." Her work received commendation in other reviews, as did the performance of Gustav Schuetzendorf, James Wolfe, Laura Robertson, Ellen Dalossy, Grace Anthony, Charlotte Ryan, and Marie Mattfeld. This writer called the cast "thoroughly competent" and Mr. Gilman thought the parts "effectively impersonated."

Artur Bodanzky, as conductor, received his share of critical applause. He "managed to extract more from the score than one would have thought possible," wrote Deems Taylor, and Mr. Sanborn remarked that he "conducted with obvious care and seeming enthusiasm, and his orchestra was a responsive instrument." Mr. Henderson said Mr. Bodanzky "was responsible for the musical presentation of an unmusical opera."

The opera was produced and mounted with taste and care. Mr. Gilman asserted that it "was beautifully mounted, the settings were delightful, and the costumes charming."

Maria Jeritza sang the leading feminine role in Janacek's Jenufa, which had its premiere at the New York Metropolitan a week ago Saturday.

Present Flotow Light Opera

Manitowoc, Dec. 4.—The Music League of Manitowoc, Wis., recently opened its current season with the light opera L'Ombra, by Friedrich von Flotow, presented by the Associated Musical Bureaus' Chamber Production of Opera Comique. In the cast were Stella Norelli-Lamont, coloratura soprano; Suzanne France, lyric soprano; Obrad Djurin, tenor; Carl Formes, baritone. The musical director was Arthur Lydell.

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer
Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO
Victor Records

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

EDITH MASON
SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK CITY

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 9

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Service

There is no service comparable to that of serving others. Thought of self brings no such joy as happiness as comes from planning for the welfare of those who need aid—mentally and materially.

A few days ago a citizen of this country, liberally blessed with the goods of this world, bestowed upon four different educational institutions a fortune. The minimum value of the combined gift is $15,000,000, but the securities have a present market worth of nearly double that amount.

The man who rendered that service for others is George Eastman. Music and musicians and music patrons will benefit through his beneficence. So will other forms of educational effort . . . as well as those who impart and who receive knowledge.

Countless numbers of persons will derive opportunity, contentment, and joy from the action of a man whose heart stimulated his vision. He is nearing the age of three score and ten, but he is still young. He will see the effects of what he has done, and one day (which it is to be hoped is far off) he will pass on to his great reward.

Men come and go in this world. Too many of them think rather constantly of self. It is the exceptional man who discovers that real happiness is gained in spreading it upon the doorsteps of those who otherwise might not completely know it.

Gratitude

Manifestation of appreciation for a kindly deed or word is a mark of gratitude. Persons thus constituted usually deserve what they receive and are encouraged thereby to some good effort. Life is complex; men and women are interdependent . . . if an exception be made of the hermit, who scarcely can be said to live.

In the scheme of things it was designed that every human being should be obligated, at one time or another, to some other human being. The babe owes an unpayable debt to its mother and its father. As time passes other if lesser obligations are created. Thus is appreciation born and nurtured. Without it progress could not come; society could not endure.

Now and again there arises one who is blind to what has been bestowed upon him. Selfishness consumes him; dissatisfaction is allowed to go its poisonous way. But he is fortunately of the minority. And he is the chief sufferer. Most people have much to be grateful for, every day of their lives, if they care to consider their blessings.

High Lights and Luminaries

Chicago-Detroit.

ONE thing that puzzles us about the Chicago Opera, now that we have been present at nearly a week of performances of the company, is the imperfect support with which it is being provided by the Chicago music public. An organization which offers such remarkable presentations as the company is giving ought never to have a worry about the selling out of houses.

Yet despite the fact that Chicago is being given daily operatic performances that compare well with those of any other company in the world, vacant seats are often plentiful in the auditorium. It takes a big personality there to pack a house as it always should be packed. Chicagoans are showing too little interest in the perfection of ensemble which their opera forces are accomplishing in the performances in which a "star" is not featured individually.

WE WERE having lunch with Claudia Muzio in her apartment in the Congress when the reviewer and then a reporter of one of the leading papers of Chicago called concerning an alleged split between the soprano and Mr. Polacco.

Mme. Muzio denied that there was any friction, and stated emphatically that she had no intention of leaving the Chicago Opera Company, with which she was enjoying her work immensely, and with which she was contracted to remain at least three years.

Despite these unequivocal assertions the newspaper ran a story of the rumors that same day.

It is certain that Mme. Muzio had some words with Mr. Polacco, but they had no official bearing whatsoever . . . they related simply to a matter of social etiquette, nothing else. Cimini was called on to conduct Traviata because his excellent work of last year convinced the management that he should have more and greater opportunities. Did he not conduct La Juive also? And Mme. Muzio did not sing in that opera.

Tito Schipa has nothing with which to reproach the Chicago Opera management. He enjoys great popularity with the public and has won the admiration of the members of the committee, too.

THE TOUR of the Chicago Opera Company, details of which we reported exclusively last week, has been arranged and prepared by Clark A. Shaw, who this season (as he was last) is the manager on tour.

The company will not visit New York. Following the report that it might, Mr. Johnson gave out an official denial.

Most of the principals on the roster will go on the tour, and Mr. Shaw has followed the wishes of the various local patrons regarding repertory and casting.

THE CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE is progressing steadily in its work of helping to educate musically the Middle West. We had a pleasant conversation with Carl D. Kinsey, general manager of the school. Mr. Kinsey is happy over the achievements of the school last year.

Students of the middle and far west find Chicago convenient geographically.

Howard Potter, formerly personal representative of Mary Garden, is registrar of the college, and he assured us that he is quite happy in his new position.

SPEAKING of teachers: we have just visited the Maurice Rosenfeld Pianoforte School, where we heard a promising girl play. Maurice, as you know, is music chronicler of the Daily News.

The Arimondis have a beautiful studio in the Fine Arts Building. One can recall Vittorio Arimondi as the huge basso formerly of the Chicago forces . . . and his wife, Donna Aurelia, is a recognized teacher of singing. Vittorio Trevisan, the basso buffo of the Chicago company, has his studio in the Auditorium Building, and he is always busy with pupils.

AFTER our stay in Chicago we stopped over in Detroit. We wanted so much to hear the Detroit Symphony. Luckily, we arrived just in time for a Friday evening concert. Rudolf Ganz was soloist that night. He played the Beethoven First Concerto in C major really beautifully, and won an ovation from the huge audience.

The Detroit Symphony is a first class ensemble. Ossip Gabrilowitsch has done wonders with it. The musicians play with a precision which indicates that they have their eyes on his baton . . . and the orchestra has the Gabrilowitsch tone.

Victor Kolar, assistant conductor, is gaining popularity in Detroit with his popular concerts.

That same evening Deems Taylor's Looking Glass Suite had its first Detroit performance. It was played splendidly and with such infectious humor and enthusiasm!

Back stage we met the president of the organization, Mr. William H. Murphy. He was all smiles over the success of the orchestra. He said, as he shook Mr. Ganz's hand, "Why don't you bring your St. Louis Symphony Orchestra up here, and have Mr. Gabrilowitsch as soloist?"

The idea was approved. It may be realized one of these days. Who knows?

We wanted to see Manager Jim Devoe, but we missed him; he was confined to his bed with a serious cold. He was planning at the moment to be right back on the job with a big attraction: Anna Pavlowa and her company. And John McCormack will be in Detroit shortly.

Detroit is one of John's many towns. . . . His house was sold out two weeks in advance of his concert. We wonder what city the Irish tenor does not own.

BRUNO ZIRATO.

Modern Americanism—A Tenor

Mario Chamlee Says That No Vocal "Method" Can Be Entirely Relied Upon to Produce Operatic Success.

by ALICE MASON

"AFTER ALL," said Mario Chamlee, twisting the chain of his watch, "the individuality and capacity of the singer are more important than the method by which he has learned. If that were not so, he should when successful be eternally indebted to his teacher. It seems to me that from the moment a singer steps upon the platform an epoch has begun that is entirely separate from 'training' days; the problems thereupon become very different.

"It is a peculiar thing, but I have no idea when I hear another singer on the stage what impression his voice is making to those seated in the auditorium. It is necessary to go out front to listen properly both for quality of tone and volume. This peculiarity of acoustics is the cause of much of the strangeness felt in a stage debut; one has no idea at first what impression he may be making."

Mr. Chamlee looked thoughtfully out of a nearby window and then returned with keen suddenness to his theme. "Added to this uncertainty about the very sound of his own voice, the singer is confronted with all the intricacies of 'stage business': bodily movement, the importance that acting in opera has rightly come to assume, and the necessity for an intelligent change of national idiom with change of costume. There is no comparison between the pupil's work in the studio and a performance on the stage before hundreds of people."

Then the tenor prepared himself for a warning to be heeded.

"Many a singer has his professional debut and is never heard of again; or begins in a small way and fails to rise. In the first case, it is probably his effort to sing by means of what he considers his 'method,' but which in reality is a system that embodies certain physical efforts and restrictions, to which he is unable to conform while acting on the stage. In the latter case, his 'method' does not take care of newly-formed bad vocal habits that unconsciously, or in spite of efforts to control them, are induced by his movement about the platform."

Apropos the daily dozen basic gestures for operatic expression, Mr. Chamlee ventured the opinion that they were inadequate; and that anyone who had not the dramatic imagination for what simple analysis and enacting of a role could be crammed into a page or two of preliminary directions (as exemplified in the experience of one student known to the writer), would never accomplish a convincing portrayal in public performance.

MARIO CHAMLEE

"The singer of opera," he declared, "is occupied with so many things that do not distract the student; wherefore no advice of his teachers will save him when he faces his public, beyond a certain initial point. He may forget all their instructions, or remember only a part. His judgment must guide him in remembering studio cautionings how he should apply them to the always different conditions at hand: the tempo of the orchestra or the other singers, the size of the stage and position of properties, and his own physical state. He has a wide field for the exercise of individual selection, and but seldom can the admonitions of a former teacher or present coach safeguard the debutant's operatic fate. It is his problem, and his skill in solving it is the factor which enables him to succeed, or thrusts failure upon him.

"I had an admirable teacher in Los Angeles. He taught the much misrepresented Italian 'bel canto'; he dwelt much upon the singing of the vowel 'ah,' with the assurance that while it is the most difficult of all to make perfect, it paves the way, once mastered, for all the others. He was sensible. He told me he could not predict conditions that I should have to meet, and he said it was mostly nonsense when teachers gave lists of instructions about stage deportment, particularly when they had not had an operatic career. Even where they had had, he reminded me, they could not forecast the separate conditions and problems sure to arise in different companies.

"Oh, yes, there is considerable nonsense committed in the name of vocal study."

Furthermore, Mr. Chamlee approves a method that is not too anatomical. He believes in placing reliance on the ear to get tone results, and in a less conscious dwelling on the workings of the epiglottis, the tongue at or away from the teeth, and other manipulations inside the mouth that must differ naturally with variously shaped mouths, not to mention the enormous numbers of slightly variant sounds throughout the alphabet, changed in every language. It would seem to require an agile judgment indeed to consider the application of rules for inside and outside conduct so minutely as some teachers advocate—when confronted with events arising on the public platform.

As for opera in America, Mr. Chamlee thinks if it is to be of permanent importance it must be brought to the people as a whole. There must be opera in English, perhaps after a school of native composers has grown up and provided a nucleus with literature wherein the American text and score synchronize.

The newspaper reviewers had just commented on Mr. Chamlee's appearance in Lucia. The interviewer put a question, and was informed that the tenor found the old piece a bit decrepit in spots, too long, with vocalizing that could be spared. He likes the trend of more modern works, the lyric and dramatic construction of Puccini's operas. He is particularly fond of Boheme, Tosca.

It might be appropriate here to explain that although Mr. Chamlee is dark and sings very often in Italian, he is but one-quarter Latin, that quarter French. His speech and manner would not indicate this, and his point of view seems quite in keeping with his American birth and upbringing, although he takes pleasure in referring to his native Los Angeles as "the American Italy."

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

JESSIE CHRISTIAN
SOPRANO
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger 1322 Kimball Building Chicago, Ill.

INA BOURSKAYA
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Metropolitan Opera Company—Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management: S. HUROK, INC. Aeolian Hall, New York City

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

CHARLES MARSHALL
TENOR CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill

CARLOS SEDANO

"Young Violin Genius"

Makes Boston Debut in Symphony Hall and Gives Second New York Concert at Carnegie Hall With Outstanding Success

He was compelled in both of these concerts to double the program with the encores demanded.

WHAT 10 FAMOUS CRITICS SAY:

An excellent performance, worthy of a mature artist of the highest reputation.—Philip Hale, Boston Herald, Nov. 26.

Mr. Sedano again revealed an art which has long been associated with the Spanish school of violinists. His playing was fluent and refined and in a sensitive regard for polished phrasing and delicate nuance he deserved considerable praise.—W. J. Henderson, New York Evening Sun, Dec. 9.

Mr. Sedano's fluent and mellifluous performance proved his right to be called "virtuoso."—Penfield Roberts, Boston Globe, Nov. 26.

His tone and left hand tehcnique found grateful opportunities for display in Franck's sonata. The sugary episodes in Mendelssohn's concerto, ornamented with "musical fireworks," were encompassed with facility and assurance.—Grena Bennett, New York American, Dec. 9.

He is a virile, brilliant player.—Boston Advertiser, Nov. 26.

He is a graceful, easy player, his tone is good and he reflected rather successfully the Franck spirit.—Frank H. Warren, New York Evening World, Dec. 9.

Mr. Sedano is already able technician. The feats of violin-playing he may do at need and will.—H. T. Parker, Boston Transcript, Nov. 26.

His audience manifested its enjoyment of the young player's warm, suave and polished style in two chief works of romantic and lyric beauty, the sonata of Franck and the concerto of Mendelssohn.—New York Times, Dec. 9.

Mr. Sedano is thorough master of his instrument.—Warren Story Smith, Boston Post, Nov. 26.

At his earlier recital Mr. Sedano had displayed a remarkable tone and technique of notable skill, and again seemed to have an effortless skill in his performance.—F. D. Perkins, New York Herald-Tribune, Dec. 9.

Last New York Concert This Season Carnegie Hall, February 2, 1925.

MANAGEMENT

Evans and Salter

527 Fifth Ave., New York.

STEINWAY PIANO

CERTIFIED BY THE MUSICAL DIGEST

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

YESTERDAY and today marked the mid-winter meeting of the National Concert Managers Association. Representative members from different cities assembled in New York, and held several sessions at the Commodore hotel.

The details of the discussions were not available in time for publication in this issue of The Musical Digest. They will be presented a week hence. There were some frank utterances, and a number of subjects were gone into rather thoroughly.

This organization has been striving for several years to improve concert-giving conditions. Although its membership is only a small fractional part of the total number of individuals and organizations which conduct a single concert or a course of concerts each year the National Concert Managers Association includes some of the best minds in this industry.

A very considerable debt is due them by the public, by artist-attractions, and by the wholesale managerial bureaus . . . a debt due also to hundreds of local managements who are not of the Association.

This little body of managers have grouped themselves for constructive purposes. They are deeply in earnest. They are progressing in their endeavors to better some conditions which appear to need bettering. And they touched on some spots in the industry which are sore enough to need expert attention, and soon.

RADIO ENTHUSIASTS must have learned something to their advantage last Tuesday night. Those, at any rate, who were able to tune in on the Brunswick Hour of Music which was broadcast from the New York laboratories of this phonograph record organization.

On that occasion, which marked the launching of something new in radio broadcasting, there were four participants who rank high in the world of music: Florence Easton, Elly Ney, Mario Chamlee, and the Cleveland Orchestra, which Nikolai Sokoloff conducted.

Miss Easton and Mr. Chamlee, as most of us know, are first principals at the New York Metropolitan Opera; Mme. Ney has her established position as a pianiste; the Cleveland Orchestra scarcely needs, at this day, any introduction.

THE CLEVELAND ORCHESTRA led off—at ten o'clock in the evening—with Georges Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody in A major . . . broadcast from Carnegie Hall where the organization was closing its annual New York concert. Then, in the Brunswick Laboratories, Miss Easton sang, and to a larger audience by thousands of thousands than she had ever known before. Her offerings were the Jewel song from Faust, the song of India by Rimsky-Korsakoff, and Dvorak's Songs My Mother Taught Me, with a violin obbligato by Fredric Fradkin.

Mme. Ney was the next artiste on the Brunswick program. She gave Debussy's Feux D'Artifice, the Chopin A flat Polonaise, and Carreno's Valse Petite. Chamlee brought the Hour of Music to a conclusion with the M'Appari, from Marta, for which Fradkin provided an obbligato, and a group of songs. The Brunswick orchestra, conducted by Walter B. Rogers, was an important factor in the entertainment.

IN THE LIGHT of the offerings broadcast generally (the vast bulk commonplace to a degree) the above mentioned compositions assumed a significant importance. But even more important was the artistic quality of the interpreters.

Most of the music heard "on the air" is not of a character which prompts discriminating listeners to care to hear it. And the singers and instrumentalists are for the most part of fourth rate ability. There prevails no such care as was displayed in this instance to arrange a program which has any semblance of symmetry.

It was possible to present Miss Easton and Mr. Chamlee through an arrangement by Brunswick with the Metropolitan Opera Company. And I know that would not have been possible had the proposition not appealed to the Metropolitan management as eminently sane. For there were not enough numbers from either of the two singers to exert an unfavorable reaction upon their appeal in their regular operatic duties. Moreover, no Brunswick artist who is a member of the Metropolitan company will be presented at a Brunswick Hour of Music "too frequently." Thus are the prestige and public usefulness of a Metropolitan singer preserved.

Tonight there will be broadcast a popular program, with Walter Haenschen musically in charge. Mr. Haenschen has arranged his selections with solicitous care, and those who know the extent of his discernment and conscientiousness are confident that he will establish a noteworthy standard in this branch of musical undertaking. His choice of artists includes several of the ablest now before their public.

MARGARETE MATZENAUER has probably never done anything artistically finer than her interpretation of the role of the step-mother in Jenufa. Without detracting in the least from the credit due to Maria Jeritza's handling of the title role in that opera, fair-minded and discriminating persons who were present all agreed on the reality and the power of Mme. Matzenauer's characterization and the musicianship she displayed in singing what Janacek alloted the mezzo-soprano. Toscanini is not the only conductor who recognized the quick and sure music perceptions of this great artiste.

CHARLES A. SINK, secretary and business manager of the University School of Music at Ann Arbor, is looked upon as one of the most progressive promoters of music activities. Under his management the residents of the Michigan city hear a deal of the best music, and interpreted by the foremost musicians and music organizations obtainable.

Gustav Holst's Hymn of Jesus was really performed first in this country at the thirtieth Ann Arbor May Festival on May 17, 1923—and not, as was erroneously stated in New York newspapers, by the Oratorio Society of New York, in Carnegie Hall on November 9 last.

Again, on the 31st of last March, Walter Damrosch led the New York Symphony Orchestra in what was mistakenly termed the first American performance of excerpts from Holst's opera, The Perfect Fool. For the suite from that work was given—and under the conductorship of Holst himself—at the Ann Arbor May Festival performance of May 18, 1923.

There seems to be a deal of carelessness in the announcement of "first time" performances in this country. Confusion always arises through such statements; and the fact that most of them are innocently made is no acceptable excuse.

H. T. PARKER, whose circuitous writings occupy countless columns each season in the well known and heavy Boston Transcript, pillories New York as a music center in a recent Saturday article which is headed:

MANHATTAN'S
MEGALOMANIA
INORDINATE
Pricking the Music-Bubble of New York's Own Pretending—Sterility, Timidity,
Routine

Thereupon Mr. Parker proceeds, in a column and a quarter of unleaded six point type, to reveal New York's musical inferiority. Another writer could have told his story in half that space, and made better reading of it at that. But H. T. P. dotes on ambling about the mulberry bush. He is never happier than in writing on and on. He is a detailist extraordinary with the unfailing faculty of jumping the main track of his theme into sidings, where he brings into his discussion a mass of material with a locale often thousands of miles off. It is so in this instance.

For all that H. T. P. is a scholarly man. His music knowledge is broad. He is deeply in earnest. Wherefore, what he has to say—in substance—(once one reaches it) commands respect.

He points out that New York "cannot present a single composer of unusual talent or original power" (New York composers please write). Mr. Parker asserts that "During the flood of musical fare New York has not established the reputation of a single first-rate artist. (Boston, of course, has made reputations of many?). "Walter Damrosch," continues the judicial H. T. P., "is the only conductor of first-rate qualifications who in any sense of the word may be called an American. Henry Hadley, considerably tied to the apron-string of the Philharmonic, is, as a conductor and a composer, a person representative of all that is prosaic and commonplace in our native musical life."

I fear Mr. Parker will hear from Mr. Hadley. I expect to receive a reprimand for reprinting Mr. Parker's words.

REINALD WERRENRATH'S mail seems heavy laden with requests to do this thing or that. His correspondents are modest souls too. All they want him to do is to leave half a dozen tickets for one of his recitals at the box office (for each of the several writers who are willing to favor him by the presence of themselves and friends). Or to sing at all too short notice some measly song which the composer feels is a masterpiece.

Occasionally, in some town, Werry will be called to the telephone, there to hear some sweet-voiced creature murmur: "Won't you put Mary Jones' song on your program this evening? All you need to do is to run it over once or twice; you could use it for an encore, and it would mean such a lot to Mary."

The baritone admits he prefers selecting his own songs to having them hand-picked for him. But it isn't likely he will find his mail lightened much because of that fact. Hope beats high in the average human breast, and the ambitious (if unworthy) composer is seldom bashful.

GERMAINE SCHNITZER is about to establish fitness in costumes for her recitals . . . in addition to music appropriateness. As, to wit: When this pianiste appears at the series of six recitals she is to offer—giving important compositions of Weber, Schumann, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Chopin, and Liszt — she will wear a gown created for each program.

Mme. Boue is the designer; and I have Mme. Schnitzer's assurance that each gown, in lines and coloring, is to express the mood characteristic of each composer. Thus, I am told, a dove gray may be said to express Chopin; a black to typify Schumann, and a flame color to let people know that Liszt was brilliantly inclined.

The recitals will take place during the coming year—in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, London, Paris, Berlin, and Vienna. Mme. Schnitzer plans to devote twelve days in each of these cities, giving the series of six programs on alternate days. Here is ingenuity; and the idea will afford some possibilities in its practical application.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Alessandro Bonci

After an absence of several seasons, Alessandro Bonci, tenor, was heard again in New York at the Manhattan Opera House the afternoon of December 7. The Sun expressed the prevailing sentiment among the reviewers when it said: "It was a delight to listen again to his finished art." Mr. Bonci was assisted by Charlotte Harvis, soprano, who, in addition to duets with him, sang some solos.

The Telegram-Mail found unimpaired "the deft and sensitive art of the singer, his irreproachably tasteful treatment of melody and ornament, the delicacy and superfine skill of his phrasing, a finish of detail akin to the minute perfections of a Japanese ivory carving, and, last, an exquisite realization of style." The World writer was agreed that Mr. Bonci "sang again with the smooth and flourishing style and the dramatic zest which converts a concert number into a small opera of its own. He acted the scenes with irresistible enthusiasm . . . he brought the best work of a true artist and a skillful showman to the devoted and clamorous worshipers of bel canto."

Mr. Bonci's "thorough knowledge of how to sing, his skill in fioriture," were admired by the writer in the Herald Tribune. In his performance the Times found an admirable demonstration of his "masterly legato and finish and phrase and style." The song of the drunken Nemorino, according to this paper, was "a feat of dramatization and vocal dexterity." The Post admitted that his voice had lost a "little of its bloom," but said it "is still full of charm, a true lyric tenor with superb method."

The Herald Tribune said Miss Harvis' voice was "laudably full of charm." Other commentators agreed that her work was praiseworthy.

State Symphony

Josef Stransky and the State Symphony Orchestra in their third appearance of the season at the Metropolitan Opera House on December 7, were assisted by Anna Case, soprano. After the orchestra had played Rimsky - Korsakoff's Scheherazade, there followed a tribute to Puccini in the soprano's singing of Mi chiamano Mimi from La Boheme. Miss Case sang also with piano accompaniment.

The account in the Post stated that Miss Case was "never in better voice." The Herald Tribune found her Mimi expressive, albeit some notes of cloudier quality than the rest of her singing, which was marked by her "wonted clearness of tone." The Sun liked her English ballads, sung "with excellent effect," and remarked that her "upper tones," though "uneven," possessed "beauty and resonance."

Esther Dale

A request program was presented by Esther Dale, soprano, in her first recital here at Aeolian Hall on Wednesday evening. Miss Dale was assister in her first number, Aminta's song from Mozart's Il Re Pastore, by Mabel Farrar, violinist. The piano accompanist was John Doane. Pitts Sanborn wrote in the Telegram-Mail that Miss Dale "went through the variegated and exacting list in eminently graceful and debonair fashion." The reviewer in the Post found her in excellent voice, and the Sun observer admired "the tastefulness of her interpretations." This writer, although he discovered a lack of "dramatic intensity" in her voice, said that she had no difficulty in presenting the spirit of her offerings with clarity, and as the evening progressed her intonation and breath control greatly improved."

In general, according to the Herald Tribune reviewer, "Miss Dale was in good voice, with a generally clear and fluent tone." The World reported that she gave a "characteristic" performance and was rewarded "with flowers and warm applause."

New York Philharmonic Society

At their concert on December 4, conducted by Willem Van Hoogstraten, the Philharmonic Society added to their reportoire Charles Martin Loeffler's Poem for Orchestra.

In general the newspaper reviewers liked the music. Olin Downes of the Times found in it "a beauty that is rare and fresh and secret." The World was pleased with the way the composer held to "the glamorous, radiant tranquility" of the poem. Although Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune considered Mr. Loeffler "a magician of instrumental hues and timbres and a master of instrumental song" in this composition, he doubted if the work "represented the authentic genius of the composer of the Pagan Poem."

Scipione Guidi, concertmaster, played the solo of Beethoven's violin Concerto "with a small but pure tone" added Mr. Newman. The Sun complimented Mr. Guidi for a style "of clarity and refinement, supplemented by a tone of much purity and considerable beauty" and for a technique "admirable as always." Mr. Gilman thought the performance displayed his "characteristic refinement of tone and style and feeling." The other number on the program was Brahms' Tragic Overture.

Lily Meagher

In her recital at Wallack's Theater, New York, on the evening of December 7, Lily Meagher, Irish lyric soprano, was assisted by Michael Lepore, pianist, and Frank Bibb, accompanist. The Times reviewer was much pleased with the timbre of Miss Meagher's "fresh and youthful" voice, and he reported that she "sings like a bird," with "liquid runs" and "real trills."

This chronicler wrote further that while Miss Meagher's Haydn was charming and her French group was "no less attractive," gave the palm to the Irish songs, which "completely conquered her audience." The Sun reported that the singer's "light" voice was of good quality, although it asserted that there was a lack of "depth and brilliance." This reviewer conceded that within her limitations Miss Meagher used her voice well. In the Herald Tribune her voice was called "fresh" and of "good size," with "fluent tone," although traces of "hardness" and tremelo were reported also.

Little Symphony

George Barrere's Little Symphony Orchestra gave its fifth Sunday concert the evening of December 7th at Henry Miller's Theatre. The reviewers seemed to agree with the large audience that the program and Mr. Barrere's solo flute-playing were enjoyable. Mr. Barrere offered for the first performance in New York Cyril Scott's Ecstatic Shepherd, Widor's Scherzo with string accompaniment, his own Nocturne for Flute, and David Stanley Smith's Flowers. Bach's Adagio for organ or oboe and strings had been arranged for oboe solo by Alexander Siloti, and the solo was played by Mr. Mathieu. There were on the program besides Mozart's Overture to Bastien and Bastienne and Arthur Bliss's Humorous Conversations.

The Times said Mr. Barrere "delighted" his audience, and the Herald Tribune reviewer found the program "agreeably unfamiliar." This writer said the new number by Mr. Smith had "much melody and charm."

New York Symphony

Albert Spalding was the soloist at the second young people's concert of the New York Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Walter Damrosch, on December 6. He was heard in Bruch's Scotch Fantasy, acquitting himself, according to the Times, with his customary distinction. The Post writer said that he demonstrated again those qualities which have placed him in the forefront of American violinists. Other reviewers found his playing of its usual remarkable quality. Another feature of the program was the playing of a seldom heard Dvorak work, the Third Symphony in F. Other numbers played were Rimsky - Korsakoff's Caprice Espagnol, and Vaughan Williams' Fantasy on a Tallis theme. The audience was lavish in its applause of Mr. Spalding, Mr. Damrosch, and the orchestra.

At the concert on December 4, Mr. Damrosch presented two Moussorgsky premieres, The Musicians Peep Show, and Pictures from an Exhibition. The reviewers were interested in the music but not very impressed with it. W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that he preferred the Wagner, even the symphony, and Deems Taylor of the World found the compositions pleasant, but without much originality, and suggested that they would carry more weight at a chamber music concert. Mr. Taylor added that Mr. Damrosch and the orchestra played the works "very well."

The Times reviewer considered that "the admirable diction and vocalism" of Fraser Gange, the soloist of the occasion, was responsible for the success of The Peep Show. Mr. Gange, "that excellent artist," in the words of the Telegram-Mail observer, also sang the Hans Sach monologue splendidly. Lawrence Gilman said in the Tribune that Mr. Gange "distinguished himself in the Moussorgsky composition by the delicate wit and variety of his characterization and his admirable diction."

Giannini on Tour

Dusolina Giannini sang in Boston with the Symphony Orchestra on the evening of December 1, and followed that appearance with a recital in Washington, D. C., on the following afternoon and one in Baltimore.

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO

MME. ETHEL PARKS
Lyric-Coloratura Soprano
MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

FREEMANTEL

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Maria Safonoff

Maria Safonoff, pianist and daughter of the late Russian conductor, Wassilli Safonoff, who was at the head of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra from 1904 to 1909, made her American debut at Aeolian Hall, New York, the evening of December 8. In spite of a certain nervousness and deliberation noticed by the reviewers at the beginning of the concert, most of them felt that as the recital progressed she played, to quote the Times, "emotionally and with brilliancy."

Miss Safonoff's playing in her most difficult numbers, the Beethoven Sonata and Schumann Papillons, disclosed, in the words of the Sun reviewer, "a musical mind of high ideals and a technical equipment entirely adequate for revealing the contents of master works in a clear and often delightful manner. Her range of tone had breadth and musical quality, her pedaling was admirable, her rhythm good and her finger work clean. Not a performer of greatest brilliance, she is yet one who gives the listener pleasure by a thoroughly artistic performance."

To the Herald Tribune writer she seemed "a pianist of considerable talent, technical and expressive; doing her best work late in the program when a more temperamental manner replaced a certain reserve and deliberation in some of the earlier numbers." Toward the end of the recital her work was effective, in the opinion of the reviewer of the Post.

Adela Verne

Adela Verne, English pianist, who appeared as soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra two weeks ago, gave her first New York recital in fifteen years at Town Hall December 7. "The outstanding feature of Miss Verne's playing," according to the Herald Tribune, "seemed to be effectively applied power, combined with brilliant technique." Herbert Peyser of the Telegram and Mail found her "a wholly delightful artist, whose playing combines brilliancy and rare intelligence with a poetic temperament and the soundest musical feeling."

Her renditions of Beethoven and Schumann, Mr. Peyser felt, "were admirable in conception and sympathetic disclosure, and she carried the stupendous Bach work (the Bach-Busoni Organ Prelude and Fugue in D) to a really thrilling issue." The Times was impressed that Miss Verne disclosed herself as a "masterly musician." Miss Verne's pianism, continued this writer, "is built on the most solid foundations; it is inherently powerful; her fortes are massive, her climaxes torrential, and her finales cumulative."

New York String Quartet

The only New York appearance of the New York String Quartet, consisting of Messrs. Cadek, Siskovsky, Schwab and Vaska, took place on last Tuesday evening in Aeolian Hall. The program included the local premiere of Hindemith's Quartet in Op. 22.

Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, referring to Hindemith as the "white hope of modern German music," stressed the "musicality" which this composer's music displayed, and found it an "immediate delight." The Times report described this third quartet of Hindemith as "a sharp edged harmony under a smoke screen of muted cacaphonies," which in soft arts attained in the playing by these musicians a delicacy of "diaphonous gossamer."

The Post remarked that the Debussy Quartet was played with "noteworthy blending" of the four artists, and "rare skill" on the part of the, first violinist, Mr. Cadek. The Herald Tribune found the performance by the New York String Quartet "excellent" on the whole, and Alison Smith, writing in the World, praised the players for their "sympathy and sonority."

Opinion seemed universal in admiration of the "shimmering" effect of the Debussy, and of the tone blending displayed by the Quartet in the Mozart Quartet in E flat.

Winifred Byrd

Winifred Byrd gave her first New York piano recital of the season in Aeolian Hall on December 8 for the benefit of the Stony Wold Sanatorium. The Sun recorded that a good-sized audience gave her cordial acknowledgment and pointed out that her best playing was in the Scriabin and Debussy pieces, which were done with "admirable tone-coloring."

The first named composer's Danse Languide and Desir were "exquisitely played." The bravura Ride of the Valkyries transcribed from Wagner for the piano by Hutcheson, this reviewer said she played "exquisitely." The Herald Tribune also found her Scriabin pleasing, "rich in shade and color," and the Goossens piece "spiritedly played." This account stated that part of the program seemed "labored," but "sonorous," and the reviewer was of the opinion that the pianist was not at home in some of the Chopin. The Times pointed out Miss Byrd's facile playing of Mendelssohn and the applause accompanying the Scriabin and Goossens.

Ethel Parks

There was a large audience at Town Hall the evening of December 8 to hear the song recital given by Ethel Parks, coloratura soprano. Miss Parks was assisted by Frank Braun, pianist, and Frohman Foster, flutist. Commendation on the part of the newspaper writers was unanimous.

The Times asserted that Miss Parks displayed "a high, clear voice and good taste in the matter of songs." According to the Sun, she "sang with intelligence and showed knowledge of style. Her coloratura had good phrasing, although her voice in the upper scale was not always clear and of accurate pitch. She knew how to enliven her delivery with spirit, and there was grace in her stage manner."

Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail was convinced that Miss Parks was "evidently a student of style, who sings with taste. Her light and pliant voice is often agreeable as sheer voice . . . Mme. Parks is always a serious and painstaking artist." The Herald Tribune commented that the favorable impression made by the soprano last year was strengthened by her recent recital. Her "vivacious and expressive manner" and her voice "of considerable volume and fluent tone" were liked by this commentator.

Katherine Bacon

A large audience heard Katherine Bacon, pianist, in her first recital of the season at Aeolian Hall December 7. The concert was characterized, according to the Times, as her recitals of previous seasons have been, "by a kindling energy, a gem-like fineness of execution in detail, no less than by her broader appreciation of classic masters."

The Sun was also laudatory, writing that "her clear technic and good piano tone were heard to some special advantage in three etudes by Aurelio Giorni of the Elshuco Trio, which were new." Other numbers played by Miss Bacon were Beethoven's Appassionata Sonata in F minor and Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques.

Elly Ney

Elly Ney, pianist, gave her first New York recital of the season on the afternoon of December 8 in Aeolian Hall. Her performance of two sonatas in the key of F minor, the Brahms followed by Beethoven's Appassionata, seemed long to some of the reviewers. The audience was large.

There was especial attention paid by them all to the Andante in the Brahms, which in the Herald Tribune was reported as losing its charm through a "sense of length." Mr. Downes said of Mme. Ney's tone quality that she has the faculty of keeping an entire movement "on one plane of color," and can still establish "mood and feeling." He noted her "well-known" qualities of technic and strength. The Herald Tribune stressed the "fine vigor and dash" displayed in a MacDowell Polonaise.

The Post recorder, on the other hand, found her choice of compositions interesting, with "dramatic fire" and a "punch" in finales that was rewarded by applause. He also approved the MacDowell, "most brilliantly played." Mr. Henderson of the Sun considered the pianist of the "heroic" school, and said that there was "something like splendor" in parts of her reading.

Julius Bledsoe

Julius Bledsoe, negro baritone, gave a matinee recital December 6 at Town Hall. Opinion expressed in the newspapers indicated that his diction "lags behind his dramatic intelligence," to quote the Times.

This reviewer mentioned Mr. Bledsoe's "remarkable hushed tones" of "rare" beauty. The Sun spoke of "technical deficiences" of vocal equipment, but added that most of the recital deserved "praise, and much of it was thoroughly delightful," and that Mr. Bledsoe's interpretations were "always musical." The World account said, among other things, that he showed a "remarkable subtlety" in following the varying moods of the songs, as well as breadth and force.

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway New York City
Telephone Endicott 6074

GIGLI

ALMA BECK
CONTRALTO
For Bookings of Season 1924-1925 address
Alma Beck
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Fisk Bldg., N. Y. C.
or
Lucy N. Shiels
1049 Park Avenue
New York City

FORREST LAMONT
TENOR, CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Management: Harry and Arthur Culbertson
4853 Dorchester Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Aeolian Hall, New York

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

Musical Chicago En Courant

Hazel Moore Hears and Sees High Lights Which Flashed During the Past Week.

By HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Dec. 10.

THAT intangible element, personality, has returned to the Chicago Civic Opera Company. Last week's announcements radiated names: Garden, Chaliapin, Schipa, Muzio, Raisa.

Garden's return has always brought into hearing favorite and otherwise unheard French operas, and her audiences have shown their approval by their numbers at this variant from the old Italian fare. Thais, Carmen, Werther, each has introduced a new Garden. True, opinions have differed as to merits. However, Miss Garden has long adopted the policy of one daily paper, "Love me, hate me, but don't ignore me." And, regarding the last, no one does.

Of her Carmen, Edward Moore in the Tribune found that "it is a better singing performance than it was last year, but it still falls short of her best role. It is piquant, stormy and energetic, all of which qualities are found in the Bizet score, but it is not entirely bewitching, and this is where she and the score part company." Mr. Rosenfeld said in the News: "In a way it was a new conception of the part and none the less interesting." Mr. DeVries writes in the American: "I do not believe that she has ever played Carmen better than last night." Mr. Hackett, on the contrary, found the performance "spirited but rough," and of Miss Garden said: "At times Miss Garden threw herself into the role and took possession of the stage as is her wont. Then, again, she would step out of the picture as though she had no concern with the story at all. A strange performance, with flashes of great power and curious empty spots."

THE most unanimous press of the week goes to Claudia Muzio, who, by the way, is constantly growing in favor with the Chicago public, in a stunning performance of Traviata. She was aided by a superb cast, with Schipa making his return bow to his adoring public in the role of the younger Germont, and abetted further by Joseph Schwarz as the pere Germont. All found her supreme as a singing actress, and certainly the cheers of the audience attested their acceptance of this verdict.

While on the subject of prima donnas, those of the Chicago Opera are models of Parisian artifice, occasionally to the dismay of those with a taste exact for faultless fact. Witness Miss Garden's gorgeously garbed Charlotte, of Werther's woes. A radiant creature who, surely must have visited Paris on her honeymoon, thereby leaving Albert the poorer. Again. Miss McCormic, who, by her costumes as Marguerite in Faust and Micaela in Carmen, must have considered herself a very grand lady in each. Muzio's grandeur of costume is quite believable in the lavendar lady of Traviata, and Raisa's beauty but enhanced by the barbaric orientalism of the La Juive pantalettes.

YOUNG artists and young conductors are being given all opportunity. Six conductors in seven days is something of a record, even for the opera. Of these, the youngest is Weber, who boasts of but twenty-three years, but better, of sixty-three operas in his head. His conducting of the difficult Tannhauser elicted only praise in no uncertain terms from the daily press. He will have further opportunity with Rigoletto this week. Van Grove, St. Leger and Lauwers are better known in the regions back stage, yet the first two have already had opportunity to prove their caliber in the pit. Van Grove scored a success with Samson and Delilah, and St. Leger showed himself resourceful in a performance of Faust that frequently required that quality.

Of the young singers, first mention must be made of two talented Chicago girls, Helen Freund and Gladys Swartout. Each has beauty and brains, as evidenced by their quick and accurate stage sense and good singing in the roles allotted them. The little red headed Freund joined hands with Mary Garden in Werther, and barely topping the tallest child of Charlotte's brood, made herself a host of friends with her quaint charm and bright voice. A most auspicious beginning.

Miss Swartout's dark beauty and soft mezzo voice have added their quota in roles ranging from the shepherd in Tannhauser, to Siebel in Faust. Incidentally, she reports a few sore ribs in connection with the latter, due to Chaliapin's violent waltzing exit of the unfortunate Siebel in the second act. Her squeal was realistic and we doubt not, unpremeditated.

But Chaliapin! What magic is his. Faust, the Barber of Seville, Mefistofele—all Chaliapin and each totally different. Some may argue, and do, that his characters are overdrawn, exaggerated, but none deny his power, his magnetism.

OTHER music of the week has brought here the lovely Helen Stanley, decorating the third act of Abie's Irish Rose unbelievably. She also sang, to unanimous plaudits of the press, who pronounced her "better than ever." The Flonzaleys played and no one found a flaw. Paul Kochanski offered a new Suite Populaire Espagnole, by de Falla, and a Tzigane, by Ravel, both of which offered novelty and excellent playing.

Another youthful and successful debut occurred at the regular Friday and Saturday Symphony concerts, when Joseph Brinkman collected his prize winning appearance with the orchestra. He was the winner of the contest for young pianists promoted by the American Society of Musicians. The work was Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia, and the most spontaneous applause for any soloist of the season was his at its completion.

Hackett Sings in Faust in Chicago

Chaliapin Makes Debut as Mefistofele; Frank St. Leger Conducts.

Chicago, Dec. 6.—Feodor Chaliapin's Mefistofele in Gounod's Faust with the Chicago Civic Opera last night startled the critical audience no less than it pleased them. It was the first time Chicago has heard Chaliapin in the role, and the plaudits which greeted his performance were many.

Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner said that he dominated the other characters and made "a new opera" of Faust, and prophesied that if the composer could return to this life and see and hear him in the part he would rewrite the opera to make Satan the hero. Mr. Gunn hesitated to measure Chaliapin's art "by ordinary operatic standards." His voice, he wrote, "is the mirror of his dramatic intention" and his dramatic gifts rival his vocal art.

A similar reaction was that of Edward Moore, reviewer in the Tribune. He wrote that the artist was "unforgettable" and at all times "a whirlwind of physical energy." Karleton Hackett reported in the Post that the opera "was so illumined by the force of his personality that it seemed quite new." His singing, according to Mr. Hackett, "was fascinating. The play of color in his tone was astonishing."

Frank St. Leger made his debut in the conductor's stand. Mr. Moore said he would certify that the new conductor "has a big talent." Enthusiasm and a "considerable measure of authority" were found in his work by Mr. Gunn, and Mr. Hackett said he "had appreciation for the music, a firm, yet elastic beat, and held his forces well in hand."

This reviewer considered that Mary McCormic "sang the music of the garden scene better than anything she has done heretofore. The tone was lovely in quality and expressive." Agreed was Mr. Gunn, who said that she "sang with excellent tone." This commentator congratulated Charles Hackett for his "brilliant voice," which started bravely and moved to a convincing climax in the romance. Karleton Hackett wrote that he sang well, "with appreciation for the music and excellent vocal control."

Gladys Swarthout received particularly laudatory notices. Mr. Moore said she gave a "legitimate and completely lovely performance of the Flower song. Her voice is one of the company's most eminent discoveries of the season." According to Mr. Hackett, her voice "had a mellow quality and was of ample volume. She evidently has the operatic flair." Marie Claessens was called by Mr. Moore "quite as good a comedian in her small part as Chaliapin was in his." Mr. Hackett asserted that Desire Defrere "sang well as Valentine, and played the role with dramatic force." Gildo Morelato completed the cast.

Raisa and Macbeth Appear in La Juive

Marshall and Lazzari Sing Leading Roles; Pietro Cimini Is Conductor.

Chicago, Dec. 5.—Rosa Raisa, Charles Marshall, Florence Macbeth and Virgilio Lazzari sang the four principal parts in the first production this season by the Chicago Civic Opera Company of Halevy's The Jewess. It was also the first appearance this year of Miss Macbeth. She was greeted with cordiality, and her performance received much praise.

To quote Maurice Rosenfeld of the News, she made "a dainty, elegant princess and sang her music not only with clarity, but with unsuspected tone power. Her voice carried through the big hall and she sang the difficult airs with flexibility and ease." Edward Moore of the News enthused over her performance, which was like "a beautiful cameo from the time of her entrance." Her charm of person and of art was commented on in the Herald and Examiner by Glenn Dillard Gunn.

Mme. Raisa displayed a voice, according to Mr. Rosenfeld, "with a power, a volume and a human quality that thrilled the audience." Mr. Gunn and Mr. Moore agreed that she sang "gloriously" most of the evening. To the former the "grace, power and depth of feeling displayed in her song" are a constant delight.

No less enthusiastic were the notices of Mr. Marshall's work. He put into his role, in the words of Mr. Rosenfeld, "a tone of warmth, of clarion brilliance and of sympathetic quality." His voice was referred to as "noble" by Mr. Moore. Mr. Gunn said he could but repeat his praises of Mr. Marshall's "astonishing characterization of the Jewish goldsmith, which is vocal as well as histrionic in its detailed definition." This chroncler also hesitated to repeat his usual praise of Mr. Lazzari. He was "both distinguished and impressive as the prelate of the church, and in general sang with effect," wrote Mr. Moore. His interpretation of the role was lauded by Mr. Rosenfeld for "its fidelity of impersonation and for its artistic vocal presentment."

Romeo Boscacci, tenor, made his debut as Prince Leopold. In the words of Mr. Moore: "He would appear to be an artist of wide routine and experience and a safe and sane singer in what he attempts."

The conductor was Pietro Cimini, and, as Mr. Rosenfeld put it, he "reveled" in the music.

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

ETHEL
GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1924
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

Many Recitals Given in Chicago

Local Pianist Plays With Stock; Kochanski, Stefi Geyer, and Helen Stanley Appear.

Chicago, Dec. 8.—Joseph Brinkman, young Chicago pianist, was soloist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra on Friday. According to Maurice Rosenfeld, of the News, Mr. Brinkman gave the Liszt Hungarian Fantasy "a remarkably fine interpretation. He put into the rendition of the songful themes a delicate, refined tone color and he dashed off the rapid technical embellishments of the czardas themes with nonchalance and facility."

In the Post he was complimented for his "rich tone" and the way he "dashed into the bravura passages with an abandon that caught the spirit." The Tribune reviewer flatly asserted that Mr. Brinkman "furnished the most attractive and persuasive solo appearance of the season" and that he deserved his applause. The Herald and Examiner critic found his performance a "stirring one."

Sharing the plaudits with the soloist was Frederick Stock, who conducted. Every review lauded his reading, and the orchestra's rendition of d'Indy's B flat Symphony. "Remarkable" his interpretation was called by the writer in the Herald and Examiner. The chronicler in the Post wrote: "Mr. Stock played it with a free sweep and a buoyancy. Mr. Rosenfeld commented that he conducted the Symphony "from memory as though he were playing a solo with the orchestra as his instrument."

At his violin recital at Orchestra Hall yesterday, Paul Kochanski introduced two works never played before in America. They were Ravel's Tzigane and De Falla's Popular Spanish Suite. Edward Moore, of the Tribune, thought both more than interesting. Glenn Dillard Gunn wrote in the Herald and Examiner that he had a "velvet tone" and Mr. Moore summed him up as a "skillful player proceeding suddenly in these pieces from sustained song to bursting fireworks and doing it all with certain hand and fine tone."

In the opinion of the News observer, the recital was distinguished "for its tasteful interpretation, for its cleanly wrought technical presentment and for its retention of the class form." The Post commentator discovered among other laudable qualities a "full and rich" tone, a broad sweep to the melody, "clarity in the decorations and an accent in the rhythm," as well as "musical feeling expressed through firm tones and clear technique."

The Flonzaley Quartet gave the second program of their series in the Playhouse, representing Beethoven, Doret, and Schubert "with their wonted impeccability," to quote the Herald and Examiner. Other writers found their work up to its usual standard of excellence.

Helen Stanley, lyric soprano and former member of the Chicago Opera, gave a recital at the Studebaker yesterday afternoon. According to the Post she has a voice of "clear, pure quality, which she uses skillfully." Mr. Gunn called it "the loveiest soprano heard in concert" this season. "A fine voice with fine training" was Mr. Moore's comment, and Mr. Rosenfeld was delighted with "the beautiful quality of her pure, lyric voice" and her refinement of interpretation.

The morning symphony concert at the Chicago theatre, conducted by Nathaniel Finston, was well spoken of in the press. His rendition of the Tschaikowsky Fifth Symphony was especially lauded. "Beautiful and dignified" it was called by the writer in the Herald and Examiner.

Last Thursday Dora Thomason Hoffman, soprano, made her first appearance here in a recital at Fine Arts hall. Mr. Moore thought her voice, which is of the coloratura type, "had both range and quality, and she used it discreetly and exactly." Mr. Rosenfeld spoke of her "pleasing tone quality."

During the preceding week there were many recitals of outstanding interest and importance. Josef Hofmann, the Bolm Ballet Intime with Thamar Karsavina, Claudia Muzio and Percy Grainger, Ruth Breton, Stefi Geyer, and Ella Spravka, assisted by Richard Czerwonky, were among those who appeared. Mr. Hofmann, according to Mr. Rosenfeld, never before "revealed so completely his genius" and the Post found him, as usual, "superb."

At the initial bow of the Bolm Ballet there appeared the Eric Delamarter solo orchestra, the Adolf Bolm Ballet and Thamar Karsavina. Mme. Karsavina displayed, wrote Mr. Gunn, "a repertoire of charming variety, a lively sense of humor and an exquisitely poised and proportioned body." Mr. Hackett admired her as "a figure of grace and charm and mistress of the dance." Edward Moore of the Tribune also lauded the dancer and added that "when fine music, colorful scenery and the lovely art of the dance come into conjunction, the result is likely to be something worth going a considerable distance to witness."

Over five hundred persons were turned away from the doors at the joint recital of Mme. Muzio and Mr. Grainger. Mr. Campbell-Duncan in the Post characterized Mme. Muzio as "one of those rare singers who can sing with equal brilliancy of tone and interpretation the most elaborate and dramatic operatic number as well as the daintiest and most intimate of songs." Mr. Grainger was in "particularly good form," thought this writer.

Ruth Breton, violinist, received unusually laudatory notices of her recital here. "She has a fine, characterful tone of many colors," wrote Mr. Gunn, "a facile technic, a splendid sense of musical value and a real gift to set them forth persuasively." The Post was pleased with the tone of lovely quality she brought from her violin, which had "variety of shading and rhythmic elasticity." Miss Breton's name was added to the list of talented young violinists by E. M. of the Tribune who particularly liked her ability to keep in the middle of the pitch. The News said she showed a "tone of many shades and musical taste in interpretation."

"Mme. Geyer is a violinist of quality" stated the Post in the review of Mme. Geyer's Chicago debut. "The melodic line was well brought out," continued this paper, "the tone was pure and the technic clean . . . it was musical playing by an excellent artist." More or less of the same opinion was the News commentator, who called her "a musicianly artist" displaying "a big tone . . . and interpretative gifts which include fine phrasing, a comprehensive technic and a style that, if not especially magnetic, is artistic."

Chicago Opera Bill

TONIGHT

L'Amore dei Tre Re—with Mme. Garden; and Messrs. Lazzari, Baklanoff, and Ansseau; Mr. Polacco conducting.

TOMORROW

Tosca—with Mme. Muzio; and Messrs. Piccaver and Baklanoff; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

THURSDAY

Thais—with Mme. Garden; and Messrs. Mojica and Schwarz; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

FRIDAY

Fra Diavolo—with Mme. Mason; and Messrs. Schipa and Lazzari; Mr. Cimini conducting.

SATURDAY

The Jewess—with Mmes. Raisa and Macbeth, and Messrs. Lazzari and Marshall; Mr. Cimini conducting.

Les Pecheurs de Perles—with Mme. Pareto; and Messrs. Hackett and Rimini; Mr. Polacco conducting.

Claudia Muzio Sings In Role of Violetta

Schipa and Schwarz Appear in First Chicago Traviata; Cimini Conducts.

Chicago, Dec. 3.—Claudia Muzio won special praise from the music reviewers for her singing and acting in the first presentation of the season of La Traviata by the Chicago Civic Opera Company. She was termed "superb" in more than one account. Glenn Dillard Gunn in the Examiner saying further that, since she has coloratura facility and "exquisite mezza voce" at her command, in her capacity as dramatic soprano she is infinitely to be preferred to any coloratura in the part of Violetta. Maurice Rosenfeld in the Daily News stressed Mme. Muzio's "dramatic realism," noting the "flexibility and tonal purity" of her florid passages as well.

Karleton Hackett of the Post thoroughly approved Mme. Muzio, writing that her "exquisitely adjusted instrument" was "invariably expressive of the thought;" that the "roulades rippled out in purling cascades," and that she was "infallibly on the pitch." Edward Moore in the Tribune found Mme. Muzio's voice "glorious" and her interpretation "enlightened and illustrated with a thousand details of pantomime and expression."

The reviewers were also unanimous in praise of Tito Schipa, making his first appearance of the season, as Alfredo. Mr. Moore thought his voice "never more velvety of texture;" Mr. Hackett said that he sang as "only he can in this part," and called him a "great singer;" Mr. Rosenfeld said that he elaborated his role with "admirable vocal art and made of his part an ardent, dramatic figure."

This reviewer considered Joseph Schwarz, Russian baritone, thoroughly satisfactory in his part, and added that he called admirably upon his dramatic gifts to amplify his vocal message." Of Mr. Schwarz the Daily News had to say his voice had a "remarkably resonant quality."

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

M U Z I O
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND
Tenor
CONCERT—RECITAL—ORATORIO
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

CYRENA VAN GORDON
Prima Donna Mezzo Contralto Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management:
For the East: R. E. Johnston, 1451 Broadway, New York City
For the West: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

ARMAND TOKATYAN TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York City
Season 1924-1925 Now Being Booked

KOCHANSKI

Chicago Recital, December 7th

Evening Post, Dec. 8

Kochanski is a fine violinist. His Bach playing had firm grasp of the music and with an appreciation for its meaning that gave it life.

The tone was full and rich. There were a broad sweep to the melody, clarity in the decorations and an accent to the rhythm which kept all in proportion.

The Pugani-Kreisler Praeludium and Allegro was beautifully played. Musical feeling expressed through firm tones and clear technic.

A distinguished artist who knows how to make a varied and interesting program.

Tribune, Dec. 8

Kochanski is a skillful player proceeding suddenly from sustained song to bursting fireworks and doing it all with certain hand and fine tone.

Herald-Examiner, Dec. 8

Kochanski with velvet tone made Chicago music lovers acquainted with de Falla's "Suite Populaire Espagnole" and Ravel's "Tzigane."

Journal, Dec. 8.

In this (Ravel's "Tzigane") and other music, Kochanski convinced his hearers of unsurpassed merits. His facility with an uncompromising musical instrument is of the first order. He is intimately an artist, and distinction and elegance seem the natural endowments of his music. He accomplished something rare in suggesting majesty through sound.

CONCERT MANAGEMENT:

GEORGE ENGLES

Aeolian Building New York

STEINWAY PIANO

Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra

In Philadelphia Nov. 28-29
In New York Dec. 2

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI, CONDUCTOR

Introducing Szymanowski's Violin Concerto

New York Times, Dec. 3

Kochanski, whose performance made mock of technical difficulties, met the composer more than half way and was repeatedly recalled.

New York Evening World, Dec. 4

Kochanski's playing was as elegant as the music and much more brilliant.

Philadelphia Bulletin, Nov. 29

Demands recognition as a fine violinist.

Christian Science Monitor, Dec. 3

Kochanski gave a wonderful exhibition of violin playing. Played the work superbly.

New York Sun, Dec. 3

As Kochanski's fine performance demonstrated, there is room for the most advanced technic and scope for the exercise of the most luminous tone.

Philadelphia Evening Ledger, Nov. 29

Kochanski gave a wonderful exhibition of violin playing.

New York World, Dec. 3

When Kochanski's violin was allowed to sing, it did so with really poetic beauty. Mastered its stringent difficulties with superb confidence and style.

Philadelphia Record, Nov. 29

Most of the furore was intended for the beautiful playing of the distinguished Polish artist.

Philadelphia North American, Nov. 29

Kochanski got four recalls—more for the performance than the piece.

New York Post, Dec. 3

His performance was equally admirable for its purity of tone, its perfect understanding of the composer's intentions and its profound musicianship.

New York Journal, Dec. 3

His was the work of a musician and a virtuoso.

Brooklyn Eagle, Dec. 3

Kochanski gave a lucid performance of the work.

On The Music Highway

THE Kibalchich Russian Symphonic Choir will appear with the Haarlem Philharmonic Orchestra in New York day after tomorrow and in Trenton, N. J., on December 19. The Russian singers will give a Christmas program with the New York Symphony on December 20 in Brooklyn, which they will repeat on December 27 in New York at Carnegie Hall.

Guy Maier and Lee Pattison, piano duettists, who appeared with the Barrere Little Symphony Orchestra at the Henry Miller Theatre Sunday evening, will play with the New York Philharmonic Society on December 21 and with Arthur Shattuck, pianist, at Aeolian Hall, on January 4. At the last concert they will present works for one, two and three pianos with specially arranged orchestral accompaniments.

Cobina Wright, who has been heard as soprano soloist with choral organizations, will give her first recital at Aeolian Hall, New York, on Thursday evening, with Richard Hageman at the piano.

Max Pollikoff, young American violinist who made his debut in New York last season, returns for a recital at Aeolian Hall on Friday evening. A. Walter Kramer's Symphonic Rhapsody for violin, which has been heard here only once, is on his program, with two rarely heard works by Wieniawski, a new Notturno of Mr. Pollikoff's own composition, Brahms' A major Sonata, and other works.

Ruth Rodgers is to give a recital in Syracuse tomorrow. On December 28, Miss Rodgers will be heard in Providence, R. I.

Wanda Landowska will appear at the Biltmore Musical in New York on December 19. On December 26, 27 and 29, she will appear with the Philadelphia Orchestra in Philadelphia.

Roland Hayes is spending December and January in the East. During February and March, he will be on the Pacific Coast. In April he will go to Europe for another tour on that continent.

The New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch, conductor, began a second series of concerts at Washington on December 8 and 9; played in Baltimore on December 10, and in Philadelphia on December 11. Paul Kochanski and Felix Salmond were the soloists in Brahms' Double Concerto for violin and cello.

Theo Karle will be tenor soloist in the Brooklyn Oratorio Society's production of The Messiah, at the Academy of Music on the afternoon of December 21, under the baton of Walter Henry Hall.

Vladimir Golschmann, young French conductor, will make his first New York appearance this season as guest of the New York Symphony Orchestra at the pair of concerts in Carnegie Hall on December 18 and 19.

Fraser Gange will spend his Christmas Day in Minneapolis this year. He is to be soloist with the Minneapolis Orchestra on December 25 and 26.

Elsa Alsen is now on tour in the Middle West where she is appearing at a number of orchestra concerts and in recital. She was guest artist with the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company last Thursday, singing the part of Santuzza.

Fred Patton is singing The Messiah this month in Norwalk, Conn., Reading, Pa., and Detroit, Mich. The Norwalk People's Chorus, the Reading Choral Society and the Detroit Symphony Orchestra are presenting the work.

Joyce Bannerman has just been engaged to appear with the Symphony Orchestra in Erie, December 28, and in Cleveland, Ohio, on January 21. Early in February Miss Bannerman will be heard again in and near New York.

Dusolina Giannini sang in Morgantown, Pa., on December 10, in Pittsburgh on December 11 and in Philadelphia yesterday. On December 19 she will be heard at the Friday morning musicale at the Biltmore, after which she will take a short vacation over the holidays. On December 30, Miss Giannini will sing with the Schola Cantorum before leaving for a tour in the South and Middle West.

Myra Hess will give her first New York recital the first Saturday afternoon in January at Aeolian Hall, and will play several new compositions. She will present four solo numbers by De Falla and Granados not yet heard in America.

Hans Kindler played in concert on December 11 in Washington, D. C., with Wanda Landowska. He is also appearing in the capital this season as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Herma Menth returned for the fourth time December 5 to give a piano recital at the Centenary Collegiate Institute, Hackettstown, N. J.

A program was given for the eighth Andiron Club musicale at Town Hall last night by Albert Stoessel, violinist, and Arthur Loesser, pianist. Hugh Porter accompanied Mr. Stoessel at the piano.

The Old Masters Trio will give an evening of chamber music in Aeolian Hall on Saturday, with Merle Alcock, contralto, soloist.

Rafaelo Diaz will sing at Indianapolis, Ind., next Monday.

Arthur Middleton will sing the baritone solos in the performance of The Messiah to be given by the New York Oratorio Society on December 25 and 27 at Carnegie Hall.

Royal Dadmun, baritone, is appearing in recital with the Highland Glee Club of Newton Centre, Mass., today. This is Mr. Dadmun's third return engagement with this club.

The Buffalo Musical Foundation, Inc., are continuing the late Mai Davis Smith's Annual Concert Series for the fifteenth consecutive season at Elmwood Music Hall. The Foundation was organized in memory of Mrs. Smith with the intention of carrying on the work that she did for fourteen years.

In the Artist Series the De Reszke Singers are appearing there today; on February 17 will be heard John Charles Thomas, baritone, and Myra Hess, pianist, and on March 31 there will be a joint recital by Marguerite d'Alvarez, contralto, and Jean Gerardy, cellist. The next concert of the Orchestra Series will be on January 6, when the Detroit Symphony, conducted by Ossip Gabrilowitsch, with Dusolina Giannini as soloist, will play. The Cincinnati Symphony, Fritz Reiner conducting, will be heard, with Cecilia Hansen as soloist, on February 10; the Philadelphia Symphony, conducted by Leopold Stokowski, on March 11; and, on April 14, the Detroit Symphony again.

The fourteenth Invitation Musicale under the auspices of Story & Clark took place last Thursday evening. The artists heard were Lillian Steele, soprano, and Albert Rappaport, tenor, who sang an Italian and a Russian group of songs. Miss Steele sang compositions by Ignatz Waghalter, who was at the piano. The program was under the direction of Frank C. Barber.

Armen Ohanian, Persian dancer, presented a program of exotic dances in her appearance at Town Hall, New York, last Saturday evening. Mme. Ohanian was assisted by several soloists, and by an orchestra of native Persian musicians.

Following her appearance with the State Symphony Orchestra November 30, when she played the Grieg Concerto, Guiomar Novaes was immediately re-engaged to play the same concerto with Mr. Stransky and his orchestra in its Carnegie Hall concert tomorrow.

Mischa Levitzki gave a benefit piano recital at the Institute of Musical Art yesterday. He will play at the Moszkowski Testimonial at the Metropolitan Opera House on December 30.

The Letz Quartet, returning after appearances in the Middle West, gave a concert at Columbia University on December 11.

Jeannette Vreeland was soloist with the Albany Mendelssohn Choir on December 5. During the Christmas season she will take part in the performance of The Messiah to be given by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra on December 28 in that city.

Charles M. Courboin, Belgian organist who has given recitals in Victoria, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland, Spokane, Helena and other far Western points, played in Grand Rapids yesterday and will give the second performance in America of Widor's Sixth Symphony for organ and orchestra with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra under Ossip Gabrilowitsch at their regular pair of concerts on December 18 and 19.

STELLA de METTE

Mezzo-Soprano

A "COLORFUL VOICE" of "VELVETY QUALITY" and "DRAMATIC POWER" are opinions recently expressed by Boston and Philadelphia reviewers.

"The Carmen of Stella de Mette, both vocally and dramatically, was one of the best heard and seen here in many a day."—Philadelphia Record, Nov. 27, 1924.

"Her acting in the last act (of Aida) was a fine piece of work, and combined with a colorful voice, impressed the audience with its tragic intensity."—Boston American, Nov. 5, 1924.

Formerly with Metropolitan Opera

Now Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Exclusive Management of

ANTHONY BAGAROZY

Aeolian Hall New York

Goossens Is Leader At Guild Concert

Conducts Own Work in New York Debut; Ursula Greville and Polah Soloists.

The International Composers' Guild gave the first concert of its fourth season in Aeolian Hall the evening of December 7. Most of the performances were played for the first time in America, and some for the first time anywhere. Eugene Goossens, English composer, made his first appearance as a conductor in this city, directing an orchestra composed of Marie Miller, harpist; Rex Tillotson, cellist and pianist, and players from the State Symphony Orchestra. Other new music was presented by Ursula Greville, soprano, and Andre Polah, violinist.

Included on the program were: A work for chamber orchestra, Labyrinth, by Frederick Laurence; a work similarly scored by Carl Ruggles called Men and Mountains; songs for voice and various instruments by Vaughan Williams, F. G. Scott, Felix White, Owen Mase and Egon Wellesz.

The critical comment on the concert was highly diversified. In general, the reviewers were interested in the modernism of these compositions, although some of them they scored as being meaningless and discordant. The Sun reviewer was merely amused by the program except for the Vaughan Williams songs, and the Goossens Fantasy, which "proved to be the best piece of music of the evening. Modern in general harmonic character, it respected the ancient laws of theme and form." Of this work Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail wrote that it proves Mr. Goossens is "gifted with a sharp and discriminating ear for individual timbre." Mr. Sanborn said the Tzigane fell short as a parody, but was, in spite of itself, "lively, well written and not bad to hear." Mr. Polah "played the violin part with devotion."

Olin Downes of the Times said the Ravel work was "superbly written. The point, the clearness and wit of his writing are very great." Of the Goossens piece, Mr. Downes felt that it was not indicative of the best of his work, but his conducting, he thought, showed "much earnestness, authority and musical resource." On the other hand, Lawrence Gilman wrote in the Times that the Fantasy was "a brilliant work, melodious after the old-fashioned manner."

The vocal group, according to Mr. Sanborn, was "sung with fine intelligence, much technical skill and a great deal of charm" by Mme. Greville. Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune said that she sang "the lovely group of songs imaginatively." Ernest Newman of the Post found her voice "grown in power and richer in quality" since he last heard her. This chronicler liked the Goossens work.

Cesar Franck Work Played in Cleveland

Sokoloff Conducts Shepherd, D'Indy and Enesco Compositions; Marmeins Dance.

Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 6.—The Cleveland Orchestra gave at its sixth concert in Masonic Hall night before last much of the program which it will present next week in New York, the Overture to a Drama by Arthur Shepherd, assistant conductor, and numbers by Vincent d'Indy and Enesco. They were preceded by Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Reviewers today have agreed in their praise of the Franck, "the most perfect and original symphonic work yet created by a French composer," wrote Wilson G. Smith in the Press, given by Mr. Sokoloff a "masterly reading." "Bears repetition" said James H. Rogers in the Plain Dealer, who called the conductor's interpretation "enkindling."

Mr. Bell said that Mr. Shepherd's Overture is "good music"; of this number work Mr. Rogers has much of praise to say, "an effective, stirring piece, concisely and expertly put together." Mr. Smith thought the composer a "talented and clever musician" with "something to say." Enesco's Rhapsody was generally liked, while the only one to sponsor d'Indy was Mr. Rogers, who mentioned his austerity, but found in his style also nobility, both "mingled with moving exaltation."

The Marmein Dancers, Phyllis, Irene and Miriam, gave a diversified program of eighteen numbers last night in the Masonic Auditorium. Their numbers had an "exotic" flavor, wrote Mr. Rogers in today's Plain Dealer, and were set forth by the "charming" dancers with "much skill and grace." He did not approve their introduction of speech, in what they called "drama dance." This innovation was unconvincing and disturbing to Mr. Rogers.

FLORA NEGRI

Now and again some young musician makes a sufficient impression in public to prompt discriminating persons to predict a future for the aspirant for a career.

About a year ago Miss Flora Negri was heard in a recital of songs; then a few weeks later, in a second program. The daily newspaper music reviewers found excellences in the achievement of this soprano, and so stated in their comments.

Fitzhugh Haensel, the New York manager, was one of the experts who heard Miss Negri. It was his opinion that she had something to offer in both her voice and her art. So—after the second recital—Mr. Haensel made a business proposal to the soprano, which was accepted.

Miss Negri is to be heard again in New York before long. And she will appear publicly elsewhere. All of which indicates that ability does not invariably go unrecognized.

Eastman Again Aids Music School

Rochester, Dec. 10.—Of the $15,000,000 in Eastman Kodak stock given by George Eastman to educational institutions in his most recent gifts, $3,000,000 was given to the Eastman School of Music.

Fritz Reiner Leads Russian Novelties

Presents Medtner Concerto With Composer as Soloist; Maria Carreras Plays.

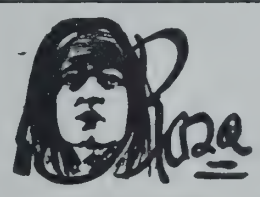
Cincinnati, Dec. 7.—Igor Stravinsky's Petroushka opened the concerts of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, Fritz Reiner conducting, on December 5 and 6. Nicholas Medtner was soloist on these programs. The reviewers in their reports of the concerts remarked on the hilarity of spirit of the Stravinsky composition, and praised the orchestra for its superlative skill and Mr. Reiner for his mastery of the score.

Mrs. Plogstedt, chronicler of the Post, liked this "unique" composition, and Mrs. Smith, writing in the Times-Star, found it "catching" and clear in its graphic attempts. "Fetchingly descriptive" were the words used by Mr. Goldenburg in the Enquirer, and he admired the consummate skill of Mr. Reiner. A certain "circus tang" in the work did not find approval in this review.

After the intermission, Nicholas Medtner, Russian composer and pianist, played his own concerto, which has been presented so far this season in Philadelphia and New York. The work was admired for its "studious, dignified character," although the reviewers believed that it would have carried greater appeal if more color and variety of tempo had been employed by the composer. By general consent Mr. Medtner's technical equipment, warmth of temperament, and musicianship were granted in full by the reviewers.

Maria Carreras, Italian pianist, was recitalist here on Monday under the auspices of the Cincinnati Conservatory Alumni Association. This was her first recital in Cincinnati. The reviews were full of praise of Mme. Carreras' playing. Samuel T. Wilson wrote in the Commercial Tribune, "Words seem utterly futile when it comes to using them in connection with the recital which Maria Carreras gave." Mr. Wilson thought that Mme. Carreras played like a man, and said further: "The technic of this artist is stupendous. No other woman pianist whom we have heard—and few men—can equal it!"

The Times-Star said in its review, "To achieve her ends of interpretation Mme. Carreras used a brilliant technic and a power to paint in many rich and varied colors at her keyboard palette. So while the listener was astounded at her fluency he was more moved by her artistry." Mrs. Plogstedt and Carl B. Adams, the latter of the Enquirer, willingly granted Mme. Carreras a place among the first rank of pianists on her display of technic and musicianship in this recital.



Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc.
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Mason & Hamlin Piano
Management
Evans & Salter
527 FIFTH AVE.
NEW YORK

FRANCES PERALTA
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
MANAGEMENT: NATIONAL CONCERTS, INC., 1451 Broadway, New York

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

HEMPEL

This Season's Tour arranged by Management FRIEDA HEMPEL
185 Madison Ave., New York City

(Next Season Mme. Hempel will be under the Management of GEORGE ENGLES, Aeolian Hall, N. Y. C.)

THE Manchester (England) Evening News is recognized as a great newspaper.

THE following review, in its entirety, appeared in the issue of November 7th last.

FRIEDA HEMPEL

When a Man Wants to Throw His Flute Away.

Birds have no publicity agents. The poets who sing their praises do so out of fullness of heart and pure joy at their exquisite music.

It is in the same spirit men and women all over the world speak, write and dream of Frieda Hempel. Their praise may seem extravagant and immoderate before one has heard her. After hearing her one feels they can never have said quite enough.

Others more in a position than ourselves to judge, have told us emphatically that she is of the world's greatest. Certainly it is many a long, long year since Manchester heard any other singer, in her own way, so greatly pleasing. The scene at the conclusion of Mr. Brand Lane's concert at the Free Trade Hall on Saturday night was remarkable. Men and women, with hands tired and tingling from continual clapping, with sparkling eyes and flushed faces, excitedly whispered to each other that never had they heard anything like it before, and then in a louder voice joined in the ecstatic "bravos" and hoarse supplications to the little, fair-haired, smiling lady for "just one song more."

Gracious and graceful she gave it: "Home, Sweet Home"; as she had before that given us Schubert's "Auf dem Wasser"; "Dixie"; and "The Carnival of Venice" with a verve, feeling, and expression that needed both eye and ear to appreciate. No wonder staid old men lost their heads in their demands for encores.

And then in the delicious acrobatics of that favourite of coloratura singers, "Ombra Leggiera"; there were moments when, shutting one's eyes, it was impossible to tell which was voice and which flute, so wonderfully did both blend as one. Any flutist but Signor Amadio must have felt tempted to fling away his flute in disgust, and yearn to listen only to the glorious song-bird beside him. For only to an Amadio is it given to produce the notes and tones of a Hempel.

A wonderful evening; helped, too, by the playing of M. Coenraad V. Bos, as accompanist.

As we said at the beginning, such language may seem extravagant, but then perhaps you have not heard a Frieda Hempel concert. If so, there is still opportunity. She is making her second and final appearance of the season here next Saturday.

W. J. H.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Boston Hears Faure Memorial

People's Symphony, Pierian Sodality, and Eighteenth Century Symphony Give Orchestral Programs.

Boston, Dec. 8.—A program in memory of Gabriel Faure was given by Serge Koussevitzky at the seventh concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon. It included the French composer's Overture to Penelope and Elegie for violoncello and orchestra. Jean Bedetti was heard as the soloist. Faure's best known pupil, Maurice Ravel, was represented by his Orchestra Fragments from Daphnis et Chloe. The other number was Beethoven's Third Symphony.

Mr. Koussevitzky, recovered from his recent illness, kept throughout the program, according to Globe reviewer, "a unity of mood and tone" and, in the first numbers, a "sadness wholly elegiac." The writer in the Christian Science Monitor said that tribute on the part of the conductor, the orchestra, and Mr. Bedetti, was sincere and touching. The performance, he felt, "was replete with sympathetic understanding of the music, not one to be bettered nor likely to be soon forgotten."

The sixth program of the People's Symphony Orchestra was presented yesterday afternoon, Emil Mollenhauer conducting. In the words of the Monitor reviewer, "the orchestra was heard to better advantage than in any previous concert of the present season, Mr. Mollenhauer evincing a greater note of inspiration, which resulted in a neat precision of attack, well defined shading and an animation that was sustained throughout the concert."

The soloist, Edna Wahle Furber, contralto, heard here for the first time, displayed a "clear and resonant" voice, to quote the Globe, "of considerable volume and wide range, which she uses to good advantage." The Transcript writer considered that she put "dramatic expressiveness" into her songs.

In the concert at the Copley Theatre last Wednesday of the Pierian Sodality of Harvard, George Brown, student leader, conducted. He showed, according to the Herald, "musical intelligence," and his reading of Gluck's Overture to Iphigenia in Aulis was "especially noteworthy." Considering the limitations under which they worked and rehearsed, the other commentators thought their work distinctly laudable. The Transcript recorded that in the group of songs by the soloist, Morris Brown, he sang "with feeling and delight."

The 18th Century Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Raffaele Martino, gave a candle-light concert that night in Jordan Hall. The general sentiment among the reviewers was expressed by the Monitor writer: "It is a delightful institution in that it covers a field otherwise untouched. The simplicity and quaintness of the music, the costumes, and the lighting, all conspire to make these concerts deserving of an interested public." The soloists with the orchestra were Doris Emerson, soprano, and Rodolfo Fornari, baritone. Their work, as well as that of the orchestra, was highly commended.

The first local concert appearance of Paul Whiteman and his orchestra elicited much praise in the press. George Gershwin was soloist in his own Rhapsody in Blue for piano and orchestra. With the exception of the Monitor chronicler, the reviewers enjoyed the concert, and lauded the "remarkable" work of Mr. Whiteman and his men. The Globe reviewer wrote "the virtuosity, the refinement of style, the brilliant musicianship of Whiteman's orchestra might reconcile objectors to jazz to it."

The notices which greeted Gitta Gradova, Russian pianist, after her first Boston appearance, were uniformly laudatory. The Monitor commentator called her "a competent and discerning artist of great technical proficiency, elegance, surprising power, authority and balance." The Transcript confirmed her technical excellence and the Herald reviewer characterized her as a musician of "strong individuality, a pianist of unusual powers, one of the most genuinely interesting players to appear here in many a day."

PIETRO CIMINI
Conductor of the Chicago Opera, Who Directed Traviata and Jewels of the Madonna Last Saturday.

Winifred Byrd, pianist, gave a recital in Jordan Hall Thursday. Her audience, although comparatively small, was very enthusiastic. Her playing, as the Monitor writer expressed it, "showed excellent technical foundation, and phrasing that was interesting . . . her interpretations are musical far beyond those of the average young artist." Philip Hale of the Herald was impressed with the lack of affectation in her interpretations, although he disliked her rendition of Chopin's Etude.

A member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Paul Cherkassky, gave a violin recital Tuesday night. The program opened with a sonata new to Boston audiences by Toivo Kuula, a Finn. The Monitor considered it well worth a hearing. The Transcript reviewer, although admitting its interest and excellent workmanship, did not find it a work of distinction. This writer called Mr. Cherkassky's musicianship sound, while the Herald chronicler said that "he played with intelligence, an excellent musician, possessed of a good technique, a warm tone, and imagination."

Anna Pavlowa and her Russian ballet, Jascha Heifetz, and Louise Homer also have made recent appearances. They received the usual excellent reviews attendant upon their appearance. Of Pavlowa's one week engagement here the Monitor reviewer said, "Superlatives have been showered in profusion on Mme. Pavlowa, and who, on seeing her last night, would not say they express all too feebly the admiration which she arouses and so richly deserves?" According to the press commentators, Mr. Heifetz's program served to display to the utmost the qualities for which he is so well known. To the Globe writer it was just another proof that he is "the greatest virtuoso violinist of the generation." Mme. Homer was found to be in excellent voice.

Sedano Gives Second N. Y. Concert

A second New York recital was given by the young Spanish violinist, Carlos Sedano, in Carnegie Hall December 8. The impression of intelligent, musicianly playing made at his first appearance was heightened by this last recital. The Sun said: "Mr. Sedano again revealed an art which has long been associated with the Spanish school of violinists. His playing was fluent and refined, and in a sensitive regard for polished phrasing and delicate nuance he deserved considerable praise." Other reviews spoke in a similar vein.

Stransky Leads Wagner Program

An all-Wagner program was given by the State Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Josef Stransky at Carnegie Hall Wednesday evening. Nine well known portions of Wagner's operas were played, including the Meistersinger introduction to Act III, the Tristan Prelude and Finale, the Parsifal processional, parts of Rhinegold, Lohengrin, and finally the Siegfried Idyll.

Eastman School of Music
of
THE UNIVERSITY OF ROCHESTER
ERNEST BLOCH
will conduct
FIVE MASTER COURSES
Teaching Methods—Practical Harmony—Style—Form—Fugue.
Each Course One Week—Five Two-Hour Sessions
BEGINNING FEBRUARY 2ND, 1925
For Information, Address Secretary-Manager
Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y.

VOICE, SYMPATHY, and PERSONALITY are qualities frequently emphasized by music reviewers as outstanding in the equipment of the baritone who has just returned from a concert tour in the west. In February Mr. Dadmun will start for the Pacific coast to fill a number of engagements.
ROYAL DADMUN
Management
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York
VICTOR RECORDS

KOLITSCH
Management: Antonia Sawyer, Inc,. Aeolian Hall, New York

FREDERICK MILLAR

BASSO

Will make his American debut with the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.,
ON
December Twenty-second and Twenty-third, 1924

Exclusive Management: BECKHARD AND McFARLANE
FISK BUILDING, NEW YORK CITY

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

Pianists Lead in Berlin Music

D'Albert, Erdmann, Gieseking, and Elsa Kraus Give Recitals; American Artists Well Received.

Berlin.

Four pianists led the list of concert-givers here during the past music week. They were Eugene d'Albert, Edward Erdmann, Walter Gieseking and Elsa Kraus. The reputation of d'Albert is of such long standing that he can afford from time to time to lapse from his highest standard. His audiences take these fluctuations like the weather. They do not question, although they may grumble. He was at his best at this most recent appearance, and left his audience in such good humor that they were able to discuss with the greatest cheerfulness and interest and the least animosity or ill feeling the rumor that M. d'Albert is shortly to divorce his seventh wife.

Messrs. Gieseking and Erdmann can afford no license. They are young and must always play their very best. The former strengthened the impression which he has been making in past seasons, during which time he has established for himself the reputation of being an excellent interpreter of Debussy. Erdmann continues to make the forward strides which he has made continually since he was introduced to the German public by Nikisch.

Among the recitalists earlier in the week was Elsa Kraus. On her appearances a year ago she aroused great hopes, and these seem well on their way toward complete realization. She has a penchant for the moderns and plays Schonberg and the others of his school with understanding and insight, but, as she indicated in her most recent appearance, she is able to do well with the traditional composers.

Another artist who seems promising is Ursula van Diemen, whose recital took place this week also. She presents loveliness not only to the ear, but also to the eye. She is the possessor of a voice capable of being developed to a high standard, although already it has charm, expressiveness and beauty.

Americans Win Successes

The Americans, who during the last few days have come before the music public, have all made excellent impressions. Among them were the pianist Jolas; Richard Hale, baritone, and Rudolph Polk, violinist. Ethel Leginska, who appeared both as pianist and conductor, was much approved.

Of Mr. Jolas it was said in the Borsen-Courier, "His full mastery of the piano is thoroughly warmed by the ardor of understanding. Poetic understanding seems always to give soul to the fullness, warmth and coloring of his playing." Mr. Hale was for the most part very well received, although one reviewer, Professor Taubmann, was of the opinion that his voice was more hollow and constrained than it should be.

Ethel Leginska made a very much better impression as a pianist than as a conductor. She displayed at the piano a full sized technic and genuine feeling. She is always interesting, was the opinion generally expressed by the reviewers who were present.

In spite of his youth Rudolph Polk is greeted in Berlin as an old acquaintance. His playing, on a splendid instrument and before a full house, was truly distinguished. His technic was brilliant, and his comprehension of the music at hand deeply rooted. It may be true that at present his fund of passion is not entirely displayed, but surely his potential ardor will one day burst forth and light the way for a great violinist.

Much Chamber Music Played

Besides the concerts by the three best known chamber ensembles, the Rose, Busch, and Klingler quartets, other chamber music recitals took place. Leonid Kreutzer, pianist, conductor and teacher, joined himself with Josef Wolfsthal, concertmaster of the Berlin State Opera Orchestra, and with the Russian cellist, Platigorsky, to give an evening of trio music. The ensemble had the smoothness and finish of ensemble which only groups of long experience together can usually achieve.

The Buxbaum Quartet still limps somewhat. Only the leader, former cellist of the Rose Quartet, is a player of the foremost rank, and his associates are not of his class. The latest program of Herr Buxbaum and the others was predominantly modern. A quartet by Zemlinsky of Prague, teacher of Schonberg, was the main item. It was applauded by those in the audience who always seem ready to approve what is new and startling regardless of its musical value.

Another evening of trio music brought together Bruno Walter, conductor, who played the piano, and the brothers, Feuermann, Sigmund and Emanuel (both wonder children grown up). Herr Walter treated the piano part of Beethoven's Geister trio with rare delicacy.

Walter Leads Philharmonic

The day before Walter showed himself at his very best when he conducted the Philharmonic Orchestra. He did the Schumann First Symphony with all the warmth and depth of his fine art. After that he conducted a delightful composition by E. N. von Reznicek, who was present. These variations with the ironic title Tragische Geschichte belong to the wittiest and most charming trifles which one can serve with a big orchestra.

At their most recent concerts Erich Kleiber and Wilhelm Furtwangler again drew the applause and laudatory comment which by now has become so customary as to be monotonous. Maria Ivogun was soloist with the latter, and again made a large audience enthusiastic. Furtwangler conducted the Pathetique Symphony of Tschaikowsky in a manner which carried the audience away.

Volksopera Bankrupt

The three running opera houses of Berlin are looking on complacently while the fourth is passing away. The bankruptcy of the Volksopera has already been officially announced, but efforts are still being made to restore this artistically successful organization to life. At present the members of the company are singing with practically no remuneration, and the box office receipts are likewise almost nil. This seems to be useless self-sacrifice. Four opera houses are too many for Berlin; one must die.

ARTHUR KURSCHNER.

Xaver Scharwenka Dies In Berlin After Operation

Berlin, Dec. 8.—Xaver Scharwenka, composer and teacher, died here last night after an operation for appendicitis at the age of seventy-five. Scharwenka was well known in New York, where he taught music for ten years after completing a tour of the United States in 1891. Last spring he visited New York for the second time, and shortly after his return to Europe wrote his memoirs.

Scharwenka was born in Poland, but lived most of his life in Germany. He was trained at the Kullak Academy in Berlin and taught there for several years. In 1869 he made his concert debut, and for several years gave chamber concerts with Sauret and H. Grunfeld, besides leading orchestral concerts. He founded the Scharwenka Conservatory in Berlin in 1891, which he directed for ten years. After this he was head of the combined Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory and then (with Petzet) opened a school for advanced players.

His gifts as composer won him many honors and distinctions from the Austrian and Prussian courts, the Berlin Akademie, etc. His piano compositions included a sonata for the violin and one for the cello, and a symphony in C minor. Among a large number of his smaller piano compositions were five Polish dances. Also from his pen was the opera Mataswintha. His books included the Methodik des Klavierspiels and Handbucher der Musiklehre.

Puccini's Will Read

Viareggio, Dec. 11.—The estate of Giacomo Puccini is left to his widow and son, Antonio, according to the terms of the will opened today. It was written in 1923.

The widow is left a life interest in half the accumulated estate and in half of the copyright returns from Puccini's operas. She is also to live where she likes in any of the several homes owned by the composer, including the family residence at Lucca.

Report Mozart Work Discovered

Paris, Dec. 4.—Reports have come from Dresden that an entirely new opera of Mozart, Pretended Simplicity, has been found in the National Library there. This work, composed when Mozart was eleven years old, is said to be of exceptional beauty. It is rumored that the Vienna Opera may present it.

PIETRO CIMINI
CONDUCTOR
Chicago Civic Opera Company
5TH YEAR
PERSONAL ADDRESS: CONGRESS HOTEL, CHICAGO, ILL.

MAY PETERSON
VOCALION RECORDS
SOPRANO Formerly Opera Comique and Metropolitan Opera Company
Exclusive Management: HAENSEL & JONES, AEOLIAN HALL
NEW YORK CITY

TOLLEFSEN TRIO
acclaimed in Buffalo, N. Y.
National American Music Festival
"The Tollefsen Trio, a chamber music aggregation well known in the East, but hitherto unheard in this city, played a trio in D minor by Rubin Goldmark, and two movements each from trios by Arthur Foote and Charles W. Cadman. Carl H. Tollefsen, violin; Augusta Tollefsen, piano, and Paul Kefer, 'cello, constitute the trio, which made instantly favorable impression by the excellence of its playing. Agreeable tone, always well proportioned, and capable of boundless variety was ever present; as also unity of musical feeling and the sympathy which comes only from long associated practice. . . . The work of the Tollefsen Trio was received with enthusiasm and deservedly."
Mary M. Howard, Buffalo Morning Express, Oct. 7, 1924.
Available for Recitals and Concerts of Solo and Ensemble Music.
Special educational programs for schools, colleges and musical clubs.
Apply to
DANIEL MAYER
Aeolian Hall, New York
Steinway Piano
Victor Records
Welte-Mignon Records

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Sing Rediscovered Byrd Mass

Artists Repeat Recital Appearances; London Choral Society Presents Bach and Beethoven.

London.

The larger number of important concerts here in the week of 23-30 November took the form of "repeat" recitals by a long list of great artists: alphabetically, William Bachaus, Alfred Cortot, Amelita Galli-Curci, Frieda Hempel, Fritz Kreisler, and the Lener Quartet of Buda-Pesth Both Mmes. Galli-Curci and Hempel have announced extra concerts for the next few days, over and above the half-dozen or so appearances on their original London schedules.

A great deal of critical attention was given a performance of Byrd's "Great" service, first sung, after its romantic rediscovery, in Newcastle last year by the local Bach Choir under Dr. G. W. Whittaker. The same body was responsible for this London performance, given at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on 25th November. Parts from manuscripts came to light some years ago during a search into the record of Durham Cathedral conducted by Dr. E. H. Fellowes. After arduous researches into ecclesiastical archives in various parts of England, the whole of the service (or mass) was finally recovered and reconstructed, the Carnegie Fund trustees publishing it in their Tudor Church Music series. Thus the capstone was put on the rehabilitation of the composer William Byrd, who had hitherto been looked upon as a capable and interesting writer of conventional church music, of madrigals, and of virginal pieces. In the present service, the critics declare, by breaking away from the archepiscopal prescriptions on the form of religious music, Byrd made clear his genius under the most favorable of conditions.

Music Complex

The work is, of course, polyphonic in form, of great complexity (ten choral voices occurring at several points in the score), and free in rhythm as the bar-less music of the Tudor period tends to be. Under these circumstances, it was considered no small praise that their performance could be called "enlightened" by the Telegraph, the Sunday Times writer holding the Newcastle singers "signally fitted for their task" by the "passionless purity of their tone," the "felicitous negotiation of the serious technical difficulties," and the maintenance of pitch "throughout the long ordeal of unaccompanied singing." The Creed and the Magnificat are generally considered to be the most impressive of an altogether highly impressive work.

Another choral event—the concert of the London Choral Society under Dr. Arthur Fagge—brought the Beethoven Missa Solemnis and a Bach cantata to hearing; it was not, as a performance, so well received, Mr. Scholes writing in the Observer that the singing, "though straightforwardly competent, had no great force, precision, or charm."

Wilhelm Furtwangler made a third appearance for the season as a conductor, this time at a London Symphony concert. Again the critics stressed the "erratic" nature of his genius, especially in a Brahms Symphony, where the keynote, according to the Telegraph, was "brilliance" rather than "balance." The previous evening, Hamilton Harty concluded the visiting series of Halle concerts in a concert "which undoubtedly set a worthy crown upon the achievements of the orchestra in London."

Borovsky Returns

In three recitals, first appearances here for the season came up for critical discussion. Alexander Borovsky, the Russian pianist, who is known both here and in America, won general commendation for the "thoughtfulness" of interpretation which he superadded to "a fine and firmly disciplined technique." Louis Pecski is a violinst well thought of by the local public; the "ease and suavity" of his tone was again the principal subject of critical attention.

Anton Bilotti is a pianist new to this country. Among the lesser artists to win added laurels in repeat appearances were the pianists de Koczalski and Buhlig, the singers Joan Elwes and Anne Thursfield, and the London Trio.

Two items of musical interest occured out of the regular track of concertizing: the Diaghileff Ballet Russe started a four-weeks' run on the bill of the Coliseum, London's newest variety theatre; and the Chauve Souris commenced a season of like duration in a theatre of its own in the West End. Milhaud's Le Train Bleu got much the same sort of notice at the Coliseum as greeted it in Paris in the Spring; for the Chauve Souris there was nothing but commendation.

P. L.

Question Box

1. What Russian composer of note invented a color keyboard?
2. What Russian singer was by turns a juvenile opera singer, porter, hunter and dancer?
3. What are the Italian sixth, the French sixth and the German sixth?
4. What is the difference between an American organ and a harmonium?

Answers to Last Questions

1. Originally a cantata was a piece of music to be sung; a sonata, one to be played or "sounded" on an instrument.
2. Isaac Albeniz lived from 1861 to 1909. His teachers were Marmontel, Brassin, Jadassohn and Liszt.
3. A capriccio was originally an instrumental piece in free imitation, like a fantasia or ricercar. In modern usage it is a free and vivacious piece of music, often much like a scherzo.
4. E. J. de Coppet, patron of chamber music and founder of the Flonzaley Quartet, was an American banker.

Flesch Sails

Carl Flesch sailed December 10 for America on S. S. Deutschland. His season will be divided between his classes at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia and a concert tour.

Strauss-Schalk Feud Made Composer Quit

The resignation of Richard Strauss from his position as director of the Vienna Opera has aroused the city considerably more than the business crises and general strikes which have been frequent of late. Details in the story have gradually been pieced together in the newspapers, and it seems without a doubt now that the action of the director resulted from a breaking out of the old hostility between himself and his colleague Franz Schalk.

Immediately after the ending of the Vienna music festival Strauss left the city to attend the presentation of his Schlagobers in Breslau and Intermezzo in Dresden. In the latter city Strauss was visited by two representatives of the Austrian Ministry of Fine Arts, which is in charge of the State Opera, who presented him with summary of affairs at the Opera including arrangements for future administration.

According to this arrangement Schalk under certain conditions was to be independent director in the absence of Strauss. Strauss insisted that the old order be continued, by which in his absence (which lately has been amounting to seven months a year usually), he still would be absolute ruler of the organization, acting through his assistant Herr Turnau. As a result of his unwillingness to give in Richard Strauss handed in his resignation.

Strauss and Schalk, the latter reputed an excellent leader and a man of traditional and conservative leanings, have never worked too cordially together. Herr Schalk is well over sixty, but he shows his years more than does his colleague, and in the years of their association as co-directors of the Opera he never was content with the ascendancy which Strauss early acquired. Only recently he announced to the Ministry of Fine Arts that unless he were put in authority in the absence of Strauss he would accept an offer for a position with an operatic organization in Holland.

The newspapers have expressed varying opinions concerning the affair, although they most of all regret the departure of Strauss. His friends assert that, provided Schalk leaves, he is willing to resume his position, and remain in Vienna as much as nine months a year.

The condition of the Opera has not been pleasing to the Viennese music public for some time. Some have attributed its stagnation to the conservatism of Schalk, others to Strauss' insistence on the careful production of his own works to the exclusion of that of other modern composers.

PAUL STEFAN.

FLORA
GREENFIELD
SOPRANO
Management ERNEST HENKEL, 1451 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Bryant 3352 KNABE PIANO

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Swedish Ballets Return to Paris

Give Four Novelties First Evening; Vanni Marcoux Sings at Opera-Comique.

Paris.

Once more, this time for their fifth season, the Swedish Ballets have returned to Paris for an engagement in the Theatre des Champs-Elysees. On their first appearance in 1920 their original presentation of many modern works aroused much interest. This year they commenced their season with five works, all of them new, by French and Italian composers. Alfredo Casella and Vladimir Golschmann are again in charge of the musical direction, and the orchestra is the Pasdeloup organization.

There was considerable speculation before the first performance as to whether Darius Milhaud's Creation du Monde, which was first on the program, would arouse the hostility which it did last year at its premiere. This time the public followed the efforts of the negro Adam, Jean Borlin, and the negro Eve, Elsa Schwarck, calmly and almost indifferently. Even the cubistic curtain was received in silence.

The troupe seems this year rather smaller than it has been in the past, and the members appear not too skilled in the choreographic art, which nevertheless they aspire to revolutionize.

Among the novelties which they produced on the first night was Le Tournoi Singulier, based on a subject of Louise Labe, with music by Roland Manuel. The plot is an allegory whose scene is a golf links. The music was judged piquantly rhythmical with considerable harmonic interest and richness of orchestration.

Produce Oriental Novelty

The next novelty was Le Roseau, a piece based on a Persian legend, with music of Daniel Lazarus, and this was followed by Le Porcher, a choreographic representation of Hans Andersen's story, The Prince in Disguise. The modern version hardly displayed the simplicity and charm of the original, although the music, an adaptation of Swedish folk melodies, was agreeable in its orchestration by W. P. O. Ferroud.

The chief novelty of the entire program was La Jarre, an ironical fable by the Italian, Luigi Pirandello, with music by Alfredo Casella. The plot is concerned with the mending of an immense broken jar, which the mender puts together from the inside. The job complete, he finds himself imprisoned, and the jar must be broken to release him.

The consensus was that the music displayed a splendid originality, pure melody, and a passion characteristic of the folk music of southern Italy. The composer was called several times before the curtain to acknowledge the applause of the audience. The Swedish dancers did not quite fill the bill: they looked too heavy for Italians.

Vanni Marcoux at Opera-Comique

Vanni Marcoux, basso, made the first of his contracted twenty appearances of the season with the Paris Opera-Comique in a revival of Lorenzaccio, in which he sang at its first performance by the same company in 1920. As always, the audience was carried away by M. Marcoux's histrionic ability, which puts over his smaller vocal talent persuasively.

In the role of Cardinal Cibo the baritone Albers was at his best both histrionically and vocally. M. Lapelletrie as Alexander de Medicio displayed an admirable tenor voice which was well adapted to his role.

Mlle. Sibille sang the leading feminine role, which in the premiere was sung by Hilda Roosevelt. Mlle. Sibille possesses a very sweet voice, good schooling, and sufficient dramatic temperament to give the part its full due.

Fernand Masson conducted, and he was praised for the great spirit with which he led.

Revival of Don Quichotte

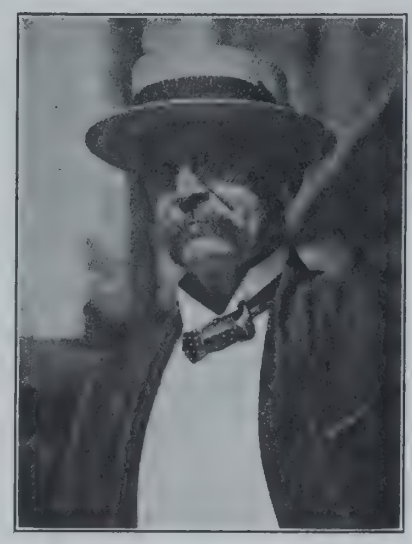
The revival of Massenet's Don Quichotte was also chosen as a vehicle for the appearance of Vanni Marcoux before he leaves for foreign countries for a number of appearances in opera. In this performance he was at his best, and he was ably seconded by the tenor, M. Allard, who is also appearing at the Opera-Comique in a number of guest performances.

Lucy Arbell, who sang Dulcinea, is at present one of the most popular of the sopranos in the roster of the company, and she displayed again the qualities which have created that popularity.

M. Frigara conducted the score with understanding and directed both singers and orchestra without the slightest hitch.

The Opera-Comique has just suffered a loss in the enforced retirement of Lucien Muratore, French tenor. He contracted to appear in twelve performances, but has been compelled by ill health to cancel his engagement.

On its last performance at the Grand Opera, Wagner's Valkyries was being presented there for its 280th time. This was the first German work produced at the Opera after the war, and at that time its reception was such that there was no use for the strong police guard which had been put in the house to handle any disturbances which might arise from patriotic motives.



XAVER SCHARWENKA
Composer and Teacher, Who Died in Berlin Last Week at the Age of Seventy-five.

New Wagnerian Tenor

This last performance had the particular interest of introducing a new Wagnerian tenor, M. Perret. He displayed a powerful voice of considerable clarity and sweetness of tone in the upper registers. In the middle and lower ranges his voice was not well enough developed to do justice to the difficult part, so that his singing was very irregular. For a first attempt at a Wagnerian part this artist did very well. Dramatically, too, he acquitted himself well, although he needs further study in this department too.

The Siegelinde who sang opposite M. Perret as Siegmund was Mlle, Bonavia. Vocally she showed many shortcomings, for her voice was too small for the Wagner score, and besides she did not seem too sure of her part at times. Her voice showed sweet tone in the middle registers, although she was nervous.

The Hunding of Gresse and the Brunnhilde of Mlle. Demougeot were much praised and applauded. The latter sang her role unusually well, and her last scene with Wotan was unusually moving. M. Delmas was Wotan, a role which he has sung at the Opera ever since the premiere there of this Wagner work. His delineation of the character was more fatherly and heartfelt than is usual, and in his singing he has some very fine moments, noticeably in the Farewell. Mme. Courso sang Fricka.

The Valkyries sang and moved about the stage impressively, but the orchestra was disappointing. The mis-en-scene, despite its age, shows beauty still, but the costumes of the leading artists were much too modern in style.

K. H. STOTTNER.

Gabrilowitsch With Orchestra

At the concert of the Philharmonic Society in Carnegie Hall on Saturday, Willem van Hoogstraten presented a program of familiar and popular compositions. The feature of the occasion was the appearance of Ossip Gabrilowitsch as soloist. Mr. Gabrilowitsch played the Mozart Concerto in D minor. According to the reviewer of the Sun, Mr. Gabrilowitsch "played a delightful and sparkling interpretation of the concerto and enjoyed the benefit of a spirited accompaniment from the orchestra."

Hempel Sings in Scotland

Edinburgh, Dec. 7.—Following her appearances in London and in Liverpool, Frieda Hempel has just appeared in this city and in Dundee. Miss Hempel closes her tour of thirty concerts in the British Isles on December 16.

RHYS MORGAN
THE WELSH TENOR
Management: ROGER DE BRUYN, 1540 Broadway, N. Y. C.
DR. J. O. HOWELLS, Associate

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals. After January, 1925
Brunswick Records
Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York
Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

The Center for Modern Music
J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

THE AMERICAN ACADEMY of Teachers of Singing, at a recent meeting, elected to membership Lino Mattioli, of the College of Music of Cincinnati. This organization, of which Herbert Witherspoon is president, has a membership of but forty teachers. Mr. Mattioli is the only member from his section of the country.

Frank Parker, baritone, of the Utica Conservatory of Music at Utica, N. Y., was heard in recital at the Watertown (N. Y.) Morning Musicales recently. Mr. Parker was accompanied by Mrs. F. P. Stoddard. Among others, Mr. Parker sang songs by Goatley, Scarlatti, Mozart, Schumann. Hermann, Carpenter, Taylor, Hageman, and O'Hara.

The feature of the recently established Institute of Musical Arts in Chicago, of which Alexander Nakutin is founder and director, is the production of opera, or acts from operas, at the student concerts in the studio. Mr. Nakutin came from Russia some twelve years ago to Chicago, where he has devoted himself to teaching. In the founding of the Institute he has emphasized training voices for the operatic stage.

Last Thursday marked the fourth birthday anniversary of the Cleveland Institute of Music, and the students celebrated with a dance and reception on the following Saturday evening. Crawford Wright, chairman of the student entertainment committee, was in charge of arrangements for the affair.

Beryl Rubinstein, head of the piano department at the Institute, was kept busy during the anniversary week of the school. The evening of December 8 he played in Elyria under the auspices of the Musical Arts Society of that city. He was also soloist at the third of the subscription recitals last Thursday. The next evening he played at the regular monthly faculty recital at the Institute in a program of Bach, Chopin, Scriabin, Debussy, and Liszt.

Those enrolled in the normal course at the Institute are being given an opportunity to combine theoretical knowledge with practical experience, at the same time gaining their practice teaching credits. In co-operation with the music school, the board of education permits children from the grade schools in the immediate vicinity to attend the Institute for free lessons in piano. Students taking teachers' courses give the lessons under the direction of a member of the piano faculty.

Grade school teachers and music supervisors select children with no previous musical training but a natural aptitude, and send them in groups of four for class lessons on Tuesday and Friday afternoons. At present twenty grammar school children are enrolled in the classes. All twenty are studying piano. It is hoped to increase the number of children later and to teach other instruments.

Miss Ruth Edwards and Miss Dorothy Price of the piano faculty are directing the group of embryo teachers at present. The student teachers are Gertrude Englander, Theresa Hunter, Jean Martin, all assistant teachers of the school staff; and Eileen Brodie, Mathilda Rubin, Marie Lapick, Elizabeth Kumin, Gussie Berkowitz, and Irma Hallgren.

During Christmas week, beginning December 26 and extending five days, Frederick Schlieder will conduct in his New York studio an intensive course (ten hours) embracing Melodic Creation, and Harmonic Technic. The course, although of short duration, is designed to give the essential principles of these elements and to furnish the basis for protracted practice, not only for self-culture, but for immediate use in elementary teaching.

For three weeks in November, E. Robert Schmitz was guest teacher of piano at the MacPhail School of Music in Minneapolis. In addition to giving private lessons, Mr. Schmitz held classes in interpretation, and appeared in three lecture recitals. He also was soloist with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra during his visit.

Frederick Hahn, president of the Zeckwer-Hahn Musical Academy of Philadelphia, started teaching violin classes at the Braun School of Music last month.

WILLIAM S. BRADY
New York Teacher of Singing Whose Winter Activities Are Again at Their Height.

Ernst Bacon, recently returned from three years study and concert work in Vienna and other European cities, has accepted a place on the faculty of the Kindred Arts School of Chicago. Mr. Bacon appeared in recital last Thursday at the Fine Arts Recital Hall.

The Chicago Piano College gave a faculty recital at Kimball Hall December 4. Another recital at the college studios was given by Ruth Chalstrom, pupil of Harmon H. Watt. Beethoven, Poldini, Liszt, Grieg, Paderewski, and Moszkowski made up the program.

The Seasons of Haydn has been chosen as the oratorio for the Institute Chorus to work on this year. The chorus was started two years ago by Mr. Bloch. John Pierce, the new head of the voice department at the Institute, has taken over the work of training the chorus this year. In time it is hoped that other similar choral societies will be developed throughout the city for an annual group chorus recital of from 2,000 to 3,000 voices.

A series of master classes conducted by Moriz Rosenthal, pianist, have been arranged by Glenn Dillard Gunn of Chicago. Mr. Rosenthal who, at present, is on tour, has announced that he will hold the classes the week of January 12, 1925. A group of Chicagoans have donated scholarships for these master classes which will be awarded in a final competition. The classes, at which Mr. Rosenthal will teach young artists and accept as listeners those who are interested to witness the performances and hear his criticisms and illustration, will be held at the Lake Shore Drive recital hall, Chicago.

A Thanksgiving recital was given November 24 by the Braun School of Music, Pottsville, Pennsylvania, in the High School Auditorium. It was an exposition taken from the Progressive Series of Piano Lessons by the Piano Department, assisted by the Violin and Expression Departments.

The Tamaqua Branch of the Braun School of Music gave a faculty recital at St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church in Tamaqua, Pennsylvania, December 2. Those who participated in the concert were: Valeda Brode, pianist; Mrs. P. Ray Meikrantz, soprano; G. Francis Pyle, organist; Verna Frantz, pianist; Marion Cassel, reader; and Walter Pugh, violinist.

The first issue of the Pitch Pipe, the official organ of the Ithaca Institution of Public School Music, associated with the Ithaca Conservatory of Music of Ithaca, N. Y., has recently been published. Albert Edmund Brown, editor, of the Conservatory, announced in the leading editorial that the magazine, which will be issued six times a year, is published "in the interests of music in the Public Schools in America . . . the endeavor to build up, by teachers of wide experience and reputation and through the Ithaca Methods Courses, a greater degree of efficiency and success in the ranks of the Supervisors of Music in America."

Among the articles appearing in the first number are: The Physiological Versus the Psychological in the Art of Song; the Democratization of Music by Edward Amherst Ott; Efficiency in Music Teaching; and The Making of a Recital Program.

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

SAMOILOFF
BEL CANTO STUDIOS
309 W. 85th St. Tel.: Schuyler 6952 New York

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

DUDLEY BUCK
Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City
Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director
120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application
Address Dept. V

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

THE MUSIC of The Fantastic Toyshop, the one act ballet of G. Rossini, has just been arranged as a suite for piano by Ottorino Respighi, Italian composer, and is being issued by J. & W. Chester, London.

The suite consists of eight parts. The Overture, a brisk staccato march, is followed by a graceful Mazurka, an Andantino, a Tarantelle, Danse Cosaque, Valse Lente, Allegretto, and Can Can. The suite in a small way suggests by its melodiousness and varied pace and mood Tschaikowsky's Nutcracker Suite. It has been skillfully arranged by Respighi, and makes a pleasing piano number of not too great difficulty. Of course, the music retains its possibilities for interpretation by the dance.

The Oliver Ditson Company adds continually to its choral repertory. Prayer of Thanksgiving, by E. Kremser, has been arranged in its most recent issue for a three part chorus of women's voices, the editing having been in the hands of N. Clifford Page. G. A. Grant-Schaefer's Mass in F is a composition of considerable dimensions, having in full the Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei. There are required solos in all ranges in addition to the chorus of mixed voices. The accompaniment is for organ.

A number of biblical anthems for minister and choir by William Arms Fisher are being published by Ditson also. They include Because I Live, Ye Shall Live Also (with parts for solos of soprano, tenor, and bass); Let Us Worship (solos for soprano, alto, tenor, and bass); Unto Us a Child Is Born (solos for soprano, alto, tenor, and bass); and God Is Love (solos for sopranos, tenor, and bass).

Hartford Club Opens Season

Hartford, Dec. 6.—The Choral Club of Hartford opened its eighteenth season last night with a concert, conducted by Ralph L. Baldwin. The Club was assisted by Frances Newsom, soprano, and by Marshall Seeley, pianist.

The Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra toured last month in Ohio and Indiana. This photograph, taken en route, shows, from left to right, Emil Heermann, concertmaster; Henry Jenkel, principal double bass; Fritz Reiner, conductor, and Jessie W. Darby, manager.

Chicago Opera Presents First Carmen of Season

Chicago, Dec. 4.—Mary Garden appeared in Carmen last night with the Chicago Civic Opera Company for the first time this season. Others in the cast were Fernand Ansseau, Douglas Stanbury, Edouard Cotreuil, Alice d'Hermanoy, Gladys Swarthout, Giacomo Rimini, Mary McCormic, Desire Defrere, Jose Mojica, and Eugenio Correnti. Giorgio Polacco conducted in a way which Maurice Rosenfeld of the News found "colorful and elegant."

In general the reviewers found Miss Garden her usual excellent Carmen. In addition to her "fiery" acting, Glenn Dillard Gunn thought her singing above the usual standard. Mr. Rosenfeld agreed that she was in particularly good voice, and there was a novelty in her conception of the role which pleased him. On the other hand Edward Moore of the Tribune, while admitting that her performance was "piquant and energetic," considered that it was not up to her best work.

Mr. Ansseau's Jose was liked by all the writers. Exemplary of their opinion of his work was Mr. Rosenfeld's remark: "He was in the best form vocally that we have heard in him so far. His voice rang out with great fervor and warmth." Mr. Rimini "made a brilliant figure as Escamillo," wrote Mr. Gunn, and Mr. Rosenfeld was impressed with his vocal rendition of the part.

According to Mr. Gunn, Miss McCormic sang the part of Micaela, especially in the first act, "excellently." Other commentators commended her singing, although they thought her too elaborately costumed for the part. Of Miss Swarthout, Mr. Moore asserted that her performance was so well done as to warrant a better part for her in the near future. Miss d'Hermanoy's singing received laudatory comment, as well.

Give Puccini Concert

The concert arranged as a tribute to the memory of Giacomo Puccini, which was held at the Metropolitan Opera House the evening of December 6, drew a capacity audience. Messrs. Serafin, Papi and Bamboschek shared in conducting orchestra and ensemble numbers, and the soloists were Maria Jeritza, Lucrezia Bori, Frances Alda, Rosa Ponselle, Frances Peralta, Marion Telva and Louise Hunter, and Messrs. Gigli, Chamlee, de Luca, Fleta, Scotti, Danise and Martinelli.

General Manager Gatti-Casazza announced that, with the permission of Chairman Otto H. Kahn, of the Opera Board, the Metropolitan was sending to Italy out of the proceeds of the concert 137,000 lire, to be divided in three gifts—100,000 to the Verdi Home for Aged Musicians, 25,000 to the Mayoralty of Lucca, Puccini's native city, and 12,000 lire to be held for disposal by a committee yet to be organized for the erecting of a suitable monument to the composer.

WANDA LANDOWSKA'S Music of the Past, published by Alfred A. Knopf, New York, is a book with a grievance. Mme. Landowska objects to the submergence of the old music. She quotes many writers on music in many periods to show the tendency to regard music as an art whose development has always been in progress and which is considered as reaching its culmination only in the present (the exact date of that "present" depending upon when the particular writer lived). Mme. Landowska's reply is characteristic: "Music is not a schoolgirl who passes sedately from one class to another and who, in our day only, has just obtained her diploma."

The quotation catches in a line the spirit of Music of the Past. It is not a book with a single thesis, except the thesis in general that old music is good. It converses, it rambles, it quotes, it stabs, it interests. There is much that can be controverted in it, including the original grievance quoted above. It may just as well be said that writers of music are too old-fashioned, have too little respect for what is written in their day. Many quotations could be used to prove that the present has too little respect for itself, too much adoration of the past.

Although she writes of music of the past, however, Mme. Landowska refers mostly to the old classical music, the music of composers before Beethoven and even Mozart, and in respect to them her criticism of the present day attitude is well grounded.

From time to time Mme. Landowska seems to be tilting at windmills, but her battles are always interesting and usually informing. She is fitted to write of old music for that is her field, and she has done her task with a zest and vivacity that are rarely to be found in erudite studies of what is old.

Yale Glee Club Appears

Sea chanties, Christmas songs and negro spirituals were heard at the concert of the Yale Glee Club at Town Hall the evening of December 6.

MUSIC & LETTERS

Founded 1920.

"THE BRITISH MUSICAL QUARTERLY"

100 PAGES. ANNUAL POSTAL SUBSCRIPTION, 20/-

CONTENTS: JANUARY, 1925. No. 1, VOL. VI.

Musical Parlance in English Literature—III.....W. Wright Roberts
Pianoforte Music.....L. Borwick
Cristobal Morales.....J. B. Trend
The Claims of Tonic Sol-fa—II.....W. G. Whittaker
Rise and Fall of the Hymn-Tune.....G. Dearmer
Canntaireachd.....J. P. Grant
Recent Wagner Criticism.....G. A. Hight
Creed and Custom.....A. E. Brent-Smith
A First Performance.....C. Forsyth
Schubert's Poets.....H. G. Fiedler
Reviews of Books: Musical Illustrations

The October, 1924, number contains a complete index to the first 20 numbers (5 vols.)
A few copies are still obtainable at 5s. 3d. post free

OFFICES: 22, ESSEX STREET, LONDON, ENG., W.C.2

GEORGE LIEBLING

Pupil of Liszt

"All of his readings were marked by penetrating insight, poetic depth and originality of conception. . . . There was no moment throughout his program during which he lost the deep attention of his enthusiastic auditors. . . . . He did some exquisite tonal painting in Schumann's Fantasy, and again in Chopin's compositions there were passages exemplifying beautiful piano playing, better than which no one has need of hearing."

—New York Sun, November 20, 1924.

Tour now booking under the exclusive management of

M. H. HANSON, 437 Fifth Avenue, New York City

KNABE PIANO

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Continue New York Music Week Contests

Association in Drive for Greater Support; Competitions Start Next February.

The music contest movement which was launched in New York a year ago under the auspices of the New York Music Week Association is being continued this year. The contests for the coming season are scheduled to open during the first week of February, and they will be continued through March and April, during which time eliminations will be made for the final interborough contests, which will take place next Music Week, beginning May 3. The New York Music Week Association, at 299 Madison avenue, of which Isabel Louden is director, is supplying lists of test pieces to applicants.

The music contest movement was begun in New York last year when a local committee was established in each of forty-eight districts into which the city has been divided, and local contests were arranged for amateur musicians and music organizations. A syllabus, compiled by a committee of well known professional musicians, was provided by the association.

District contestants who received 75 per cent for their test performances were awarded a bronze medal, and became eligible to enter the borough contests. Winners this time of 85 per cent and a silver medal were entitled to take part at the final interborough contest.

So large a list of competitors appeared before the judges for the final awards the last day of Music Week that the performance lasted from two in the afternoon until eight o'clock. Public and parochial school choruses, high school orchestras and church choirs competed at Aeolian Hall. Those who achieved grades of over 90 per cent were awarded silver cups.

Interest roused in the several communities and among musicians who came in direct contact with the work was reflected in the messages of commendation and inquiry that came from all over the country.

A wide-spread effort is now being made to acquaint the public with what has been done, and to enlist greater financial assistance so that a more complete program may be followed, taking care of the additions that wider knowledge of the movement will inevitably bring to the list of contestants. These contributions may be made outright or in the form of annual memberships to the association.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld

RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street

THOMAS MEIGHAN in

"TONGUES OF FLAME"

RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA

RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street

SECOND WEEK ON BROADWAY

"North of 36"

FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA

Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

JOHN INGRAM

Associate Conductor of the Mark Strand Theatre Orchestra, Who Will Be Guest Leader of the National Civic Opera of Montreal, Beginning December 29.

Papi Conducts First Marta at Metropolitan

A special performance of Marta was given at the Metropolitan Opera House the afternoon of December 5. Frances Alda sang in the title role, Kathleen Howard took the part of Nancy, Beniamino Gigli was Lionci, Adamo Didur sang Plunkett, and Malatesta impersonated Sir Tristan. Gennaro Papi conducted what the reviewers characterized as "a lively performance." He, with the orchestra, received warm applause after the overture in the first act, and was obliged to come before the curtain.

The cast, which was substantially the same as last year, was enthusiastically received, and, according to press comment, the singers deserved praise. Mme. Alda received the usual plaudits attendant upon her singing of The Last Rose of Summer, and Mr. Gigli, in the words of the Sun commentator, "was perfection." The entire cast were responsible for what this reviewer called "a vivacious" performance. The Times writer called it of "refreshing charm."

Young Pianist Gives Recital

Rose Solomon, sixteen-year-old pianist, who had played in New York before, gave a recital in Town Hall on December 7. She offered two movements of Saint-Saens' G minor Concerto, Boris Feibish at the second piano; Beethoven's Appassionata Sonata; and other numbers, including Powell's Rhapsodie Negre for two pianos. The Sun reviewer thought her not yet ready for public performance, but a serious player with "a musical piano touch."

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door

World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre

Edward Bowes, Managing Director

"THE SNOB"

With John Gilbert, Norma Shearer and Conrad Nagel and Phyllis Haver

PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL

Capitol Grand Orchestra

Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

Chattanooga insists on being musically musical. Apart from giving a season by the Chicago Opera Company this year that city has presented the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, and has some other attractions worthy of attention. It is publishing a four-page paper, called The Memorial Press, which spreads the good tidings.

* * *

Tait, of the Tait Brothers firm, which operates so extensively in Australia and managed the recent Melba Opera Company season, departed Saturday for his London office. He had spent several weeks in this country.

* * *

The smiling countenance of Manager Frank Healy, the San Francisco manager and director of the Roman Singers, was seen about New York lately.

* * *

Another San Franciscan, also in the managerial field, who has just reached New York is Alice Seckels. Her visit has to do with the proposed Master School of Music and Arts of California, which Mrs. Alice Campbell McFarlane is about to endow and of which Lazar S. Samoiloff is to be director.

* * *

Poor Carlos Sedano! He gave his second New York recital on a rainy night which, also, was hot and humid. And the strings of his violin would not stay put. The chief annoyance was that each string refused to be affected similarly to each of the three others.

* * *

Have you received your Juilliard Musical Foundation music school fellowship yet?

* * *

Whisperings from Chicago hint that all is not serene within the rank and file of that organization. Well, that is no new situation. The Windy City would be surprised if its opera machine were to become a frictionless affair.

* * *

William Cloudman, principal business associate of M. H. Hanson, is convalescing from a long illness and will return to his post this week.

* * *

Lines-o'-Newser was presented last week with a letter of introduction by a young person who had carried it about for four years. Why hurry?

* * *

Cleveland music interests and the Metropolitan Opera Company have agreed on terms for a second season of opera for next spring. It will probably prove a fixture.

* * *

George Engles was seen working cross-street concerts in New York's Forty-second street a few days ago. He had the New York Symphony at one end of the street, and just a block westwards two other concerts—one by Adela Verne, the other, a few hours later, given in an auditorium directly opposite by the Barrere Symphony.

* * *

We are looking for an announcement from Nahan Franko telling about an orchestra he intends to organize and plans he has for it.

Manager William E. Walter, of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, took the Wolverine train into New York a few days ago and departed the same way. Billy is smiling . . . because his orchestra is going great guns.

* * *

When Efrem Zimbalist returns shortly from his lengthy Australian tournee he will listen to the violin playing of his small son. He has learned to emulate his father since the latter sailed away last summer.

* * *

The holiday homecomings of other artists are also in order. John McCormack got in on Saturday, which was forunate since he was scheduled for a concert in the Manhattan Opera House the following day.

* * *

Lines-o'-Newser journeyed to the national capital last Saturday, the guest of John Philip Sousa, for the Gridiron dinner. J. P. may be seventy in years, but he sets one a pace that calls for youthful energy to keep up with him.

* * *

If you see a bustling man scurrying through New York streets it will be Walter Fritschey, the Kansas City manager. He is in town with Mrs. Fritschey.

* * *

Yes—and Roland Witte and his partner, Charles F. Horner—have been here to remind New York that Kansas City is one of our most important music centers.

* * *

If all the plans now formulating for summer opera materialize, the United States will establish, in 1925, a new record.

* * *

In the lobby of the Commodore Hotel these days it is not hard to find Walter Fritschey of Kansas City, A. H. Handley of Boston, Margaret Rice of Milwaukee, W. R. Frizelle of Dayton, T. Arthur Smith of Washington, May Beegle of Pittsburgh, Marion de Forrest of Buffalo, Mrs. Edith Resch of San Antonio, Lois Steers of Portland, Mrs. Wilson Green of Washington, Ben Franklin of Albany, Mary Lindsay Oliver of the Tri-Cities and New York, Rita McDonald of Los Angeles, William Albough of Baltimore, Adella Prentiss Hughes of Cleveland, and Mrs. J. W. Darby of Cincinnati. They are in New York to attend the Managers' Convention which is being held at this hotel. The convention opened yesterday morning at ten o'clock and will close this afternoon.

* * *

After listening to a composition "for piano with strings" by Henry Cowell—he of the "tone clusters"—a few nights ago at the Society for Ethical Culture, Lines-o'-Newser concludes that he would prefer it played on a piano without strings.

* * *

Stefi Geyer, young Swiss violinist, who gave her first recital in New York some weeks ago, was heard again at Town Hall last Thursday evening.

MUD

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

A Message in Song
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 10 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

Dusolina Giannini will sing the soprano roles in the fourth act of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Sadko and the first act of Chabrier's Briseis, which will be given concert presentation by the Schola Cantorum in New York at Carnegie Hall, December 30.

Bulletins of News

Milan, Dec. 21.—The world premiere of Giordano's four act opera, La Cena delle Beffe (The Jest) took place last night at La Scala. Hipolito Lazaro and Carmen Melis had the leading roles, and Arturo Toscanini was the conductor. The book of the opera is by Sem Benelli, author of the drama of the same name.

The revival of Verdi's Falstaff at the New York Metropolitan Opera will take place on the evening of January 2, according to an announcement of General Manager Gatti Casazza. Tullio Serafin will conduct, and the singers will be Antonio Scotti in the title role; Lucrezia Bori will sing the part of Alice; Frances Alda that of Nanette; Marion Telva, Quickly; Beniamino Gigli, Fenton; Adamo Didur, Pistola; and Angelo Bada, Dr. Cajus.

Kansas City, Dec. 20.—Arnold Volpe has just resigned his position as Music Director of the Kansas City Conservatory of Music. The resignation will take effect June, 1925.

Due to the illness of Giovanni Martinelli, Aida, instead of La Juive, will be sung at the Metropolitan on Christmas night. Mr. Martinelli is not seriously ill, but is under observation for intestinal trouble. Mario Chamlee will replace Miguel Fleta in Thursday's matinee, Tosca, while Mr. Fleta, together with Rosa Ponselle, Jeanne Gordon, Guiseppe de Luca, and Leon Rothier, will appear in Aida that evening.

The Wolfsohn Musical Bureau has made arrangements to expand its activities through its Chicago office. Ward French and Mrs. Virginia French have been engaged to take charge of that branch of Wolfsohn affairs; and they will make their headquarters in the present Wolfsohn offices, in Orchestra Hall.

Plans provide for supplying the Middle West with artists residing in Chicago, a list of which will be made known in due course. Wolfsohn also announces, through its president, John Trevor Adams, that it is in a position to furnish a course of concerts in any community (large or small) without requiring any guarantee.

Holiday Greetings

TO EACH of its acquaintances—casual as well as close—The Musical Digest extends a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. Nineteen-twenty-four is nearing its close; Nineteen-twenty-five is approaching.

Most people have much to be grateful for. The world is moving towards an attitude of peace. Material conditions are improving; the future holds much for all who wish to take advantage of the opportunities it will bring.

"Ring out the old, ring in the new." . . . Constructiveness may well be taken as a slogan for Nineteen-twenty-five. And there is no better time to begin it than now—as Christmas hovers.

Chaliapin Upsets Soviet and Managers

A cablegram from Paris, published Sunday in the New York Times, stated that in Russian circles in the French city the Soviet is furious against Feodor Chaliapin because that singer has earned large sums of money in the United States (as revealed by the published income-tax statement showing he paid the U. S. Government $32,000 on his 1923 earnings) and has not yet returned to Russia.

Judging from some of the comments made during the recent New York meeting of the National Concert Managers' Association the Soviet isn't alone in its attitude towards Chaliapin. For according to accounts he seems so anxious to annex his fee—which swings around the $3,500 and $4,000 mark—that he does not always consider the expressed wishes of those who engage him.

In Washington, D. C., to be specific, he was engaged by Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene to appear in concert. And he was nominated by the Chicago Civic Opera Company to appear there in one of the performances this winter—also to be managed by Mrs. Greene. Yet an offer from another operatic aggregation to appear in the national capital was accepted by Chaliapin.

His manager, S. Hurok, is reported to have disavowed responsibility in the matter, stating that Chaliapin had signed the contract personally. It is feared that if Chaliapin appears again in Washington before he sings with the Chicago forces he may not prove as strong a drawing card with the Windy City company. . . . Since it will mark his third appearance there in a relatively brief time.

Local Managers Favor A Closer Co-operation With Gotham Bureaus

That Feeling Reflected During Recent National Concert Managers Sessions.

SUGGEST ARBITRATION

A desire to bring about a closer and more harmonious co-operation between local concert managements (individuals and organizations) and the New York wholesale bureaus was expressed during the mid-winter sessions of the National Concert Managers' Association, held a week ago last Monday and Tuesday in the Commodore Hotel, New York.

While there was not as large an attendance as has been recorded at other similar gatherings, officers and other members of the association expressed the belief that benefits had come through the meeting.

Although no specific plans have been drawn looking toward the more complete getting together of the most progressive and constructive local and wholesale managements, the wish to promote such a situation was strongly expressed. A feeling of general optimism was radiated when the meeting closed.

As at other sessions held by the Association there was much informal talk concerning what the individual members present did and did not do with respect to certain matters in their business. It consisted largely of an interchange of ideas. There also were discussed matters which have aroused the disastisfaction of a number who were present . . . matters which neither the president nor the secretary wished to comment on for publication.

Loudon Charlton, representing the New York Music Managers' Association, delivered the address of welcome. Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, of Washington, D. C., head of the National Concert Managers Association responded; and thereafter she occupied the chair, with Secretary Miss Margaret Rice, of Milwaukee, at her right hand.

Mr. Charles L. Wagner suggested for consideration in place of the equity contract, which has been a matter of dispute between the two associations for so long, a method of arbitration. Mr. Wagner suggested that an arbitration board be formed—whenever a contract between him and a local management shall become necessary to adjudicate—to consist of three members: one nominated by him, one by the local manager, and one chosen by those two. He offered to present his plan at the next meeting of the New York Managers' Association for consideration by all members of that body.

(Continued on page 6.)

Pouishnoff Makes Boston Debut

Reviewers Praise New Russian Pianist; Borovsky in First Appearance with Boston Symphony.

Boston, Dec. 15.—Leff Pouishnoff, Russian pianist, made his Boston debut Friday evening. His reception by the reviewers was as enthusiastic as that accorded him by his audience. H. T. P. in the Transcript found Mr. Pouishnoff "an altogether admirable, a persistently pleasurable pianist. His technical skill is effortless and usually undisplayed His tone is crystalline, yet never hard or dry. With adept pedalling to aid, it sustains melody. From the pianist's and the composer's fancy, it takes color; while at their bidding it mounts or descends the degrees of power. Exceedingly sensitive and skillful is Mr. Pouishnoff, when he would lead, unfold and cumulate songful measures; when he would both maintain line and festoon ornament; when fine-spun transition or graceful modulation invites him. Above all, he is a master of rhythm." proved by a number that would have served as a contrast to the other pieces.

This chronicler also admired the pianist's personality, and said that "like to Mr. Kreisler or Mr. Paderewski seems Mr. Pouishnoff—the virtuoso and musician who is also cultivated man of the world." Summing up his impressions of the artist, H. T. P. wrote: "In fine, a mind, a spirit, a musician and a pianist."

Mr. Pouishnoff's program was made up entirely of Russian compositions and R. R. G. of the Herald, although he enthused over his playing, felt that his program would have been im-

"He has command of a highly individual tone," he wrote, "for the most part singularly cool and crisp, but capable of a wide variety, very strong without a trace of hardness, and in singing phrases very sweet. His rhythm is delightful. He plays as if every note has for him its meaning, consequently he is never dull."

Another new Russian pianist, Alexander Borovsky made his Boston debut last Friday afternoon as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. He played the Tschaikowsky Concerto in B flat minor.

Warren Storey Smith reported in the Post that the effect of the opening of the well known concerto was "electrical." The best parts of the work, to quote Philip Hale in the Herald, were "brought out in full strength by pianist and orchestra." According to the reviewer in the Transcript, Mr. Borovsky displayed a tone which was "bright, clear, crisp and dry—champagne-like. He answered to rhythm sustained or broken; in pace he was no less elastic."

In the suite of old airs and dances. arranged by Respighi, the first movement was played for the first time at a Symphony concert. Mr. Hale found the performance so delightful as to wonder why previously this movement had been omitted. Other reviewers agreed and Mr. Smith found the interpretation by Mr. Koussevitzky "exquisite." Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel was played as seldom before, and the Globe commentator said it was one of "the greatest dramatic and musical achievments of Koussevitzky here."

Several prominent Boston women have organized a Children's Concerts Committee which has engaged fifty members of the Symphony Orchestra to give five concerts for children in Jordan Hall on Saturday mornings, beginning January 10. Ernest Schelling will act as conductor and spokesman at these concerts.

The Harvard Glee Club, Archibald T. Davison conductor, gave its first Boston concert of the season in Symphony Hall December 12, with Ossip Gabrilowitsch assisting. "Unanimity and flexibility" were discovered in their singing by the Christian Science Monitor writer, who, however, found the tonal quality below last year's standard. On the other hand, the Herald admired the quality of tone, but thought that the "warmth of expression, freshness of tone, vitality," suffered in consequence. The concert afforded the audience much enjoyment, and Mr. Gabrilowitsch received an enthusiastic reception.

A contralto, Grace Leslie, accompanied by Everett Titcomb, pianist, and Verne Powell, flute player, was heard in Jordan Hall last Tuesday. Mr. Hale considered Mrs. Leslie an "interesting singer" with a voice of fine quality with phrases in the upper register that "were a joy if only for their sheer beauty of sound." According to the Transcript writer, her voice is a "rich, velvety contralto, of considerable range, with exquisitely formed high notes." In the words of the Monitor reviewer, "she is musical and intelligently understands her songs." These writers were unanimous in praising the interest and unconventionality of her program.

A sixteen year old pianist, Catherine Carver, was also heard here recently. Her technique, wrote the Transcript reviewer, "is large, sometimes surprisingly so, and what is more, decidedly smooth and even. Her tone is of good quality, sings well the song of many a lyric passage." Poise, discernment, and immaturity were found in her work by this writer. E. G. in the Herald thought Miss Carver's technique amazing for one so young. According to this commentator, she played "with the sentiment of a young girl, meticulously avoiding excesses . . . yet she has a graceful manner, a suppleness of arm and of wrist, a sensitive touch."

Another pianist heard during the week in recital was Fela Rybier. In the opinion of Z. B. F. of the Monitor, Mrs. Rybier's playing shows "strong rhythmic feeling, a carefully drawn line in phrasing, good melodic tone and an excellent range of color." In Bach's Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, Mrs. Rybier, to quote the Transcript, "evinced a good sense of rhythm, a subtle feeling for contrast, and a facile technique."

Denoe Leedy, pianist, gave a recital. To quote the Transcript, "Mr. Leedy's technique appears to be equal to all demands that can be made upon it; his musicianship and intelligence, if not his emotional make-up, are in many respects a perfect match for such technique." To the writer in the Monitor the pianist "seems to court the 'mezza voce' of his instrument—the melody which gleams softly from a vaporous background."

Recital in Manitowoc

Manitowoc, Dec. 11.—The Music League of Manitowoc, Wisconsin, gave its seventh program at the Mikadow Theatre on December 9. The artists were Margaret Erbe, pianist, Gertrude Erbe, soprano and Robert Wilson Hays, organist.

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Die Meistersinger—with Mmes. Rethberg and Howard; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Whitehill, Bender, Schutzendorf and Paltrinieri; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

THURSDAY

Tosca (matinee)—with Mmes. Jeritza and Wakefield; and Messrs. Fleta, Scotti and Malatesta; Mr. Serafin conducting.

La Juive (evening)—with Mmes. Ponselle, Galli, and Ryan; and Messrs. Martinelli, Rothier, and Errolle; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

FRIDAY

Lohengrin—with Mmes. Easton and Matzenauer; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Whitehill, Bender, and Schutzendorf; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

SATURDAY

L'Africana (matinee) — with Mmes. Ponselle, Mario, and Telva; and Messrs. Gigli, Danise, Didur, and Rothier; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Faust (evening)—with Mme. Alda; and Messrs. Martinelli, de Luca, Mardones, and d'Angelo; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

MONDAY

Cavalleria Rusticana—with Mmes. Ponselle and Bourskaya and Mr. Gigli; Pagliacci with Mme. Mario and Messrs. Fleta and Danise. Conductor for both operas will be Mr. Papi.

Kochanski in First New York Recital

De Falla's Suite Populaire Espagnole Is Given Its First Performance.

To his violin recital in Carnegie Hall the afternoon of December 13, Paul Kochanski "brought his usual skill and artistry to a generous and exacting program," to quote the World commentator. Among the compositions which he played was de Falla's Suite Populaire Espagnole, heard here for the first time. In the opinion of the Sun reviewer, the concert presented "a delightful ensemble of sparkling imagination, incisive rhythm and a program of admirable taste and diversity. There were opportunities in plenty for the display of Mr. Kochanski's vivacious talents."

This chronicler liked the de Falla Suite which revealed "a masterly sense and control of rhythm, welded with originality." Although considering the work unpretentious, the Times writer found it attractive. Lawrence Gilman wrote in the Herald Tribune, that, at times, the piece had "charm of color and mood," and that Mr. Kochanski "played the suite with consummate skill, and made a pronounced success with it." The Times reviewer agreed that he played the work "with feeling and brilliancy."

Mr. Gilman enthused over the violinist's performance: "Mr. Kochanski is rapidly making it clear to attentive concertgoers that he is to be ranked among the most admirable violinists now before the public . . . . a finely gifted artist . . . . a superb technician. He plays with a tone that is almost always transparent, distinguished and beautiful; his bow-arm should be the envy of many a well advertised fiddler; he responds to beauty and mood like a poet, and he phrases like a musician."

Gita Glaze in Recital

Gita Glaze, soprano, gave a recital at Aeolian Hall last Tuesday. The Herald Tribune said she displayed a "fair amount" of strength and "expressive capacity," but a "rather uncertain tone" with a tendency to "shrillness" in the louder top notes. The Sun writer thought that although her voice was not an "impressive" one, in lyric songs she acquitted herself "creditably," giving evident pleasure to her audience.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

MUZIO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

CECILE de HORVATH
PIANIST
Management: Clarence E. Cramer, 1102 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.
Season 1925-1926 Now Booking
Baldwin Piano De Luxe Welte-Mignon Records

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

Harpist Is Soloist With Stock

Chicago Orchestra Plays Palmgren Novelty; Renee Chemet and Elly Ney in Recitals.

Chicago, Dec. 15.—At the concert of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Friday afternoon, Frederick Stock offered a program which had something of the holiday spirit. There was one novelty, Four Symphonic Pictures From Finland, by Selim Palmgren, and Busoni's Berceuse Elegiaque, Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, and Casella's Italia Rhapsody. Enrico Tramonti, harpist of the orchestra, was the soloist of the afternoon in Widor's Chorale and Variations.

Edward Moore of the Tribune found the Palmgren numbers entertaining and ranked them "among the lovely achievements of the year." In the opinion of Karleton Hackett of the Post they showed "genuine thoughts" set forth with "all sincerity. There were melodic grace and charm in the harmonic setting." According to Maurice Rosenfeld of the News they are "tuneful and admirably orchestrated." Glen Dillard Gunn of the Herald and Examiner thought them more appropriate for a popular concert.

Mr. Tramonti played "with much skill," in the words of this reviewer, and Mr. Hackett commended him for his "virtuoso command of the instrument" which displayed its "best qualities with a sure hand." Mr. Moore considered that he got the highest degree of expression from the harp. According to Mr. Rosenfeld, he displayed a "manly stroke" and a tone of many shades and colors.

At the popular concert given on Wednesday, Alfred Wallenstein, first cellist of the orchestra, was soloist. He played the obbligato from Goldmark's Queen of Sheba, Mr. Rosenfeld wrote, with a "beautiful, singing tone." Mr. Hackett found his tone "rich and warm." On the next day, the orchestra gave the second program of its children's series.

Renee Chemet, violinist, made her Chicago debut in a joint recital last Tuesday with Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. According to Mr. Moore, Mme. Chemet displayed "the tone, the brilliancy, and the execution that belong to highly trained talent." Mr. Hackett referred to her as a "delightful artist" with "warmth of tone, technical clarity and rhythmic accent" in her work. Agreed was Mr. Rosenfeld that she played with "brilliance, temperament, and a big tone." Mr. Werrenrath received his usual laudatory notices.

After an absence of two years, Elly Ney returned to Chicago to give a piano recital yesterday afternoon. Mr. Hackett asserted that Mme. Ney "is an artist of distinction. She has an individual viewpoint and possesses both the interpretative force and the technical skill to make it effective." The concert, according to Mr. Rosenfeld, demonstrated her right to be classed among the foremost pianists. Mr. Moore agreed to the "distinction" of her playing.

Ernst Bacon, pianist, was heard in recital last Thursday. According to the Post he showed appreciation for his music, which he expressed "with good tone and technique." Mr. Rosenfeld liked his "delicate touch, fleet and light technique and tone which has both delicacy and power." Another recent recitalist was Mina Hager, contralto, who sang, in the words of this reviewer, "with rich, mellow vocal quality" and a fine interpretative sense. The Post commentator liked her manner of expression and her intelligent use of the wide range of color in her voice.

The Madrigal Club, D. A. Clippinger conductor, opened its twenty-fifth season last Thursday and received general press commendation. Among the other recitalists of the past fortnight have been Rubin Davis, a "talented and expertly trained" violinist, according to Mr. Moore; Jack Baus, violinist; the Chicago String Quartet, which was lauded by Mr. Rosenfeld for "perfect balance of tone and unanimity of musical purpose;" and the Paulist Choristers, who sang, in the words of Mr. Moore, "with fine tone, easily and flexibly, and with excellent balance."

Hyman Rovinsky

Hyman Rovinsky appeared in a New York piano recital at Aeolian Hall last Wednesday night. An "unhackneyed" program was the verdict of the Times, although it expressed a desire that he had begun with Scriabine rather than Schubert. There were Brahms' Hungarian Variations, Franck's prelude, choral and fugue, some Schuman, Brahms, and Debussy, Korngold, Chopin and Smetana. The Herald Tribune spoke with pleasure of Mr. Rovinsky's "clear-cut, incisive energy" but regretted spots of "too much reserve."

The Sun considered he thought "for himself," complained of "some exaggeration of tempo and sharp accentuation," but said that except for this his playing "gives artistic pleasure." Mr. Peyser of the Telegram-Mail also noticed his "restraint," but pointed out the "taste," "excellent touch" and "musical feeling" displayed in the Schumann Romances.

Dr. Hollis Dann, former supervisor of music of the Pennsylvania State Department of Education, has been appointed Professor and head of the Department of Music Education of New York University. He will undertake his new duties on February 1, 1925.

Cadman Cantata and Opera Are Presented in Denver

Denver, Dec. 10.—Charles Wakefield Cadman's latest choral work, The Sunset Trail, which the composer classifies as "an operatic cantata," was given its premiere here in the Municipal Auditorium on December 5 and repeated the following evening. The work was presented with the same composer's opera Shanewis in a double bill by the Denver Music Week Association to inaugurate an annual mid-winter operatic festival.

The new work was given operatic presentation, and, although predominately a choral work, it proved effective in this form.

John C. Wilcox, to whom Mr. Cadman has dedicated The Sunset Trail, was the musical conductor of both performances. His forces included a chorus of eighty-two voices, fifteen soloists and an orchestra of twenty-four, supplemented by organ. Mr. Cadman was unable to prepare the orchestral score for The Sunset Trail in time for its premiere, and so the new work was presented with the composer at the piano and Clarence Reynolds at the organ.

Princess Tsianina sang the title role in both performances of Shanewis. An alternate cast of principals filled the other roles in both works. According to local reviewers, the singing of the chorus was equal to the achievements of the best professional organizations heard here. The writers were also warm in their praise of the principals and of the score. William Walsh, member of a local stock company, was stage director for both operas.

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian Hall, New York
Aeolian-Vocalion Records

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
Victor Records
Steinway Piano
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 10

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.; Canada, $6.00; Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

The Christmas Spirit

There should be cheerful giving on this approaching Christmas day. The nation is blessed; other countries which have suffered terribly for a succession of years are emerging from their ills; music is gaining steadily recognition as a necessity in the lives of our people, and as steadily is being advanced towards still more practicable ends by beneficent men and women who are contributing liberally to its added availableness and usefulness.

The world seems about to enter upon a basis of broader and more humanitarian procedure. Progress is being made in the direction of lessening physical combats between nations. The spirit of peace, if not everywhere predominant, is at least extending in spheres where it cannot fail to exercise a powerful influence for a more general better understanding and good.

Life for the majority must ever be a thing of mental and physical effort. It must always bring trials, which perhaps is well else a full appreciation of rewards could not obtain.

Once each year, around and at the twenty-fifth of December, there is felt by the majority of people an expanding of their hearts. They begin then to think less of themselves, more of others . . . which is as it should be if the completest happiness is truly to be known. But it should not be confined solely to the Christmas period; that is wherein so large a part of humanity errs. Thinking of others and doing for others ought to be an all-year-round affair. If it were—and if ever it came to be—there would be far less need than now exists for armaments and harsh words and unyielding deeds.

While that is expecting too much of the majority it is by no means impossible of attainment by many who do not now practise such a course. Unnecessary criticism can be minimized and sincerity given a more frequent rein.

Musicians and music patrons experience joys which are denied those who are born with no musical inclinations. These former are fortunate, how fortunate they do not always pause to consider.

The coming year promises so much which is ordinarily essential to human welfare that music and those who follow it professionally cannot fail to be benefited. Those benefits can to a considerable extent be controlled by the mental attitude maintained and by a little consistency in practising some part of the golden rule.

There must be competition, and there will be. But it can be clean and fair competition, with suitable satisfaction and rewards for the following of such a course. Life is short; material things cannot be taken out of this world by those who pass from it. Where service supersedes selfishness happiness dwells. And it should not be confined to Christmas time, and forgotten after the New Year has come in.

Communication

Editor Musical Digest:

An article contained in the December 2 issue of your paper, in the "Lines o' News and Chatter" column has been brought to my attention.

If it is the desire of anyone to know what has become of the De Feo opera project slated for New York last fall, I should like to know what has become of the so-called sponsors in the cause of this particular field of American art. I have put this project before many prominent persons, all of whom have appeared enthusiastic about it, but I have found it difficult to raise the thirty thousand dollars necessary to place the idea in operation.

The De Feo Grand Opera Company has given opera at popular prices without any financial support whatsoever, and I have practically impoverished myself doing so. More than forty leading American artists made their first appearances with the De Feo Grand Opera Company at some time in its career.

Some of them, I admit, paid the expenses of orchestra rehearsals, while others paid a small fee, while the company maintained the expenses for their appearances. In the various seasons of opera given by the company in many different cities, at no time has it received at the hands of the local press any unfavorable criticism in any direction.

I still believe that that project at which I have been at work is one of the best yet formulated to give grand opera at popular prices, for the charge of the small monthly fee enables the American artist to make his public debut in a fitting manner so that he not only acquires experience, but also displays his talent in its best light.

Meantime the activities of the De Feo Grand Opera Company outside New York continue. It has been touring in various New England cities recently, presenting performances of Rigoletto, Barber of Seville, Gioconda, and Forza del Destino. Among the cities visited are Stamford, Bridgeport, New Haven, Hartford, Springfield, Northampton, Worcester, and Meriden.

As for the New York project of the company I trust that the above will be sufficient explanation of how it stands for the present year.

GEORGE DE FEO.

New York, Dec. 4, 1924.

Federation to Convene in Oregon

The next biennial convention of the National Federation of Music Clubs is scheduled to be held next June in Portland, Oregon, not in Portland, Maine, as was inadvertently mentioned recently in the columns of The Musical Digest.

ELSIE ILLINGWORTH

THERE is an office in the Highland Building at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where Miss Elsie Illingworth performs the specialized services required to interest local managers in the artists of the Concert Management Arthur Judson. Miss Illingworth has a considerable lot of territory. It embraces Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida.

It requires an expert to bring the wholesale manager in contact with the local manager. She must possess a thorough knowledge of the widely varying qualities of different artists, she must know something about entertainment-giving in general, she must have a comprehensive grasp of local conditions.

Besides her background of a musical education and her own personal experience as a performing artist, this enterprising woman has served an apprenticeship as a territorial manager.

Perhaps she would not be succeeding so well without the original interest in music and the talent which together brought her some prominence as a lieder singer in London (for she is an Englishwoman) and she has also appeared in concert in Germany.

We have seen that it is never too late to tell a war story, if it is a good one. The record of Miss Illingworth bears scanning. She and four assisting artists enlisted as army entertainers when world hostilities broke out. From the time of their first engagement in February, 1915, until the armistice, she kept constantly singing to soldiers of the Allied armies, moving from sector to sector, giving at times three and even four concerts a day. In 1917 Miss Illingworth was asked to appear before the American doughboy, as she had been doing in the British army, and it was Christmas, 1919, before she got her release from the armies of occupation in Coblenz.

Miss Illingworth is full of enthusiasm for what she considers a new and slightly different angle that should be applied to the business of concert-giving today. She has some definite ideas about practicalities, and means to try out others that are something in the nature of an experiment, which she feels—judging from her accomplishment so far—ought to work.

Delivering a Message in Song

Mme. Charles Cahier Believes That the Habit of Self Expression Is Essential to Highest Achievement in Vocal Art

by ALICE MASON

"NOW I don't suppose that you want the sort of thing that would read: 'Madame curled herself upon the sofa, looked charming,—' and so forth," observed Mme. Charles Cahier when she had greeted us. "At any rate, you can't have it. I insist on being serious.

"The fact is, there is something that I have been stressing in my classes in Philadelphia which I want to make the point of this talk, too. That is, the interpretation of the spirit of the music which pupils affect to express."

"Don't you think it rare that a very young singer interprets skillfully?" we asked.

"Abroad it is done," she replied, "at least much sooner than in America. The reason is plain. American social life includes constant training in emotional repression."

"And the well-known English demeanor, what of that?"

"Oh, yes! It is a phase of Anglo-Saxon life—not a fault with us alone. We appear to be a race ashamed of our emotions. Why should we be ashamed of beautiful sentiments? It is the thing that has kept back our artists in every line. The painters developed first, and the sculptors have made strides; but in the field of music there is much to be desired.

"When I went to Germany as a girl to sing," continued the contralto, "I had a dreadful struggle to overcome this stiffness, to let myself go. Americans are noted for the trouble they have in overcoming this stigma of upbringing."

Mme. Cahier paused reflectively, then returned to the development of her cherished theory. "The thing our young singers must do is to find ideas. It is the idea behind a song that gets it over. Song interpretation, and its spirit, constitute my hobby. Spirit, that is the word. Without feeling it the singer cannot transmit to others. I do not care how fine the tones are, without the proper spirit the song for me is absolutely worthless.

"Just the other day a young girl came to me for lessons, and sang. It was in this room. She had a lovely voice, with considerable facility in the use of it, but not a particle of emotion. All her songs were alike. It was a little pathetic.

"There is more to the study of singing than mere vocal exercises. It is desirable for the American singer to go abroad (at the proper time, of course,) if she can to experience the difference in atmosphere in a French, German or Italian community. It helps so vitally in getting that real spirit.

"Our isolation on this side of the Atlantic has been the cause of some of our backwardness in music, I think. In the little, close-packed European countries people rub against each other, and the contact is good for them. Comparisons are stimulating, and rough edges are the quicker removed.

MME. CHARLES CAHIER

"When a young American student first arrives in an European music colony she is almost overwhelmed with the difference in the new atmosphere. She immediately feels its stimulating effect, and rightly. Things get done over there, sometimes among very young people.

"I was fortunate enough to be able to study and live in several European countries at different times, studying the language and expression of each in turn, until I felt very keenly whatever I attempted to sing. Of course it is necessary for any artist to have a good pronunciation; that is the most elementary common sense if a foreign language is sung at all.

The conversation turned to composers, old and new.

"Yes, I like almost all the composers of recognized standing. Of course Bach was the most wonderful." Mme. Cahier smiled and paused thoughtfully. "How full of ideas are his compositions. That, you see, points the trouble with so much of this modern music. It is an inordinate striving after novelty, a new medium, they call it, with nothing to express by it all. Just a deal of noise. Don't you find it so?

"It may be something will come of it, but so far precious little. There should be a reason for a piece of music. It ought to convey a message, if only a mood. There is a wealth of music literature that has much to say. It would be too bad to concentrate over on barren soil in the hope that something might take root."

"I like my work at the Curtis Institute very much," said Mme. Cahier in answer to a question, "and while the standards and atmosphere of the school appear to inspire the pupils, the enthusiasm of some of the students is in turn a great incentive to those of us who teach there. One of my pupils, with a quite remarkable voice, is tremendously in earnest. He is getting ahead, too, although by day through the week he drives a dray, when he is not in the shop where he and his wife conduct a laundry. The whole family works hard to keep him at his musical studies in the conviction that he will succeed in a singing career. It is managed so that he can take the whole Saturday off for his lessons, for he must study music in several branches according to the requirements, and languages as well. He is remarkable!"

"I hope you succeed, Mme. Cahier," we said as we rose to leave, "in putting more temperament into the American singer."

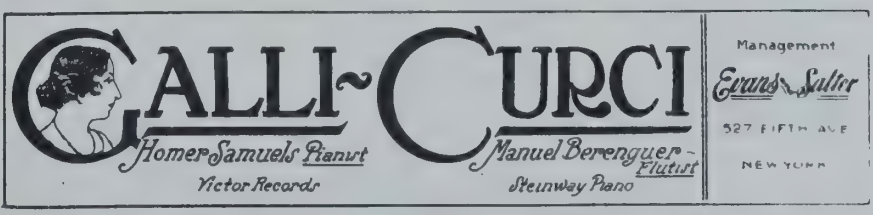
"No, no! The question is not of putting temperament into the American singer, but of getting it out! There is plenty there, but the difficulty is in making it speak for itself.

"I have perfect faith in the ability of Americans to accomplish whatever they undertake—once they get seriously at it. They really have the ability to concentrate on a thing, and they grasp quickly. I think they get at the gist of a matter more readily than other nationalities. Everything is done with such speed in this country. I have great hopes for American musicians in the future, but they must be just a little less business-like and concentrate on ideas.

"If they are to deliver the message of the music which they sing they must remember that the message is never sealed. They are part of it, and to transmit it to those who hear them they must be able to give part of themselves."

Clara Clemens Ends Series

The final concert of her series of seven historical programs representing the development of song, was given by Clara Clemens at Town Hall the afternoon of December 15. Walter Golde was the accompanist. The program, consisting of modern French and German songs, included compositions by Debussy, Ravel, Chausson, Reger, Schoenberg, Pfitzner, Wolf, Mahler and Strauss.



JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

Cecilia Hansen Plays At Rothwell Concert

Sophie Braslau in Recital Also Makes Deep Impression on Los Angeles Reviewers.

Los Angeles, Dec. 11.—Cecilia Hansen, violinist, was the soloist at the concert last Friday afternoon of the Philharmonic Orchestra Walter Henry Rothwell conducting. Miss Hansen's playing of Tschaikowsky's Concerto in D major received the plaudits of the reviewers as well as of the audience.

"The decisiveness and surety of her bowing, the complete mastery of technique and her genuine musical feeling" were lauded by the Daily News chronicler. Carl Bronson of the Herald discovered in Miss Hansen, "one of the most sensational violin virtuosos of the day . . . her tone is warmly full and clear, her bowing sure, with just a slight tendency toward erratic tempos."

Bertha McCord Knisely asserted that Miss Hansen "is the most brilliant woman violinist ever heard at these concerts." Of equal enthusiasm was the writer in the Express, who found her "technically immaculate, she renders sonorous parts with the force of a man, softer lines with the delicacy of a woman." This commentator considered the concert "an outstanding event" due to both the "superlative" violin playing of Miss Hansen and to the "colorful orchestra playing" under Mr. Rothwell.

Writing in the Examiner, Florence Lawrence commented on the "musicianship of a high order" that was evidenced in the Concerto, and marveled at "the redoubtable virtuosity" of Miss Hansen.

Mr. Rothwell and the orchestra, according to this observer, "gave an accompaniment of splendidly balanced instrumental power." The "superb" concert, in the words of Miss Knisely, offered a program which was a masterpiece of balance. The other numbers played by the orchestra were: Gluck's Overture to Iphigenia in Aulis; Mozart's G minor Symphony; and Richard Strauss' Don Juan.

The Philharmonic Orchestra gave its fourth popular matinee program of the season at the Philharmonic Auditorium, before a large audience. Conductor Rothwell gave a much applauded reading of familiar numbers, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Bizet's Carmen Suite No. 1, and Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody. A local singer, Ruth May Shaffner, was soloist.

All the reviewers praised the Schubert Symphony, the "outstanding number," to quote the account in the Examiner, given by Mr. Rothwell an interpretation "polished and reposeful," as the Times reported, and approved also in the Express. The other numbers by the orchestra were universally liked, especially the Carmen.

ESTHER DALE

Won Critical Commendation at Her First New York Recital of the Season at Aeolian Hall.

Sophie Braslau in her recital here on December 3, gave a program which "was such an admirable exposition of artistry," in the words of the Examiner critic, that she was given a most enthusiastic reception by her audience. Carl Bronson of the Herald thought that her voice has gained in richness, and that it is "her own musical genius back of the voice which is bringing it to the heights. Her diction was particularly clear in the English songs, and her fine mezzo voce contrasted refreshingly with her pipe organ-like fullness." Mme. Braslau was called "a real mistress of song" by the Times reviewer, who added that she sang "with authority, intensity, even fierceness."

Toledo Has New Quartet

Toledo, Dec. 10.—The newly formed Toledo String Quartet and the Nold Trio opened their series of chamber music concerts here with a program in the J. W. Greene Auditorium. The trio consists of Helen Nold, violinist; Margory Johnston, cellist; and Franklin Nold, pianist. Florence Fisher, second violin, and Mathilde Burns, violinst, joined the two string players of the trio to form the new quartet.

Concert Managers Hold Meeting in New York

(Continued from page 1.)

It was decided to suspend publication of the National Concert Managers' Association official publication, The Spot Light, and to substitute for it bulletins.

Consideration whether the present prices for concert-tickets are too high met with a negative agreement. And it was the consensus of opinion that not many new local managers are entering the field.

Commercialism in the concert business resulted in an open and informal debate, with differences of viewpoints concerning just what it is; and there was some time given to how advertising of all kinds can be most profitably employed.

Civic opera also came in for some discussion; while the method of giving away tickets prompted the majority to declare it unwise.

Those present at the luncheons or one or more of the sessions were:

Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene, Miss Margaret Rice, Miss Lois Steers, Miss Rena McDonald, Miss May Beegle, Mrs. Walter Fritschy, Miss Marion De Forrest, Miss Edith Resch, Miss Mary Lindsay Oliver, Mrs. W. P. Nelson, Walter Fritschy, Ben Franklin, W. A. Albaugh, W. R. Frizell, and Guy Ourand.

Choose American Compositions

The Music Committee of the United States section of the International Society for Modern Music has chosen the following American works for submission to the jury in Zurich, who will select what is to be played at the next annual festival of the society: Griffes' Piano Sonata; Ruggles' Angels; Luening's Sextet; Greunberg's Daniel Jazz; Marion Bauer's Introspection and Turbulence; Engel's Three Epigrams; Antheil's Jazz Sonata; and Ornstein's Piano Sonata.

Oratorio to Sing Messiah

The New York Oratorio Society will sing Handel's Messiah in Carnegie Hall on Christmas night and the following Saturday night. Albert Stoessel will conduct, and the soloists will be Alma Kitchell, contralto; Mabel Garrison, soprano; Nevada van der Veer, contralto; Allan McQuhae, tenor, and Arthur Middleton, bass.

Rosa Ponselle

Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc
1451 Broadway
New York City

Victor Records Knabe Piano

RAYMOND HAVENS Pianist

Solist with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 8 performances
Soloist with CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 2 performances
Soloist with MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 3 performances
For Dates and Terms Address:
EVELYN LIGHT, Sec. 87 Pinckney St., Boston, Mass.

SAMOILOFF
BEL CANTO STUDIOS
309 W. 85th St. Tel.: Schuyler 6952 New York

SYLVIA LENT
Violinist

Chicago critic acclaims her as "One of the Most Promising American Talents of the Day"

SYLVIA LENT

Debut in Chicago Soloist with Chicago Orchestra
FREDERICK STOCK Conducting
November 28 and 29

"The greatest of our conductors, Frederick Stock, is also the most consistent patron of native talent. In presenting Sylvia Lent, violinist, he brought forward one of the most promising American talents of the day. She played the Bruch G Minor Concerto with rare beauty of tone, with flawless technic, with a dignity and earnestness of style that contrasted pleasantly with her youthful unself-consciousness."—Glenn Dillard Gunn, Herald and Examiner.

"Sylvia Lent's account of Bruch's Concerto had the brilliance, energy and nervous technical incisiveness to make this fair young child seem a prize indeed among the new concert artists. Her tone attained a fine clean color, which was of its greatest beauty in the slow movement. She was very warmly received."—Eugene Stinson, Journal.

"Miss Lent has a winsome, pleasing personality, and she has acquired the essentials of virtuosity. Her tone is smooth and musical. There is a certain brilliance and spontaneity in her playing. She has ample technic, and her sense of accent and rhythm is good. She was given a cordial reception, and Mr. Stock and the orchestra joined in the applause."—Maurice Rosenfeld, News.

"Miss Lent made an attractive stage picture with her quiet self-possession, and she showed that she can play the violin. There were appreciation of the music, the power to sustain a melody and to add the decorative details with sure touch. The romanza she played with poetic feeling and warmth of tone and the final allegro was given with spirit. An excellent violinist and a pleasing personality. The public gave her most cordial applause."—Karleton Hackett, Post.

"She was a success with her audience, and she deserved to be."—Tribune.

Now on Tour in Middle West

Management:
LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall, New York

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

THE GRIDIRON CLUB is one of the world's unique organizations. It has forty-nine active members (Washington correspondents of daily newspapers and press associations), twelve limited members—all Washington, D. C., residents—and twenty-five associated members, who live in various cities.

The mid-winter dinner of the Gridiron club is nearly always attended by the President of the United States and the members of his cabinet; and ambassadors from different countries mingle on that occasion with our senators, a governor or two, congressmen, and other men who have accomplished things.

I had the good fortune last Saturday week to attend the 1924 dinner as the guest of John Philip Sousa. Four hundred and seven persons were present. The club rule, "Ladies always present, reporters never present," prevailed in the new Willard Hotel of our national capital.

WILLIAM E. BRIGHAM, retiring Gridiron president, occupied the center place at the "head" table, with President Coolidge at his right. The skits, which lampooned good-naturedly men in or seeking public office, were cleverly conceived and executed. In this latter respect several of the club's limited members were stars. Musically I was interested in J. F. M. Bowie and Fred East, both Washingtonians. The former has a lyric tenor voice, and a good one; likewise the singing talent. Mr. East has been blessed with an exceptional baritone voice. Moreover one can understand every word he utters in a song.

Here were two young men, both amateurs, who used their voices in so technically fine a manner that the discriminating listener was moved to applaud. Neither is a finished interpretative artist, but the natural resources of both are far superior to what may be heard frequently from professionals in our concert-rooms.

THE WOMEN of our country continue to keep the men deep in their debt. In music they have been pioneers; and in their devotion to promoting what is most desirable in the art they have displayed vision, unselfishness, sagacity, and unremitting effort.

These facts were emphasized once more at the afternoon session of the first day's activities of the mid-winter meeting of the National Concert Managers' Association which was held last Monday week in New York's Commodore hotel. I was permitted to attend that session. President Mrs. Katie Wilson Greene presided, with Secretary Miss Margaret Rice at her right hand. In the discussions which took place there was abundant evidence that the feminine element in the organization reasons logically; and it was apparent also in comments made during and after the luncheon which preceded the official procedure.

Mrs. Greene, Miss Rice, Miss Lois Steers, Miss Rena McDonald (right hand to L. E. Behymer of Los Angeles), Miss May Beegle, Mrs. Walter Fritschy, Mrs. Adella Prentiss Hughes, Miss Marion De Forrest, Miss Edith Resch, Miss Mary Lindsay Oliver, and Mrs. W. P. Nelson were present . . . and keenly alert.

The whole-souled Walter Fritschy was also there (what Concert Managers' meeting would be complete without him?) And the nimble-witted Ben Franklin, delivering his delicious verbal shafts. Reinforcing these two were W. A. Albaugh, W. R. Frizell, and Guy Ourand, representing T. Arthur Smith.

Differences of viewpoints were frequent that Monday afternoon; and I am told that they obtained as well during the "closed" conferences. It is a good sign when people disagree, for out of the clash of opinions comes progress.

A WHOLESALE BUREAU executive told me once that there are approximately 1,700 local managements—individuals, heads of music clubs, and directors of music departments in universities and colleges—who contract for the services of artist-attractions who receive for their services a fee of $500 or more each.

If all these purveyors of music to the public could be gotten together in a six-days convention, and a program arranged calculated to increase the enlightenment on matters of fundamental importance in the concert-giving industry, it could lead to substantial betterments.

I would like to see such a convention take place . . . but I doubt if I ever will. It would be too good to be true. But if ever it did take place, and the wholesale bureau chiefs were in attendance, there would be opportunities of almost inestimable value to everyone concerned: artist-attractions, their managers, the local managements, and the dear public.

COOPERATION, constructive procedure, and organization would seem to be the three factors which can be utilized to increase the operating efficiency of the concert-giving industry. It is apparent to any discerning person that there is dissatisfaction in the ranks of the three elements active in the industry with much which now prevails. Nor is it due in largest measure to the excessive competition amongst certain artist-attractions, certain wholesale bureaus, and certain local managements.

The total receipts of the twenty-odd wholesale managerial bureaus from the artist-attractions presented in this country during 1923-1924 must have exceeded $7,000,000. An industry as substantial as that is one to be regarded with respect.

Yet on many sides one hears utterances of complaint that business is not what it ought to be.

There are several causes, and not the least of them is the excessive competition I have mentioned. But there are other causes too, some of which might be conquered . . . if an all-sided cooperation could be brought about.

NOT A FEW of the most experienced wholesale bureau managements and local managements express doubts of any such outcome. They believe that the numerous persons involved precludes any methods which differ materially from those so long in vogue. They hold to the belief that it is a business wherein individuality must predominate, and that only the fittest can survive.

Perhaps they are right. They certainly speak from long experience. And it is evident that there must be serious obstacles in the way of simplified and systematic coordination of the various factors, else something less complicated than is now the rule would have come to pass.

A SCRUPULOUS ANALYSIS of existing conditions discloses several elements that are responsible for some of the confused procedure in concert-giving.

One is the inflexible attitude of the sought-after artist-attraction. With wholesale bureaus ever-ready to bid against one another for its services the fee is run up to the maximum. Thus is the wholesale bureau left no alternative than to say in effect to a local management: "Take it or leave it."

Another of these elements is fear. A wholesale manager is afraid to let an artist-attraction he wants go to another bureau, even though he is conscious that the insisted-on fee is excessive. So he yields, if reluctantly, and signs the contract.

A local management is afraid not to book that artist, even though aware that the fee is too high to permit a profit (often so high as to predicate a loss). He says in explanation: "I can't afford, for mere reputation's sake, to have that attraction appear in my city save under my management."

THE STABILIZING and standardizing of artist-attraction fees would appear to be the first step imperative to relieving the wholesale bureaus and the local managements from some of the burdens they are carrying. And that, under existing methods, appears to be impossible.

Still, a huge monetary saving can be effected by an arrangement of bookings on a basis that will eliminate many of the long railroad jumps that so many attractions are forced to make . . . if local managements will cooperate to that end. Here we have another obstacle, though one not impossible to surmount.

Then there are the "forced sale" tactics as practiced by a wholesale bureau or two who seem to consider nothing unethical so long as a date can be got. Nothing save harm can ensue from such a practice; and the bureau which adheres to it will eventually so discover.

IN TIMES of rising costs of living it is only human for everyone in a position to exact a high price for services rendered to press his advantage. Call it commercialism if you will, it nevertheless is the order of the day. Artists have a limited number of years, at best, in which to fortify their material futures, so they are doing no more than would be natural with most people—similarly placed.

Under a different method of wholesale managerial procedure, and with the next crop of artist-attractions, things may be improved. Even now some readjustments might be effected—and to the more enduring advantage of most artists—if the right organization were to be brought about.

Some day matters may be different. In all likelihood they will be different. They ought to be, for the welfare of an industry that deserves something regular and substantial rather than what is so manifestly confusing and hazardous.

I PLACE my faith in the sagacity and integrity of the constructive wholesale bureau heads. They are all trying to better conditions . . . in so far as their commitments and circumstances will permit.

I look to these wholesale bureau heads to take the lead in solving the large problems that are awaiting solution. They are not slumbering. On the contrary, they are peering into the future, alert for the propitious moment to contribute towards serving all with whom they deal in ways that will lead to their contentment and financial security.

Wise local managements will strive to cooperate with every constructive wholesale bureau, for it is with such that the finding and applying of the much-needed remedies to cure the concert-giving ills rests.

There is an urgent demand for a spirit of give and take; for a sincere endeavor on the part of all who can to aid in introducing and maintaining in concert-giving more of the methods that govern in successful business.

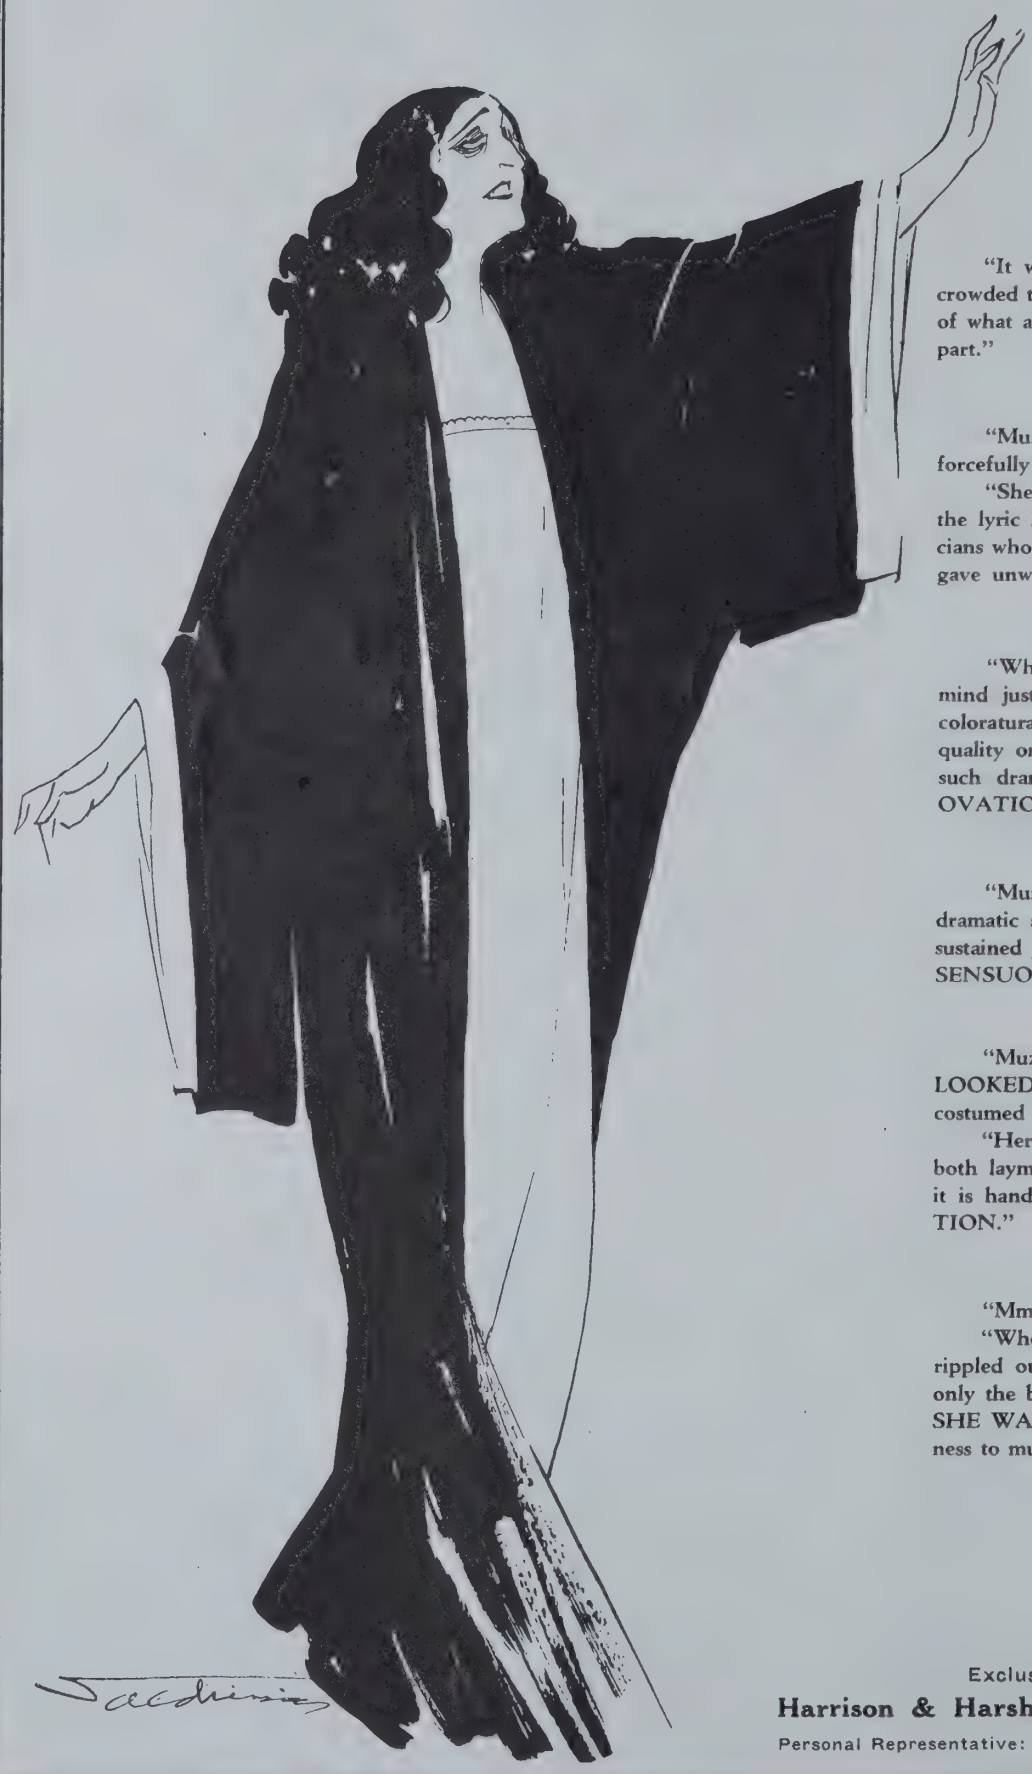
THE CLEVELAND TIMES is rather proud of having as its music reviewer one who is declared to be "Cleveland's only woman music critic." She is Miss Eleanor Claridge; she is 26, and has had a short story published in the Metropolitan magazine under the name Eleanor Orr. George Nathan and H. L. Mencken, when they were editors of the Smart Set, bought stories from Miss Claridge . . . so, it would seem, she should be able to write.

MISS ISABEL LOWDEN is one of those constructive workers for music who puts service before an immediate cash return. Her activities in behalf of New York's music week are generally known to those in touch with its progress. Now, with the Music Contests Movement which Miss Lowden is fostering (with the support of influential music patrons), there is being spread across the land another helpful project. Among those who are co-operating with it are the teachers of singing. One of these, Joseph Regneas, has just written to Miss Lowden a tribute that seems well deserved.

MUZIO

"Duplicates Past Glory as Violetta"

—Herman Devries in "Chicago Evening American," December 3, 1924.



"It was like old times to be at the opera last night. The house was crowded to the last rows. MUZIO'S GLORIOUS VOICE was a fine example of what a success a dramatic soprano can make of this customarily coloratura part."

—Edward Moore, Chicago Tribune, Dec. 3, 1924.

"Muzio has never shown the richness of her vocal gifts so clearly or so forcefully as she did on this occasion.

"She sang with true brilliance. And the ease with which she surmounted the lyric heights of a none too easy role was gratifying indeed to the musicians who heard her. The FRESHNESS AND POWER OF HER SINGING gave unwonted beauty to the score."

—Eugene Stinson, Chicago Journal, Dec. 3, 1924.

"When Verdi composed his opera La Traviata he must have had in mind just such a singing actress as Claudia Muzio. * * * None of the coloratura sopranos within memory gave to the music such brilliant tone quality or such intensity of power, nor did any of them play the role with such dramatic realism as did Muzio. SHE RECEIVED A GENUINE OVATION."

—Maurice Rosenfeld, Chicago News, Dec. 3, 1924.

"Muzio was superb. It always astonishes the public when a great dramatic soprano makes brilliant display of coloratura facility. In the long sustained passages delivered in the half voice, HER SONG HAD ALL THE SENSUOUS LURE OF KREISLER'S VIOLIN."

—Glenn Dillard Gunn, Chicago Herald, Dec. 3, 1924.

"Muzio brought out all the pathos and beauty of this stage picture, LOOKED RARELY BEAUTIFUL, SANG DIVINELY, as usual, and was costumed magnificently.

"Her pitch-sense is absolutely perfect—her tone at all times a joy to both layman and the professional who knows with what skill and discretion it is handled. Bref—one of the GREAT SINGERS OF THE GENERATION."

—Herman Devries, Chicago American, Dec. 3, 1924.

"Mme. Muzio's performance was SUPERB.

"When brilliance of vocalizing was demanded by the score, the roulades rippled out in purling cascades. There were in Mme. Muzio's singing not only the beauty of the sustained tone and the brilliance of the fioriture, but SHE WAS INFALLIBLY ON THE PITCH. This woman has a sensitiveness to music that last evening was without a flaw."

—Karleton Hackett, Chicago Post, Dec. 3, 1924.

Exclusive Concert Management:

Harrison & Harshbarger—Kimball Hall, Chicago, Ill.

Personal Representative: OTTAVIO SCOTTO—Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

CERTIFIED by THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Give Three Operas in Philadelphia

Smallens Directs Civic Opera and Serafin Leads Metropolitan; Orchestras and Recitalists.

Philadelphia, Dec. 17.—The Philadelphia Civic Opera Company, in its presentation of Cavalleria and Pagliacci at the Metropolitan Opera House the evening of December 11, gave, according to S. L. L. in the Public Ledger, "the most brilliant and successful as well as the finest performance of its short but meteoric existence."

Unanimous praise was accorded Alexander Smallens, conductor, and the orchestra for their contribution to the success of the evening. The reviewer in the Inquirer asserted that it was to Mr. Smallens that "much of the success of the performance was due." Agreed was the North American chronicler that "credit for the smoothness of the performances belongs entirely to him."

Elsa Alsen, as Santuzza, "revealed a wealth of tone and beauty of expression that was unusual," according to the Inquirer. S. L. L. wrote that she sang and acted to perfection, and the North American observer said her work was "effectively done." Mme. Alsen's "big and powerful voice," wrote the Record reviewer, was well matched by that of the tenor, Judson House. Mr. House was commended for his fine vocal performance by S. L. L. and the North American considered that he appeared to best advantage in Tu Qui, Santuzza. In the Inquirer, the tenor was praised for the "great volume" of his voice, which he used effectively.

As the writer in the North American expressed it, Anna Fitziu as Nedda "made an appealing figure." The Inquirer chronicler agreed that she was "a charming figure and sang with fluency." This charm of voice, action, and stage presence was noted by the reviewer of the Public Ledger, who stated that her work was of "unusual merit." According to the Record, Mme. Fitziu was in "splendid" voice.

Ulysses Lappas received laudatory comment for his Canio. In the opinion of the Inquirer writer, he displayed not only a powerful voice, but one of "beautiful texture." The North American writer considered his performance the high spot of the evening, vocally and emotionally. His voice to the Record observer, was "stirring and individual." Beatrice Eaton, Regina Marsh, Nielson Eddy, Albert Mahler, and James Carpenter completed the cast, and received general commendation in the press.

Tullio Serafin conducted the performance of La Gioconda presented here by the New York Metropolitan Opera Company on the 9th. According to S. L. L. it was "one of the best balanced and most brilliant operatic performances" seen in Philadelphia. This writer felt that Mr. Serafin infused a new life into the opera. Linton Martin of the North American congratulated him for the manner in which he got the "utmost balance and beauty" out of the score.

Mr. Martin said that he doubts if there is any finer, or more finished operatic tenor that Beniamino Gigli in the part of Enzo. The writer in Public Ledger commented that seldom is such perfection attained as Mr. Gigli displayed in the love duet. Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer said that he sang "with a beauty of tone it is rare to hear." This chronicler admired Rosa Ponselle's singing, also. "A voice of superb quality and with dramatic power and intensity" was attributed to Miss Ponselle by the commentator in the Record. The color and volume of her voice came in for special comment from Mr. Martin.

Giuseppe Danise was praised by the Record reviewer for being "an able singer and a conscientious artist." Mr. Muschamp made special mention of his "unusual talent." Jeanne Gordon's work was "excellent as to singing and acting," wrote the Record commentator, and other writers agreed. Jose Mardones and Merle Alcock were not forgotten in the press plaudits. In fact, S. L. L. wrote that "the whole opera was a succession of vocal triumphs."

The feature of the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Leopold Stokowski conducting, last Friday, was the set of fifteen short movements by Bernard Sekles, a modern German composer, entitled Gesichte. Other numbers on the program were the Cesar Franck Symphony in D minor, and three excerpts from Berlioz's Damnation of Faust.

The Gesichte according to Mr. Muschamp were excellently read and played, and displayed a variety of rhythms, tonalities, moods, and instrumentations. The writer in the Record found them interesting for the manipulation of tone color which was evidenced, and Mr. Martin liked their "robust" scoring, and "the contrast, ample invention, and the faculty of vivid expression of musical ideas and moods" displayed.

Mr. Stokowski conducted the second of the children's concerts on Wednesday, and presented Oscar Shumsky, seven year old violinist, as soloist, who played Mozart's Concerto in A major. The audience was thrown into an uproar at the announcement by Mr. Stokowski that his friend, Charlie Chaplin, would play the cello as soloist at the next children's concert in February.

Another symphony concert of recent days was that of the New York Symphony Orchestra with Walter Damrosch conducting. Paul Kochanski and Felix Salmond played the Brahms Concerto for violin and cello. The orchestral numbers consisted of Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, Saint-Saens' arrangement of Schumann's Evensong, Pierne's Entrance of the Little Fauns, and the Spanish Caprice of Rimsky-Korsakoff.

According to Mr. Muschamp, it was a "characteristically delightful concert," and, with the exception of Mr. Martin, the other observers were agreed with him. Mr. Martin considered that the program lacked the "individuality and interest" expected from Mr. Damrosch. Exemplary of the critical comment of the soloists was this statement of the reviewer in the Record: "Both are fine artists, with a large and beautiful tone, a fluent technique and the ability to resolve a solo part into an ensemble. The success which these artists achieved . . . was sufficient testi-

(Continued on Page 24.)

Chicago Opera Bill

TONIGHT

Lakme—with Mme. Pareto and Messrs. Schipa and Baklanoff; Mr. Lauwers conducting.

TOMORROW

Louise—with Mmes. Garden and Claessens; and Messrs. Annsseau and Baklanoff; Mr. Polacco conducting.

THURSDAY

Barber of Seville—with Mmes. de Hidalgo and Claessens; and Messrs. Schipa, Chaliapin, Rimini, and Trevisan; Mr. Cimini conducting.

FRIDAY

Otello—with Mmes. Raisa and Perini; and Messrs. Marshall and Schwarz; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

SATURDAY

Faust (matinee)—with Mmes. Mason, Claessens, and Swarthout; and Messrs. Hackett, Chaliapin, and Defrere; Mr. St. Leger conducting.

Thais (evening)—with Mme. Garden, and Messrs. Mojica and Cotreuil; Mr. Moranzoni conducting.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

MARCELLA ROESELER
DRAMATIC SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA CO.
AVAILABLE FOR CONCERTS—ORATORIOS—RECITALS.
Address personally--Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y. C.

EDITH MASON SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK CITY

Aeolian Hall
34 West 43rd Street New York

ONLY NEW YORK
. . . Recital . . .
BY
MYRA HESS
English Pianiste
Saturday afternoon
January 3, 1925
at 3 o'clock

Programme

1. Sonata, A Major . . Mozart
   Andante grazioso
   Minuetto
   Alla turca.
   Allegretto
2. Prelude, Aria and Finale . . . Cesar Franck
3. a) Cubana . . . . . De Falla
   b) Andaluza . . . . . De Falla
   c) Le Maja et le Rossignol . . . Granados
   d) Spanish Dance No. 6 . . . . . Granados
4. a) Nocturne E Minor Op. 72 No. 1
   b) Etudes Op. 10 No. 12; Op. 25 No. 7; Op. 25 No. 2; Op. 25 No. 3 — Chopin
   c) Ballade G Minor Op. 23

Steinway Piano
Duo-Art Records

Management
ANNIE FRIEDBERG
Metropolitan Opera House Bldg.
New York

On The Music Highway

THE usual two Christmas week performances of Handel's Messiah by the New York Oratorio Society will mark the fiftieth anniversary of the society's activities. Their first performance took place in the old Steinway Hall on December 25, 1874. The soloists at Carnegie Hall on Christmas night and on December 27 will be as follows: Mable Garrison, soprano; Nevada Van Der Veer, contralto; Alma Kitchell, contralto; Allen McQuhae, tenor; Arthur Middleton, bass.

Ernest Schelling will be one of the nineteen pianists who will take part in the benefit concert at the Metropolitan Opera House on December 30. Mr. Schelling will be heard in a recital in New York later in the season.

Theo Karle, tenor will be heard in recital tonight at Aeolian Hall, assisted by Frank La Forge, composer-pianist. Two of Mr. La Forge's songs are on the program.

The New York String Quartet's itinerary for January includes Pittsburgh, Grove City and Indianna, Pa., and La Crosse, Wis. Philadelphia and Palm Beach will also hear this ensemble within the next few weeks.

John Charles Thomas is appearing this month in Indianapolis. La Porte, and Kokmo, Ind.; Jacksonville, Battle Creek, Muskeegon, Benton Harbor and Albion, Mich.; Mattoon, Kankakee and Chicago, Ill.; twice in Cleveland as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra; and in New York with the Mozart Society, at the Astor Hotel, at the Hotel Plaza Musicale, and with the Schola Cantorum at Carnegie Hall.

The Sunday Symphonic Society resumed its free bi-monthly concerts at the George M. Cohan Theatre. New York, last Sunday afternoon. These concerts will continue through the winter and spring, with programs after the manner of last year's schedule. The hour and a quarter was divided among an overture, a symphonic number, an orchestral suite, a vocal or instrumental solo and an address speaker. Mr. Zuro will play this winter several of the compositions submitted in his American composer's contest. A $100 prize will be awarded to the piece that has proved most popular.

Vladimir Golschmann conducted the New York Symphony concerts last Thursday and Friday. Last year he made his initial American tour, and was guest conductor at a special concert of the New York Symphony.

Erna Rubinstein will sail from Cherbourg on the Aquitania tomorrow, arriving here on the 30th. Her first American appearance this season will be on January 4 with the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra.

Ralph Errolle, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Company, sang for President and Mrs. Coolidge on December 18. Next Sunday he will sing at the opening of the new Masonic Temple in New York.

E. Robert Schmitz filled three engagements in the neighborhood of Kansas City on the 4th, 5th and 6th of December, playing to 2,000 public school children, lecturing before the State Teachers' Convention and giving a recital.

John McCormack sang at the benefit concert for the MacMahon Memorial Shelter at the Manhattan Opera House week before last. Lauri Kennedy, cellist, was assisting artist.

Following its recent appearances at the National American Musical Festival at Buffalo and in New York at the Chaminade Club, the Tollefsen Trio will play at Hunter College and the Washington Irving High School, New York.

Mischa Levitzki played at the second concert of the benefit series given for the needy musicians of Germany December 15 at the Institute of Musical Art, New York.

Royal Dadmun, baritone, will sing in Providence, R. I., next Sunday.

Geni Sadero, soprano, will arrive in New York early in January to make her American debut under the auspices of the Schola Cantorum. She will be under the direction of William Morris.

Ruth Breton, violinist, will be the soloist at the New York Philharmonic Orchestra concert next Sunday.

Nina Morgana, soprano, sang under the auspices of the Colonial Dames of America at Park Lane in New York on December 7 for the Grand Duchess Cyril of Russia.

Thomas Wilfred will give his only recital of the season in New York on the Clavilux color organ next Friday evening in Aeolian Hall.

Marcel Grandjany, French harpist, will be heard on the Pacific Coast in January.

Horace Britt, cellist, will appear in joint recital with Helen Stanley, soprano, in Fitchburg, Mass, on January 12. He appeared recently with the Minneapolis Orchestra, Henri Verbrugghen conducting, playing in Ernest Bloch's Schelomo, and Saint Saens' Concerto.

Germaine Schnitzer will give an historical series of romantic music for the pianoforte in each of nine cities this season. Each series will consist of six programs, done on alternate days, and will include the more important works of Weber, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin and Liszt. Mme. Schnitzer plans to present the series in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco, London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna.

Anna Pavlowa is filling a return engagement of eight performances this week at the Manhattan Opera House, before proceeding on her final American tour, ending in March in California. From there she will take her company to Mexico City for a season of four weeks beginning April 11. She then goes to Havana, and to Europe.

Tonight her program will include Amarilla and Autumn Leaves; tomorrow night, Visions from The Sleeping Beauty and The Fairy Doll. For the Christmas matinee there will be The Magic Flute and Snowflakes; Christmas night, Don Quixote. At the three last named she will also present her dance pantomime, Christmas. Friday night and Saturday matinee Don Quixote will be repeated, and Saturday night she will present The Fairy Doll and Invitation to the Dance.

Among the musicians who recently have been guests at the Great Northern Hotel in New York are Leff Pouishnoff, pianist; Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Rochester Symphony Orchestra; Loudon Charlton and Mrs. Charlton (Helen Stanley); Vladimir Shavitch, conductor of the Syracuse Symphony; Kenneth Curwen, English music publisher; Ursula Greville, soprano and editor of the English periodical, the Sackbut; Carl Friedberg, pianist; Claire Dux, soprano; and Gitta Gradova, pianist.

Bedrich Wiedermann, Czech organist, and Anton Hok, tenor, gave a joint recital last Saturday evening in Town Hall, New York, for the benefit of the Lidumil Philanthropic Society.

Beniamino Gigli, tenor, and Magdeleine Brard, young French pianist, are to appear at the White House in Washington the evening of January 15.

Karolyn Bassett, composer, of Briarcliff, N. Y., will make her debut as concert singer at the Hotel Plaza December 27. The proceeds of the recital will be given to the American Association of Lovers of Music. Miss Bassett, who is a coloratura soprano, will sing several of her own songs.

At the concert presented by the Schola Cantorum, Kurt Schindler, conductor, December 30 at Carnegie Hall, there will be given the first performance outside of Russia of the Fourth Act or Tableau, The Novgorod Fair, from Rimsky-Korsakoff's opera Sadko; and Chabrier's opera Briseis, of which there is but one act. Mr. Schindler presented the latter for the first time here on March 3, 1911, with the MacDowell Chorus (now the Schola Cantorum). The principal singers this time will be as follows: Dusolina Giannini as Briseis; Marguerite d'Alvarez, Thanasto; Mario Chamlee, Hylas; John Charles Thomas, The Catechist, and Leon Rothier, Stratokles.

Myra Hess, pianist, arrived from England last Saturday. She will give her only New York recital on January 3. Immediately after this concert Miss Hess will leave for the South where she will be on a tour until February. After her return to New York to appear as soloist with orchestra, she will go on tour again until late in March.

The soloists for the fourth of Andres de Segurola's Artistic Mornings at the Hotel Plaza on December 26, include Toti dal Monte, soprano. John Charles Thomas, baritone, and Vera Brodsky and Hannah Lefkowitz, two young pianists. The latter will be heard in music for two pianos. The young artists make their official New York debuts at Aeolian Hall in February. The occasion also marks the first singing appearance of Mme. dal Monte in New York outside the Metropolitan Opera House. Mr Thomas will be accompanied by Lester Hodges. Giuseppe Bamboschek, conductor of the Metropolitan, will be at the piano for Mme. dal Monte Vladimir de Pachmann, making what has been announced as his farewell tour in the United States, will have filled, between October 6 and December 19, thirty-two concert engagements in the East, South, and Canada.

Louis Graveure, baritone, has returned to New York after an absence of six months. Mr. Graveure has just completed a series of concerts on the Pacific coast, commencing in Berkeley, Cal., on October 7. He sang in twenty-two recitals in all. Returning Eastward he appeared in Salt Lake City, Denver, Lawrence, Kansas City, and in Athens, Ohio. On December 5 Mr. Graveure appeared at the Bond Hotel Musicale in Hartford. Conn., and on the 19th he will make his first appearance of the season in New York at the Biltmore Musicale. Early in March Mr. Graveure will sail for Europe, and he will give a number of concerts in Scandinavia and in Central Europe.

Phradie Wells, soprano, who is a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, is booked this season for three festival concerts. She will appear at a music festival in her own State, Missouri, and in two others in South Carolina and Mississippi.

Jeanne Gordon, contralto, sang in the restaged Samson and Dalila at the New York Metropolitan last Saturday, and at Friday's special matinee Gioconda.

ETHEL
GROW
CONTRALTO

A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 192'
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

Ethyl HAYDEN
Lyric Soprano
Management: Loudon Charlton—Carnegie Hall, New York

Three Soloists Play With State Symphony

Mme. Novaes and Miss Greville Appear; Stassevitch Plays Violin and Piano.

Two soloists and two conductors took part in the concert of the State Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, New York, last Wednesday night, and on the preceding afternoon Paul Stassevitch assisted both at the piano and with the violin. At the Wednesday concert Weston Gales led the orchestra in the Tschaikowsky Fourth Symphony, not without complaint that he does not "see deeply" into this music from Lawrence Gilman in the Tribune. The Sun reviewer thought his reading "colorful and impressive."

Ursula Greville, soprano, and editor of The Sackbut, offered songs of Purcell and Scarlatti. "Intelligence and charm" was the phrase used in the Post to describe her singing, and the Sun found that she "sang well," her somewhat "dusky" middle register giving way to "clear and sonorous" head tones. Mr. Gilman seemed delighted with the songs and the "intelligence" of the singer.

On the same program, Guiomar Novaes played Grieg's Piano Concerto in A minor with the orchestra conducted by Mr. Stransky, "receiving prolonged applause," according to the Post. Several reviewers expressed regret at having to leave before Mme. Novaes' number had been reached.

At the concert which was given in the same hall on Tuesday afternoon Paul Stassevitch made his debut playing first the Brahms D major Violin Concerto and the Tschaikowsky First Piano Concerto. Mr. Stransky conducted.

Mr. Downes of the Times said that the interpretation of the Brahms was "cautious and at times inadequate," while Mr. Stransky "dragged his tempo." Alison Smith of the World also complained of this accompaniment, its "cross-purposes in accent and design," and of the soloist's "pinched" tone at times. The Herald Tribune account would have him appear as a pianist, "fair," as a violinist, "at best indifferent."

The other reviewers spoke commendably of his piano playing. It was "impressive in many respects," said the Sun, with "contrasting tenderness and brilliance." The Telegram Mail preferred Mr. Stassevitch as pianist, and said that while his playing was not conspicuous for "finish," it was to a degree "alert and alive." The Sun reviewer thought Mr. Stransky and his men provided "sensitive" accompaniment, giving "admirable account of themselves throughout the program.

Papi Conducts Twin Operas at Metropolitan

Mmes. Ponselle and Bori and Tokatyan and Fleta Sing in Pagliacci and Cavalleria.

The first production this season of the twin operas, Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci, on the afternoon of De- and Pagliacci, on the afternoon of December 14, was marked by the new stage sets designed by Joseph Novak. In the words of the World reviewer, "they represented no excursion into expressionistic art" but offered several "refreshing departures" from the stereotyped background. Gennaro Papi conducted, and, to quote the Post commentator, "brought chorus, organ and orchestra ensembles to a fulness and perfection of tone that was ravishingly beautiful."

Rosa Ponselle, as Santuzza, continued this writer, "scored new triumphs" and used "her full powers of voice and dramatic action." The Times reviewer considered that Miss Ponselle, "prodigal of her beautiful voice, was well cast." According to the Herald Tribune chronicler, she was a "realistic Santuzza of strong voice and dramatic action." This writer also found Armand Tokatyan "in good voice," and in the Post he was commended for his "pleasing" performance. The Times commentator wrote: "Tokatyan was always intelligent and dramatic . . . the minor roles were individually well taken and adjusted to the ensemble." Others in the cast were Marion Telva, Millo Picco, and Henriette Wakefield.

Lucrezia Bori was, in the words of this writer, "one of the best Neddas that has appeared at the Metropolitan in recent years." The writer in the Post found her song to the birds "a delight." Miguel Fleta, continued this commentator, "gave the prologue a lovely rendition. In the last scene he displayed passionate power, arousing his audience to enthusiastic applause." The Times writer said that he "naturally" made much of the role. Giuseppe Danise's Tonio was vocally praiseworthy, continued this chronicler, and Lawrence Tibbett "followed his habit of giving to every role he undertakes intensive and intelligent study." Agreed was the Post that his singing and acting "were marked by his customary and praiseworthy attention to detail."

The World reviewer commented that the "new background seemed to electrify the entire production and to give additional fire and accent to the music."

JEANNE GORDON

Contralto of the Metropolitan Opera as Vyvyan Donner Portrayed Her in the Part of Laura in Gioconda.

Rudolph Ganz Is Soloist With Detroit Orchestra

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 11. — Rudolph Ganz left his St. Louis Symphony Orchestra last week to be piano soloist at the regular pair of Detroit Symphony concerts at Orchestral Hall. He played Beethoven's First Piano Concerto, and later, the Symphonic Variations of Cesar Franck. According to R. H. in the Times Mr. Ganz played exceedingly well throughout.

"His technique is as flawless as ever and the tone he draws from his instrument is mellow and beautifully modulated," wrote Charlotte M. Tarsney in the Free Press. He gave "a brilliant lesson in sincere musicianship," said Cyril Arthur Player, the News reviewer, who found in the Franck Variations "that touch of boldness which was his dominant characteristic a dozen years ago." This writer liked Deems Taylor's Looking Glass Suite, played by the orchestra later. "The immortal illusion of Lewis Carroll is happily interpreted by Mr. Taylor" he believed. The reviewers were generally pleased with the work, and seemed agreed in their opinion of Mr. Gabrilowitsch's conducting of the entire program.

Guiomar Novaes in First N. Y. Recital

Makes Premiere Individual Appearance of Season After Absence of a Year.

An audience which over-flowed onto the stage applauded Guiomar Novaes, Brazilian pianist, at her recital in Aeolian Hall the afternoon of December 14. Of the critical audience, W. J. Henderson was particularly enthusiastic over her performance. He referred to Mme. Novaes as "singularly gifted" and although at times "capricious," always interesting and "frequently entrancing." In the Gluck Saint-Saens dance, "she treated her hearers to a display of dazzling virtuosity," Mr. Henderson continued. He felt, however, that it was more than a mere technical exhibition."

To him the entire afternoon was one of "brilliance and musical beauty" and proved Mme. Novaes "a pianist of the first rank." The Chopin B minor Sonata, according to the Herald Tribune reviewer, was marked by "freshness and individuality. Lightness of touch, subtle shading and sonorous vigor were equally features of Mme. Novaes' performance."

The writer in the Telegram-Mail thought Mme. Novaes' playing lacked the composure which it has shown in the past, and disapproved also of what he called "exaggerated rubati." Although Ernest Newman of the Post said that she "acquitted herself brilliantly enough as a pianist," he did not feel that her interpretation equalled her technique in excellence.

Samaroff Soloist With Orchestra

The Friends of Music in their fourth concert of the season at Town Hall on December 14 were assisted by Olga Samaroff, pianist, and Paul Eisler, cembalist. Mme. Samaroff played Mozart's Concerto in A major. In the Times her performance was lauded for "the beauty of the slow movement, in which she was at her best." Her reading was called "technically polished and emotionally plausible."

GRADOVA
Concert Pianist
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Duo Art Records Steinway Piano Fisk Building New York

STELLA de METTE
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Formerly with Metropolitan Opera
Touring with San Carlo Opera Co.
Exclusive Management of
ANTHONY BAGAROZY
Aeolian Hall New York

MARIE
BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

RE JOHN Mc CORMACK

"McCormack continues to give public lessons in the art of singing."
—W. J. Henderson in the N. Y. Sun.

"John McCormack is the greatest of singers."
—Glenn Dillard Gunn in The Chicago Herald-Examiner.

"McCormack is the finest singer of the day, man or woman, whatever the voice."
—Richard S. Davis in the Milwaukee Sentinel.

Barber of Seville Presented in Chicago

Mmes. Pareto and Claessens and Chaliapin, Schipa and Rimini Sing; Cimini Conducts

Chicago, Dec. 12.—"A merry performance" was what Karleton Hackett of the Post called the production of The Barber of Seville on Sunday afternoon by the Chicago Civic Opera Company. The audience, as well as the reviewers, gave evidence of enthusiastic enjoyment of the entertainment. In the cast were Feodor Chaliapin, Tito Schipa, Giacomo Rimini, Vittorio Trevisan, Graziella Pareto, and Maria Claessens. The conductor was Pietro Cimini.

The work of Tito Schipa was unanimously praised by the reviewers. Mr. Moore said his singing in the first act was "simply angelic." He exhibited, in Mr. Rosenfeld's opinion "the most beautiful of lyric tenor singing. He has the youth, the fun-loving spirit, and the real artistic temperament for this part." Mr. Hackett also thought that Mr. Schipa sang the first act "brilliantly."

The comedy between Chaliapin and Mr. Trevisan was particularly appreciated by Edward Moore of the Tribune. To him the way "they played up to each other was a lesson in the art of team work. They were perfect foils." The chroniclers were agreed that Chaliapin's art needed little analysis, and conceded that he, in the words of Mr. Hackett, "forms a class by himself."

In the words of Mr. Moore, Mr. Trevisan was "alert, quick of response, unfailingly funny in gesture and expression." Mr. Rosenfeld commented on his familiar "unaffected, spontaneous comedy."

Although Mr. Gunn, contrary to the other commentators, was far from enthusiastic about the performance in general, he found in Mr. Rimini qualities which he praised: "It remained for Mr. Rimini, sturdy of voice and always an animated interpreter of the title role, to supply Chaliapin his most important vocal competition."

This writer considered that Mme. Fareto "sang her opening aria with spirit" and Mr. Rosenfeld said that her songs were "delightfully rendered" with a "bird-like charm." Mr. Moore commended her for some "lovely coloratura singing." Mme. Claessens also received commendation. Mr. Hackett reported that she "did her part excellently."

Florence Macbeth is Gilda In Repetition of Rigoletto

Chicago, Dec. 11.—Rigoletto was repeated last night by the Chicago Civic Opera Company with three important changes in the cast. Florence Macbeth sang the role of Gilda, Alfred Piccaver that of the Duke, and Mr. Weber was in the conductor's stand.

Glenn Dillard Dunn of the Herald and Examiner hailed Miss Macbeth as "the greatest Gilda of the generation," Mr. Piccaver as one "whose voice is surely one of the phenomenal tenors of the world," and Mr. Weber as one of the youngest, "yet one of the best of opera conductors." Edward Moore in the Tribune agreed that "each of the newcomers made an undeniable success. Miss Macbeth was an ideally lovely Gilda.' He considered that Mr. Piccaver's singing was the best he had done in Chicago, and that the conductor proved about "as interesting a discovery as the season has brought out."

According to Maurice Rosenfeld of the News, Miss Macbeth sang the role with her usual impeccable "vocal clarity, flexibility, and musical interpretation." In Karleton Hackett's review in the Post, he reported that the soprano "sang the aria beautifully" with a pure tone and "fresh, maidenlike quality quite in the spirit of the music."

Mme. Muzio and Chaliapin Appear in Mefistofele

Chicago, Dec. 13.—Feodor Chaliapin in the role of Mefistofele given last Tuesday night by the Chicago Civic Opera Company roused the reviewers in today's local newspapers to unwonted praise. Edward Moore said, "Seeing him in the part is one of the great experiences of a lifetime." He was "master" of the performance, said Mr. Gunn in the Examiner. That Chaliapin dominated the scene impressed Maurice Rosenfeld of the News also.

Mme. Muzio sang the role of Marguerite. An "interpretation of intensity and power" as Mr. Rosenfeld called it. In her prison scene Mme. Muzio was so affecting that she brought forth a "demonstration from the public," wrote Mr. Hackett. The other accounts spoke of her as "intense" and "powerful."

Antonio Cortis as Faust was said to have improved on the reading given by former singers in the part, and Conductor Moranzoni evinced capable understanding of the orchestral possibilities of the opera, winning general approval. Cyrena Van Gordon and Gladys Swarthout were recorded as having done excellently.

PADEREWSKI AT HIS STEINWAY

STEINWAY

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

Only the most extraordinary instrument can meet the demands of the great pianists. It must give perfect voice alike to the exquisite cadences of Chopin, the blazing fervor of Liszt, the serene magnificence of Bach. It must endure years of the hardest daily practice. Always it must become a live and singing thing at a touch, ever responsive to the hand and spirit of the musician. And the perfect tribute to the supremacy of the Steinway lies in its use and ownership by such pianists as Paderewski and Hofmann, Rachmaninoff and Levitzki. So universal is this recognition that, where only sincerely artistic motives are involved, the Steinway is invariably the choice of the master pianists.

The Steinway is made in numerous styles and sizes, sold at the lowest possible price and upon the most convenient terms. The majority are bought by people of moderate means and limited incomes. Yet they are bought on the same sound principle of economy that determines their purchase by the great musicians—that of buying the best. Always the cheapest. Always the assurance of the greatest advantage and return to the owner. You need never buy another piano.

There is a Steinway dealer in your community or near you through whom you may purchase a new Steinway piano with a small cash deposit, and the balance will be extended over a period of two years. *Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

Prices: $875 and up

Plus transportation

Steinway & Sons, Steinway Hall
109 East Fourteenth Street, New York

Musical Chicago En Courant

Comment on Opera Flies Thick and Fast; Dramatic Critic Praises Acting.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Dec. 17.

THE superb to supine scale of performances by the forces of the Chicago Civic Opera has called forth a deluge of comment from press and public. In fact, the public has been rushing to press rather more than to the box office of the Auditorium. Constructive criticism has been offered in large quantities, ranging from sane advice to ridiculous foolery.

Patrons objecting to public rehearsals in place of performances have right on their side. Bad casting of inefficient singers is another just cause for complaint. Words of praise for the really good things, however, hopefully leaven the bread of discontent.

So, of last week's repertoire, Rigoletto touched the low spots as well as the high; Lakme favored the low, in spite of Schipa's valiant efforts of admirable singing to raise the level. The Jewels of the Madonna and Le Jongleur de Notre Dame, with Garden's Jean, were impressively done.

The Jewels belongs peculiarly to Chicago. Its growth and success has been almost entirely here. As long as the cast remains as Saturday's its popularity here is assured. Never has Raisa seemed more moved by the role of Maliella. No inhibitions in this performance. Each of the long cast fitted into the whole. Lamont counts Gennaro his role as Raisa does Maliella, and the two accomplished individual bits of character drawing.

SPEAKING of acting in Grand Opera, Ashton Stevens, who pens observations on the drama, has found the best of acting of the season at the Auditorium. Chaliapin and Garden are his subjects, and his comments appear pertinent.

Florence Macbeth found herself the recipient of praise after her Gilda on Wednesday night. The purity of her song and her engaging youth fit her perfectly for the role. Chicago likes Macbeth and would welcome her even more frequently than now.

No, No, Nanette is evidently the favorite diversion of the opera stars off duty. Schipa, who is particularly fond of musical comedy, has been again and again. The last time his appreciation took the form of a supper to the entire company. Incidentally it is no secret that our Tito is no beginner as a composer of operetta himself. His latest score received reciprocal commendation from the talented conductor of No, No, Nanette. So many talents wrapped up in one small package!

Edith Mason confides that she is in the process of becoming a coloratura. Fra Diavolo is undoubtedly the teacher. As Miss Mason is reticent of her high E's in her more familiar roles, she promises to cast them about light heartedly on Friday evening.

CHAMBER MUSIC is becoming a popular and not uncommon observance in Chicago, to judge by the increasing number of concerts. Gratifyingly these are young combinations, with the eagerness and seriousness of youth. This last week brought out three such concerts. The Chicago String Quartet is an outgrowth of one formed during the war at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, and proved itself a first class organization in an interesting program on Sunday.

The Muenzer Trio gave its second performance of the season to an appreciative audience, and Arthur Zack, cellist, and Rosalie Saalfeld, pianist, in the second program of their series, gave a first performance in this part of the world of a sonata for cello and piano by the French composer, Guy Ropartz.

Moriz Rosenthal, of the brilliant anecdotage, was a recent visitor to our lake shore. He announces that he has been obliged to postpone his Master Classes at the Gunn School because of the press of concert engagements. One of his stories bears on a recent visit of the eccentric Pachmann to St. Louis. In his audience were several music loving negroes, one of whom later called on him begging the favor of an extra hearing. "All right," replied Pachmann; "I shall play you something special." So he played the Chopin Etude for black keys alone. "Pachmann's only joke," slyly added Rosenthal.

CHICAGO recitalists have been busy doing their Christmas recital giving early. Ernst Bacon represented the piano department, Rubin Davis presented delightful violin playing, and two contraltos added dark and varied songs, Cyrena Van Gordon aiding the Haydn Choral Society's benefit concert for the Junior High School, while Mina Hager offered a very modern program with a group each of Carpenter, Bax, Sowerby and de Falla, not omitting those two arch enemies, Strauss and Weingartner, interlocked forgivingly in one group.

Mr. Stock is adept in arranging the right program for the right time. So last week's symphony concert reflected holiday joyousness in its make-up. For solid foundation the Beethoven Eighth was the symphony, played in a way to induce Glenn Gunn to the expressed wish that all students of the piano might hear such a lesson in Beethoven. He might have added, all students of music. Tramonti's gilded harp has become almost a tradition for Christmas, like plum pudding or mince pie. Last week he chose Widor's chorale and variations. The real Christmas delight of the program was found in the Palmgren From Finland, a set of four symphonic pictures, Spring Dreams, Minuet, Dance of the Falling Leaves, and Sleigh Ride.

This week the orchestra rests. Mr. Stock, too, is taking a rare and well deserved vacation in a brief trip with his daughter to North Carolina.

Chicago Opera Gives Lakme

New Conductor in Debut; Le Jongleur de Notre Dame Is Revived.

Chicago, Dec. 15.—Delibes' Lakme was given by the Civic Opera Company Thursday night. It was the occasion of a conductor's debut, Charles Lauwers making his first bow. The performance was reported a mild success, with no great moments excepting only parts of Tito Schipa's singing or the Bell Song by Mme. Pareto.

The "warm tone" and "light touch" of Mr. Schipa won the commendation of Mr. Hackett; for his singing in the first two acts Maurice Rosenfeld held him responsible for "what zest" there was in the performance. Mr. Moore agreed with him.

Mr. Lauwers, the conductor, got what he could out of the opera, according to Glenn Dillard Gunn in the Examiner, while Karleton Hackett was specially pleased with the "tone of rich quality" obtained from the orchestra. Edward Moore of the Tribune qualified his praise of the new conductor, whom he thought had wielded "safely" but not "thrillingly." Maurice Rosenfeld in the Daily News thought that more charm and grace could be got from the opera.

There was less concordance in discussion of Graziella Pareto in the title role. With a not large voice, this coloratura pleased by her "crystalline" tone and "perfect" taste both Mr. Gunn and Mr. Hackett. Not even her Bell Song thrilled the Tribune reviewer, who found her "reticent."

The News reviewer thought the role of Nilakanta not "convincing" as developed by Edouard Cotreuil, although Desire Defrere was thought to carry the part of Frederick in his usual "debonaire manner."

A French revival was one of the operas offered on Saturday afternoon's program. This was a presentation of Massenet's miracle play, Le Jongleur de Notre Dame, with Mary Garden and Charles Hackett. This role was thought by Mr. Moore to be "about her finest," as he recorded in the Tribune, done with "gentle pathos, unfailingly deft." Mr. Rosenfeld said of Mr. Polacco's reading that it was "highly artistic," accentuating the opera's "mysticism." The beauty of orchestral performance was noted by other reviewers. Alexander Kipnis as the Prior was praiseworthy, if lacking in "sympathy," according to Mr. Moore.

At the Saturday's matinee was Wolf-Ferrari's Jewels of the Madonna, a contrast with its realism to the French work. Rosa Raisa's vivid performance of the wayward Italian brought the approval of the reviewers, Mr. Hackett stressing her "fine voice, warmth and brilliance." Mme. Claessens "was excellent" and Mr. Lamont "sang with fervor." Mr. Cimini conducted to the satisfaction of everybody. A "well balanced performance" Mr. Rosenfeld called it.

Enjoying International Popularity

STEFI GEYER

has now impressed New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Baltimore, etc., etc.

The New York Times, December 10, 1924

"STEFI GEYER PLAYS AGAIN

"Hungarian Violinist at Her Best in the More Serious Works.

"Stefi Geyer, the Hungarian violinist, gave her second New York recital at Town Hall last evening. The size of the audience and its warmth showed that Mme. Geyer has already won a following in this city. The Spohr concerto with which she opened her program ran practically the whole gamut of technical knowledge, and she played it with a variety of intonation and with an all-round facility which impressed her hearers very favorably.

"The trueness of her tone, its fullness and tunefulness and her interesting continuity carried her victoriously through the Bach chaconne. The depth and breadth of her legato was properly appreciated in a fine aria by Reger, and great applause rewarded her reading of the Tartini-Kreisler fugue."

Miss Geyer Will Return for an Extended Tour Jan. 1, 1925.

DATES NOW BEING BOOKED

Exclusive Management: M. H. HANSON

437 5th Avenue, New York

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Charles Stratton

Charles Stratton, tenor, made his New York debut as a recitalist at Aeolian Hall December 11. According to the World this "was a thoroughly refreshing performance with a novel and stimulating program. His voice is rugged for this type of tenor, with curious rough edges which are oddly pleasant, and with unusual depth and vigor."

The writer in the Herald Tribune said that "generally, Mr. Stratton sang with a smooth, fluent quality of tone of agreeable warmth, though some top notes produced a harder quality . . . the young tenor also showed a capacity for full, clear and resonant topnotes, showing power without strain."

In the delivery of some of his songs, he was, to quote the reviewer in the Sun, "commendable in the simplicity and directness of his style." This commentator found his pronunciation clear, "but not always faultless." The Telegram-Mail chronicler did not find his diction at all clear. His voice, according to this writer, was too nasal for any true resonance. Ernest Newman wrote in the Post that the rigidity of his voice hardened the tone and minimized its variety of color.

Christian Science Oratorio

A concert of religious music was given last Tuesday evening by the Christain Science Institute at the Metropolitan Opera House. The two hundred voices were directed by John Warren Erb and the program included much music written to poems of Mary Baker Eddy. Fraser Gange, baritone, was the assisting artist. He sang in Manuel Klein's cantata, The Lord Is My Strength, with "admirable style," to quote the Sun reviewer.

The Harvest Song, words by Mrs. Augusta Stetson, set to music by Kitty Cheatham, a member of the Institute and soloist as well on this occasion, was arranged for chorus, by Percy Grainger, and received an "impressive" first reading according to the Post. The Sun account commended the work of the large chorus, which was said to give "evidence of much rehearsing." An ample audience refrained from applauding, as is customary at these concerts because of their religious nature.

Give Artist Series Concert

Wanda Landowska, harpsichordist, together with Paul Kochanski, violinist, Rene Pollain, violist, and Ewssei Belousoff, cellist, gave a concert of chamber music at Carnegie Hall, New York, on December 12, in the artist's series for the local Association of Music School Settlements. The Herald Tribune chronicler was impressed with the fact that "the co-operating artists, each of them an accomplished virtuoso, blended their separate personalities in an ensemble of rare beauty and symmetry." Both this reviewer and Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail objected that Carnegie Hall was too large to be an ideal auditorium for chamber music, although, nevertheless, they enjoyed the concert.

Miss Laura Stroud

A new pianist, Laura Stroud, made her debut in Aeolian Hall, New York, Wednesday evening. The reviewers found the recital both commendable and interesting. "Breadth of feeling and sensitive skill" were qualities in her playing which were admired by the World writer. The chronicler of the Times was charmed with her "true musicianly qualities of clarity and delicacy." What interested the Sun reporter most was the manner in which Miss Stroud "played with restraint and calculated her dynamic effects with nicety" and the way "her clarity of technique enabled her to present much of her program to great advantage." In addition to displaying a "very competent technique and the vigor necessary to the Chopin Sonata," in the words of the Herald Tribune writer, Miss Stroud gave the Bach Partita "a lucid, clear-cut and far from academic performance."

Victor Wittgenstein

Edward MacDowell's Sonata Tragica was played by Victor Wittgenstein at his Aeolian Hall recital December 12. Mr. Wittgenstein, who was a pupil of this composer, was commended by the Post writer for "the sincerty with which he approaches his task." According to the Herald Tribune commentator, he displayed "the skillful and brilliant technique which has marked his previous recitals, with much emphasis in his fortes, and sharply marked contrasts."

The reviewer in the Sun liked the unconventionality of his program as well as the skill with which he played it. In the Times it was reported that "his authoritative performance pleased an audience undiminished by the approaching holidays now affecting concert halls."

Miss Blanche Reycelle

A piano recital which brought forth commendation from the critics was that of Blanche Reycelle at Aeolian Hall last Wednesday. The Times writer hailed her as "a young star of unusual magnitude, her technical equipment was close to the marvelous, stormy brio, sweeping rhythm, thunderous dynamics, scales at express speed, interspersed with passages of the most delicate nuances, were among the weapons in her armory."

The Herald Tribune observer considered her work of "considerable energy and brilliance" and that she played the Mozart Adagio in B minor "with delicacy of touch and clearness of outline." In the Paderewski Sonata, Op. 21, in E flat minor, her technical ability was particularly well demonstrated, according to this writer. The World writer commented that Miss Reycelle "plays with a vigorous accent which sometimes gives the refreshing effect of eager enthusiasm."

W. J. Henderson of the Sun found her "a young pianist with unquestionable talent, which is not yet completely disciplined." Writing in the Telegram-Mail, Herbert Peyser admitted that she displayed "vitality and technical assurance" in the Paderewski number, but thought the playing became monotonous because of lack of nuance.

Russian Soprano Gives Recital

Vera Amazar, Russian soprano, who was heard here last season with the Russian comedian Borissoff, gave a recital at Aeolian Hall the evening of December 14. The Sun reviewer reported that "Mme. Amazar's many and evident charms were a delight to the eye. Her voice revealed power and resonance and her offerings of a popular character were received with much applause." This writer, however, considered that the Russian songs were the most effective and sung the best. In the Herald Tribune, Mme. Amazar was commended for a "voice of satisfactory volume," although this commentator thought that occasionally her voice had a "rather metallic timbre."

Maxim Karolik

A recital of Russian, French and Italian songs was given at the New York debut of Maxim Karolik, December 15, in Aeolian Hall. The general impression of this new singer seemed one of mild commendation coupled with criticism of his "pinched and restricted" tones, to quote the Sun reviewer, who preferred his lighter numbers. This statement continued to say that Mr. Karolik possessed "considerable dramatic instinct" and that three new songs by Alfred Casella, sung here for the first time, were "interesting, colorful, decidedly modern in structure and adequately mediaeval in atmosphere."

The Herald Tribune reviewer seemed to find the interpretative talent in the first songs by Tschaikowsky and in his final Russian group. This account stated that his tone, while not of "large volume, showed an agreeable, smooth quality." The World liked the Chausson number and the Times mentioned specifically the last group with Balakireff's Call to Freedom.

Messrs. Stoessel and Loesser

The program presented by Albert Stoessel, violinist, and Arthur Loesser, pianist, for the Andiron Club at Town Hall, New York, last Tuesday evening met with warm approval. One novelty was offered, the fugue from the Bach-Godowsky Violin Sonata in G minor, arranged for piano, which did not compete formidably, in the estimation of the Post reviewer, with other numbers played by Mr. Loesser. These he interpreted with "characteristic spirit and delicacy," continued the Post. The "unspectacular but beautiful playing" of Mr. Stoessel was called "a delight" by the reviewer. The Herald Tribune said of Mr. Loesser's playing that it was marked by "unusually polished, fluent runs." The World found the evening agreeable.

Mr. Loesser and Mr. Stoessel played together the C minor Beethoven Sonata. The concert was the club's eighth musical for the benefit of its publication fund.

The New Contralto of the Chicago Opera

AUGUSTA LENSKA

is rapidly rising in public favor

HER CONCERT APPEARANCES WILL BE A SURPRISE

AT CHICAGO ON DECEMBER 6TH SHE SANG

AZUCENA IN "IL TROVATORE"

Cordial and prolonged applause greeted her after the camp scene.
She was called before the curtain many times.
The Press commended her performance in an unmistakable manner.

Adolph Muhlmann in The Abendpost said:

"Her high register must have been the cause of envy of many a soprano. The tones produced were of faultless purity. I mean to say that there is no shading up or down. Her notes are always true."

And Karleton Hackett in The Evening Post:

"Her voice was mellow in quality and she sang with understanding of the music. Her voice was a little light for some of the full climaxes, but she had it under good control and did not force."

And Herman Devries in Evening American:

"Augusta Lenska sang 'Azucena' for the first time and added thereby proof of our conviction that she is a valuable acquisition to the Auditorium."

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Miss Lenska has been engaged for the Spartanburg May 1925, Festival.

Management: M. H. HANSON, 437 Fifth Avenue, New York

THE CRITICAL SCALES

New York Philharmonic Society

Igor Stravinsky's Firebird Suite was offered by Willem van Hoogstraten at the Philharmonic concert December 14. Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the soloist, played Mozart's piano concerto in D minor. His playing was again hailed as "delightful" by the Sun. The Herald Tribune reviewer said that he played "with a limpid beauty and clarity, a justness of proportion, a poise and authority, not soon to be forgotten," and Ernest Newman wrote in the Post that it was "an exquisitely fine-pointed performance." The Telegram-Mail characterized his work as "engagingly beautiful"

The revised Firebird Suite, according to the Tribune, "is beautiful and fascinating music." Mr. van Hoogstraten, wrote the Sun commenator, played this "interesting and often captivating music with beauty of tone and finish, though there might have been a little more sparkle and brilliance." The Dvorak Second Symphony concluded the program.

Charles Tomlinson Griffe's tone poem, The Pleasure Dome of Kubla Khan, after Coleridge, was played for the first time by this orchestra, Mr. van Hoogstraten conducting, at the concert on December 11. Olin Downes said in the Times that the music has "a gorgeous instrumental scheme and a pregnant sensuous beauty." According to W. J. Henderson of the Sun, it is "a genuinely good composition, with brilliant mood contrast." Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune found pages in it of real beauty and harmonic distinction.

Huberman Gives New York Concert

At his second Carnegie Hall recital which took place December 14, Bronislaw Huberman played four important numbers; Beethoven's Kreutzer Sonata, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor, the Mendelssohn Concerto, and Wieniawski's Fantasy on Faust. According to the Herald Tribune reporter, Mr. Huberman played with customary technical skill and "dash," although with a tone "not of the largest volume, but of a clear and ingratiating quality."

Give Puccini Memorial Program

Charlotte Lund, assisted by N. Val Peavey, was heard December 14 at the Princess Theatre in a Puccini memorial opera recital. Principal numbers of La Boheme, as well as excerpts from Madame Butterfly, Manon Lescaut, and Tosca, were given.

St. George's Choir

The first appearance of St. George's Choir outside of its choir loft took place at Town Hall on December 11. Harry T. Burleigh, negro composer, took part in the program and sang a group of his own spirituals. The choir of 110 singers, adults and children, sang under the direction of George W. Kemmer, organist and choirmaster at St. George's. Other assisting artists were Mozelle Bennett, Helen Child Curtis, and George Bagdasarian.

According to the writer in the Sun, "the unity" of the chorus was excellent and its intonation admirable . . . the sound training and the phrasing and balance of the tone were deserving of high praise." The Herald Tribune reviewer found the tone of the choir "of large volume and commendable quality" and that they combined spirit with "precision and accuracy" in their singing.

Mr. Burleigh's singing, in the words of the Sun commentator, was "a delight and a revelation of the inimitable characteristics and pathos of these familiar favorites." He displayed "a voice of soft, expressive quality," according to the Herald Tribune. Other writers commended his work, as well as that of the choir, and the Times Chronicler had a special word of praise for the "fine, tuneful legato and nice musical taste" displayed by Miss Mozelle.

Ignace Hilsberg

Another of the winners in the Stadium Concert competitions of last summer, Ignace Hilsberg, pianist, made his prize recital appearance in New York on December 14 at Aeolian Hall.

His technic and variety of expression were especially stressed in the newspaper reviews, the Herald Tribune recording that he seemed able to "handle any difficulties" presented by his program, and that his playing was "brilliant" in bravura passages. Although his energy made some of these "hard," this reviewer found him able to "handle lighter numbers" as well, such as Armand Marsick's Au Crepuscule (first time here), and Godowsky arrangements of Rameau, Sgambati, Korngold and Albeniz. The Times found his interpretation of Beethoven not according to a "stereotyped formula," but one with "breadth, depth and color." The Sun also spoke of Mr. Hilsberg's "technical fluency, power, and vigor."

Donna Ortensia

A song recital was given at Aeolian Hall Wednesday afternoon by Donna Ortensia, Italian soprano. To quote the writer in the Herald Tribune: "With a voice of good size and considerable range, the singer gave a performance distinguished by a tone of a warm though not always smooth quality and marked interpretative ability."

The Times reporter found her program interesting in its variety, covering German, French, Italian and Roumanian songs. The World chronicler commented particularly upon Mme. Ortensia's charming appearance and personality which helped to create the mood for her songs. He thought her voice one of natural beauty, although marred, at times, by unevenness. "But above all this," continued the writer, "is an ability to extract the spirit and essence from her music which would transcend even more serious technical flaws." The commentator in the Sun noted this occasional faulty tone production, too, but he also considered that "intelligent grasp of the texts of her songs was unfailing and her dramatic sense keen and vivid." He complimented Donna Ortensia upon her clear and distinct diction.

Orchestral Society Opens Season

In its first concert of the season the American Orchestral Society conducted by Chalmers Clifton, played Brahms' Second Symphony, the Elgar Variations, and Lalo's Spanish Symphony last Tuesday evening in the McMillan Academic Theatre of Columbia University. In the Lalo work Herman Rosen was solo violinist.

Mischa Mischakoff

Mischa Mischakoff, who won the Stadium prize in 1923 for his violin playing and who is in his first season as concertmaster of the New York Symphony Orchestra, drew varied comment on his recital last Wednesday evening at Town Hall. The reviewers the next day generally approved his "marked talent" as the Herald Tribune expressed it, this account revealing that he played with "some unevenness of tone," but in the Handel number developed "mellowness and warmth."

The Post observer liked his program, which, besides the Sonata in E major, included principally Albert Spalding's twelve Etchings and the Paganini D major Concerto. Saga by Godowsky was marked "first time." The Times took pleasure in his Handelian "warmth," while the Post considered two Etchings stood out. Mr. Peyser of the Telegram much preferred these and the Paganini to his Handel, marred, he thought, by "honeyed" disrepose.

Little Symphony Ends Season

George Barrere's Little Symphony Orchestra gave the sixth and last of its Sunday concerts in the Henry Miller Theater December 14. Guy Maier and Lee Pattison assisted the players in an arrangement for two pianos of C. P. E. Bach's harpsichord Concerto in E flat. Other numbers were by Griffes, Rameau, Lulli, Lacombe, and Pierne. The reviewer in the Sun regretted the completion of "this deft and ingratiating musical series which has progressed so happily through its season under the wise and witty guidance of its conductor."

CONCERNING THE UNEQUIVOCAL SUCCESS OF

Mme. Helen Stanley

CHICAGO, DECEMBER 7

Herman Devries in the American says:

"Helen Stanley Is Singing Better Than Ever."

"At the Studebaker Theatre Madame Helen Stanley, resplendent, radiant, lovely, in better voice than at any time in her career, gave a song recital to the delectation of an enthusiastic audience of admirers, eager to welcome this admirable singer who has not been heard here frequently enough since the days of her VERY FINE DONNA ELVIRA under Campanini's regime." Etc.

Maurice Rosenfeld in the News says:

"Helen Stanley, the lyric soprano, will be PLEASANTLY REMEMBERED BY MANY CHICAGO MUSIC LOVERS FOR HER OPERATIC WORK HERE WITH OUR COMPANY some years ago. She has infrequently visited us since. But yesterday afternoon she reappeared, resplendent, beautiful to look upon, and vocally most effective, in a recital at the Studebaker Theatre. In these poetic songs Mme. Stanley advanced the highest form of art, in the beautiful quality of her pure, lyric voice, in her refinement of interpretation and in the authority of the musical rendition."

Edward Moore in the Tribune says:

"Helen Stanley's song recital at the Studebaker Theatre yesterday afternoon was quite as attractive and perhaps better singing than when SHE WAS A SOPRANO IN THE CHICAGO OPERA COMPANY A FEW YEARS AGO. Which is another way of saying that a fine voice of fine training did excellent things with an exacting program. She is an artist in whom to take pleasure." Etc.

Eugene Stinson in the Journal says:

"HELEN STANLEY'S NAME SUGGESTS HAPPY OPERATIC MEMORIES AT THE AUDITORIUM. If they are content with these, however, they are denying themselves fine pleasure in the recital hall. The soprano has discrimination and poise. She knows what she is about, and part of her business is to convey a sense of beauty, of taste and of charm. The rest consists largely of the none too simple virtue of singing each song on a list for all it is worth."

Glenn Dillard Gunn in the Herald and Examiner says:

"HELEN STANLEY, WHO ONCE DELIGHTED PATRONS OF THE CHICAGO OPERA, returned to exhibit THE LOVELIEST SOPRANO VOICE THAT HAS BEEN HEARD THIS SEASON IN CONCERT. The Studebaker was filled with her admirers, who were rewarded for their good memories."

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Management: LOUDON CHARLTON
Carnegie Hall, New York.

MASON & HAMLIN PIANO

Anton BILOTTI Pianist

Management: Lionel Powell & Holt, London, England

Steinway Piano — Welte-Mignon Records Exclusively

ELSA ALSEN

Famous Wagnerian Dramatic Soprano

Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG 1425 Broadway, New York City

GABRILOWITSCH

As a Conductor Takes Berlin by Storm

Long Paeans of Praise, without one single negative note, fill the Berlin press, of which the following are but a few random extracts:

DIE ZEIT Berlin, September 14, 1924.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, with amazing mastery over the greatest technical difficulties, splendidly supported by the Philharmonic Orchestra, gave a beautiful performance of works by three of our greatest composers—Beethoven, Brahms, and Schumann. He who like Gabrilowitsch can give us the entire scale of human emotions from suppressed sobs to overwhelming cries of pain, from happiest harmony to exultant songs of triumph, as in Schumann's Symphony, he who can interpret the force, impetuosity, and dramatic spirit of Brahms—for him no praise is too high.

BERLINER TAGEBLATT.
Berlin, September 16, 1924.

Gabrilowitsch has returned to us after an absence of many years. At the head of our Philharmonic Orchestra he made a profound impression. We remember him as a pianist of romantic nature, fine poetic conception, and keen intelligence. Spirituality was ever his predominating quality. This is also true of him as conductor. One feels sure that he would never do anything foreign to the inner meaning of the composition. He commands the craft to the point of perfect mastery. Quiet and dignified in his bearing, a combination of fine impulsiveness with compelling self-control, he reminds one of Nikisch. His technique is beyond criticism. He conducts from memory, never using a score, and is as thoroughly familiar with the musical contents of each work as with the nature and resources of the orchestra.

His interpretations disclosed treasures of rarest beauty. There was always the true, deep, finely perceptive musician. No exaggerated attention was given to detail—always was the composition as a whole given a reading thoroughly in keeping with the purity of its style.

The most perfect of all was the performance of Schumann's D minor Symphony in which complete harmony prevailed between the work and its interpreter, a spirit of affinity between the latter and the wondrous romanticist. Brahms made a highly impressive close to the evening. Here also was everything manly and profound. Particularly beautiful were the romantic episodes of the first and second movements.

The orchestra supported the leader with enthusiasm. Gabrilowitsch must have realized by the warmth of applause that burst forth how deeply he had satisfied and impressed all connoisseurs and friends of the art of conducting.

(Dr. Leopold Schmidt).

WELT-RUNDSCHAU Berlin, September 13, 1924.

What a man that brilliantly glittering youth has become! He belongs now in the small circle of truly great conductors. One who can interpret Beethoven, Brahms, and particularly Schumann as he does will find no task beyond him. He conducts everything from memory, never overlooks the smallest detail, keeps a keen eye on every instrument, builds up every climax with impressive simplicity and carries his interpretations to magnificent heights. The middle movements of the Beethoven and Brahms symphonies were full of irresistible charm, the transition from Beethoven's Menuett to the Finale surprisingly original, the closing pages of gigantic grandeur. As for the Schumann Symphony, it proved at the hands of this masterly interpreter to be one of the most profound musical experiences of recent years. The tenderness of the Romanza and the mysticism of the Finale were the highest points of the performance. An audience of huge size in a tempestuous ovation expressed its appreciation of his amazingly natural, maturely developed art. (Heinrich Maurer).

SIGNALE FUR DIE MUSIKALISCHE WELT. Berlin, September 17, 1924.

His is an earnest, mature, full-fledged musical nature, one who always has something significant to say and who, thanks to relentless self-criticism, is never satisfied with any half-way achievement. It is gratifying indeed to encounter an artist of his type.

His program gave proof of glowing devotion to the compsers of the classic and romantic period: Beethoven's First Symphony, Schumann's Fourth, and Brahms' C minor Symphony—a task of huge dimensions which Gabrilowitsch fulfilled in a magnificent way, receiving a highly deserved ovation at the end.

Gabrilowitsch as conductor is in a class by himself. While in certain technical details one may be reminded of eminent prototypes such as Nikisch and Weingartner, yet his total achievement is a wholly personal one, springing altogether from his own individual conception. Intelligence and sensitiveness, temperament and clever analysis, limpid clarity and complete abandon to the inspiration of the moment, energy and rhythmic precision, strength and tenderness combine in him to a fortunate union. An ever reliable feeling for style and a perfect command of technique are added to his other qualities. His interpretation of the young Beethoven vibrating with natural freshness and sincerity roused the audience to enthusiastic applause. The suggestive force emanating from the conductor's stand through convincing yet simple gestures was compellingly communicated to the musicians who willingly bowed to his command.

The masterpiece of the evening was Schumann's D minor Symphony conceived in true romantic spirit and given with spontaneity and dignity of speech. This composition requires just such an interpreter who with love and understanding of the composer's intentions is able to re-create them in every detail. In the first and last movements there were high points of absolutely overwhelming grandeur beside the exquisite lyricism of the Romanza. Brahms received a congenial interpretation in which the big line was never lost, the innermost meaning was eloquently brought out and the transition to the Finale reached a tremendous climax.

Unending ovations rang through the hall. We know now that in Gabrilowitsch we have a conductor of the very first rank and of mighty stature. (Prof. Max Chop).

ALLGEMEINE MUSIK-ZEITUNG. Berlin, September 12, 1924.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch is a name we very unwillingly missed for a long time. This season which has opened so sensationally has brought his return, and what it means to us could be measured by the huge crowd which in festive mood filled the great hall of the Philharmonie. In the ten years that we have not seen him the splendid pianist has achieved a metamorphosis, or rather has experienced a higher artistic development, adopting the profession of conducting. Let it be said at once that in Gabrilowitsch the conductor we find again the full-blooded, genuine, all-embracing musicianship of Gabrilowitsch the pianist whom we had so often enjoyed before the war. The program was by no means intended to display virtuosity or personal attainments. It aroused immediate confidence in the high standard of the conductor's aspirations and ideals. It did not require the absence of a desk and score to convince one that this artist really made music "par coeur," his whole heart vibrating in unison with the music. It was soon evident that he knew how to make the orchestra serve his inner musical demands as if it were a piano. His technically sure and effective command of the baton characterizes an elastic vivacious rhythm as vividly as a warm melodic line and in spite of a somewhat violent temperament one was amazed at the self-control and clarity with which he disclosed the symphonic network and exposed the spiritual contents of the three works. With a strong inner impulsiveness he performed the Finale and roused not only the audience to great enthusiasm but inspired the musicians to give their very best. In the D minor Symphony of Schumann (which is generally so carefully avoided by conductors) he showed so much delicacy and melodic grace, so much beauty of color that this work seemed imbued with the charm of novelty. In the Brahms symphony he rose to stupendous grandeur.

The enthusiastic audience recalled Gabrilowitsch a dozen times and brought the orchestra to its feet in acknowledgment of the tempestuous applause. (Martin Friedland).

BERLINER ZEIT AM MITTAG September 11, 1924

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, for several years conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, appeared at the head of our Philharmonic Orchestra. Gabrilowitsch impresses one immediately as a conductor who receives his impulse from the spirit of the music; a disciple of Nikisch from whom he learned the best—but he offers his own variation of this theme. The fundamental lines of his conducting are set by the large conception and deep understanding of the music. Gabrilowitsch, a dignified, aristocratic figure before the audience, gives his signs clearly and precisely. But within this precison and clarity there lives charm. Ethereal grace pervaded his performance of the early Beethoven symphony. The lightness of the second movement, the gayety of the Menuett, the humor of the Finale—all this from beginning to end showed exceptional delicacy and finesse.

In Schumann great warmth was felt. The romantic spirit was drawn into song. The transition from the intimate music of the Romanza to the great closing accents was interpreted in the most persuasive way by the conductor; indeed this D minor Symphony lent glory to his power of interpretation.

All the rare qualities of his conducting were even more emphasized in Brahms, so that we experienced one of the most impressive performances of the C minor Symphony ever heard. It was convincing because it sprang from deepest conviction. Gabrilowitsch possesses in rare degree the ability to express passion and yet control it. An inner fire burns within him. He is the epitome of rhythm. The Andante became sheer poetry under his baton and has rarely been so romantically sung. The musicians were completely under his sway and the luscious tone quality of the string and wind choirs reached the high mark of perfection.

Gabrilowitsch has introduced himself to Berlin as a conductor of exceptional attainments. (Professor Adolf Weissmann).

BERLINER LOKAL ANZEIGER. September 17, 1924.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch conducted three Symphonies from memory at the head of the Philharmonic Orchestra, and gave interpretations of deep maturity of expression, grandeur of conception and clear rhythmic precision. The immediate impression was that Gabrilowitsch who, without any exaggerated gestures, has the orchestra completely under his sway, is a born leader. The audience recognized this by showering tempestuous applause upon the conductor as well as the orchestra, who had to rise from their seats and share the honors. (Paul Ertel).

BERLINER MORGANPOST. September 20. 1924

A great surprise was afforded us by Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the great Russian pianist whom we have missed in our concert halls all too long. He appeared at the head of the Philharmonic Orchestra before a large audience that filled the Philharmonie. One looked in vain for a piano, not even was a conductor's stand to be seen. It was an amazing experience, for it developed that Gabrilowitsch was not only a conductor of the highest rank but that he conducted as if he had never done anything else all his life. For several years he has been directing in Detroit one of the finest Symphony orchestras existing in the United States.

Gabrilowitsch, who as interpreter of the entire piano literature, was always the keenest, most spiritual in his understanding of the works he played, never neglecting the architecture of their construction, now as conductor, draws also a majestic big line. In his first concert (which we are glad to say will soon be followed by a second) Gabrilowitsch asserted himself as splendid interpreter of the classic and romantic periods. Beethoven, Schumann, and Brahms formed the program of the evening. Of course, it was to be expected that a highly cultured artist of Gabrilowitsch's calibre would sound the depths and extract all the treasures concealed in these works, for he is one who, having complete technical command even to conducting everything without notes, possesses besides the ability to present with perfect clarity the development of the symphonic work from its innermost concept. His technique of the baton is aesthetically satisfying, clearly defined in its controlling gestures for each choir, being no less precise for the melodic than for the rhythmic values. Only one who has so keen a sense of beauty of tone quality and the convincing power of presenting the music as he feels it can fully exhaust the riches of Brahms and Schumann whose romantic natures are closely akin to his own. The audience responded to this stupendous performance of the conductor by enthusiastic applause after each number.

In the second concert Gabrilowitsch will give us Russian compositions and will himself play Mozart's piano concerto. Our pleasure in anticipation is unlimited.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

PERSISTENCE, declares Jessie Christian, is a fundamental quality in the success of anyone who is serious in achieving a career. And Miss Christian ought to know, for it is through keeping everlastingly at it that she has gained a character of music recognition which many are striving for today.

Her soprano voice was accounted unusual enough—some time after she was named Jessie Isabel—to justify her being sent to Paris to study. The foreigners who heard her voice called it "sympatica."

Time passed, and finally came the night of Miss Christian's opera debut. Then she was heard at the Teatre Gaite, at the Municipal, the Malakoff, the Marigny, and at the Paris Opera Comique.

Matters were proceeding encouragingly when the war started, in 1914. That settled the immediate present at that time, so far as continued opportunities were concerned, and Miss Christian returned to her home in Chicago.

But good fortune did not desert her. "I persisted," she explained, "with the result that one day Director Campanini of the Chicago Opera Company found it necessary to secure some one to replace Mme. Galli-Curci in the performance of Les Huguenots . . . the diva having become suddenly indisposed."

The outcome? Why, Miss Christian was engaged as a regular member of the Chicago organization. Later she stepped into the place of Mme. Melba, who became indisposed, singing Marguerite in Faust.

Photo by Strauss-Peyton
JESSIE CHRISTIAN

Still, it was the concert field which the soprano believed was her metier. She has devoted herself to it exclusively for the past several years . . . her sphere being the middle and far west. Incidentally, Miss Christian is one of those artists who are blessed with re-engagements.

Golschmann Leads N. Y. Symphony

The concert of the Symphony Society in Carnegie Hall Thursday afternoon was conducted by Vladimir Golschmann, who has come from Paris as guest conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra, who conducted one concert of the Society last year.

Olin Downes wrote in the Times that Mr. Golschmann "gave proof of his musicianship, his admirable conductor's technique, and the talent that was recognized when he appeared here last season." The reviewers were agreed that the conductor was most successful with modern compositions. Ernest Newman of the Post considered "the best piece of playing of the afternoon was in Moussorgsky's Night on the Bald Mountain." Although Mr. Newman did not like the first part of the program, he wrote: "The concluding stages of this were so finely handled as to deepen the conviction that in some of the other works we were not getting the best of Mr. Golschmann."

Agreed was Deems Taylor of the World who wrote that "the modern idiom and orchestration seemed to find in him a much readier response, and he conducted Moussorgsky, Rimsky-Korsakoff and Ravel with vigor, understanding and effectiveness." In Mr. Downes' opinion Mr. Golschmann made much of the Ravel music "by the manner in which he sustained the fundamental rhythm, without stiffness, with a true rubato, a true breathing of the musical phrases, and by his ability to extract the last tint of color from his orchestra."

His reading of the Figaro Overture and Schumann's Fourth Symphony were not so well liked. Mr. Taylor said that while the symphony "had poetic and beautiful moments," it was rather "rigid" in tempo and suffered from an over-emphasis of the brass. W. J. Henderson of the Sun spoke of "the precise and straightforward manner" in which the symphony was performed. He also noted the "excessive loudness" of the brasses which he, as did Mr. Taylor, attributed to Mr. Golschmann's unfamiliarity with the acoustics of the hall." Many places in the Schumann symphony were poetically conceived," wrote Mr. Downes, "such as the transition to the last movement; elsewhere there was a certain stiffness and a need of more varied coloring."

Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail complained of the slow tempo of the concert, especially in the Mozart Overture. On the other hand, Mr. Newman commented that "the tempi were right."

Hadley Conducts Rachmaninoff Work

Philharmonic Plays Russian Composer's Second Symphony and Conductor's Salome.

Henry Hadley, conducting the New York Philharmonic Orchestra Thursday night in Carnegie Hall, characterized his performance, to quote the Times reviewer, "by an exceptionally eloquent performance of Rachmaninoff's Second Symphony." The performance was not only virtuoso conducting, according to this writer, but also, "it gave the fullest measure of the feeling and atmosphere that make its length seldom less than pleasurable and its mood felt by laymen and professional alike . . . Mr. Hadley, in his phrasing; in the emphasis, which was not overdone, of leading motives; in adroitness of coloring and maintenance of mood more than fulfilled his task."

Lawrence Gilman thought this work received a "fullblooded and eloquent" performance with Mr. Hadley's authority well in evidence. The Sun called it "a very fine performance." Of Mr. Hadley's tone poem, Salome, which was also played, the Post reviewer wrote: "Its merits have already been thoroughly discussed, and the Philharmonic gave its usual fine performance." Herbert Peyser commented in the Telegram-Mail on "the adroit construction and workmanship" of the composition.

Both the Times chronicler and Mr. Gilman found less to praise in Salome, and made special mention of its marked Wagnerian influence. The Post commentator wrote of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Spanish Caprice: "It is one of the best of the finale pieces, and Mr. Hadley let none of its lilting melodies escape—they were played emphatically and rousingly."

Ruffo in Season Debut At the Metropolitan

Sings in Andrea Chenier; Ina Bourskaya Also a Newcomer in Cast.

Titta Ruffo made his first appearance of the season in the Metropolitan's third production of Andrea Chenier the evening of December 15. Rosa Ponselle and Beniamino Gigli were heard in their usual roles, and Ina Bourskaya replaced Kathleen Howard as the Countess. Others in the long cast were Mmes. Dalossy and Wakefield, Messrs. Tibbett, Paltrinieri, Reschilian, Didur, Bada, Picco, Ananian, d'Angelo, and Malatesta. Tullio Serafin conducted and, to quote the Post commentator, "accentuated the intermittent beauties of the score and many times gave meaning to meaningless parts."

According to the Telegram-Mail reviewer, Mr. Ruffo "was in good form for his seasonal debut" and his "powerful baritone and convincing delivery seldom failed to carry the crowd." The writer in the World found in his singing "new vigor and breadth of style and tone." In the opinion of the Herald Tribune chronicler, Mr. Ruffo's tones "rang out with their usual sonority" and his acting was marked by "gesture and emotion" with effective results. Mr. W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that he considered the music and the character "well suited to Mr. Ruffo's methods. It is true that in recent seasons he has shown an appreciation of the effectiveness of restraint and that his singing has improved in tonal quality because of his avoidance of the natural temptation to give free rein to his vigorous impulses and his powerful voice."

Stefi Geyer Sails

Accompanied by her husband, Walter Schulthess, Stefi Geyer, Swiss violinist, sailed December 13 for her home in Switzerland, where she will appear in recital.

Ithaca Conservatory of Music 1892--33rd Year--1924

TUITION UNDER MASTER TEACHERS — 4 Master Scholarships Valued at $700.00 each — 4 BOARD and ROOM FREE

Scholarships Awarded Through Competition—Note the Date

JANUARY 19, 1925

1. THE CESAR THOMPSON MASTER SCHOLARSHIP IN VIOLIN.
II. THE LEON SAMPAIX MASTER SCHOLARSHIP IN PIANO.
III. THE RUTH ROGERS MASTER SCHOLARSHIP IN VOICE.
IV. THE GEORGE C. WILLIAMS MASTER SCHOLARSHIP IN EXPRESSION.

INSTRUCTION
in theoretical subjects
WITH WELL-KNOWN SPECIALISTS

For application blanks and information—write The Registrar
ITHACA CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
DEWITT PARK, ITHACA, NEW YORK

K O L I T S C H

Management: Antonia Sawyer, Inc,. Aeolian Hall, New York

London Symphony Has St. Louis Premiere

Ganz Conducts Vaughan Williams Work; Members of Orchestra Play Brahms.

St. Louis, Dec. 13.—Rudolph Ganz, conductor of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, played Vaughan Williams' London Symphony for the first time here at the fifth concert of the season yesterday afternoon. The other feature of the program was the appearance, as soloists, of Michel Gusikoff, concertmaster, and Max Steindell, first cellist, in a performance of the Brahms Concerto for violin and piano.

The Williams composition was generally liked by the newspaper reviewers. According to the Times chronicler, "It is good music, highly impressionistic, intellectually conceived, and cleverly instrumentated, and at times, rises to heights of eloquence . . . Mr. Ganz is to be commended for his painstaking efforts to obtain the full value of the inherent beauties of the work." Richard Spamer, writing in the Globe Democrat, referred to it as an "astonishing work." He considered that, although program music, it showed "poetic insight" and the ability to create atmosphere.

In the opinion of Blanche Furth Ullman of the Star, the Symphony "is free in form and conceived in the cacophanies and dissonances that seem to be the natural medium for expression with composers of our era." Richard L. Stokes wrote in the Post-Dispatch that he believed, confidently, the composition to be "the noblest symphonic work as yet created by an Englishman."

The performance of the Brahms Concerto by Mr. Gusikoff and Mr. Steindell evoked much praise in the press. Miss Ullman considered them "perfectly in accord, yet preserving each his own individuality . . . they displayed admirable finesse and musicianship." The Times writer noted the "effortless skill" evidenced in their playing, as well as the "polished phrasing and delicate nuance." The smoothness of their playing, and the "perfect contact" they displayed, were admired by Mr. Spamer.

Berlioz's Overture to Benvenuto Cellini and Sibelius' Symphonic Poem, Finlandia, completed the program. Mr. Ganz established a precedent in St. Louis by inviting the regular subscribers to the Thursday rehearsal in order that they might familiarize themselves with the music.

At the second children's concert at the Odeon on Thursday the children heard Tschaikowsky, Brahms, Schubert, Beethoven, and Rossini quietly, but when Charles Camacho played Suwanee River and when the clarinetist played Irving Berlin's What'll I Do? the audience burst into cheers.

Kathryn Meisle, contralto of the Chicago Opera Company, won critical praise in her singing of the role of La Cieca in the revival of La Gioconda at the Auditorium.

Cincinnati Hears Recitals And Mme. Farrar in Carmen

Cincinnati, Dec. 15.—Jascha Heifetz, violinist, Charles Hackett, tenor, Pietro Yon, organist, and Geraldine Farrar in her shortened version of Carmen have appeared here during the last week. Mrs. Smith wrote in the Times-Star of Mr. Heifetz' "spirituality of statement," and of the "underglow in his playing which restrains while it radiates emotion." Mrs. Plogstedt, reviewer of the Post placed Mr. Heifetz unequivocally in the ranks of the "renowned," and Mr. Goldenburg of the Enquirer and Mr. Wilson of the Commercial Tribune were equally enthusiastic.

Of Mr. Hackett, who sang the following morning before the Matinee Musicale Club, Mrs. Plogstedt wrote, "He has never been heard to better advantage." Mrs. Smith was impressed with the "elegance of his style," and the audience applauded unstintedly.

The reviewers expressed disappointment in the Carmen performance by Mme. Farrar and her company last Thursday. The costumes were scored as being showy and unfitting, and parts of the acting were considered exaggerated and showy. Emma Noe, who sang Micaela, was much approved by the reviewers.

In his recital Mr. Yon displayed, according to the Enquirer, technical facility, smooth pedaling, and rich tonal variety.

B. G.

Brahms Cycle Continues

The Elshuco Trio and the Festival Quartet gave the third of eight Brahms cycle programs the evening of December 12 at Aeolian Hall, playing the String Quartet, Op. 51, No. 2; the piano quartet, Op. 26, and the G major Violin and Piano Sonata, Op. 78. The artists of the occasion were Messrs. Kroll and Kortschak, violins; Kraeuter, viola; Willeke, cello, and Giorni, piano. Messrs. Kortschak and Giorni played the sonata. According to the Herald Tribune chronicler, all "preserved the standard shown in the previous concerts of the series, with commendable unity and well blended tone."

Stokowski Conducts Varese Composition

Philadelphians Play Hyperprisms in New York as Audience Laughs and Hisses.

At the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Carnegie Hall last Tuesday evening, Leopold Stokowski played Edgar Varese's Hyperprisms before an audience which hissed, laughed, and applauded.

Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram and Mail dismissed the modernist work as amusing. "The cleverest and most amusing collection of noises ever got from an orchestra" was Ernest Newman's judgment in the Post. He continued that the work, of course, has "not the slightest connection with music, as that term is generally understood, but it is excellent fun."

Agreed with Mr. Newman in his statement that it reminded him of a fire alarm at a Zoo was W. J. Henderson of the Sun. Mr. Henderson likened the sounds to "the roaring of a lion, the shrieking of the wind, the pattering of hailstones, and the swearing of the keepers of the distracted menagerie."

According to Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune, Mr. Varese's music "is joyous, healthy, invigorating—a riotous and zestful playing with timbres, rhythms, sonorities," but he admitted that he did not understand it; nor had he "yet learned to love" it.

There were the customary laudatory reviews of the work of both Mr. Stokowski and his orchestra. As Mr. Sanborn said, they "always excite fresh wonder" when they come to New York. There was a unanimity of opinion about Mr. Stokowski's reading of the Franck work, which was felt to be distinctly original and individual. Mr. Henderson expressed the general opinion when he wrote that, although it was the conductor's own version, "it was so complete in itself, so finished and exquisitely wrought along its own lines, and it sounded so opulent and so luminous, that no one need have disputed it."

Mr. Newman confessed that while he was never more "dazzled by the virtuosity" of the orchestra, he was troubled by Mr. Stokowski's tempo and dynamics. He made exception of the Berlioz Hungarian March which was given a "brilliantly colored performance, it was the one work in the program that harmonized with the mood" of the conductor. Deems Taylor of the World liked the reading of Debussy's Nocturnes, although other writers found them lacking in lightness.

Montclair Orchestra Concert

The Montclair Orchestra, Philip James, conductor, gave the first concert of this its third season on December 12, at the Montclair, N. J., High School. Carolyn Beebe, pianist, assisted by her artist pupil, Creighton Allen, were features of the program.

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Slav Chorus Sings in Milan

La Scala Presents Valkyries and Boris; Verdi Requiem Begins Augusteum Concerts.

Milan.

The Ukrainian National Chorus, directed by Wasil Ewgleski, was lately heard at the Conservatory. Unlike the majority of Russian and Slav choruses which one hears, this group includes women's voices, and gains thereby in variety of tone qualities. Although the numbers of the chorus are limited, the ensemble sings clearly and robustly, with a spirit and color that recall the folk origins of its art. The singing of the chorus was devoted almost entirely to songs which are of old and popular origin in the Ukraine, but it was music which appealed to the Milanese, for the chorus was well received.

After a period of fifteen seasons during which it has been absent from the Scala bills Wagner's Valkyries was revived at the Milan theatre the other night. This time it is intended to retain this work in the fixed repertory of the company. The director of the performance was Ettore Panizza, who has returned to La Scala after his connection with the Chicago Opera Company. He was given an unusual greeting upon his appearance in the pit.

At this performance Signor Panizza gave further proofs of his worth as a conductor, displaying perhaps the greatest power that he has shown since he conducted Parsifal here two years ago. His task was not of the easiest because of the fact that certain parts of the orchestra have just recently been engaged, but nevertheless in his treatment of the heterogenous material he showed exceptional ability.

The symphonic pulse of the Wagnerian music was solidly presented by Signor Panizza, and tne score was revealed from page to page in all its variety of effects, and in all the colors of its rich texture. For his work the conductor was much applauded throughout the evening, and called before the curtain more than once.

Singing Not of Best

The results obtained at this revival of the Valkyries were particularly commendable in view of the fact that the singers in the cast showed for the most part a lack of the ability necessary for the presentation of such difficult music as Wagner's. It is particularly easy to criticize the members of this last cast in view of the excellence of the tradition which in past years La Scala has developed in regard to the presentation of the Valkyries.

It must be said that for the most part the singers who appeared under the baton of Signor Panizza were attempting tasks beyond their powers. Nazzareno de Angelis sang Wotan, and was judged as having appeared to the best advantage of the entire cast, for he displayed an unusual wisdom in the portrayal of his role and clever breath control in the singing of his part. His diction also was good, and his acting was considered by those present to be superior to that which he displayed when he sang in the Rheingold.

Cesa Bianchi sang the role of Siegmund, but his voice was small, especially in the high ranges. Mercedes Llopart, the Sieglinde, did not lend to her singing that delicacy which the part demands. Some of the most moving of the passages in her part therefore lost much of their effectiveness and of their poetic warmth. Nevertheless Signora Llopart displayed middle tones of warmth and smoothness.

Marta Offers as Fricka

Marta Offers sang the part of Fricka in a praiseworthy manner, but her voice was not always pleasing, because of a hardness which made it seem forced some of the time. The basso Melnick proved a mediocre Hunding.

As for Brunhilde of the evening, Lilly Hafgren, she pleased, during the second act, by the freshness of her voice and its full volume. But in the third act, and precisely in the climatic scenes, she was not able to reach the heights of the Wagnerian score, to catch the audience in the way in which Brunhildes of the past —Signore Tcherkawsky and Kaftal— have done.

The Valkyries themselves appeared to excellent advantage, and the mise en scene was good, if nothing more. Despite its shortcomings the performance made a good impression on the audience, thanks to Maestro Panizza, and to Richard Wagner.

Toscanini Conducts Boris

A week previous to this performance of the Valkyries Arturo Toscanini conducted Boris Godunoff with the triumphal effect which has become customary when he leads this work. The baritone Zalewski, who has taken the title role in past years at La Scala, was again the protagonist. As Pimenn the basso Righetti took the place of Signor Pinza. The role of Marina Mnisceck was very well sung by Luisa Bertana, and Teodoro was sung by Anna Masetti Bassi, who took the place of Signora Bertana in this role.

The chorus again won praise for its precision, strength, and spirit. In the entire this performance of Boris was a well balanced piece of work in which the worth of the singers was enabled to appear to its best advantage.

Among the other recent music activities besides the operatic has been the opening of the Augusteum series of concerts. Verdi's Requiem with Bernardino Molinari as conductor made up the first program. Signor Molinairi drew from the great number of singers effects of great dramatic power.

The Augusteum Orchestra, somewhat augmented, stood the test of fire, and it was adjudged by reviewers and audience more powerful and flexible than it has been in recent years. The concertmaster, Giovanni Chiti, and the first cellist, Amleto Fabbri, among the new elements, were praised for the excellence with which they played.

Among the soloists the soprano Scacciati did particularly well, with a voice that was limpid in quality and secure in intonation. Signora Minghini-Cattaneo, mezzo-soprano, was also praised. The tenor Lo Giudice made a good impression with his strong and brilliant high tones, and the basso Bettoni was much approved also.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

Hempel Re-engaged in England

London, Dec. 16.—Frieda Hempel, soprano, who is just completing her tour of thirty concerts in the British Isles has been re-engaged for the same tour next season. She has just given a final concert in Albert Hall.

Italian Season Begins in Berlin

Berlin, Dec. 6.—The Italian Opera season here began on November 10 with the presentation of the Barber of Seville.

Extensive Opera Season Planned for Nice Company

Nice, Dec. 3.—The Nice Opera House opened its current season on November 27. MM. Raoul Audier and Maurice Durand are the managers, and they have drawn up an extensive program. Besides the regular repertory they plan to produce the following works, all entirely new to Nice: Dans l'Ombre de la Cathedrale, by Georges Hue; La Plus Forte, by Xavier Leroux; Les Burgraves, by Leon Sachs; Satan Vaincu, by Alfred Kukmann; Nerea, by Fernand Le Borne; Sainte Odite, by Marcel Bertrand; Kleope, by E. Looreglio; and La Mauviette, by Paul Gautier.

The revivals will include Gluck's Orphee; Lalo's Le Roi d'Ys; Rabaud's Marouf, L'Attaque du Moulin; and Stamboul; Wagner's Lohengrin and Tannhauser.

Leading artists of the French operatic stage have been engaged to take part in this season. The lists given out by the management include Lucien Muratore, Campagnola, Albers, Vanni Marcoux, Marguerite Carre, Maria Konsetzoff, Victoria Fed, and Balguerie. The English baritone G. E. Chadwick, a resident of Nice, who took part in many of the productions of the company last year has been engaged for a number of performances this season. K. H. S.

Paris Hears Child Pianist

Paris, Dec. 6.—A recent piano recital which caused interest in Paris was that of Pietro Mazzini, a seven-year-old boy of Italian parentage and French birth. This was not his first appearance in public, for he gave a concert four years ago when he was only two and a half years old.

Leads Modern Music in Paris

Paris, Dec. 2.—Pietro Coppolo is giving four concerts of symphony music of modern composers. Debussy, Stravinsky, Ravel, Honegger, and Germaine Tailleferre will be represented on the programs.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management:
Edna Richolson Sollitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

ABBY MORRISON
SOPRANO SAN CARLO GRAND OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON, 1451 Broadway, New York City

The Cleveland Institute of Music
ERNEST BLOCH, Director
ENROLL NOW FOR NEW TERM FEBRUARY 9
Complete courses in all branches of music. Supplemented by eurythmics, choral and orchestral training, concert and lectures by visiting artists.
For information write MRS. FRANKLYN B. SANDERS, Assistant Director,
2827 EUCLID AVENUE CLEVELAND, OHIO

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Walter Leads Elgar Symphony

Women's Orchestra Gives First Program; London to Hear Concert of Syncopated Music.

London.

The second concert of the London Philharmonic Orchestra, which took place during the first week of December, was conducted by Bruno Walter, who led the First Elgar Symphony, a work which together with the same composer's other music is held in an esteem here which can be compared to the admiration for Mahler which prevails in Austria and Germany. It was a test for the conductor, from which Mr. Walter came out on the whole very well. Mr. Scholes, in the Observer, was displeased to find "Elgar Tschaikowsky-ed" and the Philharmonic "turned into a brass band," but he made amends in his unreserved commendation of the rest of the program. The rest of the critics were pleased by the interpretation of the symphony.

The reviewer of the Telegraph said: "Under Bruno Walter, all that which at times and in older days seemed suspiciously like sentiment that bordered on sentimentality has disappeared, and in its place is a virility, a manliness, a bigness that was hardly suspected to exist before. Yet not one jot or tittle of the old poignancy, of the old biting, strident, mordant expression was missing. The whole was of the superman, magnificent, overwhelming, thrilling to a degree." And the Sunday Times: "One felt, very early, that Mr. Walter had not only appreciated the symphony's distinctive quality of sombre and restrained emotionalism, but had developed a special sympathy with it."

Other orchestral events of the week were three in number. The British Women's Symphony Orchestra, which was formed last year, gave the first of its present series of concerts under Miss Gwynne Kimpton. It is accounted a competent body, but still under the handicaps that always affect a new band. Alfred Cortot was soloist, introducing to London a piano concerto by Germaine Tailleferre, formerly of Les Six, a work bright and pleasant, but not significant to most of the reviewers. Another children's symphony concert drew so large an audience to the Central Hall, Westminster, that no doubt can further be entertained of the success of this venture.

Casals in Benefit Concert

Finally, there was a benefit at the Queen's Hall for Robert Newman, manager of Sir Henry Wood's orchestra, at which Pablo Casals was soloist. The newspapers mentioned his "consummate artistry" as a matter of course.

Recitals were less numerous than in previous weeks. Beatrice Harrison and Evelyn Howard-Jones devoted an afternoon to three cello sonatas, much to the satisfaction of the press, the Observer, for example, noting that the pianist played "extraordinarily well," and calling attention to Miss Harrison's "eloquent tone of sustained flow and richly-moulded phrasing." Of newcomers, Jan Smeterlin, a Polish pianist, was thought uneven, but meritorious at his best especially for a wide range of tone color; and Miss Jean Starr Untermyer, who gave a song recital, won commendation for her interpretations only.

There were two "repeats": on the part of Richard Buhlig, the pianist, and of the Lener Quartet, who in their last program for the season played the two Brahms Quartets, Opus 51, and the Piano Quintet in F.

Announce Jazz Concert

Advance sheets are being sent out in London announcing a forthcoming concert devoted to "syncopated music," along the lines of the Whiteman-Gershwin concerts in the United States. The notices say: "This is the first time in history that a complete recital of syncopated music has been given in the concert hall. . . . The syncopated music of this concert, which will be rendered by the greatest aggregation of international syncopated musical stars that have ever played together on one platform, will include many features of a character never heard before. Symphonized Syncopation, as originated and expressed by the Savoy Bands, now demands an important place in the serious musical world," etc. In fact the Orpheans of the Savoy Hotel are known as a good dance band, but their assertion that there is anything original about their venture is unfounded.

P. L.

English Composers at Festival

London, Dec. 5.—A large number of English composers were present at the Eastbourne Musical Festival to hear or conduct performances of their own works. Among the English musicians who were represented on the programs were Sir Edward Elgar, Sir Dan Godfrey, Sir A. C. Mackenzie, Sir Landon Ronald, Sir Henry Wood, Granville Bantock, Frank Bridge, Adam Carse, Edward German, Armstrong Gibbs, John Ireland, J. B. McEwen, Norman O'Neill, A. Brent-Smith, Vaughan Williams and Dame Ethel Smyth.

The Question Box

1. What is the general term for those instruments whose strings are not bowed?
2. Where did the pianoforte get its name?
3. Where was Handel's Messiah first produced, and with what success?
4. Who was Felicita Malibran?

Answers to Last Questions

1. Scriabin invented a color keyboard which he scored in his Prometheus, a tone poem for orchestra, piano, organ, chorus, and color keyboard. Serge Koussevitsky first conducted the work in Moscow in 1911.

2. Feodor Chaliapin was once a choir boy, and at seventeen joined a provincial opera company. When it stranded he worked in turn as a porter, hunter, and dancer, but finally embarked on his operatic career when he began to sing at the Tiflis Opera House.

3. The Italian sixth is a triad in a minor scale consisting of the sixth step of the scale as bass, the tonic step, and the sharped subdominant step (making an augmented sixth). The form with the second step of the scale added is the French sixth; that with the third added is the German sixth.

4. The harmonium is played by means of an exhaust-bellows, while the American organ, as it is called in England, is played by means of a compression bellows.

Argentine Opera Closes

Buenos Aires, Dec. 10.—The Teatro Colon has been obliged to close its doors with a deficit of 300,000 pesos. During its past season, it entertained an Italian troupe, which sang Verdi's Falstaff and Gluck's Orfeo, and a Russian company, headed by Zamlinsky, who gave Boris Godunoff and Prince Igor. Zazdah, an opera by the Argentinian composer, Athos Palma, was produced. Several concerts were also heard.

The government has announced that a National Conservatory of Music may be organized.

Handel Work Revived

Cologne, Dec. 2.—A recent revival at the Cologne Opera was Handel's Julius Caesar. Considering how seldom it has been produced, it was regarded more or less as a novelty. The production of Handel's operas by Oskar Hagen at Gottingen was responsible for the revival.

Foreign Notes

Manchester, Dec. 8.—The British National Opera Company has completed its two weeks season here. Hugh the Drover and Coq d'Or were featured in the repertory.

Rome, Dec. 8.—Among the recent musical publications here is the Italian Musical Annual (Annuario Musicale Italiano), in which are listed all the societies, schools, theatres, and halls pertaining to music in Italy, and, besides, the composers, concert artists, teachers, directors, editors, and all other musical personalties in the entire country. Part of the volume is devoted to Italian music and musicians in the United States.

Rome, Dec. 5.—The autumn season at the Costanzi commenced with Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci on November 21. The casts included Signora Piave as Santuzza; the tenor Capuzzo as Turiddu; Maria Briganti as Nedda; the tenor Pollicano as Canio, and the baritone Mangeri as Alfio and Tonio. Piero Fabbroni was the director of both operas.

Milan, Dec. 10.—Vittorio Gui, conductor of La Scala, is the author of a new musical guide to Boito's Nerone, which has just been published in Milan.

The Clarendon Press, under the auspices of the Carnegie Trust, have announced that the next volume of Tudor church music will be published in January. This book, the third of the series, will contain the works of Orlando Gibbons.

Paris, Dec. 7.—A ballet in one act, Songe d'Isfendiar, by Blair Fairchild, an American, has been received by M. Jacques Rouche of the Paris Opera. La Lilebulle, with music by this composer, was produced by the Opera Comique.

Manchester, Dec. 5.—A new Irish symphony by Hamilton Harty was played for the first time by the Halle Orchestra here recently.

London, Dec. 3.—The Royal Philharmonic and a choir of 1,000 voices gave John Fould's World Requiem for the first time at the Albert Hall November 11. Mr. Fould has vested the performing rights of his composition in the British Legion.

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

RUTH ST. DENIS with TED SHAWN and the Denishawn Dancers
Season 1924-1925 Now Booking
Pacific Coast Tour Nov. 24—Jan. 10 Already Booked
Exclusive Management DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO

EUROPEAN NEWS AND VIEWS

Mme. Vix Sings Thais in Paris

Ravel Opera and Old Ballet Produced at Opera; Prince Igor in Brussels.

Paris.

After an absence of some time in which she has been appearing in the opera companies of a number of foreign cities Genevieve Vix returned to Paris recently and remained long enough to appear in two performances of Thais at the Grand Opera. This is the role in which she is best known to French followers of music.

Her histrionic display in this role has long been the object of praise by French music critics, for she develops her role and progresses step by step with the advancement of the story until she brings it to its highest point with her acting in the scene of the mirror. Here she portrays with a strength and realism that have been much reviewed and applauded the transition from the frivolous life of pleasure to that of austere faith and abnegation.

On these last appearances the critical comment was unanimous in the admission that Mme. Vix's voice is no longer at its best. Nevertheless the loss of brilliancy is made up by experience and schooling which enable her to pass through difficulties in the vocal part of the role with mature mastery.

Couzinou as Athanael

M. Couzinou sang the role of Athanael, and his was considered a remarkable performance vocally and histrionically. His voice as in the past displayed full measure of beauty, warmth, and volume. One review said of M. Couzinou, "He is an intelligent artist who has made the best of the brilliant vocal qualities at his disposal. There is never a moment when one can say that a note is harsh, sketchy, or disagreeable to listen to. His voice is a baritone of dramatic qualities, but it is flexible and easy, and M. Couzinou moves to the dramatic pitch required with the greatest facility."

Dramatically M. Couzinou was not below his vocal standard. He has natural artistic temperament which aids him in this phase of his work as well as in his singing.

M. Ruhlmann was the conductor at this performance, and the newspaper comments spoke of his "understanding and feeling." Much approval was expressed regarding the mis-en-scene which was sumptuous without being inappropriate.

Give Ravel Work

Maurice Ravel's one act opera, L'Heure Espagnole, continues in its regular place in the Grand Opera repertory. At this most recent presentation of Thais, The Spanish Hour was part of the program. The harmonious delicacy of this one act opera made the refreshing effect which it has not failed to produce when it has been heard in the past, ever since its premiere four seasons ago.

To a large extent the continual effectiveness of L'Heure Espagnole can be attributed to the felicity with which Fanny Heldy, its Grand Opera protagonist, sings and acts the leading role. Her soprano is unusually clear and brilliant in timbre from the top to the bottom of her range, and it can take on a moving warmth of tone. It is entirely lacking in that disturbing tremolo which is not infrequent in the voices of the sopranos whom Paris has been hearing of late.

Mme. Heldy has other attractions for the Parisian opera goer, for she is young, tall, and beautiful. Her repertory is necessarily limited, due to the fact that the directors of the Opera have often found it advantageous to cast her in the leading roles of modern works to aid in the achievement of their success. They have learned that when Fanny Heldy sings the audience is apt to transfer its appreciation of her to the opera, regardless of its muscal worth. Her appearance in L'Heure Espagnole was the first since her recovery from an illness which kept her life in danger for several days.

M. Couzinou again displayed the full beauty of his baritone, and the newspaper reviews described him as "a perfect pleasure" throughout the performance. The other baritone in the cast was Henri Fabert, whose voice was pleasant, but sometimes not too secure. M. Busser was the conductor.

An Eighty Year Old Ballet

The reviewers praised Director Rouche of the Opera highly for his presentation of an eighty year old ballet of Adolphe Adam, his Giselle. The work is little known to the present generation of theatre-goers in Paris, although it was revived several months ago by the Russian Romantic Ballet Company. In this first appearance and in its performance at the Opera Giselle proved that it deserves a place among the leading successes of the season.

The version of the ballet given by the Russian company was quite new, but the Grand Opera adhered to the traditional interpretation, that which was created by Carlotta Grisi, the prima ballerina, who first danced in it. This traditional creation was maintained in the Russian Imperial theatres, which kept the ballet actively in their repertories from the time of its premiere on.

The presentation at the Opera was superb in all respects. Mlle. Spessiotseva was the Giselle, and put into the climactic mad scene a spirit pathetic intensity which was based on technical virtuosity as well as spiritual understanding. At the end of each of the two acts she was given an enthusiastic reception by the audience. The newspaper reviews following the performance echoed the applause.

The first novelty of the season offered at the Theatre de la Monnaie in Brussels was Borodin's Prince Igor. Although the mise-en-scene, the costumes, and the singing were of the highest order the opera did not meet with the success which the management had anticipated.

The baritone Roosen sang the title role, showing a warm and pleasing voice. His acting was reported to have excelled anything which he has done in the past. M. Rogatchewski, tenor, sang the difficult music of his part with much vocal charm, and Marguerite Soyer as Jaroslawna acted with a spirit which the reviewers commended, and sang well too.

The orchestra was well conducted by Corneil de Thorau, whose reading of the score brought out the most minute details. The ballet, headed by Mlle. Astra aided materially in the effectiveness of the presentation. The audience was cordial, but nothing more.

Another recent performance at the Theatre de la Monnaie was that of Gounod's Faust. This was the 1,000th performance of the opera at this theatre, but the audience was just as enthusiastic as though it were hearing something fresh and new.

K. H. STOTTNER.

Plan Cut Travel Rates For Bayreuth Festival

THE Bayreuth Festival Association has announced that it has concluded arrangements which will enable American students, teachers, artists, and professors with limited time and money, to attend the Bayreuth Festival next summer with small expense. Accommodations can be secured on the Mount Clay of the American lines sailing July 4, and returning on the Westphalia August 6, at a low rate. The opportunity of a tour of ten weeks is also offered by the Music Travel Club of America which includes visits at the principal educational and music centers of Europe.

The Festival will commence on July 22 with the performance of Meistersinger. The entire repertory will be gone through by July 29, although there will be repeat performances until August 20. The works to be presented are Meistersinger, Parsifal, Rheingold, Walkuere, Siegfried and Gotterdammerung.

Artists Sail for U. S.

Hamburg, Dec. 18.—Leaving for America on the Deutschland to join the Metropolitan Opera Company was Friedrich Schorr, baritone of the Berlin State Opera, who is known for his singing of Wagnerian roles. Wilhelm Furtwangler, successor to the late Arthur Nikisch as conductor of the Leipsic Gewandhaus Orchestra, who sailed on the same boat, is going to America as guest conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra. Another passenger was Carl Flesch, violinist, who is going on a concert tour.

New Opera in Prague

Prague, Dec. 4.—A first performance of Rudolph Karel's Ilsees Herz took place in the Czech National Theatre last month. It was composed in 1908, but was kept unproduced since then. Karel is one of the last pupils of Dvorak.

Braunfels Novelty in Munich

Munich, Dec. 1.—A new opera by Walter Braunfels, Don Gil von der Grunen Hosen, was given its premiere at the National Theatre here a fortnight ago. It is a light work based on a Spanish theme.

Furtwangler to Tour

Berlin, Dec. 8.—Wilhelm Furtwangler will make a concert tour of North Central Europe with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra at the end of April, 1925.

FLORA
GREENFIELD
SOPRANO
Management ERNEST HENKEL, 1451 Broadway, New York City
Telephone Bryant 3352 KNABE PIANO

FLORENCE EASTON
Soprano Metropolitan Opera Company
BRUNSWICK RECORDS EXCLUSIVELY
MANAGEMENT: HAENSEL AND JONES—AEOLIAN HALL, N. Y.

BUZZI-PECCIA
FOUNDATION OF THE OLD ITALIAN METHOD
VOICE DICTION PERSONALITY
33 WEST 67TH STREET NEW YORK

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

THE Educational Alliance of New York has organized an amateur symphony orchestra, under the direction of Richard Hageman, former conductor of the Metropolitan and Chicago companies. Mr. Hageman personally conducts all rehearsals, which take place every Sunday morning in the auditorium of the Educational Alliance Building. Advanced amateurs and semi-professionals are given an opportunity of acquiring training and ensemble routine under capable guidance. This orchestra later in the season is scheduled to give a number of public concerts at which well known artists will appear as soloists.

The Cornish School of Seattle held a dance recital last evening. Sylvia Tell and the Cornish dancers were on the program. Last Thursday there was a recital by Louis Brentwett, blind pianist, and the Monday previous there was a song recital by the pupils of Mrs. S. Y. Peabody.

The symphony orchestra of the Bush Conservatory of Music, under the direction of Richard Czerwonky, broadcasted Dvorak's New World Symphony from Station WMAQ (Chicago Daily News) recently. The solos were by Robert Quick, violinist; Beulah van Epps, soprano, and Evelyn Daniels, pianist.

Gifts totaling $6,000 towards a fund of $20,000 necessary for the complete were announced at the last anborhood Music School, New York City, in which some of the city's most distinguished musicians are interested, were announced at the last annual meeting. A number of children from the East Side are studying practically free at the school. Harold Bauer, Pablo Casals, Henry Hadley, Fritz Kreisler, Felix Salmond, Ernest Schelling and Louis Svecenski are now members of the auxiliary board. Officers re-elected at the last meeting were: Mrs. Donn Barber, president; Charles Triller, vice president; Mrs. Benson Flagg, secretary; Mrs. John S. Ellsworth, treasurer.

The North Carolina College for Women, Greensboro, N. C., is erecting a building especially designed and equipped for its department of music. The building, which is to be of English Renaissance design, is as nearly sound-proof as it can be made. The walls are of double construction, lined with felt, and the studios and practice rooms are equipped with sound-proof doors.

The National Bureau ror the Advancement of Music, New York City, has announced that, due to the interest taken in the National Band Contest in 1923, a similar contest among grammar school and high school students will be held during 1925. In order to secure the full educational benefit of these contests, they have been placed under the auspiecs of the Music Supervisors' National Conference.

The object of the contests is to develop interest in band and instrumental music in the schools throughout the country. The State contests will be held the third week in April in all States in which at least ten bands agree to enter, but no prizes will be given in any class having less than five bands. For the sectional contests, the country has been divided into six districts. A national contest will be held, provided there is a minimum of three sectional winners in either class.

More than seventy-five pupils took part in the opening concert of the Bronx House Music School of New York City on the afternoon of December 13. The program included selections from MacDowell, Tschaikowsky, and Elgar. Miss Frances Sebel, soprano, was soloist.

The music school is one of the most comprehensive branches of the Bronx House, a settlement maintained by the the Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies. There are courses in the theory of music, piano, violin, and cello, and scholarships are provided by the board of directors for those children who show talent but cannot afford to take lessons. The community chorus, for men and women, will hold its first meeting today.

Forthcoming events scheduled by the Department of Fine Arts of Athens, Ala., are the mid-winter concert on January 19 and the annual Bach concert on March 28.

ARTHUR PHILLIPS
New York Teacher of Singing Who Has Many Professionals as Pupils.

Lasar S. Samoiloff, director of the Master School of Musical Arts of California, gave a tea on Sunday, December 14, in honor of Mrs. Alice Campbell MacFarlane and Miss Alice Seckels of San Francisco. Among the guests were many persons prominent in the music world. Mrs. MacFarlane was obliged to leave unexpectedly, as she was called to Chicago by the illness of her son. There were no vocal selections, but the instrumental numbers on the program which Mr. Samoiloff offered his guests, were most delightful and enjoyed by all those present.

The Cincinnati Conservatory of Music Alumnal Association of which John A. Hoffmann is the president, contributed to the interest of the music season in Cincinnati by bringing to the city the Italian pianist, Maria Carreras, for a recital the first of the month. The concert was arranged for the benefit of the Clara Burr Memorial Scholarship Fund, which provides each year for some gifted but financially hampered student.

Mme. Carreras played first a group of little known Old Dances and Arias of unknown composers of the XVI century transcribed for the piano by Respighi. Following these were Beethoven's Variations in C Minor, Appassionata; a group of Liszt, Pick-Mangiagalli, and J. Albeniz; and a final Chopin number, Allegro de Concert.

Rochester, Dec. 10.—Oscar Gareissen, instructor in voice at the Eastman School of Music and founder and director of the Festival Chorus, died as a result of a heart attack in his studio here yesterday afternoon. His body was found by a pupil, and Arthur M. See, secretary of the school, summoned a physician immediately. Mr. Gareissen had not been in good health since the death of his wife last summer, and the heart attacks which troubled him steadily grew more severe until he was compelled to withdraw as director of the chorus in favor of Howard Hanson.

Mr. Gareissen, who was born in Monterey, Mexico, began the study of music at an early age, and at fifteen was heard in piano recitals. Right after this he suddenly gave up his study of the piano and interested himself in singing. After study in Paris, Mr. Gareissen became connected with the Michigan State Normal College, where he instructed in voice, history and literature of music, harmony, counterpoint and conducting, as well as organizing and directing an orchestra.

Following this, he made a concert tour, but shortly returned to teaching by opening a New York studio. His first connection in Rochester was with the old D. K. G. Institute. He was instrumental in the formation of the Eastman School and was appointed vocal instructor shortly after its opening.

Mr. Gareissen is survived by his mother and a sister, Miss Isabella Gareissen.

The Cleveland Institute of Music, of which Ernest Bloch is director, is one of the institutions which are granting scholarships to winners of the national competitions under the auspices of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

DUDLEY BUCK Teacher of Singing
471 West End Avenue, New York City Telephone Endicott 7449
Member of the American Academy of Teachers of Singing

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director 120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application Address Dept. V

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

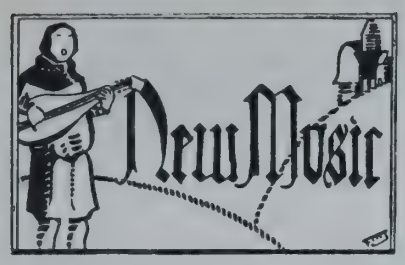
ARTHUR J. HUBBARD — VINCENT V. HUBBARD
Teachers of Singing in All Its Branches
246 HUNTINGTON AVE., BOSTON, MASS.

EMILIO ROXAS VOCAL COACH
Studio: 2231 Broadway, N. Y. C.
Phone: Endicott 6306
Coach and Accompanist to MARTINELLI for six years

V. TREVISAN Chicago Civic Opera Association
VOCAL STUDIO 74 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City Telephone: Circle 10117

HILDA GRACE GELLING VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS



FUZZY WUZZY, a song by Oley Speaks, has as its text the poem of that name by Rudyard Kipling. It is issued in three ranges by the publishers, The John Church Company, New York. Mr. Speaks has provided the score of music which the Kipling style of verse unequivocally demands, a music of square marching rhythm and simple diatonic harmony supporting a melody which is above all else singable and full throated. The composition falls automatically into the Mandalay class, and has the same possibilities for concert use.

G. Ricordi and Company are the publishers of Ottorino Respighi's Mists, which Victor Harris has arranged for three part chorus of women's voices. From the same house comes W. Wolstenhome's A Song for St. Cecilia's Day, which is for four part chorus of women's voices. The text is one of John Dryden's poems. There is a considerable middle section for baritone solo and an effective passage for diminished chorus of first sopranos without words. The piano part has more than usual freedom, and is played skillfully against the voice parts besides its function in supporting them.

Magic Music Lessons, by Elizabeth Gallagher, are published in three books by G. Schirmer. The music and verses are provided for these volumes by Harvey Worthington Loomis, and the pedagogical material by Miss Gallagher. Miss Gallagher has aimed mostly at aiding the teacher in his exposition of the secrets of piano playing to the youngest of child pupils, for Miss Gallagher's belief is that as soon as a child is able to sit at a piano he can begin to play.

L. Leslie Loth's Special Exercises for Developing Independence of the Fingers in Piano Playing are an addition to the Schirmer Scholastic Series. The exercises are for pupils of medium advancement, and are written for each hand alone. The exercises are well planned and effective, although the author seems to have forgotten for the moment that the interest of the pupil is a factor to be considered in the composition of pedagogical works. These exercises hardly seem of the kind to awaken great interest in any pupils but those who may be singularly gifted with a technical bias.

J. HENRI BOVE
FLUTE SOLOIST
Recitals and Obligatos
191 Claremont Ave. New York
Phone—Morningside 4595

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
145 West 55th St. Telephone
New York City Circle 8815

Frances Peralta (right), Lucrezia Bori (left), and George Meader (center) again sang the roles of Dorabella, Despina, and Ferrando, respectively, when Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutte was presented for the first time this season at the New York Metropolitan Opera last Saturday afternoon.

Chamlee Sings in Lucia

At the repetition of Lucia de Lammermoor at the New York Metropolitan Opera last Wednesday evening the original cast, including Toti dal Monte, remained except that Mario Chamlee substituted as Edgardo for Giovanni Martinelli, who was suffering from a cold, and Mr. Danise took the place of Mr. de Luca as Enrico Ashton. The reviewers were agreed that Mr. Chamlee sang much better than in his other role in the first Lucia of the season when he, too, had a cold, and Mr. Henderson of the Sun added, "It is always a pleasure to hear a tenor who sings with such excellent tone and manly style."

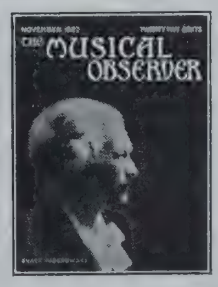
Hutcheson Plays Romantic Music

The third of his series of piano recitals was given on December 13 by Ernest Hutcheson in Aeolian Hall. Schumann, Schubert, and Mendelssohn were the composers represented on this program. Mr. Hutcheson's interpretation of the Schubert Wanderer Fantasia "revealed the romantic and impetuous spirit of the music" as well as being more than technically adequate, to quote Olin Downes of the Times. Mr. Downes considered the concert of equal excellence with the two which have preceded it.

De Pachmann at Metropolitan

Vladimir de Pachmann was the soloist at the Opera concert held at the Metropolitan the evening of December 14. The pianist played Chopin's F minor Concerto, with the orchestra under Giuseppe Bamboschek, and three shorter solos by the same composer. Mr. de Pachmann offered his usual comments about the orchestra, himself, and his music, much to the enjoyment of the large audience. The other soloists were Grace Anthony, Merle Alcock, Millo Picco, and Leon Rothier. Wilfrid Pelletier also conducted.

ANOTHER TRIUMPH!
RICHARD CROOKS
Tenor
Wins Biltmore Morning Musical Audience
Singing FUZZY WUZZY by Oley Speaks
Published by THE JOHN CHURCH COMPANY
Cincinnati New York London



For a $2.00 bill attached to this coupon, we will enter your subscription for one year for the Musical Observer,—the up-to-date music magazine, which among other interesting features contains music for piano, violin and piano, piano and voice,—and send you one of the following premiums.

MINIATURE MASTERPIECES for Violin and Piano (Collection of 24 simplified arrangements of famous solos.)

MODERN PIANO ALBUM (a collection of 24 modern compositions.)

SELECT SONGS OF THE MASTERS (high or low voice), Vol. 1 (20 easy songs each a popular favorite).

FRANZ SCHUBERT ALBUM for High or Low Voice (a collection of 13 selected songs).

THE MUSICAL OBSERVER CO.
62 COOPER SQUARE, N. Y. CITY

NAME .....
ADDRESS .....

THE MARGIN OF MUSIC, by Edwin Evans, English music critic, is a book of essays on various musical subjects (Oxford University Press, American Branch, New York) The material included in it was first published in the form of leading articles in the Musical News and Herald during the time in which Mr. Evans was editor of that periodical.

Nearly a dozen topics are discussed by Mr. Evans, and the grace and composure with which each is considered give the impression that the essays must originally have been written for publication in book form. In his article on criticism in England he congratulates the English music writer on standing next in ability to his literary colleagues.

The Choregraphic Age looks forward to the time when there will be a system of notation for dancing as definite as the present written language of music, and in the following essay, An Example From Spain, Mr. Evans urges that the English composer become as nationalistic and as attentive to native folk music as are the composers of several of the Continental countries.

One is disposed to argue with the author on his conclusions in the chapter on melody. He offers a theory which emphasizes the importance of recognition, conscious or subconscious, in the effectiveness of melody, but the standard he describes might just as well be set up to prove the banality of certain melodies as the excellence of others. One asks what is the difference between the familiarity that breeds contempt and that which makes for honored friendship.

The Margin of Music is an unusually readable book. The literary style is worthy of a writer who has spent more of his time with the pen and less in the concert hall than Mr. Evans. He contrives to keep his discussion on the solid basis of technical knowledge of music and at the same time to keep in mind the imaginative qualities which make music effective with the lay listener. A word must be said for the binding and cover of The Margin of Music, which are unusually good.

Brooklyn Hears Orchestral Group

Herbert J. Braham conducted the Brooklyn Orchestral Society, consisting of sixty-five professional and amateur players, in its first public concert of the season at the Academy of Music on the evening of December 15. Mary McDermott and Helen Wright, violinists, were soloists in the Mozart Double Concerto in E flat. The program included Glazunoff's Fourth Symphony.

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

Philadelphia Hears Symphony and Recitals

(Continued from page 9.)

mony as to their technical and interpretative ability."

The Philadelphia Orchestra Ensemble was heard at the third meeting of the Chamber Music Association. In the Record it was called "a delightful concert, enjoyed by everyone." Mr. Muschamp reported that all the playing of the afternoon "had beauty of tone, fineness of phrasing and an appreciation of the intent of the composer." The Orpheus Club gave the first concert of its fifty-third season at the Academy one evening earlier before a large audience. Among the soloists were George Pownall Orr, Howard K. Berry, John B. Hipwell, Andrew R. McCown and Noah H. Swayne.

Mme. Frances Alda, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, gave a recital program in the Academy of Music on the evening of December 3 before the Philadelphia Forum. Frank La Forge assisted her both as soloist and accompanist. Mme. Alda's program was "splendidly sung," wrote the reviewer of the Public Ledger, who found the singer in "good voice." Although he thought she showed a "tendency to over-sing high notes" he considered her "vocal technique and enunciation in five languages little short of marvelous."

Claire Dux, soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, and Gitta Gradova, young pianist, gave the Monday Morning Musicale Program a week ago at the Bellevue-Stratford. The Record stated that "some of her most enjoyable singing" was in an encore, a fairy ballad, observing that she has "a small voice of fairly good range, but rather colorless." The Ledger thought her not in "particularly good voice," but added that she sang Mozart songs "with excellent art and interpretation."

Miss Gradova revealed "promise" according to this reviewer, the Scriabin being her "best-played numbers." The Record said she performed "with the poise and interpretative power of a much more mature" player.

The Philadelphia Operatic Society gave under the direction of Hedda Van den Beemt last Monday a performance of Fra Diavolo, Auber's comic opera. This organization presents all its productions in English. Monday's was the sixty-second performance by the society, and the beginning of the nineteenth season. The amateur cast requires skillful manipulation, and this Mr. Beemt seems able to give it, as the liberal applause from the audience and the newspaper accounts would seem to testify. It was thoroughly "enjoyed" according to the Record.

Theatres under direction of Hugo Riesenfeld

RIVOLI Broadway at 49th Street

BEBE DANIELS in

"ARGENTINE LOVE"

RIVOLI CONCERT ORCHESTRA

RIALTO Broadway at 42nd Street

THOMAS MEIGHAN in

"TONGUES OF FLAME"

FAMOUS RIALTO ORCHESTRA

Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz

Nineteen Pianists Will Play in Benefit Concert

Nineteen pianists will play simultaneously in the "piano festival" to be held at the Metropolitan Opera House the evening of December 30. Among the artists scheduled to appear are Alexander Brailowsky, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Ethel Leginska, Mischa Levitzki, Yolanda Mero, Alexander Siloti, Sigismund Stojowski, Joseph Lhevinne, Lee Pattison, Germaine Schnitzer, Olga Samaroff, Guiomar Novaes, Ernest Hutcheson, Harold Bauer, Carl Friedberg, Guy Maier, Ernest Schelling, Elly Ney and Myra Hess. These artists will play together, singly and in small groups.

The plans for the festival were formulated at a recent meeting of the Citizens' Committee of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor. On the committee are Miss Lizzie Bliss, Cornelius H. Bliss, Clarence Mackay, Mrs. August Belmont, Lucrezia Bori and others.

Jan Chiapusso

Jan Chiapusso, Dutch pianist from Java, came to Town Hall on Friday night for his first New York recital in two years. The Times reported that his playing fell short of brilliancy by "just a hair," and that it was best at the end in the Tannhauser Overture.

Other reviewers approved his technical fluency, but the Herald Tribune writer objected to an "overpervasive bass" in the Bach, although he found pleasure in the "flowing, clear-cut performance of Ravel's Ondine. The Telegram-Mail account was concerned with an unfavorable consideration of the Bach number, which the reviewer found stormy and indistinct.

Manufacturers' Trust Musical

The annual musical given by the Manufacturers' Trust Company in honor of its stockholders in the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York City, was featured by the presentation of a one act intermezzo, La Veglia, by Carlo Linati and Arrigo Pedrollo. In the cast were Nanette Guilford, Rafaelo Diaz, James Wolfe, and Alfredo Valenti. Le Furie di Arlecchino, another intermezzo, by Luigi Orsini and Adriano Lualdi, was on the program, but, owing to the illness of Ellen Dalossy, it was changed for the balcony scene of Romeo et Juliette in which Miss Guilford and Armand Tokatyan took part. Giuseppe Bamboschek conducted both productions. Maximilian Pilzer conducted the orchestra for several dances arranged by Luigi Albertieri, and for a tableau designed by August Berger of the Metropolitan.

CAPITOL Broadway at 51st Street Subway to Door

World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre

Edward Bowes, Managing Director

"SO THIS IS MARRIAGE"

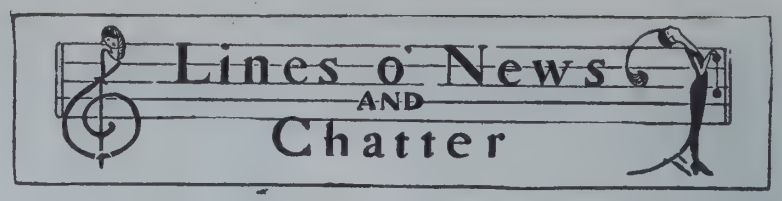
with Conrad Nagel, Eleanor Boardman and Lew Cody.

Metro-Goldwyn Picture.

PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL

Capitol Grand Orchestra

Capitol Ballet Corps



A Merry Christmas . . . and a full stocking.

* * *

Charles Henry Meltzer writes that he will try, at his first opportunty, to outline a plan on practicable giving of opera in English for publication in The Musical Digest.

* * *

A letter from Guy Ourand, associate of T. Arthur Smith, observes that Mr. Smith was not in the lobby of the Commodore Hotel last week, as was reported in The Digest. Well, since Mr. Ourand was there those seeking Mr. Smith must have been content. At any rate, Lines-O'-Newser was pleased to meet Mr. Ourand.

* * *

John A. Penton, active operatically in Cleveland and a music patron, was in New York last week.

* * *

New York is paying for its fine November weather. Recent days have been overcast and drizzly.

* * *

Those local managers who made trips of thousands of miles to attend the recent New York meeting of the National Concert Managers' Association set a good example for their associates who were not present.

* * *

Gloria Caruso was five years old last Thursday.

* * *

An antique furniture collector is Elisabeth Rethberg, the Metropolitan Opera soprano. She has a number of admirable specimens in her New York home.

* * *

Best wishes to Phil Miner, who started last night in Cleveland the introductory presentation of The Miracle, which is scheduled for a run there. Mr. Miner is one of those men who "do" things, as his past performances prove.

* * *

Friends of Ben Atwell, press representative extraordinary, will be glad to learn that he is convalescing from his recent serious illness in Cleveland.

* * *

Smiling Bill Murray, of Baldwin, is back at his New York desk after his honeymoon.

* * *

John Charles Thomas is so busy these days—between his concert and phonograph recording engagements—that he hasn't time even to answer his phone.

* * *

Dusolina Giannini, Wanda Landowska, and Louis Graveure made a strong music trio at last Friday's New York Biltmore Morning Musicale. R. E. Johnston and his able aide, Lulu Breid, manage to give their patrons interesting personalities.

* * *

Back from a business pilgrimage has come Fortune Gallo, by no means displeased with the accomplishments of his San Carlo Opera Company.

* * *

And Amelita Galli-Curci, Homer Samuels, and Lawrence Evans are to spend Christmas in this country—not in Europe.

Those Brunswick Hours of Music appear to have caught popular approval in a marked degree.

* * *

Charlie Wagner's new play, Quarantine, which New York saw for the first time last week is delightful comedy and splendidly produced and performed. Incidentally, Sydney Blackmer has a song which reveals a baritone voice of splendid quality; and it is produced with a high setting not often heard on the concert platform.

* * *

Nor should one forget Lenore Ulric's latest dramatic role—in The Harem, which is "packing them in" at New York's Belasco Theatre. Ben Roeder worked hard to put this piece over . . . just as Boss David Belasco did in getting it ready for presentation.

* * *

This coming season will find Olga Samaroff, the pianist, under her former management—the Wolfsohn Bureau.

* * *

It is to be hoped now—through a court action in Boston involving another matter entirely—that that old story about efforts having been made to blackmail John McCormack is finally put where it belongs. No such efforts as those represented ever took place, as is proved by a letter made possible to show at this time (and never before).

* * *

A special music program for New York's Piccadilly Theatre patrons was arranged through the direction of Managing Director Lee Ochs, on Sunday last. It began at 12:45 noon and lasted an hour and a quarter.

* * *

Overheard between the acts at the Metropolitan a few nights ago—Victor Wittgenstein telling Ottokar Cadek how uncomfortable his piano chair felt the night of his recent Aeolian Hall recital. En route to the hall Vic had been ungently seated in the gutter from a smashed taxi. . . . And how did such a good story escape the ever ready press agent?

* * *

Among the many Christmas and New Year cards and other forms of thoughtful greeting received by the editor and staff members of The Musical Digest is one altogether unique. It is a compact little book, bound in flexible leather—A Christmas Carol by Dickens. Ernest Urchs sent it.

* * *

Mrs. Hazel S. Moore is now the Chicago special correspondent for The Musical Digest, and Arthur W. Colgren is looking after this publication's business interests in that city.

* * *

One thing is certain: Mrs. W. N. Burritt knows how to arrange artistically whatever domicile she presides over. Her new home at 22 West Fifty-fourth street, New York, where Mrs. Antonia Sawyer gave a reception last Sunday in honor of Percy Grainger, is most attractive.

MUD

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

Gatti Talks on Falstaff
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 11 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1924 (Copyright, 1924, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc 15 CENTS A COPY

Walter Henry Rothwell, conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, whose efforts have done so much in bringing that organization to a point which ranks it with the leading symphony orchestras of the United States and of the world. William Andrews Clark, Jr., founder of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, is its sole guarantor.

Bulletins of News

A cablegram published in the New York Times of yesterday gives an account of an amusing experience which Ignace Paderewski had last Sunday. The dance committee in a small Swiss village, seeking unsuccessfully the services of a pianist for its New Year's ball, received this communication:

"There is a man named Paderewski who plays the piano but is out of work. He would like a job this Winter. He lives at Marges, near Lausanne."

The committee swallowed the joker's bait and wrote Paderewski offering $3 for the night.

The famous pianist, amused, personally wrote a reply stating in charming terms that he regretted being unable to accept the flattering offer.

The Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune, commenting on the recent concert in the French metropolis of Mme. Luella Meluis, refers to "the flute-like quality" of the soprano's voice as "frequently remarked" in her singing of compositions by Handel, Mozart, Schubert, Schumann, David, Meyerbeer, Watts, and others. The concert took place in Salle Gaveau and was attended by many people prominent musically and socially. Reference is made in the Herald Tribune article of Mme. Meluis's engagement to appear next summer at the Paris Grand Opera.

An announcement has just been made of the merger of the L. D. Bogue Concert Management of New York and the Bernard Laberge Bureau of Montreal, Canada. The name of the combined organization will henceforth be the Bogue-Laberge Concert Management, and the central office will be at 130 West 42nd Street, New York City. The Canadian offices will be at 70 St. James Street, Montreal, and there will be also a Bogue-Laberge office in Paris. The purpose of the merger is to facilitate the handling of the artists of the two management in the adjacent countries of the United States and Canada.

Paris, Dec. 27.—Leon Bakst, Russian painter, died here today in his fifty-eighth year. Among the best known of his accomplishments was his designing of scenery and costumes for the presentations of Diaghileff's Ballet Russe when the activities of that organization were at their height before the war.

W. E. Walter to be Director Of Curtis Music Institute

(Special to The Musical Digest)

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 26.—William E. Walter, at present Manager of the Detroit Symphony orchestra, has been offered and has accepted the position of Director of the Curtis Institute of Music . . . succeeding at the close of May next John Grolle, whose resignation is announced today.

THE LIBRARY OF THE MAR 3 1925
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Mr. Walter is a graduate of the University of Michigan, and a native of Cleveland, where he began his career as a newspaper reporter. He served on the staff of the New York Sun under Charles A. Dana, and later was for six years music reviewer for the New York Commercial.

Subsequently Mr. Walter became associated with the Boston Symphony orchestra, remaining there on the business staff for thirteen years. Four years ago he served the late National Symphony orchestra in a special capacity; then the New York Philharmonic, whence he went to the Detroit Symphony.

Mr. Walter's music knowledge and his wide experience in administrative affairs are generally recognized.

Radio Plans Stir Up Artist-Bureaus

Managers of artist-attractions who care for their concert and other music interests are viewing with concern the possible outcome of the Victor Talking Machine Company's announced plans to broadcast by radio its most distinguished artists—with whom it has contracts to make talking machine records.

New York wholesale artist-attraction managers fear that too frequent broadcasting of musicians of the foremost rank will place at the disposal of the public a quantity of superior music programs that is likely to reduce the concert patronage in all parts of the country, particularly since the Brunswick Phonograph organization, which began the movement, also will give its regular Hours of Music. It is the contention that the combined radio activities of these two foremost institutions will supply the public with as much fine music and musicians as much of the public may care to hear.

Dennis F. McSweeney, speaking officially for John McCormack, states that the tenor will not receive a fee for his broadcasting on New Year's night. He has agreed thus to sing as a special favor to the Victor Company and his good friend Calvin G. Child, and as a New Year's greeting to his thousands of friends throughout the country.

Juilliard Foundation Announces Eighty-one Fellowship Winners

Makes 30 Awards to Pianists, 27 to Singers, 14 to Cellists and Violinists.

10 COMPOSITION PRIZES

Eighty-one students of music; thirty pianists, twenty-seven singers, fourteen players of violin and cello, and ten students of composition were announced in New York yesterday by the Juilliard Musical Foundation as successful competitors for its fellowships.

The fellowships for students of singing were awarded to:

Max Alexander, Los Angeles; Gretchen Altpeter, San Diego, Cal.; Constance Bernstein, New York City; Claire Brookhurst, Brooklyn; Olga Brounoff, New York City; Charles Carver, Brooklyn; Henry J. Chitraro, New York City; Frank Cuthbert, McKeesport, Pa.; Marie Edelle, New York City; Florence Frommelt, Newark, N. J.; Alexander Gatewood, Kansas City, Kansas; Gretchen Haller, Herkimer, N. Y.; Stella M. Jerica, San Francisco; Charles Kullman, New Haven, Conn.; Madalyn Maier, Bound Brook, N. J.; Gustava V. Malstrom, Tacoma, Wash.; Caryl Marshall, Fort Johnson, N. Y.; Dudley Marwick, Brooklyn; Marie Masur, New York City; Idene S. Montague, Glens Falls, N. Y.; Kathryn J. Myers, San Francisco; Edith Piper, New York City; Walter Preston, Brooklyn; Geraldine Riegger, Columbus, Ohio; Anna Rose, New York City; Gordon Weir, Brooklyn; Isabelle Yalkowsky, Chicago.

The piano fellowships went to:

Abram Chasins, New York City; Ulric Cole, Los Angeles; Ernestine Covington, Houston, Texas; Ida Deck, Buckhannon, W. Va.; Celius Dougherty, Glenwood, Minn.; Ethelyn Dryden, Baltimore, Md.; Sara Franck, Brooklyn; George E. Fritzberg, Minneapolis; Rudolph Gruen, New York City; Lillian Hasmiller, Newark, N. J.; Susan Haury, Ontario, Cal.; George P. Hopkins, Claremont, Cal.; Morton Howard, Sioux City, Iowa; Yetta Kabram, New York City; Dorothy Kendrick, Dallas, Texas; Gladys Kohn, Los Angeles; Lydia Mason, New York City; Ruth McCann, Mobile, Ala.; Dora Miller, Brooklyn; Helen Moore, Wichita, Kansas; Maragaret Paige, Pueblo, Colo.; Jesse Pedrick, Orlando, Fla.; Reginald Riley, Akron, Ohio; Dorothy Roeder, New York City; Josephine Rosensweet, New York City; Celia Saloman, Orlando, Fla.; Marva Shannon, Walla Walla, Wash.; Harold Triggs, Chicago; Roslyn Weisberg, Syracuse, N. Y.; Isabelle Yalkowsky, Chicago.

The fellowships in violin and cello were won by:

Martha Ashworth, Webster, Mass.; Herbert L. Clark, San Francisco; John H Fraser, New York City; Mary A Lackland, Richmond, Va.; Christine McCann, Mobile, Ala.; Della Posner, Newark, N. J.; Rose Rabinowitz, New York City; Daniel Saidenberg, New York City; Sadie Schwartz, Thompsonville, Conn.; David Siegel, New York City; Florence Suder, Waterbury, Conn.; Ada Synajko, New York City; Mary A. Waterman, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; Heimann Weinstine, St. Paul, Minn.

Composition fellowships were awarded to:

David A. Barnett, Far Rockaway, N. Y.; Theodora Brook, New York City; Abram W. Chasins, New York City; Ulric Cole, Los Angeles; Ida M. Deck, Buckhannon, W. Va.; William B. Dinsmore, Jr., New York City; Lillian B. Hasmiller, Newark, N. J.; George P. Hopkins, Claremont, Cal.; Kathryn J. Myers, San Francisco; Virginia C. Thomas, Bristol, Conn.

Maier and Pattison Assist Philharmonic

Pianists Play Bach Concerto; Hadley Conducts American Novelty by Ballantine.

At the Philharmonic concert on the afternoon of December 21, Henry Hadley offered a program in which was featured Edward Ballantine's orchestral Suite, From the Garden of Hellas, and Bach's Concerto for two pianos and strings in C minor, played by Guy Maier and Lee Pattison. Other numbers were Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony and Smetana's Overture to The Bartered Bride.

The reviewer in the Sun complimented Mr. Maier and Mr. Pattison for "a remarkably skillful and spirited performance." The World commentator remarked on the "thorough fidelity and scholarly interpretation" of the two pianists and of the orchestra under Mr. Hadley's guidance.

The writer in the Times commended them for the "zest and emphasis" which they gave to the performance, and Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune found them up to their usual standard. He wrote: "That well established firm of virtuosi, Maier and Pattison (may they never dissolve!) . . . This is not Johann Sebastian at his greatest, but the firm did their best for it, and that is very good indeed."

Mr. Hadley and the orchestra received praise in the Sun for the "finish and brilliance" with which the Ballantine Suite was played.

The American novelty by Mr. Ballantine, for several years instructor in the music department of Harvard, is based on texts from the volume of poems of the same name as translated by Lilla Cabot Perry. It was first played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra two seasons ago. Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune wrote that the composer "makes music that is often fine-textured, rich in its orchestral color, distinguished in line, poetic in mood." He found that this work has "charm and vividness."

In the opinion of the Sun reviewer, there was "no apparent attempt at profoundity, the composer has written music in conventional form, kept to his titles for ideas, shown brilliant orchestration where called for and descriptive coloring throughout." The World writer felt this same lack of "profound utterances or disturbing originality" although the music showed "obvious sincerity and craftsmanship and has maintained the purity of the classic line which it strove to follow, with admirable unity and coherence." The Times reviewer considered the "mood of the suite and the polished pearl-like orchestration" better fitted to the Nocturne and At the Tomb of Sophocles episodes than to the Invocation to Pan and the chanty, Unloose Your Cables.

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

Maria Jeritza Sings Thais at Metropolitan

Danise and Tokatyan Appear and Louis Hasselmans Is the Conductor.

Massenet's Thais was presented at the Metropolitan Opera House the evening of December 22 for the first time this season. Maria Jeritza sang the title role, and the others in the cast were Giuseppe Danise, Armand Tokatyan, Louis d'Angelo, Grace Anthony, Laura Robertson, Henriette Wakefield, and Vincenzo Reschiglian. Louis Hasselmans conducted.

Although Deems Taylor of the World admitted that Mme. Jeritza was not at her best as Thais, he thought that she "brought to it, as she brings to everything, her beauty, stage presence and artistic integrity."

W. J. Henderson wrote in the Sun that he did not consider Mme. Jeritza very convincing, but he felt that "she sang the music last evening better than she has at some previous performances." She "sang delightfully," said Ernest Newman in the Post, although she failed to "unify and vivify" the character. "With all her loveliness," in the words of the Times reviewer, she failed to find the "deeper note" in Massenet's libretto, although she "pleased the pictorial eye and charmed the musical ear, so that whatever dramatic deficiencies might be noticeable would be easily dismissed." Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail found her "picturesque and sonorous," and the Herald Tribune commentator ventured the opinion that "Heaven did not intend her for the ideal Thais," although she again revealed herself "an accomplished actress, a beautiful woman, an artist of temperament and charm."

Most of the chroniclers laid most of the blame for the lack of effectiveness upon the score and libretto, rather than on the acting or direction. Mr. Sanborn asserted that Mr. Danise and Mr. Tokatyan "repeated impersonations that have been cordially praised in the past," and that Rosina Galli danced to general satisfaction. Mr. Hasselmans, said Mr. Sanborn, conducted with "sympathetic understanding."

In the words of the reviewer in the Herald Tribune, the Nicias of Mr. Tokatyan "was the most voracious portrait of the evening." Of Mr. Danise, as Athanael, the Times said "his singing of the part was vocally of the best and his conception of the young priest had a sympathetic quality." Both singers were commended by Mr. Taylor, and Mr. Henderson considered Mr. Danise "sang commendably," but that Mr. Tokatyan "has been happier in other roles." Mr. Newman said that the best features of the evening were the lighting and the ballet.

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street, New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

Atlanta to Have Season Of Opera Next Summer

LIGHT OPERA is to be produced in Atlanta, Ga., next summer, according to a special despatch to the New York Evening Post. The presentations will take place in the city auditorium, which each spring is the scene of Metropolitan Opera productions for one week. The project will be under the direction of Charles Howard Candler, financier, and C. B. Bidwell, treasurer of the Atlanta Music Festival Association, which brings the Metropolitan Company here.

The season will continue for six weeks, beginning the middle of June. Six operas will be given, a different one each week. The association proposes to organize a ballet and chorus school where participants in the light opera productions will be trained, and casts will be recruited from all over the world.

When plans for the project were broached it was proposed to build an open-air stadium at Lakewood Park. Mr. Candler said that the outdoor feature has not been laid aside in arranging for the first year's productions in the city auditorium.

Organization of the company already is under way, and Mr. Bidwell has already made two trips to New York to obtain artists.

Nevins Plays for Guild

Willard Irving Nevins, concert organist, and a member of the Faculty of the Guilmant Organ School of New York City, appeared as guest organist before the New England chapter of the American Guild of Organists in Boston on December 15.

Burmester Gives Chicago Recital

Chicago, Dec. 17.—Willy Burmester, violinist, appeared here at the Studebaker yesterday afternoon. The Tribune said that he played the Mendelssohn Concerto with a "masterly knowledge of its contents."

Courboin Plays With Detroit Orchestra

Organist Is Soloist in Widor Symphony; Gabrilowitsch Conducts Extase.

Detroit, Dec. 20.—Charles M. Courboin, organist, was soloist at the concert of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra Thursday evening conducted by Ossip Gabrilowitsch. Other numbers on the program were Saint-Saens prelude to The Deluge, with the violin solo played by Ilya Schknolnik, and Scriabin's Poem of Ecstasy.

Widor's Sixth Symphony for organ and symphony was played by Mr. Courboin with orchestra. In addition to an air "of great ease and efficiency," as the Times reviewer expressed it, "he has the pianist's dramatized touch on the keys." Cyril Arthur Player of the News hailed him as a master of the instrument "of prodigious reach, strength, and proficiency." The "magnitude" of Mr. Courboin's musicianship, according to this writer, was more than equal to the technical complications of the composition.

Of the Poem, Mr. Player considered that Mr. Gabrilowitsch "gave a painstaking interpretation of this brief but resurgent composition. With a rare, sustained quality and an uncanny sense for reverence with which this sincere composer mantles himself, it was magnificently given to the applause of the audience."

Galli-Curci Returns

Amelita Galli-Curci returned on Christmas Day from England, where she made a tour of twenty-seven concerts. She was accompanied by her husband, Homer Samuels, and by Lawrence Evans of Evans and Salter, her managers.

Engles to Manage Mme. Gerhardt

Elena Gerhardt, German lieder singer, has signed a contract with George Engles, who will direct her concert appearances in this country for the season of 1925-26.

MARIE TIFFANY
SOPRANO METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Fisk Building, New York — Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia
Brunswick Records

RUDOLF LAUBENTHAL
TENOR, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones — Aeolian Hall, New York
Aeolian-Vocalion Records

A New Note in Song-Recital Giving Charming Programs of Melodious Beethoven Songs—With Talks.
Management:
DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City
FREEMANTEL

Bostonians Play Jazz Scherzo

Maier and Pattison Assist Orchestra in Hill Novelty; Roman Choir Sings.

Boston, Dec. 22.—Guy Maier and Lee Pattison were the soloists at the ninth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, Friday afternoon. The Concerto for two pianos, by Arthur Bliss, and Edward Burlingame Hill's "Jazz" Scherzo for two pianos were given their first public performances. C. P. E. Bach's Concerto for two pianos was played for the first time in Boston. In addition to these novelties were Haydn's Symphony in G major, and Ravel's La Valse.

"The skill of the two pianists in ensemble was, as usual, extraordinary," wrote P. R. in the Globe. The conductor and the two pianists gave "eloquent interpretations of these numbers," he continued. In the Bach, the pianists, according to H. T. F. of the Transcript, "caught the flow and the flavor of this ancient music; kept to that oneness of tone which is their unique possession." Warren Storey Smith of the Post said, "Fading and faded much of this latter music assuredly is, yet it has its many pages of charm, and it was superbly played yesterday by soloists and orchestra." Saying that it was "not the fault of those admirable pianists, Messrs. Maier and Pattison," Philip Hale wrote in the Herald that the music lacked strength and beauty.

The two new pieces, according to this writer, "demanded a virtuoso performance on the part of all concerned and the demand was fully met." He considered the Hill work "light and agreeable music, a little spun out, considering the ideas contained therein." Mr. Smith thought the Scherzo "a highly ingenious and a most diverting piece." The music, to H. T. P., bore "fresh witness to Mr. Hill's harmonic sense . . . he writes the jazz of a cultivated musician." On the other hand S. M. in the Christian Science Monitor pardoned Mr. Hill for "his slight lapse of judgment," in view of the fact that he "is an excellent musician and an imaginative composer."

This writer found the Bliss Concerto, scored only for wind, percussion, and piano, monotonous, but H. T. P. wrote that it was "an exhilarating and exciting music, a game with sonorities . . . not quite passionless is Mr. Bliss' spare and sinewy tune." P. R. commented that the ideas and the musical idiom "are, however, fresh and vivid."

On last Sunday afternoon the orchestra gave a concert for the benefit of its pension fund for retired musicians of the orchestra. For his all-Tschaikowsky program, Mr. Koussevitzky played the Francesca da Rimini fantasy, Elegy and Waltz from the Serenade for strings, and the Fifth Symphony.

The People's Symphony Orchestra gave the seventh concert of the season this same afternoon, Stuart Mason conducting. Walter H. Kidder, baritone, was the assisting artist. The Monitor considered "his freedom from mannerism" pleasing, as well as his clear enunciation and tonal quality. The Transcript writer congratulated him for "rich, warm, full baritone voice of considerable quality." The Globe commentator considered it "one of the best" concerts given by this orchestra, both in content and performance. Mr. Mason's readings and direction were well spoken of.

Emil Mollenhauer conducted the Handel and Haydn Society in The Messiah yesterday afternoon. The soloists were Caroline Hudon-Alexander, soprano, Nevada van der Veer, contralto, Allen McQuhae, tenor, Frederick Millar, bass. The Boston Festival orchestra, John W. Crowley, principal, played. The trumpeter was Walter Smith, and Frank H. Luker was the organist. The Herald reviewer said that Mr. Mollenhauer proved himself again a chorus master of "marked skill." The soloists received congratulatory notices.

A week ago Wednesday, the Roman Choir was heard in an unusual concert, directed by Cavaliere Angelo Negri, organist and composer. The first part of the program was devoted to sacred music which, in the words of the Herald commentator, "was distinguished by perfect balance and accord and by the remarkable purity and sweetness of tone." The secular numbers of the second part consisted of operatic selections and folk songs. The Transcript, although calling Mr. Negri "an extremely carefui and attentive conductor," was disappointed in the choir.

The Harvard Glee Club gave a concert for young people December 15. The Herald reported that they sang, as is their custom, "with beautiful precision, chiselling coldly, stressing the phrase, the melodic line, the vocal nuance." The Transcript was pleased with the better tone and freer confidence displayed.

Paul Whiteman's orchestra gave a second concert here and was greeted with the same rapturous applause from the audience, and press notices equally enthusiastic as those of their first appearance. Others heard in recital were Edith Thompson, pianist, whose "polished technique" was lauded by the Monitor; W. R. Rennie, pianist; Hercules Pascal, bass, assisted by Hazel Clark, violinist, and Harry Whittemore, pianist, in a much applauded program; Constance McGlinchee, pianist; and Laurilla Baillargeon, soprano, in joint recital with Pembroke Dahlquist, baritone.

Photo by Amemiyi.

GUY MAIER AND LEE PATTISON
Duo-Pianists, Who Have Been Heard With the New York Philharmonic and Boston Symphony Orchestras During the Last Fortnight.

Victor Artists to Broadcast

Opera singers and other artists under contract with the Victor Talking Machine Company will sing and play for the radio for the first time in a series of concerts beginning New Year's night. The artists who will broadcast the first concert from the studio of Station WEAF are John McCormack, tenor, and Lucrezia Bori, lyric soprano of the Metropolitan Opera.

Others who will be heard in six later concerts are Feodor Chaliapin, Renee Chemet, Alfred Cortot, Emilio de Gogorza, Mischa Elman, Amelita Galli-Curci, Beniamino Gigli, Jascha Heifetz, Maria Jeritza, Giovanni Martinelli, Titta Ruffo, Tito Schipa, Antonio Scotti and Reinald Werrenrath.

Oehman Makes Debut In Role of Samson

Jeanne Gordon Sings Dalila and Clarence Whitehill Appears as High Priest.

Samson and Dalila had its first operatic presentation of the season at the Metropolitan December 21 with Martin Oehman singing Samson for the first time. Jeanne Gordon was Dalila, and others in the cast were Clarence Whitehill as the High Priest, and Messrs. Rothier, d'Angelo, Paltrinieri, Altglass, and Reschiglian. Mr. Hasselmans conducted, and, to quote the Post, "all the eloquence of Hasselmans' baton did not avail to infuse spirit into the first act, but this defect was lost in the glow of the succeeding passages."

The Times reviewer wrote that Mr. Oehman was "vocally fresh and youthful" and the writer in the Herald Tribune considered that he did "creditable work" although hampered by a severe cold. According to the Post commentator, the young Swedish tenor did not warm to his role at once, but when he did was "most appealing both in his singing and in his acting. His voice throughout had a youthful, velvety quality which was highly pleasing."

This reviewer found that Mme. Gordon's "rich, dark voice and her beauty of face and form were ravishing." The Times chronicler noted that Mr. Oehman's youthfulness was a quality shared by Mme. Gordon, "the slenderest Dalila in years."

The opera was considered "gorgeously set" by the Post reivewer, who wrote of other members of the cast:

"Rothier always adorning whatever part he takes, made the chrous of the Hebrew fathers in the first act a delight. Clarence Whitehill as the high priest and father of Dalila gave his usual artistic performance, lending special charm to the scene in which he instructs his daughter regarding her duty to their tribe."

ARTHUR SHATTUCK
PIANIST—AN AMERICAN ARTIST
STEINWAY PIANO
Management: MARGARET RICE, 414 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

DUSOLINA GIANNINI
DRAMATIC SOPRANO
Management: Daniel Mayer — Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO — Victor Records

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

EDITH MASON
SOPRANO
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT: METROPOLITAN MUSICAL BUREAU, AEOLIAN HALL, NEW YORK CITY

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1924. VOL. VII. NO. 11

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

The Dawning New Year

Nineteen-twenty-five is a bare two days off. Nineteen-twenty-four is preparing to depart.

The past year in music has not been unsatisfactory; in some respects it has contributed much which history can present with pride. Creatively there has been done perhaps less than discerning persons might desire, for living great composers are few. Those who are striving to carry on are not amongst the greatly endowed; but they have done their best and some of their achievements must be regarded with respect. The world is undergoing a process of evolution, and nowhere is it more apparent than in the field of music creativeness. New schools are struggling with the modern idiom of expression, and not all their members are doing over well.

But interpretatively there is a wealth of material. Never were the symphony organizations and the chamber music organizations of a higher character. And they are growing in numbers and in public appreciation. Instrumental soloists are holding to a masterly standard of accomplishment. Only in the ranks of singers does there exist a regrettable lapse of superlative technique.

In this country, as in many others, there has continued an abundance of music of every known form. Performances of concerts and of operas have gone on with slight diminishment of quantitative supply. The United States has had nearly everywhere much music of a splendid kind. Inferiority has now and again prevailed, as inferiority often will. But the public support of what is best has been rarely lacking. Occasionally, in some section of the land where conditions were temporarily off music-balance, there has ensued a weakened support, yet it has not been more serious than at certain other times. Europe is effecting its music regeneration; another two years should see it put thoroughly to rights.

The coming year promises more than the year now passing has been able to give. It may not surpass materially what has come forth during the twelve months now at its close, but there is always a chance that a new year may bring forth some unexpected fruits.

What matters much, in so far as the United States is concerned, is the future of those engaged in the professional side of music and those who form the substance to keep it intact.

Better general business is certain to come, and that will react favorably on the music arts. There should be a growth of opera projects during Nineteen-twenty-five; there should ensue a more liberal support of concerts, and the number of persons occupied in the study of music should also record an increase.

An optimistic attitude will help make the next twelvemonth all it promises. Opportunity will assuredly offer for all who have the ability and the faith and the courage to persevere.

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

ONE can never know what a noisy city New York is until one has tried to read an unfamiliar orchestral score here. Then all the sounds which ordinarily pass unnoticed leap into the range of attention and confound themselves with the parts of clarinets in B flat and A, horns in F, and trombones in the tenor clef.

The quietest place that we have been able to find, strangely enough, is the subway. The roar of the train drowns out distracting conversation, whistling, and the creaking of the thinking apparatuses of cross word puzzlers, and leaves a pleasant calm.

YET doubtless we are far out of date in considering the subway noise an indeterminate sort of murmur. In conversation the other day with Carlos Salzedo, the harpist and a leader of those "enfants terribles," The International Composers' Guild, he informed us that each New Year's Eve, together with Edgar Varese, he climbs to the roof of his apartment near Riverside Drive to listen to "the finest concert of all," the din of the whistles on the Hudson and the bells on the shore as the revellers welcome the new year.

We have been warned in time, and hereby join the ranks of the subscribers to that annual concert. We'll be in a box in our pajamas tomorrow night.

THIS anecdote throws some light where it is badly needed. Although Varese is doubtless one of the most serious composers in the world, and although his Hyperprism is a thoroughly serious composition, it was received frivolously on its performance by the Philadelphians under Stokowski a fortnight ago. At least two of the reviewers reported that it sounded like the musical version of a fire in a zoo, and few professed to know what the piece is about.

The scoring is extraordinary. It calls for ten wind instruments: flute (interchangeable with piccolo), E flat clarinet, three horns, two trumpets, and two trombones; and for seventeen percussion instruments (some of them admitted to this group for lack of better classification), namely snare drum, Indian drum, bass drum, tambourine, crash cymbal, ordinary cymbals, tamtam, triangle, anvil, slap stick, two Chinese blocks, rattle, big rattle, sleigh bells, siren, and lion roar.

The last two instruments gave rise, of course, to the zoo-fire theory. It is natural for one hearing strange sounds to interpret them in terms of what one knows. Even the manufacturer of the queer instrument which caused so much mirth in the audience could think of no better name for it than "lion roar," although, according to the composer, to him it is an objective sound, devoid of all connotation, and used for its intrinsic music value alone.

Perhaps that is what music is coming to. At any rate a conductor who wishes to guarantee his concert a lively and interesting six minutes will do well to look into these seventeen pages of musical dynamite. The printed score has the unique offer of the publisher to supply "informations in reference to percussion instruments" upon request.

STOKOWSKI conducted from memory, which aroused universal amazement. His knowledge of the queer score becomes more understandable when one is informed that even after its performance in Philadelphia the leader rehearsed the piece nineteen times before bringing it to New York.

All this practice must have had at least one advantage: the Philadelphia Orchestra is now equipped with about twelve string players who will be able at a moment's notice to leap into the breach, should one of the percussionists of the band become disabled, and play a slap stick or a Chinese block or a siren to absolute perfection.

AMONG the American orchestras the Philadelphians have gradually associated their name with the word brilliance. The sheer richness and polish of their tone, and the neatness of their technic always carry away their hearers.

We fain would toss in a voice of semi-dissent. Without detracting in the least from the superb skill of the orchestra, we have often felt inclined to question its balance.

It's the cellos that trouble us most of all. They sit in front on the right of the leader, where most conductors have their second violins. There are twelve of them in all, and they are not reticent with vibrato. Too often the effect, when they are supported in the same emphatic spirit by violas and brasses, is luscious but—in our opinion—incorrect. We wonder—.

We can recall, incidentally, that the Boston orchestra on its last New York visit played Brahms' Fourth Symphony with only seven cellos (two less than the New York Philharmonic has), and that the bass which they supplied was tasteful and sufficiently strong.

Perhaps this, too, is a matter of opinion.

ALEXANDER FRIED.

When You See This Insignia

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

in an advertisement carrying any part of a reprinted criticism, it means that the editor of The Musical Digest has examined the criticism, and certifies that the published portions have been rightly used.

Falstaff: A Perfect Opera

Gatti-Casazza Relates Little Known Anecdotes About the Composition and Early History of the Verdi Masterpiece

Giulio Gatti-Casazza is perhaps the least interviewed celebrity in the music world. We found him in a communicative mood the other day, so we ventured to inquire about the coming revival of Falstaff, about Verdi, Boito, and so on. The result was as we expected. When Mr. Gatti talks, he talks fluently, profoundly, and fast. These remarks of his we copied hastily on our cuffs as he made them. We hope that we have them all, but we doubt it. BRUNO ZIRATO.

PHOTO BY JULEY & SON

A setting in the first act, painted by Joseph Urban.

PHOTO BY MISHKIN

Frances Alda to sing role of Nanette.

PHOTO BY GIGI BASSANI

Lucrezia Bori will appear as Alice Ford.

Antonio Scotti in the title role.

PHOTO BY MISHKIN

Beniamino Gigli will sing Fenton.

PHOTO BY MISHKIN

Verdi's Falstaff will be revived at the Metropolitan next Friday evening after an interval of fifteen years

IN 1889 when I was a student at the Scuola Superiore Navale in Genoa, I used to go every day to buy my cigarettes in a tobacco shop right opposite the Palazzo Doria, where Giuseppe Verdi lived.

From time to time in this shop I would see Verdi's valet, who used to drop in and converse with the shopkeeper. One day I heard the proprietor say to him, "I just saw your boss pass. It's impossible that he is seventy-six or seventy-seven years old. He looks like a youngster. Why doesn't he write another opera?"

The valet replied, "Who knows? He plays continually, but we don't know whether he is playing his own music or that of someone else. At any rate he plays music that is always cheerful; it sounds like the music of an operetta. . ."

This random conversation I recalled when the next year I heard of the announcement of the coming production of Falstaff.

You know how this announcement was made. Verdi invited to lunch at the Hotel Milan in Milan one day Boito, Giulio Ricordi, and Signora Giuditta Ricordi, the wife of Giulio. The lunch was nearly finished when Boito stood up and said, "Now let us drink to the health of 'pancione.'"

They all looked at each other in surprise, as though asking who was this "potbelly."

Then Boito repeated, "Here's to the belly of Sir John Falstaff."

Signora Giuditta Ricordi, who was next to Signora Giuseppina Verdi, asked her, "Is he referring to a new opera?" and Signora Giuseppina nodded in reply.

The secret out, Verdi told them that the opera was well along, that it was a work in three acts based on a humorous character, that it had a very small part for chorus, and that he himself did not yet know when or where it would be produced.

The first presentation of Falstaff followed two years later, in February, 1893, at La Scala. The first time that I, Gatti, had anything to do with it was in 1895 at Ferrara, where, you know, I was director of that opera house.

After this performance I telegraphed to Verdi, informing him of the brilliant success which his masterpiece had won, and with his customary good sense he answered: The success of the opera cannot really be determined until one has read the box office reports of more than one performance, for it is only the continuous interest and support of the public which signifiy a genuine success.

At La Scala I arranged a revival of Falstaff in 1899, with Antonio Scotti in the title role. Scotti was little known in Milan at that time, so that I had difficulty, especially with Boito, in having him accepted for the part. Scotti's success was so great, however, that Boito was quite convinced that I had been right. The day following the performance, together with Boito and Giulio Ricordi, Scotti and I went to visit the composer, who received us cordially. He was generous with praises, and said besides: "One must be attentive nevertheless to what the public says through the medium of the box office, especially in the case of musical comedies and comic operas, for one can never tell about them. It is my experience that the public comes to the theatre more willingly to cry than to laugh."

I gave another revival of Falstaff at La Scala in 1906.

I learned more about the composition of this opera several years later. In Milan one day in September, 1913, I was about to enter my car when Arrigo Boito passed, and stopping me, asked me where I was going.

"I am about to set out," I replied, "to hear the premiere of an opera of which you are part author."

"What opera is that?"

"Falstaff," I answered, "they are celebrating Verdi's centenary in his home city, Busseto, by giving it for the first time."

"What a temptation," said Boito. "I wish that I could go with you."

"Come along," I said. "Let us go to your home; you can pack your bag in a quarter of an hour, and then if we leave immediately we shall be in Busseto in two hours. We can hear the premiere and be back in Milan tomorrow morning."

"Very well," decided Boito, "let us go."

During the trip naturally the conversation turned principally on Falstaff, and Boito, who that day was in a confidential vein, told me a number of anecdotes, little known, but interesting, concerning the opera and Verdi.

"You know," he told me, "although Verdi was seventy-eight years old, and despite the fact that he had made no arrangements with publishers or with any operatic directors, he worked easily and swiftly. One would have thought that this extraordinary man was only thirty or forty years of age.

"As quickly as he would set a scene of Falstaff to music he would call me either to Genoa or to his villa at Santa Agata to have me hear it. Verdi was an excellent pianist, and besides he sang with real taste and expressiveness, so that he was able to give me perfectly an impression of what he had composed.

"When he showed me the second scene of the second act, that which takes place in the home of Ford, as soon as he had finished playing and singing, he asked me, as he always did, 'Well, Boito, how does it sound to you?'

"I replied, 'It is really a stunning scene, in force of imagination, in form, in vigor, in unity, and so on; nevertheless there is one point that I should like to talk about,—but, to tell you the truth, I don't dare.'

"'How do you mean, you don't dare?' asked Verdi. 'It is purposely to get your impression and your criticism that I call you here,—and then you become reticent! Speak up, speak up! I am an old soldier who is not afraid of a little gunfire.'

"'Very well, then, Maestro; it has to do with that sort of arietta which Falstaff sings, Quando ero paggio del Duca di Norfolk. It seems to me, as far as suits my taste, that it is arranged with too much simplicity, with too primitive rhythm: ta ra ra ta ra ta ra. . .

"'You must pardon, Maestro, but you asked me my opinion.'

"Said Verdi: 'Very well, very well. Let's see.'

"Then he went over the arietta several times, partly playing it on the piano, partly singing it. Finally he concluded: 'I am sorry, dear Boito, but I am not of your opinion. This arietta is exactly what is required to break the duet a bit, like a breath of fresh air which cannot and should not be changed. Have patience, but I shall keep it as it is.'

"Of course," Boito said to me, "I did not say a word further. But the next year, when the opera was finished, Verdi had me listen to it entirely from beginning to end on the piano, and when he reached the end of the second act he asked, 'Well, Boito, what impression did the arietta make upon you this time?'

"'Maestro,' I answered, 'to tell you the truth, it has made exactly the same impression which it did the first time I heard it. I am not convinced; it seems to me barren, cold, impoverished.'

"Verdi sang and played it once again; then, shaking his head: 'Dear Boito,' he told me, 'I too must stick to my old opinion; I find the music

(Continued on page 16.)

The Distinctive Debut of

ELVIRA de HIDALGO

at the Metropolitan Opera House confirms years of European Success

"On the stage where Hidalgo had so shrilly piped as a 17 year old girl in her former debut, March 17, 1910, there reappeared after many years a woman ripened and matured in voice, physique, personality and art. Spanish from toes to eyebrows, with an assurance won on the wide world's stage, she was on terms with the holiday night house before a note was sung. . . . Her parlando passages, flirtatious and smiling, made the talky recitatives go like the snap of the whip to a thoroughbred. . . . A voice it certainly was, such a voice of the people as you'd hear in Seville, and the audience applauded it."—The Times.

"A very pleasing coloratura soprano, smooth and fluent, able to round out ornaments and ride the loftiest notes, such as the high F in 'Una voce poco fa,' to the marked delight of the spectators. . . . She made a very favorable impression."—The N. Y. Herald-Tribune.

"Another newcomer here is Elvira de Hidalgo, the coloratura soprano, who gave us a Rosina in 'The Barber of Seville,' the like of which New York has not experienced for many an opera season. She sang her purling passages with astonishing lightness and grace, but what was even more in the picture, she acted the frolicsome scenes with true comedy sense and reflected all the mischievous youthfulness of the character. Further appearances of Mme. De Hidalgo are awaited with interest."—The N. Y. American.

"The interesting feature of the performance was Mme. Elvira de Hidalgo's Rosina. . . . Her florid passages were executed with ease and accuracy. The intonation in her chamber aria, Una voce poco fa, was excellent and she executed a high F with faultless technic."—The N. Y. Sun.

"She has gained immeasurably in richness of tone and vocal agility. It would be difficult for any singer to make this opera significant at this stage of the musical game, but this spontaneous and refreshing performance at least succeeded in making it more interesting."—The N. Y. World.

"It is long since the role has been enacted here by one stamped so authentically with the Spanish form and feature; long, too, since it has been acted with such unflagging vivacity, such delicacy of touch, such archness and volatile espieglerie. Senorita de Hidalgo's delivery of florid song attests a comprehensive knowledge of the accredited tricks of the trade. . . . But she revealed a pleasant assortment of decorative patterns and delivered them with fluency, brilliance and with excellent taste. In the lesson scene she contributed a really distinguished performance of the Dinorah Shadow song and topped it off with a Spanish song by Chapi, dashingly delivered. Her acclaim by a large house could scarcely have been heartier. She promises to be a genuine acquisition."—The Telegram and Mail.

A Managerial Telegram

It was after the first concert appearance of Miss de Hidalgo in this country—in the Syria Mosque at Pittsburgh—that Miss May Beegle telegraphed Mr. Hurok her satisfaction over the achievement and the reception of Miss de Hidalgo. The voice, style, and personality of the Spanish coloratura soprano were such as to prompt the audience to a demonstration, and to insist on many encores.

Senorita de Hidalgo also sings for the Chicago Civic Opera and is available for concerts this season and next.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Management: S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

MRS. ARCHIBALD FREER is the briefest letter-writer I know. She confines her comment, as a rule, to penciled notations on the margins of literature concerning the America Opera Society of Chicago; and this literature has a way, quite regularly, of reaching my desk.

The latest supply of this material points out the value of Charles Henry Meltzer's translations into English of librettos of texts to foreign-made works. The two most recent are Carmen and Pagliacci . . . both made possible through the beneficence of Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick, for it is she who bears the expense involved.

Mrs. Freer reminds one that The Echo, by Frank Patterson, Bianca, by Henry Hadley, and Castle Agrazant, by Ralph Lyford, are scheduled for premieres during the coming year in Portland, Ore., Chicago, and Cincinnati. She mentions that Shanewis, by Cadman, Alglala, by De Leone, and The Temple Dancer, by Hugo, have all had repetitions this year; and thereafter, writes Mrs. Freer (marginally) they deserve to be given at subscription performances by the New York Metropolitan, the Chicago, and Ravinia Park Opera Companies.

Mrs. Freer offers ten reasons why the Opera Society of Chicago exists, and they are these:

1.) It gives prestige to American art—and, art is history.

2.) It encourages the use of our language in opera and concert.

3.) It encourages the performance of American music-dramas (or opera).

4.) It gives just recognition to the American composer of ability.

5.) It hopes to form auxiliaries in every State.

6.) It awards the David Bispham Memorial Medal for American grand opera.

7.) It has raised the question: "Have opera companies incorporated in the United States the right to banish from their repertory American music and our language?"

8.) It has also raised the question for discussion: "Have these companies the right to engage American artists and force them to renounce their mother-tongue, to sing foreign music and only foreign languages?"

9.) It contends that opera companies which banish our language, our music (and to a large degree, our artists) have not the right to use, nor can they have any claim upon the names: American, National or Civic.

10.) It proposes to recommend for use the opera translations to English by Charles Henry Meltzer, published in the Edith Rockefeller McCormick edition.

THE CONTRIBUTION of Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick to the cause of opera in this country has been unselfish and huge. It was she who sustained the Chicago Opera Company in much of its early period. Her financial beneficence was always ready. If it had not been, the Chicago organization could not have continued.

Now that this patron of music has become interested in opera in English there is good reason to believe that she will eventually make a way to have it tried out in circumstances which may demonstrate how it can best be promoted and given the place it deserves.

Most worth-while projects move slowly towards their objectives. Conditions must be ripe for their progress; and to perfect plans and an organization to bring about progress is often a large task.

Mrs. McCormick will doubtless elect one day to carry forward her opera-in-English project. When she reaches that decision the country may anticipate results. They assuredly are possible . . . under adequate guidance, after plans have been formulated which are in all respects eminently practicable.

ACCORDING TO Virginia Pope, in a special article she wrote for the New York Times, Otto Kahn won his first promotion in business through his zeal in "licking postage stamps." The chairman of the Metropolitan Opera Company board occupies himself otherwise nowadays. He has risen about as high as a man can in every branch of activity with which he has been identified; and because of that his "ten points" for guidance in success deserve presentation here. They are:

Eliminate the word "perfunctory." Every task is a test.

The most serviceable of all assets is reputation. It works for you automatically.

Practice a mental "daily dozen."

Use imagination.

Be ready, be patient, know how to wait.

Be neighborly, be a good sport.

Work hard.

Take an interest in public affairs.

Meet your fellow men with confidence.

Exercise self-restraint and consideration.

All the same, success won't come to everyone who observes faithfully those precepts. Nobody knows better than Mr. Kahn that character—the fibre in a man or a woman—is requisite to the person who wants to succeed . . . whether it be in banking, the law, commerce, or music.

I WAS GLANCING over several stories written by Fred Charles, of the Cleveland Plain-Dealer, about the Cleveland Orchestra while that organization was on its recent tour. While the Minneapolis Symphony had the honor of having a staff correspondent attached to one of its hometown daily newspapers, that writer was, I am informed, the regular music reviewer. In this instance the scribe is strictly a news reporter, and his slant on things that happened during the Clevelanders' trip was therefor different.

Mr. Charles forbore from attempting to comment on matters beyond his training to competently "cover." Being a good reporter he "dug" for interesting facts; and he found them. What he wrote about the New York City concert set forth some valuable and readable history. Few music reviewers are capable reporters. One I known is Bill Henderson, of the New York Sun. Most of the other chroniclers on music happenings would do better jobs if they were trained reporters and recognized news when they bumped into it.

Chicago is nearly a thousand miles from New York, but even the intervening distance need not prevent comment on some of the opera gossip going on there. It has developed sufficient strength to filter this far eastward and assumed importance because of its persistency. For several successive years the bits of discord in the ranks of the Chicago Civic Opera Association have disturbed those who appreciate that if Chicago becomes disgusted with its operatic aviary and disposes of it the progress of the art in this country will be seriously impaired. That is why we all hope that the printed publicity recently given to reported differences among persons connected with the business management, the conducting side, and the singing side of the Windy City's performance have been exaggerated.

There has always been more or less friction going on in this organization. Its intrigues have been numerous and unflagging. Jealousies have gone on and on. And since no general manager like to New York's Metropolitan chief has been in command the result could not have been otherwise than what has regularly occurred.

I doubt if the Chicago company will go to smash. The people of that great city could scarcely afford, for the sake of civic prestige, to permit that to happen. But until a change is made in the manner of control and administration there seems no escape from bickerings and rumors that will keep the atmosphere charged with what is not helpful to the company's efficiency and the public's contentedness.

THE CHICAGO OPERA directors might, if they would, study to their advantage the administrative ways of New York's Metropolitan Opera Company. But President Samuel Insull does not take kindly to considering the Metropolitan's methods. He told me as much in a chat—and a frank one—we had in his Chicago Auditorium office about a year ago.

Mr. Insull stated modestly in reply to my suggestion that one general manager—having the powers of Giulio Gatti-Casazza, and possibly a part of his all-sided equipment—be placed in control of the Chicago organization that he (Insull) was the boss. But how much does Mr. Insull know about opera?

Mr. Insull refused to see the point. He still refuses, or else cannot, see it. His position is akin to that Mr. Kahn occupies on the Metropolitan board, yet Mr. Kahn does not attempt to attend to the managerial details of the Metropolitan—and he has forgotten more about opera and opera-giving than Mr. Insull will ever know.

There has been altogether too much insistence in Chicago to divide authority in its opera company instead of concentrating it, as should be done. Until such measures are taken there must continue misunderstandings and disagreements, and an absence of that well coordinated discipline which is possible only when there is one administrative head—in opera as in any other kind of pretentious enterprise—who has knowledge, experience, and rare executive resources.

But the Chicagoans active in the affairs of its opera company seem unwilling to profit by the ways of other and successful companies. And they appear to resent considering anything that comes from New York. Perhaps one day the company may elect a president who is broad enough and wise enough to seek out what is best When that day comes, and not before, will the Chicago Civic Opera Company really begin to function as it should and can.

THERE can be little doubt as to Charlie Wagner's managerial astuteness. He has had the preparatory training. And also the artists, if one should happen to consider that little matter. His handling of Toti dal Monte has aroused a deal of admiring comment in the ranks of those who know generally whereof they speak.

Charlie waxed enthusiastic over his soprano during a chat we had a few days ago. "She is destined to be a sensation," he declared. "Just watch and see. Her vogue will grow She has all the qualifications. Those of you who have not yet discovered that fact will gradually come to the correct viewpoint."

I ventured to observe that Mme. dal Monte has the resources of an admirable and legitimate interpretative singer; also that while I cannot altogether approve of the way she uses her voice the Italian newcomer should make for herself a substantial place.

But Charles insisted again: "She will be a sensation."

Perhaps he forecasts truly. Today's today. Tomorrow will tell the tale.

FOLLOWING the Brunswick Hours of Music, which are enlisting the services of honest-to-goodness artists who can really play and sing, one learns of a similar purpose on the part of the Victor. Simultaneously come rumblings from the wholesale managers' camps which indicates that there may arise shortly some disturbances on the surface of the seemingly smooth waters.

The vital point is: Will these broadcast programs cut materially into the concert business of the men and women whose chief source of income is from that source? If so then the wholesale bureaus are bound to suffer and the local managements as well.

LEAVING New York's Aeolian Hall the other evening after Theo Karle's recital W. J. Henderson of the Sun dropped a few words of comment. "I'm looking forward to my lectures in California next summer," said W. J., "with deep interest. The California Master School which Mrs. McFarlane, Mr. Samoiloff, and Miss Seckels are preparing to start interests me very much.

"It is ten years since I have visited the Pacific coast; and I shall have six weeks there—three in San Francisco and three in Los Angeles."

The presence of this music scholar should have a splendid influence upon the music affairs of the far west. Henderson is one of the few of his craft who commands respect because of his authoritativeness and his fairness.

THE CRITICAL SCALES

Miss Cobina Wright

Cobina Wright, one of the soloists of the concert last March of the Schola Cantorum, made her New York recital debut in Aeolian Hall the evening of December 18. Richard Hageman was her accompanist.

According to the commentator in the Herald Tribune, Miss Wright's voice seemed better adapted to recital than to a solo part in an oratorio. He admired her "clearness and smoothness of tone, understanding and artistry in phrasing and interpretation." Pitts Sanborn wrote in the Telegram-Mail that she had a program "of uncommon distinction" to which she brought "a sense of art which is rare." In spite of a slight nervousness at first, Mr. Sanborn realized "how lovely and appealing of timbre her lyric soprano can be when not so impeded." He further complimented Mme. Wright for "the natural beauty of her voice, her sensitive feeling for the musical phrase, and native freshness and candor."

The Times considered that her voice "has grown in sweetness, and roundness and the artistic intelligence has kept pace with it." In the World she was lauded for a "clear and flexible" voice produced with "the ease and security that gives her songs the casual sincerity of a direct and personal message." Although the reviewer in the Sun thought the quality of her voice "pleasant and effective," he did not think she sang with "a great deal of skill," or that "her vocal resources able to cope with some of her more impressive compositions."

Harry Farbman

A young violinist, Harry Farbman, who, in the words of the Herald Tribune reviewer, "had given evidence of talent in his debut here in October," made his second appearance at Aeolian Hall December 22. This writer asserted that Mr. Farbman "again showed considerable talent" with a "well rounded, fluent" tone which, however, could not quite "clear all the hurdles" in the display passages of Vieuxtemps Grand Concerto.

The Times reporter considered that he again proved "his winning way of attacking a program's problems." The reviewer in the Sun considered his most important asset "a lyric romanticism which he had no difficulty in expressing clearly, musically and often impressively." That the violinist was "too impetuous" in his "technical climbings" was this writer's only objection to Mr. Farbman's work. In spite of the lack of "discipline and restraint" in his technical flights, according to this chronicler, he "possessed talents of musicianship far above the concert hall average."

Messrs. Wiederman-Hok

Professor Bedrich Wiederman, Czecho-Slovakian organist from Prague, and Anton Hok, Slovakian-American tenor, gave a joint recital for the benefit of the Lidumil Philanthropic Society the evening of December 21 at Town Hall. Both artists appeared in New York earlier this season in one of the concerts arranged by Dr. Alexander Russell in the Wanamaker Auditorium.

Among others, Professor Wiederman played a composition of his own, a toccata and fugue in F minor. According to the Sun writer, this work is "dignified, yet elaborately designed." This commentator remarked that not since the dedication of the Speyer organ has the instrument "been treated with finer taste and better understanding of its various tonal resources." The chronicler in the Herald Tribune said that the performance showed "marked skill and serious musicianship, avoiding spectacular or theatrical effects, although not averse to impressive and sonorous climaxes."

In the opinion of this reviewer, Mr. Hok "seemed well qualified as a singer of oratorio. His voice, if not entirely free from an occasional metallic timber, was large in volume and sonorous, with a tone of breadth and warmth." The Herald Tribune writer commended him for his good voice and "command of oratorio style" and said that he sang two of Dvorak's Biblical songs with "understanding and expression." Karel Leitner was at the piano.

Old Masters Trio

The concert of chamber music given by the Old Masters Trio at Aeolian Hall the evening of December 20, was enjoyed by a large and appreciative audience. The members of the Trio, Mme. Bachus-Behr, Michael Press, and Leo Schulz, opened the concert with Mozart's Trio in C major. It had been announced that Merle Alcock would sing, but owing to a rehearsal at the Metropolitan, she was unable to appear, and Frazer Gange, baritone, took her place. According to the Times reviewer, "he was in his most effective vein." This writer found in the concert, "blending and perfect accordance" in the work of the instrumentalists. Other newspapers did not carry analytical reviews of the concert.

Rosa Ponselle in Gioconda

Rosa Ponselle was introduced in the title role of La Gioconda at its third presentation this season by the Metropolitan Opera Company in a special matinee on December 19 for the benefit of the New York Nursery and Child's Hospital. Others appearing were the Misses Gordon and Alcock, Messrs. Gigli, Danise and Mardones, with Tullio Serafin conducting.

According to the Times, Miss Ponselle was "a direct and vital singer of Venetian tragedy, fairly superb in a last famous 'suicide' air." This writer thought the melodrama's title role "suited to her rich voice and to a temperament that is this young American star's Italian heritage." The Telegram-Mail reviewer was surprised that this was only her second time in the role, and said that she gave a "creditable and confident performance that will mellow with repetition. She has been in better vocal estate than yesterday, when some of her singing seemed more forced than finished. Yet hers is the voice for this part in its timbre, texture, volume and general ability to compass the heights and depths which the music imposes."

The Herald Tribune commentator found the part "thoroughly suited" to Miss Ponselle's talents, "with much in which her vocal vigor and strong top notes could be used to advantage . . . she did not spare herself in the acting of her part, which was performed with a most commendable degree of spirit and emotion." By the World writer Miss Ponselle's "lavish voice and personality" which "swept through" the opera "with delight and triumph" was praised. This reviewer continued that Miss Ponselle's Gioconda "dominated not only the cast but her own destiny."

In the opinion of the Sun writer, she was "in excellent voice and gave a dramatic and vigorous portrayal of the happy heroine's unhappy adventures. Her acting did not always possess finesse or carry conviction, but vocally she gave of her best, which is very good indeed." Miss Ponselle was heartily applauded, and given an ovation at the end of the second act.

Max Pollikoff

A young American violinist, Max Pollikoff, who made his debut here last year, was heard in recital at Aeolian Hall the evening of December 19. His program included the Brahms A major Sonata, a Nocturne by himself, and an American work, A. Walter Kramer's Symphonic Rhapsody. The writer in the Herald Tribune thought Mr. Pollikoff showed "marked talent and progress' especially in a "well developed technical equipment and a tone which has considerably broadened and mellowed during the last year." Sometimes, according to this commentator, his tone took on a "slight hardness," but in general had a "warm quality, a generous, ear-filling volume."

Alison Smith of the World felt that the program was one of those "charged with enthusiasm and an eager, impetuous sincerity" and that Mr. Pollikoff "has the technique and the breadth and freedom of style to make the release of his most vigorous phrases a triumphant achievement." Miss Smith considered that, at times, the artist "sacrificed intonation and smoothness to violence, but the minor flaws were hardly perceptible in the free sweep of his work." The chronicler in the Sun thought that the Brahms, with Samuel Chotzinoff at the piano, "was such as to hold the attention throughout. Admirable tonal balance and color with good style marked its delivery." This reporter found an advance in "repose and finish in the expression of sentiments" since last year.

"A violinist of serious aims and modest attainments" was Pitts Sanborn's only critical comment, and the Times carried no analytical review.

Plays for Settlement Pupils

Wanda Landowska, playing both the harpsichord and the piano, gave a recital to the students of the New York music school settlements at the Greenwich House Auditorium December 21. The program consisted of compositions of Bach, Mozart, Haydn, Scarlatti, Rameau, and Daquin.

JOSEPH SCHWARZ
BARITONE
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA CO.
Management: Edna Richolson Solitt
501 Oakdale Ave., Chicago
KIMBALL PIANO

ADELA VERNE
DISTINGUISHED ENGLISH PIANIST—IN AMERICA: SEASON 1924-1925
Management George Engles, Aeolian Hall, New York STEINWAY PIANO

MARIE BENCHLEY
Teacher of Singing
1107 HARMON PLACE
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

MME. ETHEL PARKS
Lyric-Coloratura Soprano
MANAGEMENT: DANIEL MAYER, Aeolian Hall, New York City

Estelle Liebling
SOPRANO
45 West 55th St New York City
Telephone Circle 8815

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

THE BALANCE OF OPINION

Theo Karle

In Aeolian Hall last Tuesday evening, Theo Karle, tenor, gave one of his infrequent New York recitals. W. J. Henderson of the Sun regretted that Mr. Karle is not heard here oftener, as he considers him "a singer of merit and of power to hold the interest of an audience." That there are some limitations in the tenor's voice, Mr. Henderson admitted, but he found these compensated by "intelligence and fervor." In Purcell's Dido and Aeneas, the best features of his singing were exhibited, according to this writer. These were "a finely spun legato, admirable sustained phrases, tenderness of feeling, clear pronunciation and a style appropriate and finished."

The World commentator remarked on the "plaintive and ingratiating" qualities of Mr. Karle's voice, which he used "effectively." When he reached his best form, according to the Herald Tribune reviewer, his singing was "distinctly commendable," and, in the German numbers, he sang "with unruffled tone and an expressive capacity which did not get or need intensification through gesture." The Times chronicler liked his "high tenor of manly quality" and considered that he has "refined his style, while retaining his usually good tone." The lack of resonance in his voice, this writer thought only temporary. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail was not favorably impressed with Mr. Karle's voice.

The tenor sang some songs by Frank LaForge, who, as accompanist, gave "valuable aid" at the piano, according to Mr. Henderson.

Announce Furtwaengler Program

Wilhelm Furtwaengler will make his American debut as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra Saturday evening in Carnegie Hall. For his American debut Mr. Furtwaengler, who has recently completed a London and a Vienna concert series, has chosen a program consisting of Strauss' Don Juan, Brahms' First Symphony, and the Dvorak B flat violoncello Concerto, with Pablo Casals as soloist.

Second Sunday Concert

The second free concert of the Sunday Symphony Society was given last Sunday at 12:15 P. M. Odal Saleski, cellist, played Saint-Saens' Concerto. Hugo Riesenfeld's Romantic Overture was also included on the program.

Oratorio Society

The New York Oratorio Society gave its one hundredth performance of Handel's Messiah Christmas Eve at Carnegie Hall. Albert Stoessel conducted. The soloists were Mabel Garrison, Nevada van der Veer, Allen McQuhae, and Royal Dadmun in place of Arthur Middleton, who was indisposed. The orchestra was that of the New York Symphony, and Hugh Porter was the organist. The first performance of this work by the society was given on Christmas Day, 1874.

The World reviewer wrote that "the assured and competent soloists" were an important factor in the success of the performance. Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail commented that "few contraltos possess the experience in this work of Mme. van der Veer" and added that "Mr. McQuhae, who sang with praiseworthy diction and style, showed that he has the requisite vocal flexibility for the long Handelian 'divisions.'" Miss Garrison's "beautifully clear enunciation and true intonation" was acknowledged by hearty applause, according to the Times commentator. In Mr. Sanborn's words, Mr. Dadmun was "applauded rapturously." There were considered "worthy successors of many famous singers who have been heard in oratorios in this city" by the writer in the Post.

This chronicler also found that Mr. Stoessel "had his chorus trained to perfection." In the Sun the chorus was lauded for "admirable spirit and rhythmic power" and for the "thrilling effect" of such numbers as Unto Us A Child Is Born. The Times commended the "sincerity" in the singing and the "vigor and variety" in tempo achieved by Mr. Stoessel. Mr. Sanborn remarked that the conductor worked "industriously" to get the best out of the chorus.

Lawrence Gilman wrote in the Herald Tribune that Mr. Stoessel "kept his allegros vitally alive and his slow movements on the safe side of tedium." The choristers, he reported, "sang with inspiritingly youthful and lusty enthusiasm, at times with imposing tonal beauty; and there were moments of true and deep expressiveness."

Stransky Offers Familiar Program

At the afternoon concert of the New York State Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall on December 21 Josef Stransky conducted a program consisting of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherazade, Tschaikowsky's Pathetique Symphony, and Liszt's Les Preludes.

San Francisco Hears Third Popular Concert

Hertz Conducts Schubert Symphony; Mischa Elman Appears in Recital.

San Francisco, Dec. 17.—At the third popular concert of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra on December 7, Alfred Hertz conducting, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony was played. Walter Ferner, cellist, played the Kol Nidrei as soloist. The Blue Danube, the Gluck Overture to Iphigenie en Aulide, Mendelssohn's Spring Song and Spinning Song, Beethoven's third Leonore Overture, and Sowerby's The Irish Washerwoman completed a program that was warmly applauded by the audience.

At the concert given by Mischa Elman, he played the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor instead of Albert Dupuis' Fantaisie Rapsodique, as scheduled. There was some disappointment manifested by the audience at the change, as the Fantaisie has not been played here.

Rudy Seiger, violinist, was the assisting artist at the December meeting of the San Francisco Musical Club. Another feature of the concert was when Patricia Morbio sang, in costume, an aria from Massenet's Manon. Mrs. Cecil Hollis Stone was at the piano in the first number, the Leclair Sonata in D major. Marian de Guerre Stewart was the accompanist.

Other concerts of recent days were Eva Gauthier's appearance with the Chamber Music Society, and the recital presented by Ada Clement, head of the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, with assisting artists, for the benefit of a scholarship fund. The novelty at this last concert was Ernest Bloch's Quintet for piano and strings. May Mukle, cellist; Edward Deru, violinist; Mary Passmore, violinist, and Emil Hahl, viola, assisted Miss Clement.

Van Vliet Chamber Music Series Begins

Give Classical Program; Concerts of Romantic and Modern Music Coming.

A series of chamber music concerts was opened at Rumford Hall December 19 by Cornelius Van Vliet, solo cellist of the Philharmonic Orchestra. Associated with Mr. Van Vliet in his first concert were his colleagues in the New York Trio, Clarence Adler, pianist, and Louis Edlin, violinist; Samuel Lifschey, viola, and two members of the Philharmonic's woodwind choir, Bruno Lebate, oboe, and E. Roelofsma, clarinet.

Mr. Van Vliet, according to the Herald Tribune, displayed "his usual expert technique and a tone of felicitous warmth and volume in broad, melodious passages." This writer considered the Mozart F major quartet for oboe, violin, viola and cello "a well unified, spirited performance in which the oboe and strings made a smooth, harmonious blend." The chronicler in the Sun asserted that they offered "an interesting and entertaining program of excellent music." He found the "playing of all those on the platform well planned. These were all good musicians." The reviewer in the Telegram-Mail stated that "there is unmistakably a place for these concerts sponsored by Mr. Van Vliet. Broad vistas of generous usefulness open before them." The second and third concerts of the series will be devoted respectively to Romantic and modern music.

German Singers Arrive

Karin Eduardsen Branzell, German mezzo-soprano, arrived from Berlin on the North German Lloyd liner Columbus, December 22, to sing in Wagnerian opera at the Metropolitan Opera House next month. On the same boat was Maria Ivogun, who is here to make a concert tour.

Francis Rogers
Concert Baritone and Teacher of Singing
Member American Academy of Teachers of Singing
144 East 62d St., New York City

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
744 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

ALBERTO BIMBONI
VOCAL STUDIO
2025 Broadway New York City
Telephone Endicott 6074

GIGLI

ALMA BECK
CONTRALTO
For Bookings of Season 1924-1925 address
Alma Beck
Concert Management Arthur Judson
Fisk Bldg., N. Y. C.
or
Lucy N. Shiels
1049 Park Avenue
New York City

RHYS MORGAN
THE WELSH TENOR
Management: ROGER DE BRUYN, 1540 Broadway, N. Y. C.
DR. J. O. HOWELLS, Associate

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

Musical Chicago En Courant

Mayor Dever Appoints Music and Art Commission; Opera Performances Improve.

by HAZEL H. MOORE

Chicago, Dec. 24.

CHICAGO'S first music and art commission, recently appointed by Mayor Dever, seems to be assuming proportions probably undreamed by its original sponsor. A plan is now being discussed as to the possible enlargement of its present scope as a music committee to include all the allied arts. If such a plan is accepted each field would function independently, but all come together through a central committee. The idea would appear to have broad possibilities. As applied to music alone it has already received the indorsement of the Chicago Federation of Musicians.

AS THE SEASON advances, representations at the opera gain in merit. From this the deduction may be made that more pre-season rehearsals would make for improved early-season performances and thereby bring about increased satisfaction amongst patrons. Strangely enough the rather weak attendance on subscription nights is causing an increased number of extra performances. Each Friday evening, presumably the evening when the Auditorium is dark, sees a "first" representation. Each Sunday afternoon shows a repetition or perhaps a "first time" presentation of some well-liked opera. One wonders if the scattered patrons of the non-subscription days, or nights, would not help fill the vacant spaces of the regular subscription series.

The public service department is doing its bit to lure the great outside public in to the opera. That is certain. Read this, offered opera-goers in each program, from the pen of the inspired head of the Chicago Civic Opera's Public Service Department: "The temple of beauty stands open; the doors are not locked; the way is not barred. But, madly, eyes forward, they strain and push and scream. Within, the wonderment grows more intense, the music as if brewing more of strength, and more of the essence and the extract of itself, more ravishing becomes, until the soul nearly faints in ecstasy. The Field of the Cloth of Gold is aflame now in the sunglow of beauty's noontide. Such loveliness and solace and comfort! Such darts of heaven-bound passion, calling upward, onward, the heart's purest flights of imagination and dreams.

"Outside—outside, unknowing!"

That the program readers may not be alone in their joy, the great outside may read daily in the opera ads of the delights of opera, thus: "A sigh from the depths of a frail but purified soul inspires the melodies and enhances the charm in Traviata." Or, better yet, this: "She is gracious in the span of her sweet body like a rose at noon—this Thais—Tonight at 8 with Garden"—et-cetera. The proper place for the tired business man is found at last.

It is inevitable that comparisons of opera performances as given at the Auditorium and Ravinia should occasionally arise. It also is inevitable to find merit listing sometimes one way and then another. Variations of casts, the size of the orchestra, the theatre, all seem to bear on the result. Ravinia's performance of Fra Diavolo had rather the edge on the Chicago's production, and it was almost entirely due to the intimacy of surroundings at the North Shore Park and the smaller orchestra. As to cast, the Chicago of last Friday evening was just one item under the Ivory Soap percentage of purity. Schipa, Mason, Lazzari, Cotreuil, Oliviero, all sang and played in the vein of aristocratic comedy. Even the absurd and side-spliting comedy of that pair of clowns, Lazzari and Oliviero, was always in key. Schipa found himself happy in the elegant roguery of the Fra, while his particularly devilish makeup that boded no good to the ladies. As always, his singing was a joy.

GEORGE LIEBLING, youngest of the Lieblings, made for himself many friends at his recent visit to Chicago, when he played the piano in a way to revive faith in the virtuoso method of yesteryear. Not only did he coax some of the loveliest tones of the year from his piano, but his interpretations were right in line and feeling. Particularly was this true in the Chopin group, in the Barcarolle (the only Barcarolle really written to represent the ocean, according to Rosenthal) and the unhackneyed Ballade in F Minor. Liebling's welcome in this, his first visit to Chicago, had a personal element to it. His elder brother, Emil, long ago made the name of Liebling well known here.

Another pianist of extraordinary talent to appear last week was the Russian Pouishnoff. As Herman DeVries wrote in his critique of Pouishnoff's recital: "In a season one hears a great many pianists, and a few bad ones. It takes an unusual talent to stand out among the average good ones. And such a talent was Pouishnoff, a real personality of the keyboard. Even at short hearing, and that mostly in the generally unpopular Glazunoff Sonata in B flat, he was able to convince the critical fraternity of his real excellence. His return will be looked forward to."

THE SEASON of Messiah performances is upon us. The Apollo Musical Club has made this an annual event for so many years that one noted more scores in the audience than among the choristers. For an equal number of years, which my own prevent an exact accounting, has Harrison Wild conducted. But owing to a sudden indisposition the baton last Sunday was in the capable hands of Edgar Nelson, former organist of the club and director of the Swedish Choral Club.

Maurice Rosenfeld of the Philharmonic School of Music announces his resignation from that organization and the reopening of his own school, the Maurice Rosenfeld Piano School.

L'Amore dei Tre Re Presented in Chicago

Georges Baklanoff Makes Season Debut; Lazzari and Annseau Sing.

Chicago, Dec. 20.—Montemezzi's L'Amore dei Tre Re was given last Tuesday evening for the first time this season by the Chicago Civic Opera Company in one of "the rare and perfect performances of the season," in the words of Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner. The cast was the familiar one with the single exception of Fernand Annsseau, who took the part of Avito. Mary Garden, Georges Baklanoff (in his first appearance with the company this season), Virgilio Lazzari, Gladys Swarthout, Elizabeth Kerr, Maria Claessens, Lodovico Oliviero, and Jose Mojica completed the cast. Giorgio Polacco conducted.

Mr. Gunn assured the artists that "the music could not have been sung better." He asserted that he was more sincerely convinced of Miss Garden's "supremacy as a vocal artist." Her Fiora was "beautifully sung" and in its presentation she "surpassed herself," according to Maurice Rosenfeld in the News. In the opinion of Edward Moore of the Tribune, her characterization was a "little hard, and more than a little sophisticated," although at times it touched the imagination. Karleton Hackett wrote in the Post that the character was "a striking creation."

This reviewer touched on the "brilliance" of Mr. Annsseau's singing and the "poetic fervor" of his acting. Mr. Moore congratulated him for a "splendid performance," and for the "full-throated splendor of his singing in the second act." The earnestness of his acting as well as the "great volume and power" of his voice called for the praise of Mr. Rosenfeld, and Mr. Gunn asserted that he was most satisfying.

According to this chronicler, Mr. Baklanoff rejoined the company "with voice refreshed, increased in volume and in expressiveness." His "ringing tones" were commended by Mr. Rosenfeld, and the vividness of his performance coupled with the excellence of his singing were admired by Mr. Moore. Mr. Hackett found phrases of great emotional force in his singing of the part.

Mr. Lazzari's portrayal was characterized as "powerful" by this writer, and Mr. Moore said he "never surpassed the performance of Archibaldo he gave last night." His impersonation was "a masterpiece of illusion" in Mr. Rosenfeld's words, "and he sang gloriously." Mr. Lazzari "is still the greatest of Italian bassos," stated Mr. Gunn. Mr. Hackett wrote that "the voices of Mme. Claessens and Mr. Mojica came out with the right quality." Of the others, Mr. Gunn said that they "fitted into the stage picture and into the vocal score as perfectly as might be desired."

Tito Schipa Sings in Auber's Fra Diavolo

Edith Mason Appears in Leading Coloratura Role; Cimini Conducts.

Chicago, Dec. 20.—The Chicago Civic Opera Company added a new opera to its repertoire last night in its presentation of Auber's Fra Diavolo. The "genial music" which "moved acceptably" under Pietro Cimini's baton, to quote Eugene Stinson of the Journal, was liked by the audience and the entire performance was greeted with warm applause. In the cast were Tito Schipa, Edith Mason, Edouard Cotreuil, Flora Perini, William Beck, Jose Mojica, Virgilio Lazzari and Lodovico Oliviero.

Edward Moore of the Tribune considered the performance "a highly amusing and entertaining" one. Mr. Schipa, he wrote, sang the part "not only with exquisite ease, but polished diction." The singer's "usual artistic talents" were in evidence, said Maurice Rosenfeld in the News.

Enthusiastic praise was accorded Miss Mason by the critics. Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner wrote that her tone was "smooth, flawless, perfect," and that her agility was amazing. "No coloratura can match the quality of this lyric voice," he wrote, "and she can do all their stunts." Mr. Moore stated that she showed "the loveliest soprano voice of this generation." Mr. Rosenfeld praised her tone and fluency.

Edouard Cotreuil was "excellent" as Lord Rocburg, reported Mr. Moore, and Mr. Rosenfeld considered that Mr. Cotreuil and Mme. Perini "sang and acted with their usual artistic taste."

W. J. Henderson, Dean of New York Critics, Says in the New York Sun, December 8th, 1924:

"BONCI

sang in a manner that might have filled the heart of ANY OTHER SINGER of this day with an ardent desire to EMULATE SO AUTHORITATIVE A MASTER."

Vocal Studio Now Open
Hotel Majestic, New York

MANAGEMENT:
ROGER de BRUYN
EUGENE BOUCHER, Associate
1540 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK
Telephone 3787 Bryant

Knabe Piano Used

ETHEL
GROW
CONTRALTO

A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 1924
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

Two Pianists in Chicago Debut

Liebling and Pouishnoff Play; Apollo Musical Club Sings Messiah.

Chicago, Dec. 22.—Two pianists made their debuts last week. They were George Liebling and Leff Pouishnoff. Edward Moore of the Tribune credited Mr. Liebling with "a tone that succeeded in being both rotund and sensitive and with many contrasts of pace and dynamics" as well as with "an intensely personal point of view on his music" and a "fervid" imagination.

The Post chronicler found in his recital "interesting playing by an excellent musician. . . . There was a firm grasp of tone color and dynamics expressive of the varying moods." In the words of Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner, Mr. Liebling is "a master of his instrument . . . an interesting and inspiring pianist." His interpretations, according to this writer, "are so many exquisite mosaics in tone, beautifully colored fragments of melody that, added together, make a fascinating sequence." He proved to Maurice Rosenfeld of the News that he was a "real piano virtuoso." Mr. Rosenfeld thought his playing of the Chopin Barcarolle "was playing of a gifted artist at its best." The Waldstein Sonata and the Chopin group were interpreted in a "serious, exalted manner" and showed a phrasing that was "clear and lucid, a technical definition that was concise, a mastery of the piano and a perfect understanding of the spirit of the music."

Mr. Pouishnoff, to quote Mr. Gunn, "made display of abundant technic and admirable style in the A flat polonaise of Chopin, the same master's berceuse, and in compositions and transcriptions of his own. He has the rare gift of abandon, sure proof of a natural gift for the keyboard." Mr. Moore asserted that he was "an uncommonly good pianist . . . when he plays the notes flow with no apparent impact or edge. He would seem to be practically infallible, and he lifts piano tone up to its limit, though he never permits the limit to be overstepped. In other words, he has a superb pair of hands and a fiery spirit."

The Glazunoff Sonata, according to Mr. Rosenfeld, was played "with appreciation for its poetic content. He displayed an uncommonly fine tone, vigorous power and a transcendent technique. We can count him among the few great virtuosos of the day." Eugene Stinson in the Journal considered the "force of his playing undeniable . . . it gained its persuasive strength from the player's own will, his copious, if occasionally unruly skill and his delighted use of huge quantities of sound."

Due to the illness of Harrison M. Wild, Edgar A. Nelson conducted the annual performance of The Messiah by the Apollo Musical Club yesterday afternoon. The performance, wrote Mr. Moore, "moved smoothly and at times brilliantly." The soloists were Rhys Morgan, Raymond Koch, Mary Ann Kaufman Brown, and Edna Swanson Ver Haar. Mr. Morgan, to quote Mr. Hackett, "sang the tenor music well. Behold and See he gave with an appreciation for the text and with tones of full, solid body that expressed the meaning." Miss Ver Haar and Mr. Koch were thought "unusually good" by Mr. Moore, and Mme. Brown, according to Mr. Hackett, showed comprehension.

Among the soloists, as Mr. Moore said, "there was an excellent blend of vocalism and enunciation." The chorus, he thought, produced "fine, massive effects." Mr. Hackett praised Mr. Nelson for the comprehension of the music he displayed in his conducting.

Allen Spencer gave his annual piano recital at Kimball Hall last Thursday. "It was admirable playing," wrote Mr. Moore, "in which brains and emotion took logical and therefore important places. Mr. Spencer interpreted with the style of a classicist and the warm feeling of a modern." The writer in the Post commended the "breadth of conception and repose" with which he played the Beethoven. Mr. Gunn found ample tone, color, style and virtuosity in the Beethoven Sonata, as well as ripened musicianship.

The first concert of the season was given by the Mendelssohn Club the same day with Harrison M. Wild conducting. John Barnes Wells, tenor, was the assisting soloist, "displaying a voice of uncommonly pleasant quality, first class enunciation," according to Mr. Moore. Mr. Gunn admired his "clarity of enunciation" and sense of color values.

Piccaver and Baklanoff Sing in Chicago Tosca

Chicago, Dec. 18.—La Tosca was repeated here last night by the Civic Opera Company with Alfred Piccaver and Georges Baklanoff new to the roles of Cavardossi and Scarpia. Mr. Baklanoff was hailed by Glenn Dillard Gunn of the Herald Examiner as "one of the great Scarpias of the generation." Karleton Hackett of the Post thought that his voice was in "fine trim and never sounded to better advantage than last night."

This writer also thought that Mr. Piccaver sang the "vittoria" excellently, "his voice had quality and the carrying timbre." His impersonation was called by Mr. Gunn "quite the most logical conception of the part shown here in recent years."

Rosa Raisa has been winning the approval of reviewers and audiences alike in her appearances in leading soprano roles with the Chicago Civic Opera Company.

Opera Excerpts at Concert

Excerpts from The Barber of Seville, Samson, Gioconda, and Ernani were offered at the Sunday evening concert at the New York Metropolitan Opera House on December 21. The soloists of the evening were Mmes. Ponselle and Alcock, and Messrs. Chamlee and Ballester. Giuseppe Bamboschek conducted the orchestra, and Bronislaw Huberman was soloist in a violin group.

To Give All-American Concert

An all-American program will be presented at the fourth of the New York Philharmonic Students' Concerts on Wednesday evening at Carnegie Hall, directed by Henry Hadley. Chadwick's Second Symphony, Humiston's Southern Fantasy, Ballantine's From the Garden of Hellas, and Hadley's Salome will be played.

Russian Choir in R. I.

The Kibalchich Russian Symphonic Choir will give a concert in Providence, R. I., on January 4.

SOUSA AND HIS BAND
JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor
Now Booking Season 1925-1926
HARRY ASKIN, Mgr.
1451 Broadway New York

Jane CATHCART
TEACHER OF PIANO
ELEMENTARY HARMONY
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

M U Z I O
CHICAGO CIVIC OPERA COMPANY
Concert Management: Harrison & Harshbarger, 1322 Kimball Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
Personal Representative: Ottavio Scotto, Congress Hotel, Chicago, Ill.

GEORGE PERKINS RAYMOND
Tenor
CONCERT—RECITAL—ORATORIO
Exclusive Management: ANNIE FRIEDBERG, 1425 Broadway, New York City

IRENE WILLIAMS
SOPRANO
Available Concert, Oratorio, Recitals. After January, 1925
Brunswick Records Personal Address: 15 West 74th St., N. Y. C.

ARMAND TOKATYAN TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Concert Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway, New York City
Season 1924-1925 Now Being Booked

© KAIN NEWS SERVICE

T L E T A

IT IS the consensus of opinion that Miguel Fleta has one of the finest and most effective tenor voices now to be heard in opera. Such a voice lends itself with equal readiness to lyric music in roles like Rodolfo in La Boheme, Fritz in L'Amico Fritz, and Hoffmann in The Tales of Hoffmann, and to the more dramatic phrases of Radames in Aida, Don Jose in Carmen, Canio in Pagliacci, and Cavaradossi in Tosca.

Distinction of style is one of the Fleta assets. He is an artist who seeks to join excellence of vocal technique with an interpretation in which good taste and music discrimination are well balanced. And this has been a noteworthy feature in his appearances at the New York Metropolitan Opera House as well as in those foremost European institutions where the Spanish tenor so frequently appears.

Fleta's vocal accomplishments are not confined alone to his operatic appearances. He makes red seal records for Victor so he is available to all who wish to hear his voice and his art, even though he may not be present personally to sing for them.

REVIOUS ACCOMPLISHMENTS

February-March, 1924

, Milano, Italy
4 Performances Rigoletto
4 Performances Carmen

March-April, 1924

Madrid, Spain
Singing Aida, Carmen, Tosca
Rigoletto, Manon, Mefistofele

in Monovar, Spain
Inauguration of Fleta-Kursaal

May-June-July-August, 1924

Buenos Aires—Argentina
Rio Janeiro, Brazil
Santiago, Chile
Valparaiso, Chile
Singing with the famous company of Walter Mocchi in all his leading tenor roles.

s in Antofagasta and Lima, Peru

November-December, 1924—January, 1925

olitan Opera, New York
Singing in Tosca, Pagliacci, Tales of Hoffmann, Boheme, Aida, Rigoletto.

FUTURE ENGAGEMENTS

February, 1925

Three Concerts in Tampa, Florida

March-April, 1925

Season of Opera at the "Reale," in Madrid, at the "San-fernando" in Siviglia and at the "Opera House" in Valencia.

May, 1925

Concerts in the Isle of Mallorca, Spain

Contracts Pending for Appearances at the Paris Opera, Berlin, Vienna and Switzerland

"Pagliacci had Miguel Fleta as Canio and that fiery and feeling tenor gave his best, climaxing in 'Ridi Pagliaccio' that was received with spontaneous plaudits by the entire house."
—The New York American.

"His performance (La Boheme) was marked by style and refinement."
—The New York Herald-Tribune.

"He sang (Rodolfo in La Boheme) with deep tenderness and vocal charm."
—The New York World.

"Operagoers can enjoy listening to his fresh and beautiful voice and can yield themselves to the ardor of his style."
—The New York Sun.

"Miguel Fleta was an unalloyed delight as Hoffmann. He handled the French diction and style with exquisite grace and finish."
—The New York American.

"Fleta sang his best and that is the alpha and omega of his performance."
—The New York Times.

"Fleta's singing was suave and dramatic and he always held attention."
—The Philadelphia Record.

"Fleta sang with beauty of tone and good phrasing."
—The Philadelphia Inquirer.

"The Hoffmann of Fleta was a vocal and histrionic treat."
—The Philadelphia Bulletin.

All Communications Should Be Addressed Personally to

MIGUEL FLETA
Metropolitan Opera House
New York

VICTOR RED SEAL RECORDS

On The Music Highway

MARCEL GRANDJANY recently gave a harp recital at Newcomer Hall, Overlea, Baltimore, for the benefit of the Maryland School for the Blind. He played some of his own compositions including his Rhapsodie.

Dusolina Giannini will sing in Buffalo on January 6 and at Pinehurst, N. C., on January 9.

After spending the holidays in Chicago, Claire Dux will return to New York immediately after New Year's for her recital on next Monday.

Ethel Leginska will conduct the New York Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall on January 9.

The first January concert of the Flonzaley Quartet will be in Philadelphia on Sunday. The next day they will be heard in Washington, whence they go to Toronto, Canada.

The annual New York recital of Ernesto Berumen will be given at Aeolian Hall on Sunday evening, February 1.

Moriz Rosenthal, at his first New York recital of the season, next Sunday afternoon, will play Mozart's Sonata in A major, Schumann's Fantasia in C major, a Chopin group, and shorter pieces by Liszt, Debussy, de Falla and himself.

Both Rhys Morgan and Douglas Stanbury have been engaged to sing at the Spartanburg Festival.

Edwin Swain, baritone, was heard in a return recital at Meredith College recently.

Singing solo parts in The Seasons and Hora Novissima, Jeannette Vreeland will be heard at the Ithaca Music Festival next spring. Other artists who will be heard at the Festival are Nevada Van der Veer, Paul Althouse, and Fred Patton.

In connection with his recital at the University of Kansas at Lawrence, Kan., on March 16, Francis Macmillen will play in Sedalia, Mo., the evening of March 19.

Samuel Dushkin's first violin recital of the season is announced for the afternoon of January 18 at Aeolian Hall. He will play Mozart's A major concerto, Ravel's Tzigane, Vitali's Chaconne, and a group of shorter pieces including the first performance in America of Milhaud's Brazilian Dances and Moussorgsky's Ripples. On January 9 he plays in Washington, January 20 in Evanston, Ill., and January 22 in Chicago.

Mary Mellish of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will appear in concert at Asheville, N. C., on January 22 as soloist with the Asheville Aeolian Choir.

Cecil Arden of the Metropolitan Opera Company will appear as soloist with the Kansas City Symphony in the spring.

Marie Sundelius will give a recital for the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Lutheran Inner Mission in New York at the Great Hall of City College on February 17. This is a re-engagement as Mme. Sundelius sang for the society two seasons ago.

Emilio de Gogorza will give a second New York recital in Town Hall on Friday afternoon, January 16, for the benefit of the New York Auxiliary of the American McCall Association. His concert at the White House has been set for January 29.

A series of Ensemble Concerts in the studio of Ruth Deyo, New York City, will begin on January 8. The artists appearing are Ruth Deyo, Georges Enesco, Hans Kindler, and Rafaelo Diaz. Miss Deyo gave a similar series two years ago.

Ernst von Dohnanyi, Hungarian composer and pianist, opens his season this year with an appearance as soloist with the Detroit Orchestra on January 8 and 9 in Detroit. His Chicago recital is January 11.

Under the auspices of the United Women Workers of the Central Christian Church of Peoria, Ill., Margot Hayes, contralto, and Florence Brinkman, pianist, were heard in two joint recitals on the 15th and 16th of this month.

William Bachaus is to arrive in this country about January 12 and will start his season of recitals almost immediately thereafter. He has been scheduled for a series of three New York recitals at Aeolian Hall, on January 28, March 11 and April 11, the latter being an afternoon event.

Marie Gabrielle Leschetizky, widow of Theodor Leschetizky, will give her postponed New York piano recital at Aeolian Hall Tuesday evening, January 13. Madame Leschetizky was to have made her American debut at Carnegie Hall October 27, but the recital was postponed on account of illness. She made her American debut as soloist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Frederick Stock conducting, on November 6.

Toti dal Monte, Italian coloratura soprano, will be heard with the New York Symphony Orchestra as soloist this Thursday and Friday.

On January 11, Ruth Breton, violinist, will appear as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra.

Helen Stanley, soprano, will be heard in recital in New York next Sunday. She will then go to Philadelphia for a concert on January 8, and from there to Fitchburg, Mass., on the 12th and to Bradford, Mass., on the next day. Mme. Stanley will also give a concert at Wellesley on January 22.

Albert Coates, who will come from London early next month to begin his half of the season with the Rochester Symphony Orchestra, will conduct three evening and six matinee concerts. Soloists at these concerts will include Frederic Lamond, pianist; Vladimir Resnikoff, violinist, and Vladmir Rosing, tenor. Mr. Coates' first appearance will take place on the evening of January 22 in the Eastman Theatre. He will also conduct three Little Symphony concerts in Kilbourn Hall.

The Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, Fritz Reiner conductor, gave a concert December 12 under the auspices of the Chattanooga Music Club. This was the last of four concerts given by the orchestra on its tour in the South in Birmington, Gainesville, Atlanta and Chattanooga.

Sylvia Lent, violinist, on her recent tour of the Middle West, appeared as soloist at a pair of concerts with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. On December 18 she played in joint recital with Lambert Murphy, tenor, at Willimantic, Connecticut.

Georgette La Motte, young American pianist, has just arrived from Paris. After Christmas she will commence a three months' tour of the West.

John Ingram, associate conductor of the symphony orchestra at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, is guest conductor of the National Civic Opera at Montreal, Canada, for three weeks beginning yesterday. Mr. Ingram will conduct Manon, Louise, Boheme, Chemineau and Mignon. During his absence, Carl Edouarde, conductor, will conduct all performances at the Broadway theatre.

The Ladies Musical Club of Taunton, Mass., has engaged Ethyl Hayden, soprano, for its concert on January 27.

The Music League of Manitowoc, Wisconsin, gave its seventh program at the Mikadow Theatre on December 9. The artists were Margaret Erbe, pianist, Gertrude Erbe, soprano and Robert Wilson Hays, organist.

Lois Maier, wife of Guy Maier, has just returned from a tour which included Fall River, Boston, Lawrence and Taunton, Mass., New York and Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and Augusta, Maine.

While Mr. Maier is away on his joint tour with Lee Pattison this winter, Mrs. Maier will be in charge of her husband's work as head of the department of piano, University School of Music, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Myra Hess, English pianist, will give a New York recital at Aeolian Hall on the afternoon of January 3. After Mozart's A Major Sonata Miss Hess will play numbers by Cesar Franck, Chopin, De Falla and Granados.

The musical program at the Sunday Evening Musicale in the Venetian Room at Ten East 60th street, New York, on December 14, was given by Therese Prochazka, soprano; Ernest Davis, tenor; and Max Pollikoff, violinist.

At Robert Imandt's Aeolian Hall recital on January 22, the pianist's second in New York, he will play a Chausson Concerto for violin and piano assisted by the Lenox String Quartet. This was given at the Berkshire Festival early this fall. Mr. Imandt will devote one group of his program to modern music, while the classic and romantic schools will also be represented.

CHARLES

STRATTON

Tenor

"Mr. Stratton has a voice of pleasing quality and ample size, which he uses with artistic style and expression. The young tenor also showed a capacity for full, clear and resonant top-notes, showing power without strain. Mr. Stratton showed artistry in his phrasing, and intelligence in his expression, bringing out varied emotions effectively in his song without need of gesture." (F. D. Perkins, N. Y. Herald Tribune.)

"He carried his hearers along with him because of his genuine feeling and power of expression." (N. Y. Times.)

"Charles Stratton, who has a remarkably musical tenor voice, made a decided success. Not the least of his attraction was an enunciation so clear that every syllable was distinct." (Philadelphia Record.)

"Charles Stratton, a young tenor with an excellent voice and equally good method of using it. He sang three groups of songs with great success, and was recalled to sing again after each group." (Philadelphia Public Ledger.)

"Among singers who offer various points of excellence, there is an occasional one who has the ability to satisfy one by the manner in which he produces his songs, and among these Mr. Stratton very surely takes his place." (Richmond News Leader.)

"To Charles Stratton fell the burden of singing and it was on his part, an intellectual as well as vocal feat that he made it so impressive. His voice is indeed lovely. He proved the point that voice and brains combined make it possible to sing even that which seems unsingable." (Springfield, Mass., Union, re Pittsfield Festival.)

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON

Fisk Building, New York — Pennsylvania Building, Philadelphia

Philadelphia Hears Recitalists

Ethel Leginska, Dusolina Giannini, Ruth Breton and Mme. Samaroff Appear; Opera Performances.

Philadelphia, Dec. 20.—Ethel Leginska gave a piano recital Monday of compositions by Chopin and Liszt. According to the North American, "the Chopin was beautifully played, with surety and vigor of tone when they were needed and with fine delicacy and velvety legato so essential in the Preludes." The Public Ledger writer said that "her command of the keyboard and a touch which is capable of doing almost anything in the way of colorful piano playing," permitted her to bring orchestral color to the piano. Mr. Muschamp was surprised at "her amazing strength" and commented on her "marvelous attainments as a technician." She is, he continued, "a musician of wide experience, but astonishing in the curious ideas she has relative to the turning of a phrase, or the introduction of an unexpected pause."

At the third of the Monday Morning Musicales, Dusolina Giannini and Ruth Breton were heard. Miss Breton "plays in a charming manner," according to the North American reviewer. The chronicler of the Ledger commended highly her "beautiful tone," as well as her "fluent technique" and "charming stage manner." Mr. Muschamp asserted that she has "a talent for violin playing that is rare." Her "firm" tone and "free and elastic" bow arm also were lauded by him.

Miss Giannini, according to Mr. Muschamp, "has a remarkably lovely voice, and demonstrated her right to be placed among the foremost singers of the day. It is a rare delight to have the opportunity of hearing such evenness of tone production as this singer offers." The Ledger writer considered that she was in good voice, and the North American observer admitted "the unusual volume and clearness" of her voice, as well as the ease with which she sang.

For the benefit of the Building Fund of the Seaman's Church Institute, Olga Samaroff, pianist, gave a recital Tuesday morning at the Academy. She won great applause not only for her playing but for her generosity in contributing her services to the cause. The program, according to the reviewer in the Inquirer, was one which displayed "the versatility of her talent and technique."

The local premiere of the Pastoral Symphony by Vaughan Williams, English composer, was the feature of the concert yesterday of the Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Leopold Stokowski. Michel Penha, cellist of the orchestra, was soloist.

According to the Record reviewer, the composition is "a distinct, beautiful and infinitely worth-while novelty. . . serenity and introspection are the keynotes of the symphony." Linton Martin of the North American found that "a mood of gentle, brooding wistfulness pervades most of the four movements" of the work, and that it has "passages of exalted beauty" although it lacks "gallery appeal." In the opinion of Stanley Muschamp, writing in the Inquirer, the mood of the composition was essentially peaceful. He commented on "the lovely vocal note" added to the performance by Helen Buchanan Hitner, who sang a wordless soprano part employed as an orchestral instrument.

Mr. Penha was commended by Mr. Muschamp for his "refined tone and equally fine technique." His interpretation of the Lalo Concerto "was marked by noble beauty of tone and breadth of style" according to Mr. Martin, while the writer in the Public Ledger considered it "magnificently played."

On the same afternoon the Matinee Musical Club gave a concert of Christmas music and tableaux. Franz Gruber's Holy Night was played on the chimes by William Oscar Schwar of the Philadelphia Orchestra. The harp ensemble with Dorothy Johnstone Baseler played Hahn's Chanson Sans Paroles, followed by songs by Alma Bachman Pigeon. There were several songs by the Matinee Musical Club Chorus and the Strawbridge & Clothier Male Chorus, directed by Dr. Herbert J. Tily.

The New York Metropolitan Opera Company presented Jenufa, the Czech opera by Leos Janacek, that evening for the first time in Philadelphia. The chronicler of the Record found

WANDA LANDOWSKA

Pianist and Harpsichordist, Won Her Customary Plaudits When She Appeared in the Recent Concert of the New York Music School Settlement.

the composer had given the work "strikingly musical setting" and Mr. Muschamp found the orchestral background always appropriate and "the work of a sincere musician."

To quote the Record: "The Metropolitan Opera Company has given the work every aid in scenic and costume equipment, and furthermore the presentation of last evening was marked by a thorough preparation and direction by the able Artur Bodanzky. He gave full value to the music." This writer found Maria Jeritza "as lovely to behold as ever" and said that she scaled the histrionic heights successfully. Mr. Muschamp thought she gave a most "artistic interpretation."

The performance of Margarete Matzenauer, in the opinion of the writer in the Record, "was truly a notable achievement. . . it was a supreme effort, crowned by success." Agreed was Mr. Muschamp that "it was a wonderful piece of characterization Mme. Matzenauer gave and demonstrated her fine talent as a singing actress." Rudolf Laubenthal "gave full value to his role and its interpretation," in the opinion of the Record, and the others in the cast, including Martin Oehman and Marie Mattfield, were commended for the excellence of their work.

Mr. Bodanzky, thought Mr. Muschamp, read the score in a "thoroughly masterful manner."

The Barber of Seville was presented by the Civic Opera Company on Thursday evening. In the North American, it was reported that Nina Morgana and Ivan Ivantzoff, both from the Metropolitan Opera Company, "gave brilliant interpretations of the leading roles."

The writer in the Record asserted that Miss Morgana's "fluent coloratura was fully equal to the embellishments and difficulties of her part, her brilliant flights of song bringing her many ovations during the evening." S. L. L. in the Ledger found that her voice, "beautiful in quality, is extensive in range and of excellent coloring." According to this commentator, Mr. Ivantzoff captured his audience, and the Record said that his Figaro was an "outstanding characterization, well sung, extremely well acted and in every way enjoyable."

The stage settings were better than they had been, wrote S. L. L., "and the performance moved smoothly under the direction of Alexander Smallens, musical director of the organization." He was called in the Record "an inspiring conductor, keeping the performance up to a rapid tempo and giving the brilliant ensembles effectively." The others in the cast received laudatory notices.

White and Salvi in Joint Concert

Grand Rapids, Dec. 10.—Roderick White, violinist, was heard here last Wednesday night in a joint recital with Alberto Salvi, harpist. According to J. H. Sheppard of the Herald, since Mr. White's appearance here two years ago, "the purity of his tone is improved, but a far greater development is shown in his phrasing and in the polish of his work." May S. Remington reported that his bowing was "free, strong and elastic," and his phrasing "clear and crisp." Mr. Salvi also received commendation for the mastery of his instrument which he displayed.

Rosa Ponselle

Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc
1451 Broadway
New York City

Victor Records Knabe Piano

GALLI-CURCI

Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records

Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano

Management
Ernest Briggs Saltzer
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

SCHIPA

Victor Records
Mason & Hamlin Piano

Management
Ernest Briggs Saltzer
527 FIFTH AVE
NEW YORK

RE JOHN McCORMACK

"Perhaps the best illustration which will serve to contrast the McCormack of yesterday and the McCormack of the present is that of the diamond before and after cutting and polishing. McCormack's natural gifts are the diamond. And like that most precious of all jewels, it has gained the ultimate in beauty through the polishing process of time and hard work."—Chester B. Bahn, Sr., in the Syracuse Evening Telegram.

"There is one singer who stands at the head of all lyric tenors and his name is McCormack. We have been waiting for some promising youngster to challenge his supremacy, but he has not yet arisen. There is no likelihood that the king will relinquish his crown, so long as he sings as he did last night at Memorial hall before that established McCormack unit, 'capacity audience and seats on the stage.'"—H. E. Cherrington in the Columbus Dispatch.

Cosi Fan Tutte Is Sung at Metropolitan

Reviewers Praise Humor and Light Touch Given to Mozart Opera.

"The Metropolitan does not do many things as well as it does Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutte; here it puts its best foot forward, and a dainty, charmingly shod foot it is." This statement in the Herald Tribune is indicative of the reaction on the part of the reviewers to the first production of the opera this season on the afternoon of December 20. In the cast were Adamo Didur, George Meader, Giuseppe de Luca, Frances Peralta, Florence Easton, and Lucrezia Bori. Artur Bodanzky conducted "with the clearness and the verve that Mozart demands," according to Olin Downes of the Times.

Mr. Downes asserted that the production "is one of the finest in the Metropolitan repertory. It is one that the public of any artistic center would acclaim for the rare beauty of the scenic settings and the quality of the ensemble." In the words of Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, the opera, as produced by the Metropolitan, "sparkles with the most ingratiating fantasy and humor . . . is notable for artistic scenery, intelligent stage direction and the fine adjustment and gusto of the ensemble."

According to the World reviewer, the staging of the opera to "meet the scale of the vast Metropolitan is one of the triumphs of that organization's directing forces and also of the droll and imaginative settings of Josef Urban." Ernest Newman of the Post also admired the way in which the opera was brought down to the right scale.

In the opinion of most of the chroniclers, the cast fitted in to the general excellence of the production. The World reviewer wrote: "It also rejoiced in one of the most perfect and well balanced casts since its revival. Miss Easton has to the fullest degree the steadiness and perfect control that are needed to sing Mozart well and her acting is at its best in this sort of charmingly artificial comedy. Mr. Didur was a delightfully cynical Don Alfonso and Mr. Meader and Mr. de Luca brought to life the comedy. . . . Lucrezia Bori was the irresponsible and rowdy soubrette." In spite of certain deficiencies in the team-work, "the performance as a whole was siprited and in the vein," to quote the writer in the Herald Tribune.

Mr. Downes thought Miss Bori occasionally self-conscious, but considered Mr. Meader and Mr. de Luca "extremely funny, as they are accomplished with the music." Miss Bori "was always fluent and pleasant," wrote Mr. Newman, and Mme. Easton was occasionally embarrassed by the low notes of Fiordiligi's part. "The comic effects throughout," continued this writer, "were got, as they should be, with the tips of the fingers." Although at first Mmes. Bori and Easton "were not comfortable in their music," the reviewer in the Sun felt that as the evening progressed, this decreased, and the comedy "went briskly on its way to a satisfying conclusion."

Gatti Converses on The Falstaff of Verdi

(Continued from page 5.)

of this arietta good as it is, and so I will leave it.'

"As it turned out, the Quando ero paggio, sung in a masterly manner by Victor Maurel at the first presentation of Falstaff at La Scala in February, 1893, made such a tremendous success that it had to be repeated three times.

"The act ended in the midst of acclamation. Verdi came to look for me. He led me out before the applauding public, and holding me by the hand, he winked, and said, 'Well, Boito, did you hear? The Quando ero paggio had a success which you didn't expect, eh? . . . The old composer was right this time anyway, was he not?'

"I replied, 'Santo Dio, when have you not been,—when will you not be right? . . . Always, Maestro, always.'"

The first time that I gave Falstaff at the Metropolitan was in the first year of my direction here. Scotti again was the protagonist. The opera remained in the repertory then for several seasons, and I had it presented also at the Chatelet Theatre in Paris in June, 1910, when the Metropolitan Company went to Paris.

For my part I think that Falstaff in its way is a really perfect opera, but my opinion would be worth little if it were not supported by the opinions of many leading composers whose style is very far from that of Verdi, such as Richard Strauss, Claude Debussy, Gustave Mahler, and Dukas. All of these masters, whose opinions of most of the other works of Verdi, by the way, are often not favorable, as they told me themselves, are agreed that in Falstaff we have a perfect modern character opera.

In my opinion, in the reproductions that I have seen in the past, not enough life has been given to the comedy of the opera, and the scenic background has tended to excessive sobriety. In our coming revival at the Metropolitan these clashing elements have been removed.

The public and the reviewers will say whether or not we have succeeded.

RACHMANINOFF PLAYS "THE TROIKA"

STEINWAY

THE INSTRUMENT OF THE IMMORTALS

It is true that Rachmaninoff, Paderewski, Hofmann—to name but a few of a long list of eminent pianists—have chosen the Steinway as the one perfect instrument. It is true that in the homes of literally thousands of singers, directors and musical celebrities, the Steinway is an integral part of the household. And it is equally true that the Steinway, superlatively fine as it is, comes well within the range of the moderate income and meets all the requirements of the modest home.

This instrument of the masters has been brought to perfection by four generations of the Steinway family. But they have done more than this. They have consistently sold it at the lowest possible price. And they have given it to the public upon terms so convenient that the Steinway is well within your reach. Numerous styles and sizes are made to suit your home. Each embodies all the Steinway principles and ideals. And each waits only your touch upon the ivory keys to loose its matchless singing tone, to answer in glorious voice your quickening commands, to echo in lingering beauty or rushing splendor the genius of the great composers.

*There is a Steinway dealer in your community or near you through whom you may purchase a new Steinway piano with a small cash deposit, and the balance will be extended over a period of two years. Used pianos accepted in partial exchange.

Prices: $875 and up

plus transportation

Steinway & Sons, Steinway Hall
109 East Fourteenth Street, New York

Concerning Stravinsky

Carlos Salzedo Speaks of the Art and Personality of the Russian Composer.

IGOR STRAVINSKY, perhaps the most talked-of composer of the present day, is now on his way for his first visit to the United States, and will be presenting his own music here in person within a fortnight Despite his impending arrival and the interest with which he is being awaited, little is known of the personality of Stravinsky.

It is not long that his music has been heard in the United States. What is considered his masterpiece, Le Sacre du Printemps had its American premiere in Philadelphia, when it was conducted by Leopold Stokowski in March, 1922, and New York first heard the work when it was eleven years old last season. One of the leaders in bringing Stravinsky's music to the American public has been Carlos Salzedo, a cofounder of the International Composers' Guild, who have regularly each season since the commencement of their activities several years ago presented on their programs first hearings of some of the smaller works of the Russian composer, including songs, chamber compositions, and the pretentious burlesque, Renard.

Mr. Salzedo is at present supervising the preliminary rehearsals of the first concert of Stravinsky and the Philharmonic orchestra. Mr. Salzedo was pleased to speak about Stravinsky, when we visited him the other day as he was at work preparing the next issue of Eolus (formerly the Eolian Review), a review of new music.

"Stravinsky is a pupil of Rimsky," said Mr. Salzedo in reply to a query, "but that means very little. Nearly all the modernists of music have studied with musicians of recognized standing, but that does not prevent them from writing in a fresh and untraditional vein. Were Rimsky-Korsakoff alive, he would not recognize Le Sacre or Les Noces as the work of one of his pupils.

"Stravinsky is a Russian of pure stock. He studied composing as a young man, and intended from the beginning, it seems, to become a composer. His debut in Paris took place in 1911, when he was twenty-nine years old. The Ballets Russes, directed by Diaghileff were then in the prime of their career, with such dancers in their roster as Nijinski, Bolm, and Karsavina. In that year they presented in Paris Stravinsky's Song of the Nightingale.

"Stravinsky first attracted great notice in Paris, however, two years later. On May 29, 1913, the Ballets Russes presented his Le Sacre du Printemps (The Rite of Spring) at the Champs Elysees Theatre. Pierre Monteux conducted, and the scenery and costumes were designed by Nicolas Roerich, while Nijinsky and Mlle. Piltz were the leading dancers.

"That was Stravinsky's first important appearance in France. Although the performance was greeted with mingled jeers, protests, and applause, those in favor seem to have won, for the Ballets Russes presented the Sacre four times more that year. It was produced as a symphonic poem somewhat later, and has won itself recognition as a masterpiece."

Asked about the personality of Stravinsky, Mr. Salzedo appeared somewhat at a loss. "What can one say?" he replied, "character is so many-sided . . . He is short and Russian-looking, and wears pince-nez and sometimes a monocle. His hands are striking: they are big and muscular. He is forty-two years old, is married, and has several children. He keeps up a tradition among composers by being far from what one could call rich, yet he is Russian in his generosity.

"There are many stories told of him. His attitude toward music is singular. He regards it as something objective and technical, and has no place in it for the sentiment of interpretation. They tell me the story that after one concert abroad in which Koussevitsky conducted one of his works he berated the leader publicly for 'ruining his music' And yet the two seem to be on excellent terms now. For my part I can speak for his gentlest and most tactful side. When I was preparing the Renard he sent me a kind letter, in answer to queries of mine, in which he outlined with the greatest consideration and thoughtfulness the various problems which he knew would arise in its performance.

"That letter incidentally was a perfect key to the character of the man. It was absolutely cool, calculating, and logical. Stravinsky is an eminent illustration of the principle that composers must be as efficient as business men. That objectivity of his, that coolness, should appeal to Americans, both in himself and as reflected in his music. His mind is efficiently organized. He works quickly, and can stop or begin at will. He does not wait for divine inspirations."

Mr. Salzedo found it difficult to explain exactly what was Stravinsky's preoccupation with "objectivity" is: "One can get a clue to the meaning, perhaps, from the story that is told regarding his meeting with Josef Hofmann after the pianist had given a Paris recital last season. He said to Hofmann, 'I liked your music very much. What appealed to me most in your playing was its absolute coldness, its clarity, its lack of feeling.'"

We asked Mr. Salzedo one more question, and he answered, "Revolutionary? No, Stravinsky is that no longer. He is accepted. His rhythmic innovations, his increase in the use of percussion were revolutionary fifteen years ago, but now composers —Varese, Eichheim, and others— have gone far beyond him. Next to Varese's Hyperprism, for example, his use of percussion seems mild! In the minds of the modernists Stravinsky is already a classic." A. F.

IGOR STRAVINSKY Photo by Lipnitzki.

ROYAL DADMUN

BARITONE

AROUSES ENTHUSIASM IN MIDDLE WEST SINGING

FUZZY WUZZY

By OLEY SPEAKS

REQUESTED FOR HIS CALIFORNIA TOUR IN FEBRUARY AND MARCH

PUBLISHED BY

THE JOHN CHURCH COMPANY

Cincinnati—New York—London

Virginia Carrington Thomas Mus. Bac. A. A. G. O.

AMERICAN ORGANIST AND COMPOSER

"Technical capacity—knowledge of the organ."—New York Herald-Tribune.
"Musicianship was admirable and brought warm applause."—New York Sun.
"Well chosen program—clever Canon by herself—admirable technic and her registration was clever and varied."—Musical America, N. Y.
"Gifted organist—interpretations showed sincerity of feeling—smooth, sure, execution."—Musical Courier, N. Y.

CERTIFIED THE MUSICAL DIGEST

Private Recitals CONCERTS Dedications

NOW BOOKING

Address 562 Fifth Ave., New York.

EUROPEAN NEWS AND VIEWS

La Habanera Heard in Paris

Two Opera Companies Continue Season; Swedish Ballets Assailed for Modernist Presentation.

Paris.

Laparra's three-act lyric drama, La Habanera, has again been presented at the Paris Opera-Comique, where it has had a place in the repertory ever since it was given its first presentation there. The plot, although crude, possesses certain dramatic strength, and as it unfolds itself it reveals accurately the typical color of its Spanish locale.

The mise-en-scene has always been of a high order when La Habanera has been given at the Opera-Comique, and this time again it could scarcely have been improved upon. In each of the three acts it struck a different, but always accurate note of realism.

The music of the opera stands behind the dramatic forcefulness of the plot, and consists chiefly in the continual repetition of the Cuban chant generally known as La Habanera. When this leading motif is not being sounded, the music degenerates to a sort of imitation of the folk chants of Spain, with the chief element of orchestration consisting of gaitas and guitars.

At the Opera-Comique performance the singing also was not up to the standard of the mise-en-scene, and although the parts required little vocal ability, they were for the most part inadequately sung. Henri Albers sang the role of Ramon, the protagonist. His baritone is smooth and polished, and is capable of attaining a high range. Among all the leading singers of the evening he alone did consistently well, and gave uninterrupted pleasure. His voice is well suited to the sort of productions which are customary at the Opera-Comique, for it is well schooled and of good style, but lacks somewhat in volume. Dramatically M. Albers was effective in his character study of his part.

Remainder of Cast Inadequate

The tenor role, Pedro, was sung by M. Oged. His voice seemed hard and over tremulous. M. Albers aroused great hopes when he first joined the company some eighteen months ago, but he has been overworked ever since that time, with the result that his voice is not as good as it was.

Mlle. Demellier as Pilad sang continually off pitch, and did not show sufficient familiarity with the score. M. Frigara, the conductor, displayed his usual skill.

Le Jongleur de Notre Dame was another of the most recent presentations of this company. From all points of view the performance was unusual. This excellence included the singing too.

Lucien Fugere, the veteran baritone, has done few better things in his long career in the Salle Favart. The role of Boniface could hardly have been in better hands. He is the sort of singer who is able to act with a spirit which never fails to win friends on the other side of the footlights. His singing of the popular song in the second act was done with a delicate touch which won his audience. He had to repeat it.

Although it has been considerably diminished in volume by the passing years, his voice still possesses the delicate charm of nuance and the minute expressiveness which have won him his present place of honor in the roster of the Opera-Comique.

Charles Friant, who sang the part of Jean, is one of the leading tenors of the company. He is assigned more roles in a season than any other of the tenors of the ensemble. His voice also is small, but it has a brilliance in its highest tones which is effective with audiences. In its middle range the voice is marred by persistent tremolo. Fernand Masson was the conductor of the evening.

Opera Gives Samson

While the Opera-Comique was giving these two works, the Grand Opera was putting on Saint Saens' Samson and Dalila, one of its "war horses," for the 558th time. The feature of this performance, which was good in all respects, was the excellent impression made by the new dramatic tenor who sang the part of Samson, M. Perret. This artist confirmed the impression which he had made in his debut as Siegmund in the Valkyries earlier in the season. The beauty and power of his voice is never sacrificed to gain any melodramatic effect. In every one of his roles, it appears, M. Perret is a musician who realizes the dramatic effects of his part with the most judicious and tasteful use of his voice. There is scarcely a moment when the listener does not feel pleasure in the sound of M. Perret's voice, for it has natural beauty, and is emitted with ease. In respect to acting he made an excellent impression too.

M. Couzinou as the High Priest was another of the leading singers in Samson who displayed excellent vocal qualities. M. Narcon, basso, was the old Hebrew, and his singing was praised too.

The Dalila of Mme. Montfort was not quite up to her best standard. It was in the middle ranges that she was least pleasing, for her lower notes were luscious and full. There was a lack of abandon and sincerity in her acting which made it appear that the second act was lacking some of the fire which can be got from it. The chorus was given special praise by newspaper reviewers and audience for its singing, and the ballet added its bit to the general effect. The mise-en-scene now is by no means fresh, but it retains some of its conviction still. Gabriel Grovlez was the conductor for the evening.

New Pantomime by Hue

A performance at the Opera which was something less of a success was that of the ballet Siang Sin, a pantomime in two acts by Pierre Jobbe Duval for which the musical score was supplied by Georges Hue. The plot is concerned with the thwarted love of the favorite of an aged Chinese Emperor. The favorite runs off with a Punch and Judy showman, and the two of them are caught by the police of the emperor. As punishment the emperor causes the showman to be carried off by the magic of a conjuror, while the magician makes him young again, and the favorite, prematurely old.

Nevertheless the emperor still loves his exiled favorite. He finds her again, and resorts to magic to restore her youth too. Then they live happily together. The ballet made as little impression on the audience as did the story, and the music shared the general lack of effectiveness and animation. The costumes were nevertheless original, and the groups prettily arranged. Henri Busser was the conductor who had the fruitless task of presenting this score.

Among the concert activities of the week was the appearance in recital of the tenor M. Francell, formerly of the Opera-Comique. This was the singer's first Paris appearance on the concert stage, although he has often been heard here in opera. His voice stood the test of concert giving excellently in the opinion of the reviewers who were on hand to hear him sing. He chose the majority of the numbers on his program from compositions of the Russian composers, including Borodine, Gretchaninoff, and Rimsky Korsakoff, and showed to excellent advantage in them.

Satie Work Given

After it had once been scheduled and had been postponed two weeks on account of the severe illness of Jean Borlin, the choreographer. The Dog's Tail, by Francis Picabia, music by Erik Satie, was produced by the Swedish Ballets at the Champs-Elysees Theatre.

M. Berlin showed himself fully recovered when he danced in this unusual conglomeration of post-present-past-impressionism. Nothing has ever equalled the adversity of the criticism which greeted this work at its premiere. The author's ideas are so complex and irrational (he himself prefers the word advanced) that the human brain seems confronted with a hopeless task to understand what it is all about.

The audience at first seemed dumbfounded at the utter nonsense displayed on the stage, but as the farce continued its amused indifference turned to anger. The spectators became more and more restless and soon voiced their protests. Those who had fallen asleep with boredom were awakened by the cries. Pandemonium broke loose, and the curtain fell to a chorus of insults and booes.

The abuse of the audience, however, was as nothing compared with that which the newspapers showered upon the composition, its author, and the company the next day. M. Le Comte de Gondremark, entrepreneur of the Swedish Ballets, was assailed in some quarters as the conductor of a bad and unhealthful enterprise.

K. H. STOTTNER.

Carnegie Trust Will Subsidize British Opera

London.

ACCORDING to a report from London in the New York Times, opera in England is about to be subsidized for the first time. The trustees of the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust have agreed to guarantee the British National Opera Company against loss in the production of certain operas. The works which have been chosen are in the nature of musical novelties and are thought to have some educational value, in spite of their lack of popular appeal and hence of any chance of financial success.

MAY KORB
Lyric Coloratura Soprano
Exclusive Management
R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

CONCERT MANAGEMENT ARTHUR JUDSON
Announces
NINA MORGANA
SOPRANO, METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
Season 1925-1926 Now Being Booked
Fisk Building
New York City
Hardman Piano
Pennsylvania Building
Philadelphia, Penn.

IN CONTINENTAL CAPITALS

New Prokofieff Concerto Played

Szigeti Is Soloist With Bruno Walter; Lucy Kieselhausen Dances Once More.

Berlin.

The literature of the violin has just had a remarkable addition, it seems, in the new concerto of Serge Prokofieff which Joseph Szigeti played in Berlin as soloist with an orchestra under the leadership of Bruno Walter. Klaus Pringsheim, the music reviewer who is known also as a conductor, wrote, after he heard the composition, that the chronic cry after a modern violin concerto was wrongly understood by Max Reger and Hans Pfitzner, but correctly by Prokofieff. "For Prokofieff does not seek feverishly after new technics, nor does he seek to introduce extraneous values into the voice of this instrument," said this writer. "He gives music that is composed within the idiom of the present day, and which nevertheless is genuinely a violin concerto. At the same time Prokofieff has written an orchestral part which in its ingenuity and dexterity is characteristic of the Russian composers of this day."

Dr. Schmidt, who generally aligns himself with the conservatives in his reviews, considered that the imagination of Prokofieff is unusually poor, and that all he has succeeded in doing is to supply a violin part of cunning technical difficulty, but dry and without any melodic richness. It was his opinion that Prokofieff has done exactly what Herr Pringsheim praised him for not doing, that is, write a piece of music unfitted for the violin.

This difference of opinion regarding the qualities of the new composition was smoothed into unanimous approval of the work of the soloist, whom all the writers consider a violinist of the first rank.

Walter Leads Mahler's Fifth

Bruno Walter was adjudged great indeed in his conducting of Mahler's Fifth Symphony at this concert. He surpassed himself in this performance, although he has always been known as a special lover of the works of Mahler. Prof. Weismann said of Herr Walter's conducting, "With the deepest musical feeling and the most profound understanding he conjured to our ears the magic of the music of Mahler."

Some of the moderns in music, Ernest Toch, Ervin Lendwai, Malipiero, and Egon Wellesz, had their say at a chamber concert early this month. Toch was represented by his Five Pieces for chamber orchestra, and Wellesz's Suite Op. 38 for violin and orchestra was on the program. The newspaper reviewers discussed at the time not only Wellesz's Suite, but also his dance symphony, Die Nachtlichen, which was performed at the State Opera. The suite had a very favorable reception at the hands of public and reviewers, but Die Nachtlichen aroused only disapproval and a minimum of applause.

New Coloratura Soprano

An event of special interest also was the appearance of a genuine coloratura soprano, Ada Sari, in Bluthner Hall. Mme. Sari is a Polish singer, but she has lately been connected with La Scala in Milan. Sigmund Pisling vouched for the versatility and unusual virtuosity of her voice, and praised her for its clear staccati, its easy emission, and the charm of her delicate tones. The only drawback that he could find was that the intonation of the singer was "not always to be depended upon."

Max Marschalk of the Vossische Zeitung took the opposite point of vew, for he withheld his approval of her virtues on account of the shortcomings in intonation.

At this concert it was proved again that too extreme publicity is apt to harm a newcomer artist more than it aids. Mme. Sari had been announced on all her posters and in all her advance notices as a second Patti. The result was naturally that the reviewers and audiences measured her by this standard, and it is not surprising that she was found wanting. Without a doubt nevertheless she belongs to a high rank of the coloraturas of the present day, although she can hardly be said to deserve a place with the greatest sopranos of this type of all time.

Kieselhausen Dances Again

Lucy Kieselhausen, dancer, appeared here in a second recital, and the storm of applause which she aroused even surpassed that which she won on her first appearance a short time ago. Characteristic of the newspaper reviews were the remarks, a veritable ode, of Felix Salten, the Vienna reviewer and dramatist. He wrote, "Lucy Kieselhausen is a dancer who can enthral an audience for an entire evening. She stands by the side of Pavlowa, Karsavina, Isadora Duncan, Ruth St. Denis. Kieselhausen is a perfect dancer, thoroughly trained. In every detail of her art she is sure of herself. Every moment she displays individuality. Her figure has the beauty of Greek statues, voluptuous and at the same time slender, high hipped with a slim body, broad chested, with a form that breathes health and delicate grace, slim of ankle with nobly formed knees. This body is penetrated by a spirit which produces life all over, in every limb, in the play of every muscle of the back, in the unconscious grace of the hands, in her whole lightness and swiftness of bearing."

That the audience agreed with this approval cannot be doubted.

Despite his announcement after the poor success of his second Berlin recital, that he was giving up concert appearances definitely, Eugene d'Albert, veteran pianist, quickly relieved his followers by appearing in a third recital here. This time his program was made up completely of works of modern composers. He played pieces of Debussy, Ravel, Schcnberg, and himself, and proved that despite the recent alarms he is at the top of his powers as pianist and artist.

What happened to d'Albert was exactly what happened years ago to Nikisch and more recently to Felix Weingartner. These musicians also had their periods when they seemed under hopeless depression. Music lovers were all ready to cast their favorites in despair to the musical scrap heap, when they suddenly became regenerated, and the freshness of youth once again breathed in their interpretations.

Carl Flesch Plays

Carl Flesch, another recitalist of the week, has shown his Berlin followers no such vacillation as has his pianistic colleague. The heartiness and spirit of his tone, the distinction of his understanding, the whole personality of this violinist seem to gain a shade at his every new appearance in public. Together with the pianist Bruno Eisner he played the Sonata, Op. 39, of Reger in a manner which the reviewers of the various newspapers considered unsurpassable.

ARTHUR KURSCHNER.

Rome Hears First St. Cecilia Concert

Milan.

The annual series of concerts at the Academy of Saint Cecilia in Rome commenced on the fifth of December. The most marked impression of the entire concert was that made by the famous Double Quintet of Turin. This group is under the leadership of Luigi Peracchio, and is composed of a string quintet, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn.

The program of the opening concert consisted of Mozart's Divertissement in D major, a divertissement by Albert Roussel, Alfredo Casella's Pupazetti, and Schubert's Octet, Opus 166. The Roman reviewers praised the excellence of the ensemble throughout the program, and found in each of the performances superb tone and technique on the part of the players, both as individuals and groups.

In Milan at the Scala there were during the week two seasonal first performances, both being operas that last year were in the regular repertory of the company. Carmen, played December 4, was this time conducted by Vittorio Gui, who presented the music with distinction and rhythmic and melodic clarity.

Zinetti Sings Carmen

The title role was sung by Giuseppina Zinetti, who, as far as acting was concerned, presented the coquette character of the heroine skillfully and with delicate suggestion. Unfortunately this singer is not gifted with a voice which has the resources sufficient to portray the role of Carmen as it should be on the musical side.

The tenor Crimi was an excellent Don Jose, and won well deserved applause at the end of the fourth act. The baritone Benvenuto Franci sang the part of Escamillo with satisfactory results, although the role is not

(Continued on page 20.)

Eastman School of Music
of
THE UNIVERSITY OF ROCHESTER
ERNEST BLOCH
will conduct
FIVE MASTER COURSES
Teaching Methods—Practical Harmony—Style—Form—Fugue.
Each Course One Week—Five Two-Hour Sessions
BEGINNING FEBRUARY 2ND, 1925
For Information, Address Secretary-Manager
Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y.

KOLITSCH
NEW YORK RECITAL
CARNEGIE HALL
January 27, 1925
Management
Antonia Sawyer, Inc.
Aeolian Hall, New York

OLD-WORLD HIGHLIGHTS

Colon Crisis Stirs Argentine

Six Bidders Compete for Direction of Buenos Aires Opera House.

Buenos Aires.

The closing of the Colon Theatre in this city came in no way as a surprise, for there had been plenty of warning given out during the past year. Last June the concessionaire, Mocchi, to whom the municipal fine arts authorities had let out the theatre, announced that unless he was given a subsidy amounting to a considerable sum of money, the season would have to be discontinued. The exact amount of money which he requested was not made public, but it was estimated that the sum required was at least 300,000 pesos, and perhaps as much as 500,000.

At the time there was considerable disapproval of this request, and in an editorial article which protested against this demand of the concessionaire the newspaper America said: "This impending failure of an operatic enterprise compromises the municipal honor of Buenos Aires. At the same time we can see no good reason why the Government should subsidize a private business which is running with the purpose of making itself profitable, especially since there is sufficient precedent in the history of the Teatro Colon for impresarios taking care of themselves in fulfilling the obligations of their concession.

"The Colon Theatre is in essence a municipal enterprise which is supervised in certain practical and artistic details by the Government. The Government, however, lets out the theatre to one of a number of bidders, who promises to submit to certain supervision and at the same time to carry on the work of the theatre to whatever private advantage he may gain, while the concessionaire guarantees to keep up the theatre in case it should not be self-supporting."

Since this was the general opinion in Buenos Aires, it was to be expected that the Government would not supply the subsidy demanded, and the result which had been forewarned took place: the theatre was forced to close down. All this took place despite the fact that the Government had already made several smaller grants to the concessionaire.

Other Theatres Flourish

The failure of the Colon is no indication that the lyric theatre in general is in a bad way in the Argentine capital. It is the Colon alone that has been having difficulties here. The other two opera houses in the city, the Coliseo and the Opera, are doing very well, and are drawing consistently large crowds to hear their presentations.

The question which is posed now is, What is to become of the Colon for this season? There are six—or really five—separate groups who are competing for the concession which has been left hanging by the bankrupt promoter, Mocchi. First of all, there is Mocchi himself, who, many believe, is likely to gain the direction of the Colon again even despite what has taken place in the past. Mocchi offers two alternatives. He proposes either that the Government give him the subsidy which he has asked; or that the Colon be operated by himself in conjunction with the municipality, which will provide chorus, orchestra and ballet for the performances. If he becomes director again, one of his accomplishments promises to be the presentation of Nerone. The members of the city council seem inclined in his favor.

Business Man Bids

Another candidate is Coty, the Parisian perfume magnate. At one time, it is said, he aspired to become President of the Republic, but just now he desires to go in for operatic management.

Weingartner of Vienna is the third applicant, and should he become the director there is no doubt that German and Austrian operas would at least predominate in the repertory if they did not make it up entirely. Then there are the capitalist Schiffner, of whose intentions little is known, and Grassi-Diaz and Crivelli, who are associated unofficially with Mocchi, so that if they gain the direction it will amount to the same thing as if he is the choice of the municipality.

The last of those aspiring after the direction of the Colon are the Wagnerians, who, as their name indicates, will practically exclude the Italian operas from the Colon repertory. Naturally, it is not very likely that they will succeed in their intention.

Meanwhile, before the Colon Theatre is being assigned by the Government, the newspapers are asking their readers a number of questions. Their chief query is whether the national pride of the Argentinians will permit their leading theatre to enter oblivion, or to struggle continually against bankruptcy. Many of them believe that if Mocchi is again to gain power the likelihood is that the Colon will never have a chance to reach that position of equality with La Scala and the New York Metropolitan which the Argentine lovers of opera have long hoped to achieve. At present the prospect does not seem very hopeful.

G. G. C.

LUCY KIESELHAUSEN
Whose Dancing Has Been One of the Main Features of the Current Season in Berlin.

Start Madrid Opera Season

Madrid, Dec. 13.—The grand opera season at the Teatro Real is about to commence. Among the novelties to be given this season are The Girl of the Golden West, by Puccini; La Virgen de Mayo, by Moreno Torroba; El Amor Brujo, by de Falla; La Navarraise, by Massenet; Pelleas and Melisande, by Debussy.

Some of the artists scheduled to appear are Fleta, Muratore, Sullivan, Galeffi, Maria Llacer, Mercedes Capsir, Laura Pasini, Yvonne Gall, and Kiva Teilia.

Puccini Honored In Pouring Rain

(Continued from page 19.)

one which may be considered best suited to his type of voice. As Micaela Ines Alfani did well, and so did the chorus and the singers in the minor parts. The scenery and the items of stage direction were the same as those in the Carmen of last year at the Scala.

Produce Iris

Two days later Mascagni's Iris was the opera billed. Last season this was one of the most successful operas in the entire Scala repertory. Toscanini was the conducter at this most recent performance, and at the climactic point he was compelled, although he obviously did not want to do it, to turn to the audience and to take a bow to them then and there. The score of Mascagni had the clearest rendition possible by the orchestra, and on the stage things went quite well. Pertile sang the role of Osaka, and Signora Vigano, the protagonist, made a good impression with her limpid voice of perfect intonation. Badini, as usual, made an excellent Kyoto, and the basso Walter was approved too. The chorus deserved to share the highest honors served to share the highest honors.

Whole City Mourns Puccini

The funeral of Puccini took place on December 3 in Milan. Despite the very bad weather the entire city was in the streets, and an immense procession followed the cortege. Not even after the death of Verdi was there such a tremendous demonstration. The body of the composer arrived from Brussels the day before late in the afternoon, and a large crowd was on hand when the train pulled in. The casket was taken to the Church of San Fedele, and all night it was watched and prayed over by a number of friends of the composer and musicians.

The next afternoon it was transported to the Duomo, where the entire city seemed to be on hand to pay homage. The final religious rites of absolution took place at 1:30, and for the first time since the death of Manzoni the Cardinal officiated.

The ceremonies were followed by the playing of the funeral march from Puccini's own early opera, Edgar. Toscanini was the leader of the orchestra, which consisted of the La Scala players, and the two singers were the basso de Angelis and Nina Spani, soprano.

At two o'clock in a pouring rain the funeral procession moved slowly through the Vie Manzoni, Moscova, and Volta to the tomb of the Toscanini family, where it is to be kept temporarily until the affairs of the deceased are finally settled.

FEDERICO CANDIDA.

LOUIS GRAVEURE
Metropolitan Musical Bureau—Aeolian Hall—New York City

JEANNE GORDON
Contralto, Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: National Concerts, Inc. SAMUEL GENEEN, President
1451 Broadway, New York

ALLEN McQUHAE
TENOR
RECITALS—ORATORIOS—ORCHESTRAS
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, Fisk Bldg., 57th St. & B'way, N. Y. C.
Brunswick Records

FOREIGN MUSIC ACTIVITIES

Holidays Slack London Music

Monteux Conducts in British Capital; London Quartet Gives Beethoven Cycle.

London.

Already a slackening in concert activities is making itself felt here with the approach of the holiday season. During the week, December 7 to 14, notable events were fewer than has been the case since mid-October; the next fortnight has still less in store for music lovers, to judge by advance notices.

Bruno Walter, whose appearance with the Royal Philharmonic has already been noted, now came forward again at a London Symphony concert. Although "at the close of the performance (of the second Brahms symphony) Mr. Walter received a great ovation," according to the Telegraph, at least one writer—Mr. Scholes of the Observer—reiterated a complaint which has cropped up several times this season: "Generally speaking, our standard of orchestral playing is perceptibly lower than it has been for some years, and the reason seems to be a dual one—insufficient rehearsal, plus constant change of conductor." Both this commentator and the Sunday Times writer felt that disharmony between conductor and players was especially evident in the Brahms work, but the latter nevertheless writes: "Whatever else emerged, the regard for form and beauty . . . was predominant. (Mr. Walter) is redeemed by his sense of humor." Mr. Legge was even more commendatory: "There can be no question that his reading was far more lyrical feeling than what we usually get, and if only for that reason, infinitely more appealing and suggestive of spontaneity."

Pierre Monteux Conducts

At a concert of the British Broadcasting Orchestra, which was attended by auditors in the flesh at Covent Garden as well as delivered via ether waves to radio enthusiasts, there was one certain introduction: of Pierre Monteux, the conductor, who had never appeared in London before. Another novelty was alleged: the Chausson Symphony in B flat. The Observer notice did not think M. Monteux's right to rank with the "three or four 'great' conductors of the generation" is "quite proved," but conceded that "the conception of the music is always a big one, and well thought out in detail; tempi are well chosen, and instrumental balance controlled."

The London String Quartet, just before a return engagement in America, devoted a week to performing in chronological order the Beethoven Quartets, including the Great Fugue, op. 133. The bad weather kept the audiences small. At the conclusion of this "exacting week" (the Sunday Times), the Telegraph writer said: "The only grudge we have" against Messrs. Levey, Petre, Waldo Warner, and Warwick-Evans "is that they are heard all too rarely in the very city which gave them its name."

There were some notable recitals: Mme. Galli-Curci made the last appearance of her English tournee, and it was generally held that she was on this occasion in better voice than at any of her earlier London concerts; two pianists, Messrs. Mark Hambourg and William Bachaus, also gave "repeat" recitals. This was a seasonal farewell for Mr. Bachaus as well.

Varied Recitals

Two recitals which won general commendation especially for musicianship were those of Mme. Rider-Possart, the pianist, and of Susan Metcalfe Casals, in a lieder-abend. The young pianist, Solomon, of whom a good deal has been written in past seasons, again commended himself to the Telegraph writer as "firmly establishing himself in the front ranks of British artists." The qualities which come with "maturity" the Observer critic still thinks missing, but, he says, "It would take much longer to point out the excellence of this young artist than to indicate" this one shortcoming. "He has technique sufficient even for Balakireff's Islamey Fantasia," concludes the critic. Two younger artists who are believed to hold much promise by the critics are the pianist Reginald Paul, and the violinist Cecil Bonvalot, both of whose appearances in the week under review won commendation.

Several organizations enlivened the same period with less usual music offerings. At the annual Empire Music Festival, several prize-winning new works were performed, but they are not criticised at length in the press. The Music Society and Contemporary Music Centre brought over the Spanish composer Joaquin Turina to play two of his own piano suites for the first time in London. He seems to have played like a composer, but his music was interesting. The Arne Society devoted an afternoon to revivals of the doughty doctor's works, and very charming they seemed, at least by contrast with the prevailing romanticism and modernism of other of the week's programs. P. L.

The Center for Modern Music
J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.
11 GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET
LONDON, W. 1
Complete catalogues post free on application

Grand Theatre of Geneva Presents Italian Operas

GENEVA, Dec. 13.—The Grand Theatre at Geneva is giving an Italian season of opera under the management of Settimo Indelicato at which leading artists of La Scala, Milan, and of other Italian companies are appearing. The operas that have so far been presented are Rigoletto, Tosca and Madame Butterfly.

In these performances Ferdinando Ciniselli, tenor; Senor Sarobe, baritone of the Real of Madrid; Carmen Floria, soprano, and Mlle. Guglielmetti, coloratura soprano, have sung in the leading roles. The conductor of the performances has been Edmondo de Vecchi. The season has been judged an artistic success by the reviewers and audiences, and has proved profitable for the promoter.

Swedish Dancer to Tour U. S.

Ronny Johannson, Swedish dancer, who has appeared in recital in several of the European capitals, will come to the United States next spring under the management of Ernest Briggs. She will make her New York debut after Easter, and will dance in the West immediately thereafter. She will be accompanied in her appearances by a pianist, soprano and violinist.

Valuable Strad Imported

The Ames Stradivarius, valued at $35,000, was brought here from Berlin by Emil Harrmann last week and is one of the best specimens of the Cremona violin maker's art in America. The violin will be exhibited with a collection of other famous violins valued at $150,000.

Municipal Opera House Inaugurated in Marseilles

Marseilles.

The new Municipal Opera of Marseilles was officially inaugurated on December 4. The inauguration was the occasion of much official ceremony and of the presentation of Reyer's Siguard. Mathilde Comes sang the role of Brunhilda, and won applause which she would have deserved even if this were not an occasion of general celebration and good will.

M. Cazenave, in the tenor role, also gave an excellent account of himself, and Ferdinand Rey was the conductor. Enthusiasm was the order of the evening, and all the members of the cast had their share of applause, together with M. Rey.

The new opera house has been built on the site of the old theatre, which was destroyed by fire in 1919. Although architecturally it cannot be compared with the old structure, the present house has at least most modern facilities. It has a seating capacity of about 2,500, and every seat is placed in such a way that its occupant can see the stage. The foyers, stage and stairs are equipped with safety exits sufficient to take care of a crowded house.

The acoustics of the theatre are excellent as regards the singers on the stage, but it seems that the orchestral pit is too much under cover, and it is feared that in the lighter operas, where orchestration is simple, the orchestral parts may not carry as well as they should. This is a matter yet to be decided. K. H. S.

Nadia Boulanger Coming

Nadia Boulanger, French organist, will make her first American appearance of the season on January 9 in the Grand Court of the Wanamaker store playing the Wanamaker Grand Organ.

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER
D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

INA BOURSKAYA
MEZZO-SOPRANO
Metropolitan Opera Company—Chicago Civic Opera Company
Concert Management: S. HUROK, INC. Aeolian Hall, New York City

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

ANNA FITZIU
SOPRANO
Management: R. E. JOHNSTON
1451 Broadway New York

THE STUDIO EASY CHAIR

MARCELLA GEON presented eight of her pupils in a recital of songs last Sunday afternoon in the Rose Room of the Hotel Astor, New York City.

Lawrence Tibbett, Theo Karle, Arthur Kraft, Grace Devine, Zelina Bartholomew, Madeleine Hulsizer, Mildred and Marjorie Freeman and Valeriano Gil sang at an informal musicale given by Frank La Forge and Ernesto Berumen at their New York studio on the evening of December 12.

At the ninth annual convention of the Arkansas State Music Teachers' Association, held in Little Rock the first week in December, H. D. Tovey was elected president; F. W. Harwood, vice president; Mrs. A. L. Kinney, secretary, and L. H. Mitchell, treasurer. The program was opened with the piano conference, over which Mrs. Guy Mathis presided. The chairman of the voice conference was Effie Cline Fones, and Charles Henry and Mildred Askew sang. Mrs. F. W. Harwood was chairman of the violin conference, and musical numbers were played by Vernon and Ewing Jackson, with Mrs. Vernon Jackson at the piano. Presiding over the harmony and history conference was L. H. Mitchell. Emile Trebing was chairman of the organ conference.

Ernest Bloch, director of the Cleveland Institute of Music, and Roger Huntington Sessions, teacher of theory, have both been giving a series of informal talks on music. Mr. Bloch's talks concern themselves with the musical education of children and the musical appreciation of adults. Mr. Sessions has lectured about the principal works played by the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra preceding each concert.

At the request of the Cleveland Public Library both have compiled lists of books of interest to music lovers. The lists have been printed on book marks available to all patrons of the library. Books on musical education suggested are: Creative Music for Children, by Coleman; The Learning Process, by Colvin; Rhythm, Music and Education, by Jacques Dalcroze; Musical Education, by Lavignac, and Psychology of Musical Talent, by Seashore.

For a better appreciation of music Mr. Bloch has suggested the following reading list: Book of Musical Knowledge, by Elson; What Is Good Music? by Henderson; Music and Musicians, by Lavignac; A Musical Tour Through the Land of the Past, by Rolland, and Musicians of Today, by Rolland.

Mr. Sessions has recommended a number of books also on the lives and experiences of composers. This list includes Mozart's letters, Beethoven's letters, Berlioz's autobiography, the Nietzsche-Wagner correspondence; My Musical Life, by Rimsky-Korsakoff, and The Life and Letters of Peter Ilyitch Tschaikowsky, by Modeste Tschaikowsky.

On music and musicians the following essays are suggested: J. S. Bach, by Schweitzer; Life of Ludwig van Beethoven, by Thayer; Music Dramas of Richard Wagner, by Lavignac; Franz Liszt, by Huneker; Wagner as Man and Artist, by Newman; History of Russian Music, by Montagu-Nathan; Richard Strauss, by Newman; Musical Portraits, by Paul Rosenfeld, and Contemporary Russian Composers, by Montagu-Nathan.

Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann was presented recently by the School of Opera of the Chicago Musical College under the direction of Edoardo Sacerdote. In the cast were Charlotte Boykin, Agnes Lighthall, Ruth Racette, Eulah Cornor, Thelma Bollinger, Vladimir Svetloff, Holt Steck, Edmund Hawkins, Albert Hayes, Russell Boltenstern and Michel Kushelewsky.

Lawrence Adler, son of the educator, Dr. Felix Adler of New York, who is a member of the Advisory Council of the Curtis Institute of Music, of Philadelphia, is counselor of the Academic Department of the Institute. Mrs. Mary Louise Bok, who endowed the school, as well as John Grolle, director, believes that a cultural background is necessary to appreciate and enjoy music, as well as to understand and interpret it. It has been in the furtherance of these aims that the Academic Department of the Institute has been developed. Students are required to study at least two academic subjects each term, and attend lectures upon them.

JAMES MASSELL
New York Teacher of Singing Whose Pupil, Arturo Gervasi, Has Been Engaged to Sing Leading Tenor Roles at the Costanzi, in Rome, This Season.

A course in Comparative Arts under the auspices of the Academic Department began last Wednesday. The course consists of over forty lectures, which will be given consecutively on Monday and Wednesday afternoons of each week. The correlative value of the fine arts, and their influence upon the development of artistic civilization from the time of the Ancient Greeks to the Modern Period will be shown. Such important movements as the Renaissance and the Reformation will be studied, as well as the early liturgy of the Roman Catholic Church, the Songs and Lays of the Troubadours, Classicism and Romanticism, and the influence of Goethe and Schiller upon such composers as Beethoven and Brahms.

Prof. Jean B. Beck, Department of Roman Languages, University of Pennsylvania, delivered the first lecture of the series on Greek Art. Greek Tragedies and Greek Poets are being studied with Prof. Walter W. Hyde, Department of Greek, University of Pennsylvania.

Others who will participate in the course of lectures, which extends to May, 1925, include Prof. Felix Adler, of the Ethical Culture Society, New York; Prof. Morrison C. Boyd, Department of Music, Prof. George D. Hadzsits, Department of Latin, Prof. F E. Schelling, Department of English, Prof. Domenico Vittorini, Department of Roman Languages, Prof. Herman J. Weigand, Department of German, University of Pennsylvania; Prof. Frank Jewett Mather, Director of Fine Arts, and Prof. J. Duncan Spaeth, Department of English, Princeton University; Hal S. White, Department of English, Yale University; Leo Katz, New York; Alfred Martin, New York; Frederic Lamond, of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester; and Rosario Scalero, Department of Composition, Curtis Institute of Music.

A concert was given at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music recently by a group of Symphony Orchestra players who are to be instructors in the new school of American Orchestral Players just founded.

It has been arranged that a number of free scholarships are available and friends of the Conservatory of Music have donated enough to maintain the school for at least a year.

The Ithaca Conservatory has announced four Master Scholarships, each valued at $700, which will be awarded through competition to be held in Ithaca, January 19. They are in the names of Cesar Thomson for violin, Leon Sampaix for piano, Ruth Rodgers for voice and George C. Williams for expression.

The scholarships in violin and piano will include private instruction under the teachers for whom they are named: instruction in theory, composition and conducting, etc.

The scholarship in voice takes the name of one of the Conservatory's graduates, Ruth Rodgers, and will include private lessons under Bert Rogers Lyon and instruction in harmony, conducting, composition, repertoire and teachers' training class.

The scholarship in expression will include private instruction under President George C. Williams and class instruction in literature, dramatics and pedagogy. Each award carries room and board during course of study.

Herbert Witherspoon and Mrs. Florence Hinkle Witherspoon were hosts at a musical and dance given in their New York home December 12. The program was presented by the Misses Jeraldine Calla, Esther Stoll and Amy Ellerman and Mr. John Quine. Miss Helen Wolverton was the accompanist. More than one hundred and fifty guests were present.

WILLIAM FICHANDLER
PIANO INSTRUCTION
Technic—Interpretation—Teaching Methods
604 West 115th St.
New York City
Telephone: Cathedral 6854

HERBERT MUSTARDE
TEACHER OF SINGING
16—Metropolitan Opera House Studios
Tel: Pennsylvania 2634

SAMOILOFF
BEL CANTO STUDIOS
309 W. 85th St. Tel.: Schuyler 6952 New York

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

HILDA GRACE GELLING
VOCAL STUDIO
128 West 72nd St., N. Y. City
Telephone Endicott 1587
ASSOCIATE TEACHER WITH PERCY RECTOR STEPHENS

PIETRO CIMINI
CONDUCTOR
Chicago Civic Opera Company
5TH YEAR
PERSONAL ADDRESS: CONGRESS HOTEL, CHICAGO, ILL.

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK
FRANK DAMROSCH, Director
120 Claremont Avenue
Endowed. All Branches of Music. Faculty composed of distinguished artists
Catalogue on application
Address Dept. V

The Washington Heights Musical Club
MISS JANE CATHCART, President
200 West 57th Street, New York City
Telephone: Circle 10117

AMONG the recent Schirmer publications is a piano cycle, In the Country, by Leo Ornstein. It consists of "five memories" of the young American composer, entitled respectively The Gypsy Lament, The Old Dungeon, A Fairy Dance, The Cathedral Bells and the Choir, and The Merry-Go-Round. Perhaps the most effective of the pieces is the next to the last. It consists of twelve measures in all, but its mood is as well and concisely established as that of a prelude of Chopin. Against a dissonant basso ostinato a bell chimes (the B flat-E flat, which imitates it, is quite perfect). Suddenly the broad diatonic chords of church singing break in and are repeated in different modes. The chimes return as in the beginning.

The Fairy Dance suggests in its bareness and rhythmic lightness one of the six little pieces of Schonberg, but the swift dissonant minor of the Lament is Ornstein's own. One wishes that the Dungeon were a little more sombre. This music is not in Mendelssohn's idiom, but it is good music nevertheless.

William Bachaus is the transcriber of two serenades for the piano, one of Mozart and one of Richard Strauss. The editing is not important, tasteful or necessary. Mr. Bachaus has merely laid about the simple melodies a great quantity of movement, arpeggiation, runs, trills and figures, but it is all to no purpose. The musical effect of the simple pieces is not enhanced, but rather hidden.

In their more complex form the two serenades can fill only one purpose, that of providing the virtuoso pianist with a vehicle for the display of superlative talents of the fingers. There is bigger and better music for that purpose even. Schirmer is the publisher.

From the same publisher comes Heigh-ho! What a Day! a song for high voice, by Franklin Riker. It is a composition full of movement and life with a rushing accompaniment of vivacious rhythm. Beloved, by the same composer, is for medium tessitura. The pace of this piece is much slower than that of its companion, and the sentiment is well established in the melody and sustained in an accompaniment which varies simple figurations with chromatic progression.

Reviewers Differ on N. Y. Guest Leader

Vladimir Golschmann appeared for the second time as guest conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra in Aeolian Hall the afternoon of December 21. There was some diversity of opinion among the reviewers about the concert. On his program were Gluck's Overture to Iphigenie in Aulis, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, Honegger's Pastorale d'Ete, the three familiar excerpts from Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, and the Polovetskian Dances from Borodine's Prince Igor.

W. J. Henderson asserted in the Sun that Mr. Golschmann is "a conductor of virility, of decision, and of genuine talent." The reviewer found that he "had his own ideas" about the reading of the Symphony, and he attributed the conductor's "enthusiasm, temperamental warmth and general vigor" to his youth. The Gluck overture, continued Mr. Henderson, exhibited him "as a young man of eager spirit."

Somewhat opposed to this view were Deems Taylor of the World, Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, and F. D. Perkins of the Herald Tribune. Mr. Taylor considered the reading of Beethoven's Seventh "careful, respectful reading, generally well balanced, and quite 'correct' as far as it went; but one which revealed neither an individual conception of the music nor an ability to encompass the breadth and epic quality of a first class performance in the traditional manner." Mr. Sanborn considered the reading rather heavy except in the finale, and Mr. Perkins, although he considered it showed "distinct competence and understanding," did not think it of "memorable impressiveness." In the last two movements, continued this writer, "the orchestra played with a spirit recalling Mr. Golschmann's first appearance last April."

Ernest Newman of the Post found the conductor "on better working terms with the orchestra," but added that he felt sure Mr. Golschmann "would reveal himself as a better conductor with an orchestra that was more used to him."

According to Mr. Taylor, the conductor achieved "much better results" in the Berlioz and Borodin music. The performance of these numbers, said Mr. Downes was "fiery and telling." The Honegger number, remarkable for its contrast to the much talked of Pacific 231, was, wrote Mr. Perkins, given an "excellent performance." The music he thought "graceful, melodious and conservative." Mr. Downes suspected that the composer, in writing this work, which won a prize a few years ago, had his tongue in his cheek.

Photo by White Studio

EMMA TRENTINI

Light Opera Singer, Will Shortly Begin a Season in Vaudeville.

Music of the Movies

Special musical programs have been prepared by all of New York's motion picture houses for the first week of the new year. At the Capitol S. L. Rothafel has created a Southern Rhapsody, in which are interpolated melodies and folk songs of the South. Another feature provided is the singing of the Caro Nome aria from Rigoletto by Caroline Andrews, coloratura soprano. Follow the Swallow, Bial's composition, is being played at the Piccadilly. Charles Carver, basso, is appearing on each program. The usual overture is omitted at the Rialto and Rivoli. At the Rialto the orchestra is playing this week a score especially arranged for the feature picture; the principal number at the Rivoli is the prologue, with the Rivoli Ensemble, for which John Wenger has arranged the settings.

Goldman Leads Theatre Players

Edwin Franko Goldman is conductor of the orchestra of the new Colony Theatre in New York which opened on Christmas Day. The house will be devoted to the display of motion pictures.

HAVING dedicated himself to the principle that opera in the United States can and should be presented in English with as many native artists as possible, Charles Henry Meltzer has worked for the consummation of this ideal with an intensity which is making itself felt. He has not limited himself to propaganda. Mr. Meltzer has felt it necessary to help supply the material for these English performances, and therefore he has taken his pen in hand to fill the want which impresarios have often invoked as a leading excuse for presenting German, French and Italian operas in any language but English.

The translations which Mr. Meltzer is preparing of the standard operas of all operatic repertories are being published in the Edith Rockefeller McCormick Edition, issued by Krenn & Dato, Chicago, Ill.

So far Mr. Meltzer has translated twelve librettos, but as yet only Carmen and Pagliacci have been published. It is difficult to estimate a libretto simply by reading it,—as difficult almost as to translate one effectively. As reading matter Mr. Meltzer's translations are much above the standard of opera librettos, although he doubtless makes no claim for them as great poetry. Their true test must come when they are used in performance, for then the problems of the potential clarity of enunciation of the words and phrases, of the fitness of the expressions to the melodic and rhythmic character of the music to which they are applied, can be decided.

Mr. Meltzer has approached his task with more conscience and more ability than is ordinarily shown in libretto translators, and he has aimed to do more than give equivalents of foreign words in some sort of rhymed English. As well as can be judged at present he has succeeded in adding excellent accomplishment to a worthy idea.

EVERY READER OF "THE MUSICAL DIGEST"
SHOULD READ
"Music & Letters"
The British Musical Quarterly
"By far the most interesting Musical Quarterly in the English Language."
—Daily Telegraph, October 11th, 1924.
"The most authoritative voice at present speaking on music."—Liverpool Post, September 25th, 1924.
100 pages; 20s per annum post free to any part of the world
LONDON: 22 ESSEX STREET, W. C. 2.

Second Year of
A Study Course in Music Understanding
FROM SONG TO SYMPHONY
By DANIEL GREGORY MASON
Adopted by The National Federation of Music Clubs
Price, $1.50 net
Presents the chief types of musical art in their sequence from the folk song to the fully developed symphony of the modern period. Its aim is to assist readers to distinguish for themselves the masterpieces of music and to respond to their appeal. The chapters are fully illustrated and give ample lists of reference books, together with a list of phonograph records and player rolls that illustrate the text.
"I don't know which to admire more, his interesting way of presenting the necessary facts or the fresh contribution in the way of sidelights, record lists, etc."—Prof. ARTHUR E. HEACOX, Oberlin Conservatory of Music.
"Mr. Mason's book will, I hope, be widely used. It is written by a man who is not only a scholar but who sees clearly what we Americans need by way of music education."—Dr. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Music Department, Harvard University.
OLIVER DITSON COMPANY 178-179 Tremont St., Boston 10, Mass.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO. 8-10-12 East 34th St., New York, N. Y.
ORDER OF YOUR LOCAL DEALER

Fritz Reiner Gives Traditional Program

Mme. Schumann Heink and Leff Pouishnoff Make Recital Appearances.

Cincinnati, Dec. 22.—The traditional trilogy, Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms, were represented on the program of the Symphony concerts of last Friday and Saturday which Fritz Reiner conducted. There was a "first performance in America" on the program nevertheless, that of Bach's Chaconne in an arrangement of Steinberg. Brahms' Serenade No. 2, Op. 16, for small orchestra, heard for the first time in Cincinnati, and Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony were also played.

The Post writer found the Chaconne interesting for its orchestration, and felt that the true spirit of Bach was retained although the instrumentation was quite modern. The Times-Star reviewer found only one fault with the concert, and that was the deliberate tempo chosen by Mr. Reiner in the Chaconne, which, in this writer's opinion, was nevertheless warm and gracious. This report was enthusiastic in its praise of the conductor's reading of the Pastoral Symphony, and said, "No one will ever play Beethoven's Sixth better." Mr. Wilson's comments in the Commercial-Tribune were in a similar vein.

Leff Pouishnoff, who gave a recital last Wednesday evening, made an unusual impression on reviewers and audience. All of the former admitted him immediately to the class of the truly great pianists, although within this class the reviewer of the Times-Star found him difficult to classify. In the Enquirer it was reported, "Any list of musical celebrities henceforth must embrace the name of Pouishnoff. His recital was a triumph and one that was fully justified." Mrs. Plodstedt in the Post felt that Mr. Pouishnoff is predominantly a pianist of great technic, and not of the "power to awaken an emotional reaction in his listeners." Samuel Wilson in the Commercial Tribune on the other hand, thought that his emotional powers were fully equal to his great technical equipment.

Ernestine Schumann Heink received the customary enthusiastic applause and press comment attendant upon her recitals when she was heard here last Friday. As Mrs. Plogstedt wrote: "Never has the greatness of the artist been as marvelously revealed."

At the first young people's symphony concert this season, Ruth Morris, violinist, was the soloist. Thomas James Kelly gave the interpretations. Mr. Reiner conducted. B. G.

JAMES M. BARRIE'S
Peter Pan
with Betty Bronson as Peter Pan
A Herbert Brenon Production
A Paramount Picture
RIVOLI B'way & 49 St. RIALTO B'way & 42 St.
Presentation by Riesenfeld

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Madama Butterfly — with Mmes. Easton and Bourskaya; and Messrs. Martinelli and de Luca; Mr. Serafin conducting.

THURSDAY

Parsifal (matinee)—with Mme. Matzenauer and Messrs. Laubenthal, Whitehill, and Bender; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Fedora — with Mme. Jeritza and Messrs. Tokatyan and de Luca; Mr. Papi conducting.

FRIDAY

Aida (matinee)—with Mmes. Ponselle, Gordon, and Wells; and Messrs. Fleta, Ruffo, and Mardones; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Falstaff (evening) — revival, with Mmes. Bori, Alda, and Telva; and Messrs. Gigli, Tibbet, Bada, Didur, and Paltrinieri; Mr. Serafin conducting.

SATURDAY

Tannhauser (matinee) — with Mmes. Jeritza and Gordon; and Messrs. Taucher, Schorr, and Bender; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Barber of Seville — with Mme. Morgana and Messrs. Chamlee, de Luca, Rothier, and Malatesta; Mr. Papi conducting.

MONDAY

Jenufa — with Mmes. Jeritza and Branzell; and Messrs. Laubenthal and Meader; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

Thomas Sings at Concert Of Cleveland Orchestra

Cleveland, Dec. 22.—John Charles Thomas, baritone, was soloist at the seventh concert of the Cleveland orchestra, conducted by Nikolai Sokoloff. Archie Bell stated in the Press that Mr. Thomas has "one of the most beautiful baritone voices heard in this particular city for years, he sings with a peculiar ease and lack of affectation so common to concert soloists."

No less praiseful was James H. Rogers, of the Plain Dealer. He wrote that the singer made an "overwhelming success" because of a voice "remarkable for beauty of texture, for power and for range. It is warm, pliant, expressive and equally rich in volume throughout its entire compass. Furthermore, it is controlled with unfailing finesse and skill. . . . And to this enviable equipment, Mr. Thomas adds interpretative style of high degree." Wilson G. Smith of the Press spoke of the "telling quality" of his voice, and "highly artistic" way in which he used it.

Dvorak's New World Symphony was, to quote Mr. Bell, "given a fine reading by Mr. Sokoloff." Cesar Franck's Le Chasseur Maudit, and Sibelius' Finlandia completed the program.

Museum Concerts to Resume

The Metropolitan Museum of Art has announced that its series of orchestral concerts under David Mannes will be given again this year on the first four Saturday evenings of January and March, making the seventh series of concerts free to the public. Thomas Whitney Surette will give explanatory talks on the programs in the afternoon of each concert day.

CAPITOL
Broadway at 51st Street
Subway to Door
World's Largest and Most Beautiful Motion Picture Theatre
Edward Bowes, Managing Director
HOLIDAY PROGRAM
"THE DIXIE HANDICAP"
with Claire Windsor and Frank Keenan
A Metro-Goldwyn Production
PRESENTATIONS BY ROTHAFEL
Capitol Grand Orchestra
Capitol Ballet Corps

Lines o' News AND Chatter

Some New Year's Resolutions:

"I'll never again conduct the New York Philharmonic."
—Josef Stransky.

"No more unknown authors' songs for encores."
—Reinald Werrenrath.

"First playing-rights on new violin works are mine."
—Albert Spalding.

"Yes, any role Mr. Gatti suggests I'll sing."
—Florence Easton.

"More prestige for the Los Angeles Philharmonic."
—Walter Rothwell.

"A new guest conductor every hour on the hour."
—Arthur Judson

"Cleveland the opera center of the universe."
—Phil Miner.

"Sit tight and keep the newspapermen guessing."
—Samuel Insull.

"Beethoven's Ninth, again, for Minneapolis Symphony's fame."
—Henri Verbrugghen.

"More saving of the Metropolitan Opera House lights."
—Ned Ziegler.

"A smoother, finer Chicago Orchestra than ever before."
—Frederick Stock.

"Just a song at twilight—for a new Wolfsohn course."
—Jack Adams.

"A new crop of modern scores for Cincinnati's Symphony."
—Fritz Reiner.

"A spy-glass for every person at bathing-beaches."
—Mary Garden.

"Guess I'll keep on with my singing."
—John McCormack.

"I'd like to make a few thousand more friends."
—Amelita Galli-Curci.

"A fresh twist to things, for variety's sake."
—Paul Whiteman.

"More engagements for Dusolina Giannini, without fail."
—Daniel Mayer.

"A new symphony auditorium started for San Francisco."
—Alfred Hertz.

"Peaceful days shall be mine; discord banished."
—Claudia Muzio.

"A greater Detroit Symphony, and pianist too."
—Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

"I am willing to have Mr. Paderewski return again."
—George Engles.

"My commuting to Europe shall be materially reduced."
—Charles Hackett.

"We will not cease our efforts to uncover a new music find."
—Evans and Salter.

"Perhaps I may provide for my public a fresh sensation."
—Maria Jeritza.

"St. Louis will rally more strongly to its orchestra."
—Rudolph Ganz.

"Chicago's opera-goers shall come to admire me still more."
—Rosa Raisa.

"I will smile, as usual, and do a satisfactory business."
—Fitzhugh Haensel

"The American Operatic Institute must start."
—Max Rabinoff.

"More laurels for the Cleveland Orchestra."
—Adella Prentiss Hughes.

"London once more and forever. I have grown to like it."
—Frieda Hempel.

"No feature attraction shall be passed slightingly by."
—F. C. Coppicus.

"My baton shall continue to wave."
—Walter Damrosch

"And mine too."
—Willem Mengelberg

"So say I."
—Leopold Stokowski.

"I'm glad I came."
—Serge Koussevitzky.

"Resolved: To summer in America."
—Rosa Ponselle.

"Why worry?"
—Beniamino Gigli.

"The Flonzaleys shall be reengaged."
—Loudon Charlton.

"I'll try to put the S into string quartets."
—Mischa Elman.

"As ever, no motion-picture acting for me."
—Myra Hess.

"Down with newspaper music critics."
—Mrs. H. F. Lanier.

"An extra supply of top notes."
—Giacomo Lauri-Volpi.

"A rest from Australian tramping."
—Percy Grainger.

"Perhaps I may compose another waltz."
—Mischa Levitzki.

"More community clubs for concert courses."
—Harry and Arthur Culbertson.

"Yea, verily."
—Harrison and Harshbarger.

"My golf game must improve."
—Clarence Whitehill.

"Perhaps another opera company."
—Fortune Gallo.

"Resolved: to hold my tenor own."
—Miguel Fleta.

"And I also."
—Tito Schipa.

"How about me?"
—Giovanni Martinelli.

"Bel canto, that's the singing thing."
—Alessandro Bonci.

"Voice quality and suavity count."
—Mario Chamlee.

"I'm for making fine programs."
—Louis Graveure.

"The Westminster Choir forever."
—M. H. Hanson.

"Striking costumes shall interest me."
—Jeanne Gordon.

"Give me something to end well."
—George Blumenthal.

"Maybe I'll do more coloratura."
—Edith Mason.

"And that's that."
—Lines-o'-Newser.

Impartiality
Fairness
The Facts

The Musical Digest

A Proverb and a Musical Public
See Page 5

VOL. VII. NO. 12 (Published Weekly) NEW YORK, TUESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1925 (Copyright, 1925, by MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.) 15 CENTS A COPY

American Baritone Causes Enthusiasm At the Metropolitan Audience Holds Falstaff Revival Till Lawrence Tibbett Takes a Curtain Call.

PRECEDENT ASTONISHES

Persons who attended last Friday evening's revival of Falstaff, at the New York Metropolitan Opera House, will remember for a long time to come the demonstration made by the large audience in favor of Lawrence Tibbett, an American baritone.

Mr. Tibbett, who is in his third season as a member of the Metropolitan organization, was appearing as Ford, which on the aforementioned occasion was assumed in masterly fashion by Antonio Scotti.

Yet so impressed were the persons present with the singing and acting of Mr. Tibbett during the closing part of the second act (where Ford comes to believe that his wife is plotting infidelity, and, alone on the stage, delivers his monologue of jealous suspicion E sogno) that it bestowed on the young artist an ovation.

At the outset, because of the consummate artistry of Mr. Scotti, and the excellent singing also of Marion Telva, it was evident that these other artists believed themselves entitled (as indeed they were—and Conductor Tullio Serafin, the orchestra, the stage and technical directors, and the Metropolitan management) to recognition.

But as the minutes passed, and the applause continued in so demonstrative and continuous a manner, there gradually dawned upon everyone concerned that the assemblage wished Mr. Tibbett to take a curtain call alone.

Repeatedly did Mr. Tibbett return with Mr. Scotti, and always did the American defer to the senior artist. Finally, after some twelve minutes of the ovation (interspersed at the end by shouts of "Tibbett!" and some unwisely delivered shrill whistlings) the auditorium was darkened and Maestro Serafin prepared for the continuation of the performance.

It was then that he recognized that the audience would not permit the opera to proceed until its desire was satisfied; so Maestro Serafin dispatched an orchestra musician back stage, and Mr. Tibbett appeared alone and was recognized.

Regarding the incident Mr. Tibbett said next day: "Mr. Scotti told me and motioned for me to go out without him. I was perhaps naturally a little timid myself and I held back. Presently some of the company who had been out in the audience came back-stage and said I must take the call. So I did. I am grateful for such a reception, and I have to thank Serafin and Stage Manager von Wymetal, both of whom coached me."

"HAVE AT THEE, VARLET!"

THE OPENING ASSAULT AT ARMS

The above cartoon is reprinted from the New York World. It serves to depict Cartoonist Kirby's idea of the preliminary clash between the radio interests and those in the concert and theatrical realms.

THE MUSICAL DIGEST
JAN 12 1925
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Bulletins of News

Milan, Jan. 2.—The posthumous opera of Puccini, Turandot, will not be produced at La Scala this season, as was originally planned, but will be postponed until next season. By an agreement between La Scala and G. Ricordi and Company, the publishers of Puccini's music, the score of Turandot with its unfinished third act will be put in the hands of Arturo Toscanini who will study the fragments and decide before long whether or not he will undertake the task of completing the work. It is rumored also that Franco Vittadini, the author of Anima Allegra and a pupil of Puccini, will be selected to finish the last act.

A performance of Verdi's Falstaff, pronounced by all the reviewers a triumph and, perhaps, the outstanding presentation of the current season, was given at the New York Metropolitan last Friday evening, marking the first time that the opera has been given there in fifteen years. Antonio Scotti sang the title role; Beniamino Gigli, Fenton; Frances Alda, Nanette; Lucrezia Bori, Alice Ford; Marion Telva, Dame Quickly; Kathleen Howard, Meg; Lawrence Tibbett, Ford; Adamo Didur, Pistola. Tullio Serafin conducted. A digest of the reviews of the performance will appear in the next issue of The Musical Digest.

Wilhelm Furtwaengler, the German conductor, made his American debut last Saturday night. It took place in Carnegie Hall, New York, where the visitor led the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in a program consisting of Strauss's Don Juan tone poem and the first Brahms symphony, in C minor. Pablo Casals, cellist, was the soloist.

Furtwaengler made a highly favorable impression on an audience that filled all the available space in Carnegie Hall. He was applauded at the close of the concert with vociferousness, and there were many cries of "bravo!" Furtwaengler is tall and lean and angular, smooth of face and slightly bald. He conducted without scores, and impressed strongly the newspaper music reviewers and others in the audience who are able to form accurate opinions. His interpretation of the Brahms symphony was said by many persons to have been superlatively fine. A digest of the critical comment will appear in the next issue of The Musical Digest.

Giovanni Martinelli, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, is holding his own in the illness of the past few weeks—an intestinal infection. But his physicians, Drs. Zaccardi, Neff, and Stella, render their opinion that it will be some weeks still before the tenor will be on the road to recovery.

Victor Broadcast Procedure Arouses Strong Opposition

New York Managers Say Refusal to Permit Their Artists to Participate Ignored.

OUTCOME IS UNCERTAIN

There is opposition to the plans of the Victor Talking Machine Company to broadcast, at stated intervals, the complete list of widely known artists with whom it has contracts to make records.

The first Victor broadcasting took place last Thursday evening, from the New York studio of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company—known as station WEAF. Miss Lucrezia Bori, John McCormack and the Victor Salon orchestra furnished the program. It was estimated, unofficially, that an audience of several million persons heard the hour-long program, which began at nine o'clock.

Several New York theatre managers were quoted as saying that their patronage New Year's night was lessened by the aforementioned radio program, and they asserted that in their opinion a continuation of the broadcasting may bring about a crisis in their affairs.

A concerted stand is apparent on the part of nearly every New York wholesale music bureau to impress the Victor Company with the need for proceeding with its broadcast experiment in such a way as will not jeopardize the concert-giving industry. Most of these bureaus are vigorous in the extreme in their unwillingness to permit their artists who have record-contracts with the Victor to broadcast on any of the purposed programs which the Victor has arranged and will arrange as part of its experiment.

Several of these wholesale bureau heads stated that the Victor Company had disregarded their express refusals to consent to have their artists broadcast; and that the company had seen fit thereafter to conduct negotiations with artists in the face of this opposition . . . even where contracts between managers and artists contained clauses giving the managers controlling broadcasting rights of those artists.

This was denied by Calvin G. Child, director of the Victor, who for many years was in charge of the artist-department of that organization and lately retired from that position, though still adviser. Mr. Child has become temporarily active again in this broadcast experiment, especially because it was his desire to act personally for his good friend John McCormack.

"I believe," said Mr. Child late Friday afternoon to a representative for

(Continued on page 24.)

Koussevitzky Leads Mixed Program

Rigel and Rimsky Novelties Share Concert With Stravinsky; People's Symphony Plays.

Boston, Dec. 29.—A Christmas novelty, together with an eighteenth century work probably played in America for the first time, shared with Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and Stravinsky's Le Sacre du Printemps, the honors of the holiday offering of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The little known pieces of the program were Rinsky-Korsakoff's Suite from Christmas Eve, and Rigel's Symphony in D major, for Le Sacre is familiar here through the performances of Pierre Monteux.

Although, as Stuart Mason of the Christian Science Monitor believed, Rimsky-Korsakoff's Suite "is not music with deep significance," there were in Christmas Eve, many of the "same glowing colors with which he has made us familiar." H. T. P. in the Transcript saw a little more in the opus, although he termed it "an agreeable and engaging trifle." Philip Hale wrote in the Herald that "the orchestration was charming," and in the same vein was the remark of Warren Storey Smith in the Post that the music was scored "with the composer's unerring feeling for instrumental coloring." P. R. in the Globe, on the other hand, held the offering unworthy of the composer.

"Rigel's little work has a Gallic elegance and nicety," observed Mr. Smith, and Mr. Mason declared it "unpretentious and engaging in its disarming simplicity and artlessness." H. T. P., designating Mr. Koussevitzky as "a collector of ancient music," found that "no merit of invention or workmanship distinguishes it; that it prattles but hardly charms."

P. R. saw in the rendition of the Schubert Symphony a conception different from that ordinarily heard, and found that "there was more clarity of line, more nobility of style than one expected. So conceived the music is extraordinarily moving and never sensational." Mr. Hale declared Le Sacre du Printemps was in its rendition "chiefly remarkable for its rhythmic ingenuity and rhythmic fury," adding lightly that "no one in these days should object to the wild dissonances."

Beatrice Griffin, violinist, was the soloist at the eighth concert of the People's Symphony Orchestra conducted by Emil Mollenhauer. In addition to the Saint-Saens' third violin Concerto played by Miss Griffin, the pieces played were Mendelssohn's Overture to Athalie, Godard's Scenes Poetiques, and Wagner's Faust Overture.

The reviewer in the Monitor was impressed with "the admirable technique and good understanding of the music in hand" revealed by the young violinist. The Transcript commentator considered Miss Griffin "more grave than emotional at the outset" but added that "she did not reach her particular zenith until the brilliant finale."

In the opinion of this reviewer, Mr. Mollenhauer "gave more attention than usual to gradations and nuances and picked the intoned melodic subjects from the solo violin with subtlety and precision." He was accorded due praise by the Monitor for the variety and quality of his program.

Ernestine Schumann-Heink, assisted by Florence Hardeman, violinist, and Katherine Hoffman as accompanist, gave a recital before an unusually large and enthusiastic audience yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. R. R. G. of the Herald asserted that "her high tones today ring with a brilliancy and warmth any young dramatic soprano might envy." In her lyric singing, wrote A. H. M. in the Transcript, "the old glories revealed themselves anew in tone of marvelous smoothness and surpassing richness; in short, tone hardly to be bettered. With it went justice and integrity of conception." The Monitor chronicler did not consider her voice "at its best" but continued "of course, her simplicity and lovableness, as well as her fame, always capture her audience before she begins to sing."

Schipa Sings Alfredo

Chicago, Dec. 23.—Verdi's La Traviata was repeated last night at the Auditorium with Tito Schipa in the role of Alfredo in place of Charles Hackett. Pietro Cimini conducted.

M. R. of the News found that the role suited Mr. Schipa vocally, that "he sings the smoothly flowing, melodious airs with a purity and lyric quality which make them a delight to hear." His "youthful, ardent characterization of the part," according to this writer is one of the best he has given. Equally enthusiastic was Karleton Hackett of the Post, who felt in his voice a warmth "that carried the meaning and was delightful to hear just as tone."

With the exception of Lodovico Oliviero, who substituted for Jose Mojica, the remainder of the cast was the same as in previous performances, with Claudia Muzio repeating her success as Violetta, and with Joseph Schwarz completing the trio of principals.

Gives Organ Recital

Council Bluffs, Iowa, Dec. 19.—Muriel Mann gave a recital last night on the new organ in St. Paul's Episcopal church. Miss Mann was assisted by the Mrs. Ruth Ganson Kynett and Otto Lambert.

Metropolitan Opera Bill

TOMORROW

Africana—with Mmes. Ponselle and Mario; and Messrs. Gigli, Danise, Didur, and Rothier; Mr. Serafin conducting.

THURSDAY

Tosca (matinee)—with Mmes. Jeritza and Alcock; and Messrs. Fleta, Scotti, and Malatesta; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Lohengrin (evening) — with Mmes. Easton and Branzell; and Messrs. Laubenthal, Schorr, Bender, and Schutzendorf; Mr. Bodanzky conducting.

FRIDAY

Gioconda — with Mmes. Ponselle, Gordon, and Alcock; and Messrs. Gigli, Danise, and Mardones; Mr. Serafin conducting.

SATURDAY

Mádama Butterfly (matinee) — with Mmes. Easton and Bourskaya; and Messrs. Chamlee and Scotti; Mr. Serafin conducting.

Tales of Hoffman—with Mmes. Bori and Morgana; and Messrs. Fleta and de Luca; Mr. Hasselmans conducting.

MONDAY

Barber of Seville—with Mme. Galli-Curci and Messrs. Errolle, Ruffo and Malatesta; Mr. Papi conducting.

Papi Conducts Operatic Twins at Metropolitan

The familiar twins, Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci, were presented by the Metropolitan Opera Company December 28. Rosa Ponselle, Beniamino Gigli, Ina Bourskaya, Vicente Ballester, and Henriette Wakefield appeared in Cavalleria, and Queena Mario, Miguel Fleta, Giuseppe Danise, Milo Picco, and Max Altglass were heard in Pagliacci. Gennaro Papi conducted both performances.

This writer thought that Miss Ponselle sang and acted "with admirable dramatic power," and the World reporter considered that she sang "with great gusto and considerable dramatic effectiveness." The Post observer commented that Mr. Gigli as Turiddu "aroused the merited enthusiasm" of the audience. Agreed was the Sun that he sang "with excellence" and the World commentator called his, a "really fine performance." Mme. Bourskaya, wrote the Sun chronicler, was "picturesque and effective."

Miss Mario's "fresh young voice," to quote this writer, was put "to good account in the bird song and also elsewhere." She was called "adorable" by the World writer. A "fine and emotional performance" was given by Mr. Fleta, wrote the Post reviewer, and the World found him "young, fresh-voiced, and generally engaging."

Inventor Gives Color Organ Recital in N. Y.

Reviewers Find Resemblance to Music in Presentations of Clavilux.

There was a large audience at the Clavilux recital given by Thomas Wilfred at Aeolian Hall the evening of December 26. Mr. Wilfred gave the first demonstration of his "color organ" here at the Neighborhood Playhouse in 1922. In an invitation recital in New York last season the Danish artist offered the newer type of his instrument, the five manual yodel E (according to the program), which consists of a row of four oblong, perpendicular groups of keys.

The reviewers, although admitting, in the words of Deems Taylor of the World, their lack of background for this new art, found certain resemblances to music. The Times reported:

"Mr. Wilfred, at his 'color organ,' projected on the screen a series of what really amounted to symphonies of light, the equivalent to sounds in music. Touching the keys, one motif after another, in the most exquisite tints, came into view, dissolved and gave place to others even more entrancing; they were of all the translucent colors of the spectrum and called upon that rarified sensuousness which is observable in all the higher art creations. Form, movement and color, the three combined made a most curious appeal to the artistic and some still undeveloped psyche.

"The audience took much pleasure in the demonstration and warmly applauded the inventor, author and composer."

Deems Taylor called it "music for the eye" and added that, like music, "its very life blood is motion and change and contrast; like music, it is fundamentally an art of rhythm, and like music, is essentially abstract, involving, in its purest form, no definite connotation or association with the concrete or intellectual world." Later on in his review, Mr. Taylor wrote that these colors and forms "have an emotional effect startling like that of music."

According to the writer in the Herald Tribune, there was much that was remarkable in Mr. Wilfred's performance, "in his changes and combinations of coloring; his ability to produce forms on the screen and handle them like a musical theme."

ETHEL GROW
CONTRALTO
A Singer Who is a Musician
Builder of Novel and Effective Programs
"Program draws most enthusiastic response."
"Tone of very agreeable smoothness and Softness."
N. Y. Tribune, January 24, 192'
Studio: 200 W. 57th St., N. Y. City
Telephone Circle 10117

WILLIAM S. BRADY
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 137 West 86th St., New York
Telephone: Schuyler 3580

CECILE de HORVATH
PIANIST
Management: Clarence E. Cramer, 1102 Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.
Season 1925-1926 Now Booking
Baldwin Piano
De Luxe Welte-Mignon Records

JOHN DOANE
Coach, Accompanist,
TEACHER OF ORGAN
7 East 44th Street, New York
Telephone: Murray Hill 8834

ERNESTINE SCHUMANN HEINK
Exclusive Management, S. Hurok, Inc., Aeolian Hall, New York
STEINWAY PIANO- VICTOR RECORDS
KATHERINE HOFFMAN, Accompanist
FLORENCE HARDEMAN, Violinist

Stransky Quits State Symphony Leadership

Waghalter the New Conductor; Art Interests Cause Conductor to Resign.

Without any previous warning the resignation of Josef Stransky from the leadership of the New York State Symphony Orchestra was announced last Tuesday. Ignatz Waghalter took the place of the retiring conductor, and will direct the orchestra in the remaining concerts of its second season. He made his first appearance last Sunday.

The announcement of the resignation was made at the end of a business meeting of the orchestra in its offices in Carnegie Hall. Mr. Stransky gave the pressure of his art interests as the reason for his retirement. He is half owner of the Fearon Art Galleries in New York, and has been devoting more and more time to them of late. He told reporters that this prevented him from devoting sufficient time to rehearsals and to the gathering of funds for the support of the orchestra.

Mr. Stransky said that in the future he will not conduct regularly, but will doubtless appear in certain special musical events from time to time, such as the Mozart Festival in Baden-Baden, Germany, next August and September. He will also lead a concert of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra in London on June 18.

The change of conductors came after a friendly separation and perfect understanding, said Jacob Altschuler, speaking for the State Symphony.

Mr. Waghalter, who was born in 1881, in Warsaw, and has long led opera and concerts in Berlin and other European capitals, made his bow to New York on December 7, 1923, at a special concert with the New York Symphony. He is a composer of seven or more operas, one of which, Ein Kuss in Ehre, is to be produced this season in Berlin.

Tokatyan Sings Two Roles

Fedora was produced last Thursday for the second time this season by the Metropolitan Opera Company with Armand Tokatyan as Loris, in the enforced absence of Giovanni Martinelli. Otherwise the cast was identical with that of the first performance.

The reviewer of the Herald Tribune lauded Mr. Tokatyan for his "commendable work, satisfactory from the vocal point of view and not suggesting haste or improvisation in his action" in spite of the fact that he had scant opportunity to rehearse. Alison Smith of the World thought his performance "vocally beautiful, but his conception of the role overdramatized."

Mr. Tokatyan also substituted for Martinelli on December 27.

Boston Orchestra Pays Third Gotham Visit

Koussevitzky Leads Stravinsky Sacre and an Old Symphony of Rigel.

In the third New York concert of the season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall on New Year's day, Serge Koussevitzky offered Berlioz's Roman Carnival Overture, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Henry Joseph Rigel's D major Symphony, and Stravinsky's Le Sacre du Printemps.

There was a wide diversity in the critical opinion of the concert. Olin Downes of the Times expressed the general feeling when he wrote: "The performances were singularly interesting and uneven in quality." To Pitts Sanborn of the Telegram-Mail, it was "a curiously uneven, in some respects a baffling, concert." In regard to Le Sacre, Ernest Newman wrote in the Post "that for technical finish and understanding of Stravinsky's intentions" the performance "could probably not be bettered."

Lawrence Gilman of the Herald Tribune admitted himself a "bit disappointed" in the reading of this work, although he considered Mr. Koussevitzky "magnificent" in the first part. This same adjective was applied by W. J. Henderson of the Sun to the playing of the entire composition, and he added that the conductor "penetrated to the innermost purposes" of the score. Mr. Downes considered that he read the piece with "originality, sensibility, imagination" although he paid overmuch attention to detail. Deems Taylor of the World did not think the reading "up to the score." The orchestra, he continued, "played with consummate virtuosity but somehow without complete conviction." Mr. Sanborn found the performance "technically perfect" but lacking in fire.

The Symphony by the little known eighteenth century composer, Rigel, was called by Mr. Downes "an unpretentious but pleasing work" which was given a "delightful performance." According to Mr. Henderson, it proved to be a "very brief and naive composition with an ingenuous charm quite irresistible." To Mr. Sanborn it was "mediocre and plagiaristic" although it was played well by the orchestra. Mr. Newman thought it "a charming little work." The playing of the Schubert, wrote Mr. Taylor, lacked imagination and seemed "devitalized." Both Mr. Gilman and Mr. Downes considered it "over-dramatized." On the other hand, Mr. Newman thought the reading gave new life to the work, and Mr. Henderson said "it was performed with beautiful finish . . . his style was admirable."

Photo by Bain News Service.

Mme. Galli-Curci on her return from England with Homer Samuels, her husband and accompanist (on her right), and Lawrence Evans (on her left) is greeted by Jack Salter. The sketch is reproduced from the London Tatler.

MME. AMELITA GALLI-CURCI returned from her concert tour of the British Isles just in time to shake hands with Santa Claus. She arrived in New York on Christmas Eve from her first tour of England, where her success was so great that the houses for many of her concerts were sold out months in advance.

The soprano was amazed with the warmth with which she was greeted. She was met at Plymouth by the Lord Mayor of the city and officially welcomed to England. The English reserve of which one hears so much was not in evidence at her concerts, where these supposedly sedate people so far forgot themselves as to shout and stamp and surge up around the stage for a flower from her bouquet.

Lawrence Evans, of Evans and Salter, who accompanied Mme. Galli-Curci on the trip, was jubilant over their reception. "Our receipts, our audiences, surpassed anything in English musical history," he confided. "For months before the debut in Royal Albert Hall, the house was sold out. And what makes this all the more remarkable, where the usual price of a concert ticket in England ranges from ten to twelve shillings, we asked twenty-one shillings! Some tickets went as high as two guineas—about ten dollars.

"You can't appreciate the significance of that," continued Mr. Evans, "unless you know something of the condition of the concert industry in England. We were astounded at the poverty there. They were harder hit by the war than we realize—and they can't afford to support concerts. Why, in a city of a million population, they're fortunate if they can support a series of five concerts, whereas, in America, a city of that size is apt to hear from fifty to seventy-five concerts."

Mme. Galli-Curci was particularly enthusiastic over the concert halls in which she sang. Practically every town has a well-equipped hall, she said, with good acoustics. American halls suffer in comparison, according to Mr. Evans, who told of the difficulty in filling the big armories which are used in our small towns. P. W. W.

MARIE SUNDELIUS
SOPRANO—METROPOLITAN OPERA COMPANY
MANAGEMENT
Haensel and Jones
Aeolian-Vocalion Records
Aeolian Hall, New York

EDOARDO PETRI
Master of Arts Columbia University
TEACHER OF SINGING
Studio: 1425 Broadway
Phone Pennsylvania 2628

GEORGE E. SHEA
VOCAL INSTRUCTION
STAGE ROUTINE for OPERA
545 West 111th St., New York City
Telephone Cathedral 6149
MEMBER AMERICAN ACADEMY OF TEACHERS OF SINGING

Elena GERHARDT
Management: GEORGE ENGLES—Aeolian Hall, New York City
STEINWAY PIANO

EFREM ZIMBALIST
EMINENT VIOLINIST
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT S. HUROK, Inc., Aeolian Hall
New York
Victor Records
Steinway Piano

The Musical Digest

Printed in U. S. A.

First to Last—The Facts. News—Editorials—Advertisements.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1925. VOL. VII. NO. 12

Owned and Published Weekly by

MUSICAL DIGEST, Inc.

243 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. Phone Longacre 3257

Pierre V. R. Key, Editor

Business Manager: Bruno Zirato

Entered as second class matter Aug. 31, 1921, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879
Subscription $5.00 a Year, U. S.: Canada, $6.00: Foreign Countries, $7.00
Subscriptions will be continued on expiration unless there is notice to the contrary

Executive Editor: Walter E. Koons

The Musical Digest will seek unswervingly to serve only the best interests of music. It will build up; it will support steadfastly musical progress and just reform; it is pledged to the cause of whatever is musically meritorious in both composition and interpretation, regardless of nationality; it will stand firm for justice; it will belong to no musical "party" or "movement," but remain independent.

Artists and the Radio

As a consequence of the announced intentions of the two foremost phonograph companies to broadcast somewhat regularly their leading artists there has been created a situation which appears to require careful consideration.

Hard upon the Brunswick's introductory programs came the publication last week by the Victor of its decision to launch a somewhat similar plan. Details of the frequency of the purposed undertaking have not been made public, but there is a feeling that with both the Victor and the Brunswick thus active there will be made available—and free—a considerable quantity of very good music interpreted by some of the finest artists in the profession.

There is however one qualification: the foregoing will happen if no restraint is exercised by those managerial bureaus which control exclusively their artists, and thereby possess the authority (if they see fit to exercise it) to refuse the necessary permission for them to broadcast.

It is quite possible that a judicious broadcasting of great interpretative musicians would acquaint a vast public now ignorant of such matters with the value of marked music superiority. With rare exceptions the bulk of the music heard over the air is inferior and badly done.

But let the mass of concert-goers learn that they may tune in their radio sets on a given evening each week upon a first-rate effort and observe the effect upon the concerts given that evening by the numerous artists who are appearing publicly in all parts of the country. It would without doubt diminish the box-office receipts . . . as instances already have amply proven.

The objective of the phonograph companies mentioned is to stimulate the sale of records made by the artisis who are to be broadcast; and the sole compensation to those artists for services rendered is to come through possible increased record sales.

There would seem to be a basis on which an equitable compensation can be made for such a service: that is the payment of a fee proper in the circumstances . . . which means that it should be materially in excess of what an artist receives for an appearance either in concert or in opera.

The situation is one to be pondered carefully and at length. The material welfare of many persons is involved: wholesale bureaus and local managements as well as the men and women who make music for their livelihoods. None of them can afford to risk their futures by consenting to participate in an experiment which is to be conducted on any lines other than those of utmost conservatism.

A well arranged program by distinguished artists offered to the hundreds of thousands of radio-set owners between the hours of eight and ten of an evening is quite likely to keep at home many potential concert-patrons. Wherefore, too many such broadcastings during a concert season should be guarded against.

. . . TEMPO RUBATO . . .

THE fact that Serge Koussevitzky is himself a virtuoso of the counterbass seems to be reflected in the manner in which the double bass players of the Boston Symphony handle their instruments. The tastefulness and lack of brusqueness with which they draw their bows would indicate that there are forceful influences at work convincing them that the counterbass really is a musical instrument after all.

There was a passage in the lively third movement of the Rigel Symphony which the Bostonians brought with them to New York last Thursday evening in which the bull fiddlers had to play a brisk saltando figure quietly. All the thwack was left out of their bowing, and one could hear a clear musical tone.

The same care of tone was taken,—by all the string players in fact,—in pizzicati. It is pleasant to hear a string plucked in such a way that one hears a clear A flat or C sharp rather than a buzz with indeterminate pitch.

THAT same Rigel served the purpose of demonstrating many kinds of human frailty. The reviewers treated it in general with little respect. For the most part all that they knew about Rigel was that he has not distinguished himself by being particularly remembered. That settled it.

It can hardly be doubted that if Haydn's name had been attached to it, the customary "lively," "carefree," "charming," etc., would have been quoted. The symphony deserved all those names.

THE prize (there ought to be one if there isn't) for the most ingenious musical publicity of the year should go to the scribe who told the world that there were going to be nineteen celebrated pianists all at once on one stage at a benefit concert in the Metropolitan Opera House last Tuesday night.

The newspapers readily published the information that Walter Damrosch was considering conducting the players not with a baton but with a system of colored signal lights similar to that used for the direction of traffic on Fifth avenue because in a previous concert with only fourteen pianists he had "experienced considerable difficulty in making his baton visible to the musicians, both because they were partly hidden behind their instruments and because their work required close attention to the keys."

The same writer assured the musical world that the stage of the Metropolitan had been carefully tested to make sure that it could support safely the weight of nineteen pianos.

The first story may have been persuasive, but the second was obviously ridiculous. Everyone knows that the Metropolitan platform was built to hold even a German soprano, if necessary.

CABLE operators must all be cynical by now. They know that they can never have any rest. If all wars and rumors cease and both sides of the Atlantic calm down for a few moments on Sunday nights they are too well aware that they daren't take a nap. Immediately they have to transmit news about the Prince of Wales.

Some of the most recent carefully copyrighted information about the Prince has musical interest. It is reported that he is learning to play the banjulele. The Prince is not exactly a master of that instrument, any more than he is of the banjo or of the snare drums or trap drums, to all of which he has laid a dilettante finger from time to time, but he likes them all nevertheless.

It was rather lucky for His Highness that he was born a prince. It strikes one that had he not been, he would be rather an ordinary person.

FROM time to time a conductor gives a particularly well conceived and colorful performance of one of the Brahms symphonies. Immediately the music reviewers enthusiastically take up the refrain that the performance was marvelous because it actually made the symphony seem not dry.

For my part I find it hard to understand where the rumor started that Brahms' symphonies are austere, angular, forbidding, and predominantly intellectual. There is no music more melodious, more fervent, fuller of sentiment than the slow movement of the First Symphony, in my opinion, and that is not only Brahms at his best, but at his most characteristic, too.

It is true that his themes have a way of moving from the lower ranges of the bass voice to the top notes of a very good coloratura. It is also true that often they have not the periodic form, the question-answer, dominant-tonic structure of folk song themes. That simply makes them a little harder to sing aloud, a little more difficult to remember on first hearing, but they sing in the mind nevertheless.

In one recent Brahms controversy I read the flat statement of an Anti that no one ever hums Brahms unconsciously, or has musical reveries with his themes as material. That simply isn't so! Brahms has accompanied me down Broadway more than any other composer that I know, and I am neither a rabid nor exclusive Brahmin.

I CAN prove the truth of that last remark by reporting that without any semblance of a doubt the most thrilling musical experience I have had this season was the New Year's matinee Parsifal at the Metropolitan. The sentimentalists, with their loose literary interpretations, rule the kingdom of music (in numbers, at any rate), and I like to war with them with weapons of technique as cold as I can handle. But Parsifal disarms me.

ALEXANDER FRIED.

A Proverb and a Musical Public

Mme. Germaine Schnitzer Believes That to Learn is a Great Virtue, and One Which Must Be Taught

by ALEXANDER FRIED

"THERE is a German proverb," said Mme. Germaine Schnitzer, "which says that it is very good, when one lies in the road needing help, to be lifted by kind aid right into the saddle, but it's as bad as no help at all to be lifted clear over the horse so that one falls down on the other side.

"Sometimes the music situation in the United States puts me in mind of that proverb. Sometimes it seems to me that our music public, which like all other music publics needs support and adjustment in the saddle, is being boosted clean out of it."

Mme. Schnitzer cleared a great pile of music out of a chair for her visitor, explaining meantime that she was selecting the programs for her coming series of six concerts of Romantic piano music, which she will present in several cities.

"Perhaps you do not understand what I mean," she continued. "Let me begin back a little further. Do not think that I consider the American music public alone in needing this help. All music publics need guidance, here and abroad. The great mass of those who come to concerts have not spent many years in study of music. They go to it for comfort and pleasure in their spare time. When one takes a vacation and goes to Paris for a pleasure jaunt one recognizes the necessity of guides. Music is even more intricate than Paris. One needs guides in it too."

We reminded Mme. Schnitzer of the educational work of many of the music organizations, clubs, and orchestras.

"Oh, that is very true," she replied. "I am not minimizing the work which is being done. I simply should like to do my bit to encourage the increase of such activity. But to return to horses,—you can lead them to water, but you cannot make them drink, the saying goes.

"It is all very well to have a system of educational agencies. What is needed besides is a disposition to learn on the part of those who need to be taught. It is my experience that our public of music is apt to be too unwilling to learn. Folks are impatient; if what they hear is not immediately pleasant, they are inclined often to writhe in discomfort, or to flee."

"Don't you think," we asked, "that great music displays itself immediately with unmistakable persuasiveness?"

"I do not," was the emphatic reply. "If that were so there would be no controversy in music,—and we know that there is always controversy over the true qualities not only of new composers, but even of old. Take Brahms as an example: in Germany he is revered; in France he is neglected; in the United States we have both factions in the quarrel, with the pro's in the majority.

Reproduction of a portrait by Katz.

GERMAINE SCHNITZER

"Not that there is any way of settling these differences of opinion once and for all,—of course there is not. But there is one principle to which I think that we ought all adhere: music should be listened to, should be heard. Disregarding my own opinion concerning Brahms for the moment, I can have no respect for the opinion of the anti-Brahmsian who has never heard a Brahms symphony or concerto, who studiously avoids every performance of one, who hides in the lobby while Brahms is being played, waiting for the Beethoven or the Schumann or the Wagner to commence.

"And that is what I mean when I say that our music lovers 'have been lifted over the saddle.' Conductors and soloists and ensembles playing in the United States have been acceding too much to the wishes of the imperfectly qualified judge, to the demands of prejudice and incomplete knowledge. The music public should take more on faith. Catholicity is the only creed in music. One may believe in as little as one cares to, but one must be willing to hear everything. This is not time wasted, even if the music is bad. One hears the better for hearing much and varied music."

Mme. Schnitzer does not believe only in listening to music. To her music never can be as clear as when it is played,—read off the page—as well as heard.

"We know that it is so, and we must make up our minds to remedy the situation," she said, "American music lovers do not perform enough themselves. Amateur chamber ensembles are many, many, many too few. We cannot call ourselves really a musical nation until this is changed.

"This difficulty is daily becoming greater. The radio enthusiasm is having, in my opinion, a distinctly bad effect. It is making us lazy. We quit before the difficulties of mastering an instrument ourselves, and simply tune in. And when we tune in, what do we hear? For the most part very bad music.

"Even good music well presented is not heard to its best advantage over the radio. The mechanism is imperfect. The timbres are never as pure as in real life, and orchestration never sounds as clear and well balanced as it actually is in the concert hall. Yet it is easy to listen in, and so we remain at home, and take a poor imitation of music for the real thing. We can never learn to hear music better and to know it better if we are content to hear symphonies as concerti for first violins with indeterminate orchestral accompaniment."

Mme. Schnitzer does more than have opinions; she acts upon them. The artist's function is to display music as well as to play it, is her opinion. Walking down the corridor as we left her apartment, we heard her preparing for action: her historical cycle of Romantic music for the piano.

Flesch Arrives With Protege

Carl Flesch, head of the department of violin at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, arrived from Europe on the Deutschland on December 29. With him was Mrs. Flesch and Isaac Briselli, twelve year old Russian violin prodigy, who was detained temporarily at Ellis Island awaiting guarantee of guardianship during his stay in the United States. The Flesches accompanied the boy to Ellis Island.

Also on the Deutschland came Friedrich Schorr, first baritone of the Berlin State Opera House, who has come to sing in Wagnerian operas at the Metropolitan, and Wilhelm Furtwangler, German guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

GALLI-CURCI
Homer Samuels Pianist
Victor Records
Manuel Berenguer Flutist
Steinway Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE NEW YORK

SCHIPA
Victor Records
Maron & Hamlin Piano
Management Evans & Salter 527 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK

JOHN McCORMACK
EDWIN SCHNEIDER, Accompanist
MANAGEMENT: CHARLES L. WAGNER D. F. McSWEENEY
511 Fifth Avenue, New York STEINWAY PIANO

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
BARITONE
MANAGEMENT R. E. JOHNSTON 1451 Broadway, New York
KNABE PIANO BRUNSWICK RECORDS

Washington Concerts Lag

Holidays Slack Season Though Early December Offers Many Recitals; Orchestra and Choruses Appear.

Washington, Jan. 1. — The Christmas season has had its usual deterrent effect on the concert activities of Washington, although the recital schedule was heavy early in December.

No major musical event was scheduled later in the month than December 12, when John McCormack sang in the Wilson-Greene series. Elena Gerhardt appeared in recital December 1 under the same local management before a large audience which was somewhat "lacking in warmth and encouragement," according to Kate Scott Brooks of the Herald, but this reviewer thought the program "one of great beauty" and the singing distinguished by "rich, even tones full of color, and beautiful phrasing."

Mrs. Wilson-Greene presented two other singers that week: Dusolina Giannini, called by one reviewer an artist of "temperament, grace, delicacy and beautiful finish such as would make it possible for her to sing almost any role should she go into opera," and Reinald Werrenrath, who gave what was termed by the commentator of the Evening Star "a generous and varied recital," enlivened by running comment adapted to the many school children present.

Concerts under the management of T. Arthur Smith included one of Anna Case, who "looked like a charming Dresden china prima donna," according to Jessie McBride of the Times. Miss McBride found Miss Case's "voice and personality particularly happy in the lighter things," her artistry "especially shown in the real musical values of the French songs," and her accompanist, Edouard Gendron, "so good one wished to hear him alone." Wanda Landowska and Hans Kindler appeared also in a joint recital. Helen Fetter of the Star was impressed by Mme. Landowska's individuality "both in technique and interpretation. She crooks her fingers and arches her wrists in defiance of the modern method of relaxed muscles and straight lines, yet the result is marvelous." Miss McBride wrote: "Such dialogue of the two hands! Lace-work in the tone patterns was here, with an elegance and a compelling rhythm that gave architectural form to her music." Hans Kindler "again captured his audience by the beauty of his playing, and, more than that, he came also as composer of most delicate yet sound musicianship in transcriptions for the cello." His presentation of Ravel's Habanera had to be repeated.

The New York Symphony Orchestra gave its customary monthly pair of concerts: one in the Fine Arts course, when the Franck Symphony and the St. Saens trumpet suite (expanded to orchestral proportions) were featured, and the other under Mrs. Wilson-Greene's local management, when Messrs. Kochanski and Salmond collaborated in the Brahms Double Concerto.

The Rubinstein Club gave a concert in which the women's chorus under Claude Robeson was assisted by the Dorothy Johnson-Beasler harp ensemble. There have also been concerts by the Federal Male Chorus, newly compounded of the Almas Chanters; Davison Glee Club and Interstate Male Chorus under their respective leaders, Messrs. Shaddick, Monroe and Aitchison; an organ recital on the Lutheran Choral Preludes by Edward Rechlin of New York, and a performance of The Messiah by the Washington Choral Society under Charles Wengerd, with Miss Netta Craig, Miss Richie McLean, Mr. W. F. Raymond and Mr. Frederic Taggart as soloists. The orchestra of the Navy Band furnished the accompaniment, seated behind the chorus and the balance and tonal combination thus obtained were excellent, but the difficulties of a proper co-ordination were not fully solved.

The first official White House dinner of the season, that in honor of the cabinet, was followed by a recital by two American artists, Albert Spalding and Ralph Errolle.

M. G. S.

Grainger Is Given Reception

Many persons prominent in the music world numbered among the 300 guests who welcomed Percy Grainger's return to New York at the reception tendered him by Mrs. Antonia Sawyer Sunday afternoon, December 21, in the Burritt Studios. A feature of the afternoon was the brief program presented by Vlado Kolitsch, the young Croatian violinist.

FLORA GREENFIELD
Soprano, Who Is Winning Success in Her Present Concert Tour.

Rosa Ponselle Sings Aida

Rosa Ponselle made her first appearance here in the title role of Aida in the presentation of the opera by the Metropolitan Christmas night. In the opinion of the Post reviewer, Miss Ponselle "is peculiarly fitted for the part. Not only does she lift it into stellar magnitude by the opulence of her wonderful voice, but she is physically perfect for the delineation."

Alison Smith of the World found her Aida "the same rich and generous outpouring of vocal expression" familiar in her other roles. She brought "new life and vigor to the entire cast," according to Miss Smith. The Times commentator said that "she looked the part and sang admirably in a role which was well suited to her." The only reviewer who did not evidence enthusiasm for her work was the one in the Sun, who said that the part, although "admirably sung, was not convincing."

To Play New Taylor Piece

A new composition by Deems Taylor, The Portrait of a Lady, a rhapsody for strings, winds, and piano, will be presented in manuscript by the New York Chamber Music Society at its Aeolian Hall concert on February 3.

Philadelphia Hears Press as Conductor

Girl Pianist Plays at Philharmonic Concert; Mme. Landowska Plays With Stokowski.

Philadelphia, Dec. 30. — Michael Press was guest conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra at its concert last week in the Academy of Music. Lucie Stern, eleven year old Russian pianist, made her American debut as soloist at the concert.

The reviewers were as one in their amazement and admiration of the ability of the youthful soloist. The writer in the Record said she "exhibited a beautiful talent" and played with "technical command, great poise and with a finish almost uncanny in so young a student. She has a good tone, musical and full, a fine conception of what she does, musically." The Bulletin reviewer agreed that she had a "faultless technique, a comprehension of nuance and a beautiful singing touch which proved an inspiration to the orchestra as well as the audience." S. L. L. in the Public Ledger found her fully equal to the technical difficulties of Beethoven's Concerto in C major.

Mr. Press' reading of the Pathetique Symphony of Tschaikowsky was considered "individual" by the Ledger. The Bulletin commentator considered his reading of this and of Liszt's Tasso tone poem scholarly. He also conducted his own arrangement of Beethoven's variations on a theme from Mozart's Don Giovanni.

The holiday concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Leopold Stokowski was composed of seventeenth and eighteenth century and was featured by the appearance as soloist of Wanda Landowska, harpsichordist. The composers represented were Purcell, Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven. On both the piano and harpsichord, according to Stanley Muschamp of the Inquirer, Mme. Landowska demonstrated in her playing beautiful tone quality, a keen sensitiveness to rhythm, fine appreciation of nuance and a good balance in dynamics." This remark is typical of the laudatory comments of other chroniclers.

Other musical events of interest were the presentation by the Choral Society of The Messiah, conducted by Henry Gordon Thunder, with Augusta Kohnle McCoy, James Price, and J. Helffenstein Mason as soloists; the second concert of the Society of the Friends of Music; and a recital by Charles M. Courboin on the Wanamaker grand organ.

Rosa Ponselle
Exclusive Management
National Concerts, Inc
1451 Broadway
New York City
Victor Records Knabe Piano

The Boice Studio
THE ART OF SINGING
SUSAN S. BOICE, Soprano
57 West 75th Street. New York City
Phone: Trafalgar 1057

RAYMOND HAVENS Pianist
Solist with BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 8 performances
Soloist with CHICAGO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 2 performances
Soloist with MINNEAPOLIS SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, 3 performances
For Dates and Terms Address:
EVELYN LIGHT, Sec. 87 Pinckney St., Boston, Mass.

JOSIAH ZURO
DIRECTOR
Zuro Grand Opera Company
Will Accept a Limited Number of Pupils
'44 Seventh Ave. New York
Phone Circle 0100

Anton BILOTTI Pianist
Management: Lionel Powell & Holt, London, England
Steinway Piano Welte-Mignon Records Exclusively

MARIO CHAMLEE
TENOR
Metropolitan Opera Company
Management: Wolfsohn Musical Bureau
Fisk Building, 57th St. and Broadway, N. Y.
Brunswick Records

PIERRE KEY'S OBSERVATIONS

THE TIMES of New York was among the daily newspapers which "played up" prominently the news of the Victor Talking Machine Company's first broadcasting on New Year's night of two of its artists—Lucrezia Bori and John McCormack. The Times began its story on its first page, permitting it to run over to the extent of more than a column on page three.

It was an interestingly written account, with a well considered description of the scene in the New York broadcasting studio of WEAF. There followed then the feelings of McCormack during his first broadcasting, and finally a music reviewer's impressions of how the singing sounded to him via his radio set, and the opinions of some New York theatre managers who feared that their patronage will be affected by such admirable programs as the one referred to.

But it was not the "first" broadcasting by internationally famous artists, as the Times story declared. Several weeks before the Brunswick company broadcasted its first Hour of Music, with Florence Easton and Mario Chamlee, of the Metropolitan Opera, Elly Ney, the pianiste, and the Cleveland Orchestra, Nikolai Sokoloff conducting.

It was the pre-eminence of McCormack, coupled to able handling of the press end of matters by the Victor, which got the space and the consideration in the newspapers. All of which would indicate that prestige and effective procedure in publicity promotion are two factors which can be used to the advantage of those possessing them.

THE APPREHENSION which is being felt by both wholesale and local managers over the threatened damaging effect of the radio on concert patronage is perfectly natural. While a part of that feeling is justifiable it is doubtless true that some of the worry concerns bridges that never will have to be crossed. For the artists whose principal source of income is their concert engagements hold the balance of power. Even if some of them do consent to broadcast in an experimental test they will unquestionably refuse to continue if their own subsequent appearances are financially injured. So the matter is sure to work out satisfactorily.

What is momentarily disturbing is the element of uncertainty which prevails. One can only guess what will develop during the next few months. though it may require no more than a few weeks to shed some light. Calvin Child, of the Victor, said to me last Friday that his company might be able within a very short time to reach a decision on its future course concerning broadcasting. William Brophy, of Brunswick, stated that the broadcasting plans of his organization, when explained in full detail, would, he thought, reassure artists and managers, both.

ONE FACT, however, is inescapable: progress, no matter in what field, is not to be stemmed. The radio has passed from its stage of being a fad, or is passing therefrom. It is becoming more and more a staple, and the sale of sets during the next year promises to establish a new record. The broadcasting of fine music by fine musicians is as certain to come eventually as dawn after the night, but its coming would better be gradual and amply regulated.

The prevention of any upset in the concert industry is what everyone active in it should consider. Therefore, undue haste in coming to a decision should be avoided. This present opposition between the managers of artists and the phonograph companies will finally be smoothed out; such matters usually are. When that time arrives, and a sound working basis is reached, the broadcasting of any reputable concert artist will be on the basis The Musical Digest has recommended constantly from the first: The payment of an adequate fee to the artist who broadcasts. In addition to that, other measures will be required in order to aid instead of injure an artist's concert activities.

